The Cost of a Christian Education

BY J. L. GILLIN, PH. D.
OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

In these days if a church is to maintain its place in the world it must educate. In this matter, adaptation to the conditions of the time is absolutely necessary. The whole history of the church shows the importance of education. The church became strong when it adapted its message to the thoughts and ideals of the men of its age. I do not mean that it yielded to the ideal of the age, but it had the training and equipment that enabled it to present its message in terms that the age understood. A new age is upon us. The public school and the college and the university have made this day a different one from that of our pioneer forefathers. The poorest families have the advantages of a public school education. Practically every one reads the newspapers. If the church must depend upon the public school system for the education of its leaders, how can it expect that its leaders will have any other ideals than those of the public school? In other words, the education provided by our public institutions must be supplemented for Christian leaders by Christian education. Therefore, a Christian church that expects to meet the needs of the age must give to its young people, and especially those that it is training for leadership in the church, the education that will instil Christian ideals and equip for the promulgation of the doctrines for which the church stands.

Now, Christian education costs money. No educational institution, unless it be one offering a short course like a business college, can be maintained on the fees of the student. The education for ideals in service must be endowed. That explains why it is necessary for a Christian college to have a rather heavy endowment. Let its teachers work for never so small a salary, the fees of the student cannot be depended upon to run the institution.

The campaign for the endowment of Ashland College is on. If the church is to face the new age that the war is bringing upon us, with promise of success, it must set itself to equip its youth who will be the leaders of the future, with the best that can be obtained. These men must be trained to go out and meet the needs of the new age with as good training as the men with whom they come into contact have had. They must be prepared to stand on their ground in any debate or controversy. They must be able to present their ideas with force and conviction. They must be equipped with vision. Our colleges will provide this. Only in a Christian institution like ours can the ideals for which we stand be taught to our future leaders.

This campaign is of absolutely vital importance to the future of the church. Let it fail and the doom of the church is sealed. The end will be only a question of time.

But the campaign is not going to fail. Our people are awakening to the importance of going over the top in the campaign. Our people with money should understand the importance of the campaign now before us. A man who gives a thousand dollars now will give more than the man who gives ten thousand twenty years from now. Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation for Ashland College and the church. Let every man and woman do his part and the campaign will be won.

To be a slacker in any cause is not enviable. One of the greatest privileges that any man has is to live up to his convictions and duty. To be a slacker in this great campaign for the civilization of the world and humanity, in which Germany and the Allies are engaged, is to hand down an unenviable heritage of shame to one's children. Shame on the man who in the hour of his country's need will not do the utmost consistent with his conscientious scruples for the cause that means everything for which America has stood since its foundation!

No less opprobrious is the man who will be a slacker in the campaign that means freedom for his church and the opportunity for that church to be of the greatest possible service to the world. The times are calling the church to day as never before.. When this war ends, the call for prepared men will be louder than ever before. Will the church be prepared to meet the new demand upon her? She will if she has her educational institutions endowed so as to provide the training and the leadership that the times will demand. We are told that it is our duty to save in this time of war, until it hurts. We are also told that we must pay taxes and lend money to the government until it hurts. This is true: No man can claim to love his country unless he is willing to sacrifice for it.

These things are as true of one's church as of his country. The measure of your devotion to your church is the amount of sacrifice that you are willing to make for its advancement. One of the measures of this devotion will be the way in which you respond to the appeal of Beachler in this campaign.

A true education—what is it? It is awakening a love for truth; giving a just sense of duty; opening the eyes of the soul to the great purpose and end of life. It is not so much giving words, as thoughts; or mere maxims, as living principles. It is not teaching to be honest, because "honesty is the best policy," but because it is right. It is teaching the individual to love the good ,for the sake of the good; to be virtuous in action, because so in heart; to love and serve God supremely, not from fear, but from delight in his perfect character.

We all have two educations, one from others, and another, and the most valuable, which we give ourselves. It is this last which fixes our grade in society, and eventually our actual condition in his life, and the color of our fate hereafter. All the professors and teachers in the world would not make you a wise or good man without your own co-operation; and if such you are determined to be, the want of them will not prevail.—Selected.

From the Editor's View-Point

The Need of a Broader Education

When we consider the small percentage of illiterates among our American born people we are prone to consider that we are an educated nation. As we consider further the vast sums of money that are spent annually to support the American system of education and the great army of people who are engaged in the profession of teaching may be led to believe there is no need for any one in all this land to remain uneducated.

It is true that we may hold to different opinions in regard to just what an education is, and some of us may accept the statement of the Irish locomotive engineer who said, "an educated man is a man who is onto his job." There is a grain of truth in the engineer's definition, but such preparation for a task in life would be somewhat too technical to be a real education, and could be called such only in the narrowest meaning of the term.

There was a time when one who was perfectly familiar with the three R's was supposed to be educated, but that time has long gone by and now perhaps nothing less than a completed course in a good high school is regarded as an education by the common people, even though millions of our people never go even that far in their efforts to imbibe the waters from the Pierian spring. And common and plentiful as colleges and institutions of higher learning have become there are altogether too many who regard their privileges as belonging only to the favored few, and not to the common people. Perhaps nowhere else in the world are the institutions of higher learning as democratic as they are in America, but they do not always have the reputation and their influence is not always as broadening as it should be. Especially is this true of some of the larger and more wealthy institutions and this fact makes it all the more important that many of the smaller and less wealthy colleges should be supported in a manner to make it possible to give to the youth of America the educational advantages they need without losing any of their democratic spirit.

It may be the fault of past systems of education that have prevailed in America or it may have been the fault of the writers of some of our most commonly used text books, especially text books on history, but some how or in some way the average American has been taught to think inside of national boundary lines and in harmony with the old unwritten law that used to forbid a man while holding the high office of President of the United States to set his foot on foreign soil. So our minds have been controlled by some law, written or unwritten, that has made it impossible for us to be anything but narrow in our political views.

The real gravity of the situation and the real need of a broadening of the minds of the American people through some system of a more liberal education is made evident by a statement from one of our ex-ambassadors, which statement we dare not contradict, that there are less than one hundred men in America who are capable of thinking internationally. World conditions now demand that we shall think internationally and we are not prepared to meet the demand. Am I wrong when I say America needs badly a system of education that will do more for a man than to simply make him "onto his job"?

The "onto his job" man may be broad enough to recognize the claims of his fellow men even in foreign parts of the world, but the chances are terribly against his being so. We are told that after the war is over the "humanitarian" principles will be more widelly recognized than ever, but humanitarianism will never meet the needs of the world, and it will never give the people of the world the training they need. Nothing short of an educational system permeated through and through with the principles of the living Christ can meet the need of the world and give the people minds broad enough to think beyond national boundary lines. The Christian people must be the leaders in this movement, and the Christian churches must furnish the opportunities for this higher and broader education or the great mass of the young men and women will never secure it and will forever remain as narrow and selfish as their fathers before them.

A Halt in Education

War turns the world upside down. There is no department of life that can be said to really escape being brought under the influence of the present great war. It makes no difference what one believes or in what section of the country he lives the influence of the war reaches him in some manner, and it doesn't matter in what profession or in what business he may be engaged the conditions and influences of the war seek him out and no way of escape is left open.

Many of the industries of the country, if they have not been demoralized by the war have been at least greatly handicapped and hindered in a marked degree. Even those industries that have to do wholly with the affairs of the federal needs and demands find some conditions almost impossible to control. The manufacture of a number of common articles must be discontinued largely until after the war. There is a halt in many things that hitherto have been regarded as permanent and almost indispensable.

It might be thought that among the portion of America's activities that escape this demoralizing influence the schools and the colleges of the country might escape, but exactly the contrary is true. Early in the fall it was known that the colleges and the universities would almost be depleted of men.

While many freshmen would be too young to enter military service yet they were called upon to do the work at home that had formerly been done by older men and the freshman classes have all been small in comparison to other years.

Some of the largest universities in America have suffered most in this way. The great Columbia University lost about two thousand and five hundred students as compared with last year's enrollment, and other universities have suffered in proportion.

The great fuel shortage has handicapped the work of the colleges and even the public schools of the country. These and other influences have combined to cause a halt in education. If it is but temporary it will not be so bad, but care will need to be exercised to prevent its becoming a habit.

Education and Labor

To some people a more advanced education appears as a means of escaping physical labor and is sought for such a purpose. It may enable one to make a living without the use of one's hands, but an education that is sought more to make a living than to make a life has missed the best features of it.

Education along modern lines and in the light of the discoveries of the modern sociologist dignifies labor and one who has imbibed the true spirit of modern education has respect for honest toil. It is only the half-educated that is a snob in regard to the part labor shall play in life. Many of the finest spirits and most cultured souls of the past century have found great delight in laboring with their hands.

Some may think the advanced views in regard to the education of woman will have a tendency to turn women away from the lines of toil which seem to be their lot in life but this is not necessarily true as has been demonstrated on numerous occasions in the finest schools for women in the land. Only recently an eastern farmer found he must have extra help or he must sell his cows, when two Mount Holyoke College girls came to his relief by delivering milk for him most efficiently until he found a man to take over the work. And the girls suffered nothing from their sharing the economic burden of life.

Honors Withdrawn

The laws that govern the modern educational world are not as the laws of the Medes and Persians. It is no disgrace for a scholar or a school to change front. In fact this is the only thing left to do in some instances if one would be honest, and modern scholarship must be honest or it is nothing.

Four years ago Princeton University made Count Bernstorf a doctor of laws, but finding him unworthy of such honors the university has cleared itself of all blame in the matter by taking his name from its rolls. It seems to the writer that it would be to the everlasting credit to higher learning if all great institutions would watch carefully the record of men who have been honored by them and if they would be free to eliminate their names from their rolls whenever they have been found guilty of conduct unbecoming to a gentleman and a scholar. Weed out the false and nourish the true.

Ashland College: A Personal Message

BY W. D. FURRY, PH.D., PRESIDENT

For once in my life and on this occasion I may presume to be personal. As President of the institution in whose behalf the present campaign for permanent endowment funds is conducted it is both right and becoming that I should be personal. In more ways than one—the personal least of all—I am tremendously interested in the speedy and successful issue of the present campaign. The readiness of the church to enter upon a campaign of so large dimensions compared with all our previous attempts indicates among us a sense of denominational loyalty and solidarity so conspicuously lacking in modern church life while the successful outcome of the campaign will mark a new day for Ashland College and the cause of Christian education. A splendid beginning has already been made and the Brethrenism of Indiana has never been exhibited to better advantage than in the light of her recent achievement in behalf of the endowment campaign. May I express my sincere appreciation to the churches of Indiana and to the pastors in particular than whom a more loyal, energetic and heroic group of men never entered upon any campaign conducted by the church. You have won a great victory. You have done your work and done it well and have won the respect and gratitude of all who are interested in the present campaign. No greater piece of constructive work was ever undertaken by any district of the church and you have now set a pace and an example which, if followed by other districts, make quick and certain our goal.

But the other districts will follow your example and may even quicken your pace. Illiokota and Kanemorado have been gathering momentum with the passing months and unless our interpretation of the sounds that have been crossing the states is altogether wrong some surprises yet await us. And what is true in the west will also be true in the east. The interest of the entire church in the welfare of the school was never greater than now. Recognizing the increasing contribution which the college is making to the life and thought of the denomination the conviction is becoming more and more general that the failure of the school would today be nothing less than a calamity. Humanly regarded the life and growth of the denomination depend wholly upon the thought and work of the college. For the past half dozen years the president of the college has sought to bring to the church the conviction that if the Brethren church is to do her share in bringing this world to a larger acceptance of the principles of the kingdom established by Jesus Christ she must organize and support her schools and colleges on a more liberal basis than she has hitherto done. This conviction differently worded perhaps, has seized the majority of our churches and as a consequence very many are engaged at this very moment in campaigns similar to our own. Because "everybody is doing it now" may not be sufficient reason for our undertaking the campaign at this critcial moment in the world's history, but wherever and whenever large bodies of thoughtful men and women such as compose the church today unitedly enter upon a common campaign there are likely to be found some conclusive reasons for "doing it now." I do not know of a self-respecting denomination today that has not already launched or is about to launch a campaign similar to our own. Denominations most solicitous about their own present efficiency as well as their future continuity are engaged in raising the largest funds. There is no necessity of repeating what has been said so frequently the past few years that the life and growth of the denomination depend wholly upon the character of its leadership and that this leadership must be secured from among its own young men and women and trained under its own influences and in the midst of its own teachings. The leadership of the Brethren church at this very moment is very largely the product of the college and in the class rooms of Ashland College today are found the leaders of the church of tomorrow. Let Ashland College close her doors for even a generation and this is not an improbable thing and the church of tomorrow will experience disintegration if not death at its own hands. Bring to Ashland College today a more liberal support thus enabling it to widen its sphere of usefulness and you make possible a larger tomorrow for the Brethren church. The vitality of a denomination is measured by the character of the program which it sets for itself. Only moribund churches have no programs. The Brethren church never exhibited greater vitality than the day it proposed for itself a program covering at least four years and set itself with full consecration and determination to reach the several goals. I have full confidence in the present leadership to reach these goals but if we are to make them only foundation stones on which to project a more liberal and far-reaching program for the future years we must now be making a leadership equal to the task. Ashland College is thus vitally related to the Four-Year Program which we now have before us as a denomination but is also vitally related to the whole future of the denomination. A larger denomination waits upon a larger and better trained leadership and this leadership must of necessity be trained in Ashland College.

Doubtless very much that has been written in the present connection will be taken as the deliverance of sectarian selfishness. To foster denominational pride and denominational loyalty is not today considered good taste. The churches must go that the church may remain is heard today on every hand. Day after day at this critical hour of the world's history one is driven to ask himself whether the Brethren church enshrines a truth whose saving is worth whatever we may bring or may be called upon to endure in the way of sacrifice and devotion. It is because I am yet able to answer my own question with an unequivocal "yes" that I remain where the church has called me. In the making of the new world that will arise upon the ruin of the present world fast falling to pieces I believe that the Brethren church has a task to perform. I am not now concerned to indicate the precise character of the task but am more concerned to say that apart from the work of the Christian college neither the Brethren church nor any other will be able to perform successfully and effectively the task that will come to it. Both from a pedagogical as well as a religious point of view the failure of the church to adequately support its educational institutions is a step in the wrong direction. A generation has arisen which is famishing for the food which nourishes the whole man. Out of darkness today a million hands are stretching forth for something secure and amidst all the splendor which an unprecedented prosperity makes possible there is a pathetic hollowness which foretells great moral danger. The world today—our own America needs vastly more religion than we are now getting in our public schools and higher institutions. It will be to the glory of the Brethren church if we can do something to insure especially in our colleges to bring the Bible back to its rightful place in education and to train young men and women in the knowledge and service of God. To give to the State men and women who know God and love their fellowmen—what a glorious opportunity awaits us here and now for God and country. Here is the opportunity of the Christian college—yea here is the opportunity of Ashland College. May I close with this sentence from the "North American Idea," by James A. McDonald: "In the world conflict of ideas the college class rooms are our strategic heights. Hold them today and the hinterland of the Vimy Ridge of Truth will be yours tomorrow."

The Making of a Brethren Preacher

BY J. ALLEN MILLER, D.D., DEAN OF SEMINARY

Considered in the light of the day in which we live and the divinely appointed obligations resting upon every preacher this subject becomes insistent with meaning. The making of Brethren preachers has added importance because it gives the personal touch to the subject for us. But I dare waste no space with introductory platitudes. The Making of a Brethren Preacher—What does it mean and how can it be done? Does it need to be done and where shall it be done? I will attempt a brief answer in the following discussion.

The Christian ministry exists by divine appointment. The qualifications of a man called to this work are clearly defined in the Word of God. The duties assigned are as clearly set forth. With these we have nothing to do. Let it be said once for all that a man entering upon the work of the ministry should be tested by the Word of God as to his qualifications. Wherein he may be lacking he certainly must fill up the deficiency. The call to service demands preparation to meet the obligations thereof. After the call must come the response. There is a pre-requisite fitness to the call. God certainly never calls an unfit man into the holiest and highest service he has appointed to man. Is the man clean in life and thought? Is he born of God and does he have high and holy purpose? Does he put right values upon men and things? Is he unselfish and impelled by a divine "must"? There is a fitness that must precede the call. There is a fitness that precedes, conditions, defines the call that comes from God. Read the pastoral epistles and note the requirements.

But, if there is a call from God, one may be far from able to meet the requirements prerequisite to entrance upon the work of the minister. The greatest service assigned a man can not be undertaken without preparation for it. One must prepare to do the tasks appointed by God. Apt to teach, to take one specific qualification, is a requirement by the will of God. Teachers in our public schools must take professional training before they undertake the teaching art. They must know how to teach. The State says so and men obey the State. God says, "Apt to teach," and men repudiate it. Take law, medicine, and many far less important callings of men, and the State says who may and who may not practice. We say this is justly so. God says a man aspiring to the supreme work of the ministry should know "how to care for the church of God." A physician must know HOW. So must a lawyer. So must a steam engineer. The State says so. God says an elder must know HOW. HOW to care for the church of God. Wrecked churches! Jesus crucified afresh by the jeering and unbelieving because a man blundered, a preacher failed! The work required to be done by the minister demands as a prerequisite the necessary preparation.

Let it be said again with the fullest emphasis to the whole church: THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY EXISTS BY DIVINE APPOINTMENT. God calls. Men of fitness alone are called. Definite tasks are assigned and they require definite fitness. What we lack in meeting the requirements as laid down by God and the age in which we live we must constantly strive to make up. A quack doctor may entertain the crowd on a street corner, but when a sensible man needs advice that may mean life and happiness for years he consults a reputable specialist. When you have a legal dispute over some devil's lane a demagogue may plead the case. But when you have a cause involving right and justice and perhaps the toil of a life time, you want expert legal advice. When a farmer needs help he consults the specialist who has spent years in acquiring technical knowledge of the soil, or the horse or the seed. All this is right. But, oh, church of the Living God when will you awake and be wise? The souls of men are sick unto death. The church has a cause worth pleading. Jesus Christ revealed the finest body of truth and affords the finest personal experience inviting the thought of men to understand. (This is God's word—"holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience.") But the worst quack, the most unprincipled demagogue, the most conscienceless pretender to knowledge—THESE can not be so disastrous in the evils they perpetrate as the MAN IN THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY WHO DECEIVES A SOUL, WRECKS A CHURCH, AND DISHONORS GOD. A man ought to be afraid to undertake this holy calling unless both FIT and READY in God's sight. If God calls then both must be met, both fitness and preparation. A man dare not refuse.

If ever the church needed a trained and efficient ministry it is right now. The Brethren church has a ministry of which I am proud. A bit more love of Jesus in the heart and a bit of just recognition for attainment and service would open our eyes wondrously. My seniors in the ministry I hail with veneration and respect them for services rendered. Fathers, ye have wrought well! To my younger brethren I turn with love and hope and greet them as sons and brothers. Young men, you have begun well. See that you endure unto the end.

Now I will say it. The Brethren church must have a better, stronger and more efficient ministry. Young men, you must be that ministry. Only one of two courses lies open to you. First, yes, thank God, first, to grow and live. And if not this then only to endure and be endured for a while like the seed on rocky ground and then wither away, forgotten while you live and remembered when you die only by what you have not done.. Our church just must have a better ministry. A ministry that can compel attention with such a gospel as we have, a ministry that can build a church and care for it such as the faith we hold presages, this is the ministry I plead for.

A Brethren ministry,—and this is the special significance of the whole discussion, is wanted. To make myself clear let me illustrate. To begin with we profess to preach the whole gospel. This is a generality that means nothing until you define what you mean by preaching a whole gospel. Many men profess as strongly as we that they preach a whole gospel and yet they would never build a Brethren church. Take the New Testament doctrine of faith. We preach it. So do all others. But this does no more make a man a Brethren than it does a Methodist. Take the doctrine of repentance and preach it, or preach the doctrine of the new birth, and make them as truly scriptural as possible. This is what others do also. But to do so does not make you Brethren a whit more than it does a Baptist or Disciple. Preach the deity of Christ. That is both scriptural and Brethren but not more than it is scriptural and Lutheran. What you hold and preach in common with the evangelical faith does not make you a Brethren preacher. A BRETHREN PREACHER DOES HOLD AND PREACH IN COMMON WITH OTHERS A TRULY EVANGELICAL FAITH. From our Brethren point of view the commonly professed evangelical faith stops short of the whole gospel. Or it fails to stress apostolic and undisputed New Testament practices. For example, feet-washing. Nothing in the New Testament could be plainer and more definite. It has the example of Christ and the command. Brethren believe and practice it. Herein we differ from others in faith and practice. Take baptism. We hold with right to the apostolic form, of trine immersion of a believer. Here again we differ from others. Or take any of the practices and beliefs of the Brethren church that mark us as different, if you choose for the illustration. But note, that while feet-washing may be scriptural its practice does not make you Brethren more than it does Mennonite, or than it used to Disciple or United Brethren. Trine immersion may be scriptural, but as to its practice you might be Greek Catholic. THE THINGS IN WHICH WE DIFFER FROM OTHERS CHARACTERIZE US AS BRETHREN IN FAITH AND PRACTICE. But we are not truly Brethren if this is all we preach, just our peculiar doctrines as we are wont to say. To be a truly and really Brethren preacher we must preach a gospel interpreted and practiced according to BRETHREN spirit and genius. There are certaain underlying and fundamental principles that determine the Brethren viewpoint that can not be ignored and one still be Brethren.

And now I am done with a word. We want men of all talents for this work of our greater ministry. We want every man, be he of one talent, or two, or five, be his BEST. The best education possible will be none too good. The finest personal experience will be none too stimulating. The inspiration and guidance of teacher and school will be none too loyal to the Word of God. All this and much more ought to be at the ready command of every young man preparing for our Brethren pulpits. Where can he find such a training place?

The answer is clear. It must be in an adequately equipped and fully manned BRETHREN COLLEGE AND SEMINARY. Such a school we must make ASHLAND COLLEGE.

Brethren of the laity, THIS IS THE WORK YOU MUST DO. You must rise to the help of the men who are now and who will be YOUR PASTORS. The church just must do this, OR she will prove unworthy.

Education and Social Well-being

BY E. E. JACOBS, PH.D.

As John Fiske some years ago pointed out, man enjoys a longer period of youth as compared with his total life span than any other living form, his youth being about one-third his entire life. During all this time he is to be educated. And so in whatever stage or culture we find him, man has afforded his young and immature some sort of education. Indeed, this characteristic, viz., that of needing and being afforded an education, is precisely characteristic of the whole human race. No other being needs or could accept any thing like such an extended education.

Hence, all peoples from the cave-man on down past the Incas, the Astecs, and the Mound Builders of America, past the nations of antiquity and on up to the peoples of modern times including such backward ones as the South Sea Islanders, have some rather definite form of education. Of course, this education was not always, perhaps not often, strictly formal but that people which would not seek to put its young into some sort of rapport with the accumulated knowledge of the nation or tribe could not long survive. Anything less would be suicide.

Now if all nations and peoples have found it necessary to educate their young, there must be some one end to be obtained, some one thing fundamental. This summum bonum above all others is to put the young into proper rapport with the customs, manners, traditions, ideals skill and accumulated knowledge of the social group to the express end and purpose of making fit and proper members of society out of these constantly on-coming tyros. Certainly a society could not be justified in expending so much energy on any lesser end than to prepare the young for a successful life within the group.

And yet, withal, educational programs and certain superficial educational ideals have changed from time to time for they have ever been conditioned by the time, place, and person which they were intended to serve. And so this great and worthy and fundamental end of education has ofttimes been overlooked both by the young person and by the public generally. So education has been for nearly every reason under the sun but this. It has been for "ornament," for "finish," to make the securing of a livelihood easier, in order to be able to wear better clothes, and thereby enter the great soft-handed professions, to open up to the otherwise hopelessly unrecognized socially a place in so-called society, or even to make one beter able to prey upon his fellows.

But aside from these rather superficial ideals, a close examination of the deeper ideals of all peoples will reveal this one fundamentl, viz., education for social well-being. And this, moreover, in accord with the best modern educational ideals. This does not mean at all that there is to be no compensating return to the individual for all his efforts towards an education but it does exactly mean that education for purely selfish ends would not be justified from the standpoint of the society affording the means, toward an education. Hence, we say today, that education is to make one better able to serve one's fellows. If it is not for this, what is it for? Character? Surely this, but a highly developed character that would be all in vain if it did not show itself in a genuine service to the day and generation which made it possible. It is perfectly useless to educate a man who takes more than he gives as he goes through life and education which teaches one to grasp all he can and to keep all he grasps, is wholly unworthy of the name of education. We have quite enough of such people in the world already.

Surely, education can not be in order to shirk one's share of the world's work. If there is anything that must make the immortals weep, it is to see one who has had the advantages of the colleges and schools of earth standing off in the smug self-satisfaction with hands all too soft and white to do anything really useful. If that is what education is for, then better not educate at all. If there is one aristocracy which is more despicable than another it is the one that sometimes grows up around our so-called educated which makes it a shameful thing to do anything that has any earthly human use. The untutored of a generation ago were justifiably unsympathetic and critical towards such a training that passed for education.

And so in this present world crisis, the colleges of America are beginning to show their deep concern and every effort is being made to do what they can for the nation in its hour of deepest need. Indeed, in the days of peace before this war, the institutions of higher learning were attempting to humanize their courses as to touch, remotely perhaps, but surely, the common man on the street. It was common even then to speak of humanizing Latin, Greek, Trigonometry, which means attempting to give them a useful application.

There has been, then, a marked tendency to so adjust our educational programs as to make them serve the needs of the hour. By some this has been violently opposed but those who are in close touch with educational matters must be impressed with the general trend which makes school not a thing apart from life but a very real part of life. And with the newer courses offered in our colleges along the line of economics, sociology, anthropology, to name only a few, one may confidently expect a more socialized citizenry within the next few decades.

If improvement is to come through any form of either eugenics or euthenics, it must first be preceded by education. It is wholly idle to speak of race, civic, and social improvement which is not founded upon an educated citizenry. Other factors than education are necessary doubtless but the most stupid and incapable of our institutions, our city governments, on which so much depends, cannot be greatly improved until we have an enlarged vision of what is to be done, supplemented by intellects enlightened enough to handle the involved problems. Just what part formal education has played in the progress already made may be uncertain, but sure it is that in the future our educational ideals will revolve very largely around that age-old and fundamental element,—education for the well-being of all.

Endowment, a Denominational Responsibility

BY CHARLES A. BAME

Another is to tell of the need of endowment and of the college. I am tempted to go into that field a bit, but I dare not. Two minutes' use of gray matter will tell anybody, anyway, how great is our need of our only college. If there is need of a denominational college it is inescapable that there is a denominational responsibility. The need precludes the escape from responsibility.

Did you need warmer clothes when the 20 below weather struck your country? Then you got them, did you not? Did you, Mr. Farmer, need a pair of rubber boots when you started that ditch? Then you got them, I am sure. Did you Mr. Merchant or Banker need more money to enlarge your building to accommodate your growing business? Then you borrowed it. Did our nation need immense sums to equip and train our new army that is to drive despotism and autocracy from the face of the earth? Yes, and you were counted a "slacker" if you did not help to buy Liberty Bonds and Red Cross seals and subscribe for the Y. M. C. A. So, the need is the call. The need is the commander and we are the soldiers.

BUT WHOSE IS THE RESPONSIBILITY? Is it Dr. Furry's? Is it Dr. Miller's? No, they are the prophets who have run on ahead of us and drummed into our dulled senses the immediate need; imminent to them some years ago. They were the seers. Is it the trustees? Well, a good many of us were raised on the milk-sop theory that colleges were self-supporting or ought to be and that they could take care of any need of money for the future by excess profits from tuition! ! ! ! ! But if we do not and can not believe those who are spending time and money to bring to us this knowledge, then in all fairness to ourselves, our college and them, let us get the knowledge that is so easily obtainable. If the college is OURS—if we ever say OUR COLLEGE when we refer to Ashland College—then, let us also do our part to supply this need and demand of the times. OUR COLLEGE NEEDS OUR MONEY. IT MUST HAVE SOME OF IT. IT CAN NOT GET IT UNLESS WE GIVE IT. Nobody will sue us, draft us, or otherwise compel us. We simply need to be big enough to answer the cry for funds by GIVING OUR SHARE.

INDIANA has recognized her responsibility. She will nobly acquit herself and go far "over the top." It will be for the remainder of the districts to do as well and we shall have finished for a long time what has been the burden of good and great men among us and release to our church their valuable services for other important work in the Master's kingdom. In the words of a song specially written for the Indiana Jubilee:

"Now other districts, take the "cue"
That Indiana gives to you,
If you fall down, what shall we do?
Endowment has our money."

Endowment, it is bound to come
One Hundred Thousand, make it hum,
Old Indiana, first to "bat"
Has raised the standard up like that.

The College a Denominational Need

BY H. L. GOUGHNOUR

This is the subject upon which I have been requested to write. It is like writing upon the subject, "Food, a Necessity of Life," "Sleep an Essential of Rest," or "Air a Requisite for Breathing." Yet, our alert Campaign Secretary, who knows, says that upon this subject something needs to be written.

Suppose that the United States should send all her children to Germany to be educated. For how long would democracy flourish in our land? Suppose our government should close the schools at West Point and Annapolis and have her military officers trained in Turkey. For how long would our army and navy be a defense of the realm? The answer is: Just as long as the Brethren church would continue to exist without a college and seminary.

These assertions are not equivalent to saying that education is the basis of our denominational life, for it is not. For considerably more than a century, Dunkerism continued to live in the world without distinctive educational institutions. During this period, however, Dunkers lived in separate colonies. Their social contacts were, mainly, with those of like faith in churches, homes and fields. In these associations their education was received, and their methods and standards of life were set.

Today our leaders and ministers do not receive their education mainly in the home, the church and in contact with those of like faith. We are scattered. Our contacts are mainly with those who differ from us in religious belief, practice and tradition. Our problem is to keep Dunkerism in a developed form, or Brethrenism, alive and growing in the midst of this disconcerting environment.

We can not say that our environment has not changed us. It has. Our distinctive traits have been modified. We no longer live in plain houses, abhor organs and violins, mistrust modern inventions, nor wear plain clothes. We take an interest in politics, hold civil office, co-operate with other churches, carry life insurance and have ornate church buildings. We like to believe that the reason we have surrendered some of our distinctive traits is that we discovered them to be useless and unessential to the Christian character. In truth, the traits we have surrendered are unessential to us in the stage in which we now are. The real reason we surrendered them, however, is that we were ashamed to be unnecessarily unlike those with whom we associated. We have been changed by our environment. Had we not changed, our church would have lost her membership and died.

Is this process of modification continuing? It is. It would result in the change of some of our church ordinances if such change did not run athwart the plain teachings of Jesus Christ. Feet-washing would have been abandoned long ago if it were not for John 13 and the Brethren tradition of clinging to the Bible in serious honesty.

All of us who are of Brethren training or conviction believe that Jesus knew best what was and is good for his church. It runs through our traditions to be silent and obey when he speaks. This tradition of absolute obedience to the commands of Christ is the most vital distinctive characteristic of Brethrenism today. Some of us crave, with the deepest longing of our souls, that this characteristic shall never be modified. We have learned, as a broader outlook upon life has come to us, that Jesus always knew. We have never gone to his words and been disappointed. We see, as clear as day, that his Gospel, his principles, his spirit alone can save sinful man and a sin-cursed earth. As we love our own souls and the souls of others, we want to see the Brethren tradition of absolute obedience to Jesus Christ preserved in this world.

Some other schools can give a finer education than Ashland College can. In some other seminaries our distinctive ordinances are set forth as the original ordinances of the Christian church quite as convincingly as in our own. But the only schools in which the Brethren traditions live, and move upon the soul, and give the mind its sturdy Brethren cast are Brethren schools. If Brethren schools should die, the world might have something that would continue to pass under the name of Brethrenism, but it would not be Brethrenism.

Modification and change will continue to come to us as a people. We shall abandon some customs, assume new attitudes, enter new activities. This is inevitable. As surely as the laws of life are sure the only way whereby that which is vital and valuable in Brethrenism can be retained in a world of change, is for us to maintain a strong educational center in which the majority of our ministers and leaders must be trained. Also, the only method whereby Brethrenism as a movement can succeed in taking a sane and constructive attitude toward the world in which we are cast, is for us to build up an educational center of dominating strength.

The only real question that faces us is this: Do we want Brethrenism to live? If we do, this Endowment Campaign must be put across. If we really want Brethrenism to live, Brother Beachler's task will be easy when he reaches our congregations. As well might we destroy all the medical schools in the world and expect medicine to exist as a vital science, as to continue to keep Ashland College upon a starvation diet and expect Brethrenism to live as a vital religious movement.

The Present Status of the Campaign

BY WM. H. BEACHLER, CAMPAIGN SECRETARY

The campaign for permanent endowment has been in progress since the close of General Conference. Thus far our efforts have been confined entirely to the churches of Indiana. The results achieved show that $19,000 have been raised in twenty churches; and there remain yet eleven churches to canvass. Judging by what has already been accomplished in Indiana, there is good reason to believe that when the work has all been completed in the state the results will approach well toward $25,000.

The Secret of Indiana's Response

There is a general agreement that Indiana has made a fine record and that she has set an inspiring example for the entire brotherhood. But there is a reason, a secret which explains Indiana's royal response. Briefly stated, the reason is this: The churches of Indiana believe in Ashland College and they recognize that since the college belongs to the entire brotherhood part of it belongs to them, and that therefore they sustain their proportionate responsibility for making the college what it is to be. Moreover Indiana recognizes the importance of the college in its relation to the future and the larger usefulness of the Brethren church, as she also recognizes that scarcely a greater calamity could befall the Brethren church than the closing of the doors of the college. Accordingly the Indiana churches have acted in a way which commands the approval and admiration of the entire brotherhood.

What Other States Must Do

Indiana has done well. But Indiana of herself cannot raise the desired $100,000. It would not be best if she did. The entire brotherhood has a responsibility in this matter. And in proportion to their numerical strength and wealth every district conference in our brotherhood can do and must do as well as Indiana. There dare not be any "slackerism" among any of our states; neither dare there be any "slackerism" among any of the congregations of any of the states. Here is a place where every state and every congregation within every state must do its duty. Only this can assure final success in our campaign to secure adequate permanent endowment for our only institution of learning. The task before us must be done. And what the Brethren church must do she can do and will do.

The Trustees and the Campaign

BY WM. KOLB, JR., PRESIDENT OF BOARD

The trustees of Ashland Coillege having resoluted the present endowment campaign are interested, with the rest of us in realizing its object.

It is important, in the first place, that we all understand that the object of the campaign is not the mere securing of the one hundred thousand dollars endowment, but rather the establishment of a better Ashland College adequately equipped for present day and future day service. The one hundred thousand is but a financial minimum goal which it is to be hoped will be far surpassed when the campaign is done. When we see what those opulent, though provident enthusiasts of Indiana are doing, and at only their first try, too, it would seem as if two hundred thousand will be more nearly the mark.

It is important in the second place that it be understood that our college is and has been confronted with a real crisis. This drive for a better Ashland is not of choice merely, but of necessity. Whether we like it or not we are compelled to compete with other schools and to conform with present day standards. It is not one of the things that should be or ought but must be if the college is to live. It means "put up or shut up." We are compelled, unless we want to quit, to put the school up to a recognized standard. This means endowment, faculty, equipment all enlarged. Even pride in our school should impel us to this. We do not want our young people skimped in educational facilities. They are entitled to the best there is and we have the ability to accord it to them.

It is important in the third place that while realizing the crisis confronting us we know that it is but necessary to arouse ourselves to surmount the difficulties. Once we begin to feel a sense of co-ownership in Ashland College and a measure of responsibility for her as one of the institutions essential to the growth of the church in providing the bulk of our ministry ,all our troubles will end. It is largely because our abundantly good people do not realize the requirements of the situation that our institutions suffer. Old Ashland has served well, as witness the earnest loyal men and women that have gone from her. For the investment the church has made in the past she has received a thousand fold and the young men throughout the church who are holding up the banner of the cross and who owe Ashland in part for their equipment for service are the present hope of the church as it is proposed their successors shall become through the ministrations of the Ashland that is to be the future hope thereof.

It is important in the next place that realizing the object of our campaign and recognizing the crisis confronting us and knowing our ability to surmount the difficulties we enlist in this service. It is a challenge, personal and general, to all members of the church. In this matter our ability is the measure of our responsibility.

The Christian College and Efficiency in Service

BY J. A. GARBER

In the work of education, as in other lines of endeavor, efficiency is a frequently used and greatly minsunderstood word. In a general way the term means an exercising power capable of producing results. While those of the highest quality are implied we, being infatuated with the spirit of the twentieth century, have failed to underscore the significance of the implication in our haste to get things done quickly. Applied to educational effort this overworked shibboleth should mean the education of persons prepared to render efficient service in every department of human activity.

Unfortunately for all parties concerned too many leaders of higher education have stressed knowledge, culture, citizenship and efficiency to the exclusion, obscurity and atrophy of religious and moral development. Reflection upon the causes of a world war with its indescribable horrors caused some of these mistaken leaders to realize the futility of their unwise procedure. Let us ponder the startling confession of the president of a leading university:

"We have just been treated to a shocking spectacle and one which may well cause us to wonder whether the influence of higher education is yet more than skin deep. It takes no small faith to face the situation. Scholarship alone is plainly useless as a guide to conduct. Science alone is in the same category. Literary achievements and literary reputation are no guarantees of common sense and ordinary decorum. It must be true then that the world-old problem remains. It is that of shaping and directing men's conduct. We once thought that if we could put higher education in the reach of all we would solve the problem of injustice, wrong and evils in society. But we have found that to be utterly mistaken. Men do not do what they know they ought to do, but what they want to do. The mind may be trained to all its capacity and the man himself left the slave of his impulse and passions."

To emancipate this enslaved individual and enable him as a free man to enjoy his nobler inheritances constitute the majestic mission of the Christian college. It will accomplish this unique task by augmenting the failing program of efficiency with a gospel of sufficiency. It will refuse to ape state universities which ignore or remain indifferent to the culturing of the spirit life. It will provide adequate curricula that deny collegiate subjects exclusive place and which include courses in Biblical instruction, Christian ethics, and religious education. It will require the student to divide time between the study of these and history, mathematics, science and philosophy so that he may cultivate a true perspective while pushing back the horizon of an expanding intellect and without losing faith in the fundamentals taught him by devout parents. It will maintain a wholesome atmosphere which nourishes holiest sentiments, strengthens loftiest purposes and ripens the choicest fruits of the Spirit. It will not promote religion as a side issue to satisfy a perturbed constituency, but will foster Christian education as the chief justification of the college's existence.

Having shared the educational ministry of this life-giving, character-producing instiution the student takes his place in society with a moral basis for citizenship, because he is anchored in the basic principles of Christianity, and is prepared to live a life as well as make a living. Completely equipped he is thoroughly qualified to serve efficiently all the worthy institutions of our complex social life, and become a tower of strength to each one. In him the home finds a staunch promoter of the domestic ideals of sanctity, purity, honesty, industry, frugality, fidelity and the like, which help this prior institution to function in a variety of ways essential to the growth of church and development of the nation.

The church's need of the finished product of the Christian college is plainly evident. Her Founder and Lord employed rare educational methods that won him the deserved title, Master Teacher. To be true to her divinely given work the church must proclaim the truth committed to her, but how can her sons and daughters proclaim that which they know not? And how can they know except they be taught by trusted teachers and under sympathetic influences? The church is to be the enlightener of darkened hearts, but how can her communicants radiate a light which they themselves do not possess? The light manner in which the gospel is received and the half-hearted support that it enjoys may be accounted for on the basis of an imperfect understanding of its real nature. Acceptance of it as their only hope made the leaders of the early church willing to endure persecution as their reward for the proclamation of the indispensable message. If that uncompromising, self-sacrificing spirit is to be restored to the church of today, the restoration will follow in proportion to the provision made for the education of her youth. To the Christian college of her own founding and maintenance she must look for a competent ministerial and lay leadership, exegetes, theologians, pastors, evangelists, teachers, administrators.

Since the perpetuity of the state depends upon the cultivation of religious experience and consequent morality the student of the Christian college will make no small contribution to national greatness. General education has decreased mental illiteracy, but has failed to influence in any marked way illiteracy in morals. Despite the multiplication of schools, crime during the half past century has increased at the alarming rate of four hundred per cent. Authorities tell us that ninety per cent. of failures among college graduates is due to moral defects. Something is wanting, and that something is education in religion and morals. When we can get apples from trees without roots we may expect to find the fruits of morality among people whose life is not rooted in Christianity.

The Pacific Coast and Campaign for Endowment

BY N. C. NIELSEN

I have been requested by our college booster, Brother Beachler, to write on "The Pacific Coast Interest in the Campaign." If there is any place where the true gospel needs to be proclaimed, it is on the Pacific Coast. We have more isms and fake religious beliefs thrust on the people for Christianity than any place in the world. Therefore, we need a college where we can send our boys and girls where they can be rooted and grounded in the Word of God, preparatory to the ministry, and missionary work, and other vocations of life.

If we send our young people to state or denominational colleges they ofttimes get their faith wrecked instead of strengthened, and it has a strong tendency to lead them away from the faith and doctrine of our church. An example in my own family of what our college will do. I have a boy and a girl. In 1893 we had a Brethren revival, both the children confessed Christ and were baptized. About a dozen of us were organized into a class and we had prayer meetings but no regular church services and both the children went to the Presbyterian church. They wanted to go there because some of their chums went there. Ten years later I sent the girl to Ashland College one year, she was Brethrenized there and has ever since been loyal to the Brethren Church. We moved to Long Beach, California, and they still attended the Ashland College will reopen for work on January eighth. An extra week of vacation was granted on account of the fuel situation, but arrangements have been made that removed all danger from that source and the date has been set for the reopening.

The Thought and Work of the Church

The object of this special number of the evangelist is to boost the endowment campaign of Ashland College. To this end all the special articles were contributed and we pray that all our readers may ponder well what has been said and that they may be led to see the necessity of not only reaching the goal set for this work but that they may have it in their hearts to go far beyond the goal, even to the doubling of the same. It is a magnificent effort and should challenge the best there is in all our churches.

It was with regret that the Pennsylvania mission board and the few faithful workers in the Bethlehem mission found it advisable to discontinue the work that had been conducted by the Brethren in that city under great difficulties for a number of years. The members and workers have become a part of the organization in Allentown and the pastor A. L. DeLozier is glad for the help they will be to the work in that city. In spite of the great difficulties to be met in this industrial city of the east the pastor pushes on and has succeeded in bringing the small congregation of Brethren more nearly to the front in the Four-Year Program than many of the older and larger churches have come.

Another one of the hard places being occupied by the Brethren workers is that in Columbus, Ohio. These are specially trying times in all mission work in the large cities, but Brother Christiansen is slowly pushing forward with the force at his command and feels that commendable progress has been made in the few months since he has located with his family in Columbus. The special series of evangelistic meetings which he began in the early part of December were brought to a victorious close shortly before Christmas. The victory was not so great in numbers as is reported from some fields, but nine applicants for baptism and three reconsecrations is a very good harvest when all the circumstances are taken into consideration.

Brother C. E. Beekly who has been but a short time on the field at Gratis, Ohio, has been stricken with a serious affliction recently, and after having been anointed by Brother Bell, of Dayton, asks the brotherhood to pray that the will of the Lord may be done in his case, and if in accordance with the Lord's will that he may be restored to health.

Once again the secretary of the General Missionary Board makes a partial report of the Thanksgiving missionary offering. The goal has not yet been reached, but many of the larger churches have not yet reported. We hope when their reports are all in it will be found that the goal has been more than reached.

In the evangelistic meetings at Burlington, Indiana, conducted by the pastor and A. E. Thomas, great crowds were drawn to hear the old gospel story as Brother Thomas knows how to tell it. The people came over and over again because it is a story that never grows old when faithfully told and its telling in Burlington led sixteen souls to confess Christ as Lord for the first time, fourteen of which have already been received into the church by baptism, and in addition to this a goodly number of reconsecrations resulted from the meetings.

Another brief report from the committee appointed by the Indiana conference to take charge of the effort to raise a fund for an automobile to be used in the South American missionary work by Brother Yoder is published this week. Brother Brumbaugh is anxious that all that made pledges at the North Manchester conference meet their pledges as soon as possible so that the fund may be turned over to Brother Yoder before he sails again to the southern continent.

A most excellent report of the work of the Brethren in Bryan, Ohio, for the last half year is made by the pastor, G. L. Maus. A new parsonage has been completed and now lodges the parson; the S. S. C. E. has been especially active in this work; also the Sisterhood of M. and M. has been busy about the Master's business, and Kentucky and the College dormitory can witness to the fact. Just recently an evangelistic meeting led by A. T. Ronk was brought to a successful close with seven confessions, six of the number having already been received into the church by baptism. The pastor has the right idea about the Four-Year Program and the importance of getting the Evangelist into every Brethren home. We pray that success may crown his efforts.

E. L. Miller and his congregation at Uniontown had another "hilarious" time in giving at their annual White Gifts service at Christmas time. Giving hilariously is becoming a habit with this people and they find great joy in it and have thoroughly learned the lesson that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

In his resume of the work accomplished at Ft. Scott, Kansas, under his ministry, W. H. Miller shows some of the difficulties to be met with in missionary work in the western fields. After an absence of some months Brother Miller is back again in Kansas where he hopes to be able to yet accomplish something more definite and permanent in building up the work of the kingdom. Mulvane, Kansas, is not a new point but yet it possesses all the characteristics of a mission field in the west. Brother Miller feels that the cause here may yet be made a force for good.

It is an old saying that "We never miss the water 'till the well runs dry," and only those whose hearts are greatly wrapped up in the cause of the Brethren, but who have been deprived of the services of the church for a number of years can appreciate the feelings of the sister from north west Michigan as she makes her longings known in her letter to the Evangelist readers this week. Helping Ashland College will help to carry the gospel to such localities.

Not much has been heard of the work of brother Thomas F. Howell, one of our newer workers in the ministry, but he has been giving earnest service in some of the Michigan churches. A two weeks' meeting in the Bethel church brought him to the notice of a few Brethren in Dowagiac and he was urged to come over to that city and hold a few meetings. Complying with this earnest request he did so in spite of storm and snow and after a week's effort in the face of the stormy period of that time closed the meeting with three accessions to the church, one of the number being a minister of the gospel who wished to identify himself with the Brethren.

Around the Editor's Table

The Big Drive

Speech grows with the age and the use of terms is controlled by the developments of the times. When the apostle Paul wrote his various epistles he found many of the terms used in speaking of military affairs of his day were the very best terms he could use to express his ideas as they bore upon spiritual achievements. And so it is at the present time. One can scarcely avoid using terms of military origin whether one wishes to do so or not. Words and phrases have been coined to express the great military ideas that have become so much a part of the language of the present one's vocabulary would seem cramped if some of these terms were not occasionally used apart from their military significance. A forward, agressive movement of forces by any one of the armies at war is spoken of as a "big drive;" but we wish to use the term here in expressing the idea of a forward movement by the Brethren church.

In these modern days the church must plan as carefully and execute as faithfully as the armies upon the battlefield, if it would make any worth while gains in the work of subduing the world for the Lord. And as the armies at war are fighting upon sea and land; high in the air and deep beneath the earth, so too must the armies of the Lord be on the lookout for every physical advantage that may give them spiritual victory.

One of the forces the church can use effectively is the force of education, and the church that makes the BEST use of this force is the church that is going to win the most battles for the Lord. It is not that salvation is found in education, far from it, but without education and the advantages that education affords the church is not prepared to meet and overcome many of the forces that are hindering the growth of the Kingdom of God.

The Christian pioneer of Colonial days realized the importance of education and counted no sacrifice too great to establish schools for their children and the children of their neighbors. Shall we in the light of the centuries that have intervened show a spirit of sacrifice any less than the spirit they showed? Our public school system answers a very good purpose in a general way, but it does not prepare our young men and women for anything except the worldly life; the spiritual needs of our children must be met in some other way. Both to meet this need and to supply the special training required for definite Christian work the denominational Christian colleges are maintained; and for this purpose was Ashland College founded, and for this purpose it receives the meager support it does at the present time. The "big drive" is toward a bigger and better Ashland.

The Necessity

The attack by a battery of forty-two centimeter guns of modern Germany cannot be warded off with the old brass cannon, which, as relics of the Civil War, we used to use for Fourth of July celebrations. In these days it is a matching of wits, and big guns against big guns, it is fighting fire with fire, Greek meeting Greek, diamond cutting diamond. All these things must be reckoned with in this twentieth century. And every principle is as true in the educational world as it is in the military world, and the college that does not measure up to the requirements of modern times will stand just as about as much show in resisting the insiduous attacks by the enemy of truth as the great Chinese Wall would in protecting the Celestial Empire against an invasion by the modern "Huns."

In line with this thought, Ashland College must dig deeper trenches, throw up higher breastworks and build upon a more concrete foundation or DIE. Let that be known now as well as any time. The decree has gone forth, not of our own choosing, but of the necessity of the age in which we live, and it is no less true of a college than of anything else, the moment it ceases to have power to adapt and appropriate and assimilate and harmonize the conditions of the age in which it exists it is already dead. To meet the ACTUAL NEEDS of Ashland College ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS must be secured. It is not a case of OUGHT to be it is a case of MUST be and there is no way out of it. The message from Wm. Kolb, Jr., president of the Board of Trustees makes it plain that it is not only a necessity, but after all the amount specified is only a beginnig. We will not dare to stop when that amount is finally secured, and as a member of the Board of Trustees for more than ten years and as secretary of the Board for the last three years the writer of this editorial can back up every word the president of the Board says. It is a necessity, and it MUST be met.

The American people have always been big enough to meet every real necessity as a nation, and as a small part of the great American people shall the Brethren fail to measure up to the things required of it? Shall it fail in THIS thing of endowing Ashland College and Seminary sufficiently to make it possible to supply the future Brethren church with an adequate number of workers, both lay and ministerial, to meet all the needs of the future church and of Christian civiliation as these needs increase with the growth of the church? We vehemently say NO! It DARE not fail, and the success Brother Beachler has had so far is a sure sign that it will not fail, but as yet Brother Beachler has been able to touch only the "fringe" of the church. With only one one thousand dollar gift, after four months in the field it is self evident that our monied men have not yet been jarred loose from their position and it is plain they are "sitting tight" and holding fast with both hands. But never mind, Beachler is "onto his job," and before the campaign is over some of these Brethren will be wondering why they did it, but it will be done and they will be glad they did it, and will have a more satisfied feeling than they have had for many a year. The BIG drive has only begun, and while a number of "tanks" may be necessary to ride over the barbed wire entanglements that have hurridly been thrown around some of our fattest pocket books we are confident that the average Ford piloted by a good lay brother of splendid community standing will be able to get Beachler across "No Man's" land and with the "machine gun" with which God equipped him there can be nothing less than surrender in due season. But Beachelor cannot do it alone, and as the morale of the armies of Europe is an essential factor in the winning of the war, so we by our prayers and words of good will may keep the morale of our Campaign Secretary up to the required standard of efficiency. Let us not fail to do our part for he has a hard drive before him.

Unseen Friends

An unseen foe is a mighty dangerous obstacle in the way of any forward movement, but unseen friends are a mighty help. Many a great undertaking has escaped positive failure only because unseen friends came to the rescue from unlooked for places. Brother Beachler can only cover the beaten track through the Brethren church in his great work for the College, but there are many by-paths and half-hidden trails that lead to as loyal Brethren hearts as beat in any human breast, and from this source is coming a degree of help that will prove a mighty factor in winning the great victory. We refer to the isolated members of the Brethren church, and their name is legion. The most faithful friends of the Brethren Evangelist are to be found among the isolated members of the church. They are the ones who are most careful to keep their subscriptions paid up promptly. They appreciate anything that will keep them in touch with the church they love, yet from which, by necessity they must be separated. These brethren and sisters, especially the sisters are going to have no small part in this campaign. Just a few days ago we received a check from an isolated sister with whom we chance to have a very slight acquaintance, and she said there is no Brethren church here, but I want to help Ashland College along and I send this check for the endowment fund, and I do hope that sometime we may have a church of our choice in this place. A few days later we receiv another leter from a sister who seems to be a pioneer in Colorado, far away from any Brethren church for many years, and yet her heart beats as true as that of any member who sits under the ministry of a Brethren pastor twice a week. This leetr we reproduce on another page. Read it, for it is an expression of a wonderful faith and hope that should cheer the hearts of other isolated ones. It should also stir them up to similar deeds of unselfishness. The isolated members of the church can do a splendid work in helping to make the Endowment Campaign a success, and we believe we can afford to start an Honor Roll for isolated donors to this fund and run it along with the campaign thermometer. Now good brethren and sisters who have not had an opportunity because of circumstances to help much in the Brethren church, though you love it dearly, here is the one great chance of your life. Seize it. As soon as the names of a half dozen isolated contributors to the Endowment Campaign fund to the amount of five dollars or more are reported to us we will start that Honor Roll. Will your name be there?

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

Presbyterian church. In 1912 when we started a revival here, which developed into a church, at that time my son was just on the verge of joining the Presbyterian church, but by much persuasion he waited and attended our meetings; heard our doctrine; and came in contact with the Brethren and was converted to the Brethren faith and is now a staunch, loyal Brethren.

The Brethren church has a mission to perform in God's plan and it is our duty and privilege to let the world know for what we stand. The Pacific Coast churches lay special emphasis on these truths:—the infallibility of the Bible as originally written by men inspired of God; the miraculous virgin birth of Jesus; the dicty of Jesus Christ; his vicarious atonement; his resurrection; his ascension; his second personal return and millenial reign on this earth; his leading and guiding through the Holy Ghost by his Word; the true form of baptism—trine immersion; the washing of the Saint's feet; the Lord's Supper or Love Feast; the Holy Communion or Eucharist; the anointing of the sick with oil for healing; non-resistance; non-swearing; these and many more truths should be thoroughly taught and deeply impressed on the students as well as the living of a holy and Godly life. Thus equipped, they should in the power of the Holy Ghost, go out as God's messengers and proclaim to a lost world a whole gospel, and when our doctrines are preached clearly and plainly, people will accept the message, will respect and think highly of the preacher for being true. (Any preacher who does not preach doctrinal sermons at opportune times makes a serious mistake.)

Our college has done well. Most of our preachers and mission workers have come from the College, and if it had not been for the College there would not have been much of a Brethren church now. But we, as a church, have not done our duty by the College. We are the Lord's stewards of all we possess and he will hold us responsible. Now let us wake up and endow our College. No college can be run successfully these days without endowment. To do real good work it must have better equipment, more teachers with better remunerations. God has blessed us with plenty of means to raise $100,000 and more, now let everbody do his or her "large bit" or "little bit", and dear brethren and sisters on the Pacific Coast, let us begin now to think endowment, talk endowment, and prepare for the campaign next summer. I am sure we will do our share as we have along other lines, and I believe too, that we cannot invest money for any cause that will be more pleasing to the Lord; so let us give him a hilarious offering.

The President, our beloved Brother Furry, expects to be out here next summer. I do not know of anybody who has made more sacrifice for the College and church than he; so let us make him happy with a great big lift. Then even after that we should continue to endow the College. The Lord's standard of giving is at least one tenth of our income, so why not give one tenth or more of our possession when we depart from this life "for" their works do follow them." What better work can we do than to leave a legacy for preparation of young men and women for the Lord's work. Personally, when I depart from this life, it is my desire now to give more than a tenth of what I possess to Ashland College.

News From the Field

A Word from Ashland

At a recent service of the Ashland church we had the pleasure of welcoming into our fellowship by letter Dr. J. Crawford Mackey and his excellent wife. Some years since Dr. Mackey supplied a nearby Presbyterian church. After a year's service the congregation wished him to continue his ministry and this necessitated his leaving Ashland. Having returned to make Ashland their home Dr. and Mrs. Mackey have again placed their membership with us. Dr. Mackey is too well known throughout our brotherhood to need an introduction. He has recently preached for us at the chapel to the pleasure and profit of all. Dr. Mackey, as all who have ever heard him preach know, is a strong sermonizer and thoroughly loyal to the gospel. I am sure all his friends throughout the brotherhood will join with the Ashland church in genuine welcome and the wish that many years of service for the Master may be theirs.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania

It may be of interest to the brotherhood at large to know that we "went over the top" in fine shape for the "largest yet" White Gifts offering from our Sunday school for the Kentucky and College work. Two years ago we reached $52; last year, $65; but this year we put on full steam and reached the grand total of $102. What do you think of that? Remember, we have a membership of only 180 and a Sunday school with about 130 average attendance, and in three weeks' time we gave to outside benevolences $50 to the Home Mission Board, $10.25 to the Armenian fund and 102 to our Kentucky and Ashland College work. Doesn't that listen good? We're not boasting, for to God is all the honor and glory, for the above is the result of his Spirit dwelling in the hearts of this people. It would have done anyone good to be present when that Sunday school bunch "loosened up" for the $102. Such a spirit as prevailed can prevail only when God is given the right of way.

Hoping for "greater things than these," I am, yours in service,

E. L. MILLER.

Allentown, Pennsylvania

In the first place I am sorry to report that we were obliged to close the Bethlehem work because unable to get people to attend. The members were faithful and deserve great credit for their heroic effort to make the work go. We especially regretted to close at Bethlehem because of the little Sunday school which Miss Elsie Stout (now Mrs. Ogden) had so ably and persistently kept going. Like Hindenburg, we felt that we were making a "Victorious Retreat" because the Allentown work is so much stronger now with the co-operation of the Bethlehem folks.

On September 18 Brother Yoder was with us and very interestingly presented the work in South America. This resulted in greatly intensifying the interest which already obtained here from our Mission Study class of last year. The offering to help defray Brother Yoder's traveling expenses amounted to nearly $25.

Recently we had a week of special services on prophecy, with attendance by some who are not Brethren. One sermon during the week was on "What the Allentown Free Library Teaches on Baptism." Jewish, Catholic, Lutheran and other authorities were quoted (more than twenty in all) in favor of trine immersion. As yet we see no visible results from the meeting, but his Word shall not return unto him void. The week closed with a communion service on Sunday night at which we had 75 5-9% of the membership present. It was one of the best communion services held here for some time.

The subject: "Why Plant Brethren Churches?" was used the Sunday before Thanksgiving and our offering will go nearly double the required 20 cents per member. The following Wednesday evening Brother E. E. Fehnel, our elder, led a "Thanksgiving Prayer Meeting." It was an inspiring meeting filled with many helpful testimonies. A most encouraging note sounded was, that the church is in better harmony than for a long time. This makes us feel as optimistic as do the Allies over their new war council. When people are united in a cause there is hope.

It may be well to say right here that our prayer meetings are well atended. Since we have been keeping a record we find that the attendance averages 51% of the membership. We hold cottage prayer meetings over the winter months.

We observed "Go to Sunday School Day" on November 4, and went four over our goal. The Sunday school is taking on quite an interest these days. The Adult Bible class taught by Brother Fehnel is especially active and growing. We are soon to have a class in Teacher Training. As usual, we expect to have a Christmas entertainment. Brother Oswald, our superintendent, is especially anxious that we have a Front Line school this year.

The Y. P. S. C. E. is quite alive. Recently the efficiency leaflets were put into the hands of the officers and committee men. A few evenings ago a social was held at the home of one of the members, and despite the great blizzard and drifting snow, the attendance was fair and the social a success. Another evidence of our Endeavor work being alive it that we now have a large Junior society meeting in the basement simultaneously with the Senior society above.

The S. S. C. E. doesn't seem to be as active in Pennsylvania as in other parts of the brotherhood, but Allentown sisters hope to be among the first to heed the call: "Pennsylvania Awake!" as sounded by one of our national workers at the recent Pennsylvania conference. At all events, I attended one of our S. S. C. E. meetings recently and found a goodly number present and an interest which looked the most promising since we came here. The sisters are expecting to have a mission study class "under way" soon.

Another thing we deem worthy of mention is that we have been encouraged and helped by the attendance and co-operation of a few of the Brethren from the Ambulance Corps. If you know of any Brethren young man or son from a Brethren home (or any one else in whom you are interested) and who is in the Allentown camp, I will consider it a favor if you will drop me a card, giving his name, section, etc. I go to the camp frequently to "look the boys up." Brethren pray for us.

A. L. DE LOZIER.

An Isolated Member

After being silent so long and isolated from all church fellowship, we still feel an interest in the church. It has been 14 years since I moved to the state of Michigan. There being no church excepting the Dunkard Brethren here, we attend church there.

We have a handful of Brethren families here, five families of us. If only some good minister would come our way and preach a few sermons how we would appreciate it with all our hearts.

My brother, Rev. C. A. Stewart, being here last summer preached us one splendid sermon. Everybody did so appreciate it. A good sermon from one of the Brethren is to our souls as bread to our natural bodies.

There is no Brethren church within a good many miles of here.

I was raised in the Gravelton, Indiana, church. We came to northwestern Michigan in 1904 and have resided here since.

MRS. ELLEN TRITTEN.

Brethren, Michigan.

Bryan, Ohio

Almost six months have passed and no word has appeared from the church at this place. Too often reports grow uninteresting and monotonous. During these six months the church has passed through some glorious experiences and has also been put to several tests. Taking a general survey, the work of the Master has been joyous and successful.

Last spring the church saw the need of a parsonage for their pastor as never before. Houses in Bryan have been at a premium for the last two years and several times it was thought that the pastor might be set out on the street. Careful plans were laid for a new building. Work was started at once and the building was pushed to completion. We are now comfortably situated in our new home, an eight room house, electric lighted, hot and cold water throughout. I consider it a building that the Brethren people of Bryan need not be ashamed at any time to welcome any new pastor.

The church building has taken on also a new and pleasing appearance. The interior has been redecorated both in the main auditorium and in the basement.

At our last business meeting the church by a unanimous vote adopted the Four-Year Program. We are going to start with the new year to make an effort to put the Evangelist in every home of the church. The Sunday school has assited in every missionary movement we have contributed to. There has been no unusual foregoing ahead. We are trying to strengthen a few weak places in our Front Line requirements. We are striving to do more efficient work during the coming year. The attendance just now is suffering from bad colds, visitors, loafers and some slumpers.

We hope to have within the next three months a Young People's Christian Endeavor Society. Then we will begin a campaign of efficiency to meet as many of the requirements of the United Society as possible.

The S. S. C. E is always on the job! They have gained in interest and numbers. The good sisters have expended $100 for the new parsonage this year. They form a Star society. It is, however, more than a "work society." It seeks to develop the spiritual life.

We feel that honorable mention should be made in behalf of the Sisterhood girls. On December 2, they presented the church with an individual communion service which was used in our last communion on December 9. Every one enjoyed the service very much and thought it was the best communion they had been privileged to attend for some time. The girls together with the S. S. C. E. sent a barrel of canned fruit to Ashland College dormitory, a barrel of canned fruit to Krypton, Kentucky, to Brother Cook and his helpers, and two barrels of clothing to Brother Cook for the Kentucky work. The girls also sent a box of dolls to Brother Cook for Christmas presents to the little folks of Kentucky and a nice comforter with about 1,500 names worked on it to Brother Drushal to be used at the dormitory at Lost Creek, and $10 for the Kentucky work. They are now making curtains for the reception room at Ashland College. The girls are a wide awake band, always at work for the good of the church at large.

On November 20 we began an evangelistic campaign for souls and for three weeks turned our forces against satan and his strongholds. Brother A. T. Ronk was with us during the campaign. Brother Ronk preached the old time Gospel and did not hesitate to let the devil and his followers know that he stood firm upon the Old Book.

The visible results of this campaign were seven confessions. Three young ladies, one little girl and three adults. One of the adults being converted from the Dowieite faith. All have been baptized and united with the Brethren church but one who will go to the United Brethren church.

The results were not what we would like to have had. The first week of the meeting was during the week of Thanksgiving which took away the interest of the meeting. The second and third weeks it snowed and the thermometer went as low as 25 degrees below zero and handicapped the meetings to a certain extent.

Bryan is in need of a heart stirring union meeting to get the people back to the old faith. The agitation of the war and the moving picture shows are calling the people's minds away from the things eternal. Our difficulty is the same as the other churches of the town have to contend with. The trouble is to get the outside people to attend a revival even once. Brother Ronk and I went out into the homes and preached the good old Gospel in our weak way, which sometimes seemed to have little effect; some saying, "I am good enough now," and others, "Some other time."

Besides the immediate gains, as a result of the campaign, all who took active part were greatly strengthened. Much good seed was sown which we trust will soon bear fruit.

As for myself, it was a blessed campaign. It was my first opportunity to work shoulder to shoulder with Brother Ronk. I found him to be an earnest, sincere worker for the Lord. I was greatly pleased with his fellowship and his steadfast belief in the old Book. May God continue to bless him in the great work of winning souls.

In closing, we ask the prayers of all God's children in our efforts.

G. L. MAUS.

Burlington, Indiana

We are very sorry to be so late with this report, but on account of sickness in our home we have been unable to write. A. E. Thomas came to us November 8 and began a meeting which was one of the most successful meetings ever held in Burlington. We feel that Brother Thomas is filling his place in the church of Jesus Christ in the evangelistic field. He is a powerful speaker and ever resistless and ready to do something for the meeting. He hits sin some terrible blows and makes no apologies for the firmness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He believes it is the power of God unto salvation. After the first week people had to come early to get a seat and many were turned away. During the three weeks many reconsecrations were made. Sixteen new confessions were made and fourteen were received into the church by baptism. Our Sunday school has increased. Church attendance is very good. We are looking forward to some big things in the Burlington church in the coming year.

ARTHUR HOPPES.

Columbus, Ohio

Dear Evangelist Reader:

A few months ago the editor of the Evangelist stated about the undersigned, "There will be many tough furrows to plough in Columbus." I am sure that statement was a true one: furthermore there were many hidden rocks that the pastor had not the slightest idea of, which had to be overcome. However, tough and difficult the task, it is a joy to be here. The problems confronting us are great, but the God whom we serve is so much the greater, that with confidence in him we press right forward against the bulwark of the enemy. Knowing that he who caused a hunger and thirst in our hearts to bring others to the knowledge of Jesus Christ will continue with us until a great victory has been wrought.

Our revival services closed a week before Christmas. These services will be long remembered. It meant a constant struggle for souls on the few of us. If all the members had put their shoulders to the wheel the meeting would have been far greater in interest and in ingathering. However, as it was we have nine for baptism and three reconsecrated. There would have been one more for baptism, a girl past twelve, but her mother forbade it. During our service several new acquaintances were made who attended and spoke very highly of our church, but did not see their way clear to come with us yet. Our prayers are that the influence of the Columbus Brethren church may grow and convince these and many more that the Savior whom we serve and the doctrine which we teach are both in accord with the New Testament teaching. Knowing the field here is so large and the work so needed therefore we pray that God may open the eyes fully of both pastor and people to the immense task confronting both. The undersigned asks the believing, praying Brethren to join him in prayer that he may be a flame of fire for God to the salvation of a multitude of souls.

Your brother and servant,
S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

I want to start the ball rolling for isolated members of the Brethren church in the Endowment Fund. I will be one to give ten dollars. I wish it could be written in three figures instead of two, but I am a widow and not very well blessed with this world's goods. I believe there are one thousand others in the church that can give as much and not miss it. It seems to me that educating young people for the minstry and missionaries is one of the noblest causes of the church.

I want to say too, that the home missionary cause should be better supported. I have tried repeatedly to get one of our ministers here to preach the Word but not having the means to pay for same myself I have failed. Mut the menonnites have come in and possessed the ground. Thank the Lord. They held a revival last summer in a tent, and a two weeks' meeting last month in a nearby school house. They received over 20 members at the last meeting and raised over forty dollars in a few minutes to pay the evangelist. Now they are talking of building a rural church and of holding more meetings in other nearby communities in the spring. I have prayed earnestly that if our own denomination did not send a minister to this community that some other church would. They held an all-day prayer meeting Thanksgiving in a neighbor's home (where one year ago the same day they had a beer drinking) and the man of the house came ont on the Lord's side. The mother and three children had joined in the revival meeting. There was great rejoicing when the father made the start. There were about 50 at the meeting and every family brought dinner and all ate together. I have taken the Brethren Evangelist for over 20 years, while it has been hard sometimes to get the money, yet it seems I can not do without the church paper.

An isolated sister in the Lord's cause.

Krypton, Kentucky

In an article I wrote a couple of weeks ago, in speaking about how much the Brethren through the Mission Board had given toward the work here I aimed to say $3,750 instead of $750. That is to the best of my knowledge.

You remember it was reported we raised $41 Thanksgiving for coal. Well, on Christmas eve we raised $53, and more coming. There is no question but what we would have raised $100 or $125 had it not been so late and the children were leaving and we had to stop and give out the presents.

Our building is almost plastered and still there has been no reply in regard to the seats to my knowledge. We are still hoping if there are no seats to be found, that there will be something sent in that will help us to get something for seating at once.

JAMES S. COOK.

What a Little Child Can Do

Although only eight years old, here is her own letter:

"Mr. Carpenter: I have $2.40 for Kentucky missions. I will tell you how I saved it. I had 12 bantam hens. My mamma gave me one cent for each egg I gathered. I saved the money I got for the eggs on Sundays since last Easter. Then I earned some money swatting flies, one cent for 25 flies. That I saved for missionary. I am eight years old.

From Lena Schubiger,
Frenchtown, N. J."

Thrice fortunate are the little children whose parents teach them while they are yet very young to give to missions. Little Lena will likely be a faithful supporter of missions as long as she lives, and her own Christian life will be the richer and sweeter because of it. Parents, be faithful to your children. Thanks, Lena, just keep on saving one-seventh for Jesus and he will bless you all along the way.

Compare With Krypton

We note in Brother Cook's November report that the average attendance of the Krypton Sunday school for that month was 62½ and that the average attendance at the prayer meeting for the same time was 70. Where is there another Brethren church that could report a prayer meeting attendance that would equal one-half of the Sunday school attendance?

Another Faithful Daughter

"Dear Brother Carpenter: I send my offering for the Kentucky mission. I carned it on the farm working for papa and mamma, and saved it for the mission. Hope it may help some little boy or girl. I sent forty cents last year and $1.50 this year, and hope to send more another year. I am nine years old. I love to hear mamma read about the Kentucky mission work. I hope to help it grow. Yours truly,

VIENNA E. HACKETT,
Hampton, N. J."

Mrs. Edwin C. Hackett is another faithful mother, teaching her daughter to do for others while she is yet very young and while yet very impressionable. May the young life of the Brethren church be fashioned for the service of Christ and his church.

Lost Creek Doing Things

Perhaps we should say they are planning to do things, as the plans have been laid and are being worked out, and our readers will do well to watch reports from time to time as the goals reached are reported. Brother Drushal is calling on the people of Lost Creek to stand by Riverside school and church and farm as never before and we are praying that they may respond nobly.

White Gifts

We hope that the White Gift offering this year for the College and Kentucky will go over the top. All will wait with much concern the report of the secretary, Albert Trent, of Johnstown, Pa. The Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions will prove to be the largest yet. Watch Brother Bowman's reports. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." G. C. CARPENTER.

Visit of Twelve Japanese School Masters

Quite recently twelve Japanese school principals selected by the Educational Department of the Japanese government from the middle schools in different parts of Japan but financed by a Japanese magazine that has a circulation of 1,500,000, visited various cities in America, including New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Mr. K. Sasaki, principal of one of the high schools in Tokyo, was chairman of the party. These school masters received a special welcome not simply by educational and civic organizations but by the Sunday school leaders. They expressed the deep impression made upon them by the fact that America while busy commercially, and in vast war preparations, was equally busy in social service lines and was emphasizing tremendously the spiritual. In Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, they had opportunity for a study of some representative Sunday schools so that they could observe at close range the intimate and necessary relationship between the public school and the Sunday school in this country, in the development of a rounded character.

In Brooklyn the party visited the Bushwick Avenue Central M. E. Sunday school and there sang the Japanese national anthem. They were interested in the graded work of the school, in the departmental divisions and the adaptation of program to the needs of the varying ages.

In Philadelphia they visited business, educational and historical institutions through the co-operation of Hon. John Wanamaker, vice president of the World's Association, the Chamber of Commerce and Dr. Garber, superintendent of the public schools.

In the city of Pittsburgh, through arrangements made by Mr. H. J. Heinz, chairman of the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday School Association, the visitors were entertained by the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Education and a committee of which Chancellor McCormick of Pittsburgh University was chairman. A dinner was tendered the guests at the home of Mr. Heinz at which 130 guests were present including some 60 educators of Pittsburgh. The decorations and surroundings, a trip through the conservatory where a monstrous chrysanthemum bust containing 684 buds was shown, reminded the visitors of far away Japan. Mr. Heinz presided and addresses were made by the President of the Chamber of Commerce and by Pittsburgh leaders. The world-wide Sunday school work was shown in a series of lantern slides. On Sunday the party was divided into four groups and under escorts and with Japanese interpreters visited four of the large schools of the East Liberty section. The next day they were conducted through the steel works and other manufacturing plans of Pittsburgh and the following morning they arrived in St. Louis where they were the guests of the Chamber of Commerce.

The intervisitation of Japan and America by these groups of educational and business leaders is exercising a very profound influence in promoting cordial personal relationships and a better understanding of the ideals and problems which are common to each country.

Sunday School Evangelism in Chile, Egypt and China

At this time, the beginning of a new year, when most of the churches in the home land are giving special attention to soul winning it is of special interest to note reports which come from some of the field secretaries of the World's Sunday School Association. Just three are mentioned here though equally inspiring word comes from the other countries where the World's Association is active.

Rev. George P. Howard has been on a Sunday school evangelistic tour in Chile and states that on the first evening 312 were present and at the end of the week 828 were crowded into the church in Santiago. As a result 150 new converts were gained who are promptly put to work winning others. In Egypt there is progress in many parts. A revival has begun in Wad Madina through the special ministration of Rev. Ibrahim Girgis, Sudan Secretary of the World's Association. He held an afternoon service for women and one for children on alternate days, and an evening service daily for men. He visited 20 homes in Wad Madani and had prayer in every home. He also spoke to the classes in the government school. Mr. Girgis tells the following interesting incident: "The chief clerk in the railway office in Wad Madani attended the meetings held every night during my stay in the town. He used to come earlier than the hour on which the service commenced, and began to bring others with him. Evidences of Christ and the new life appeared in his face, and in his mind, though he did not publicly join the church. He asked me to get him Bible study helps, and sermons. When I left the town many came to see me off. One man caught my hand, led me aside and said, 'I wish to tell you about the work of God's grace in the chief clerk. Last night after the meeting he came and spent a long time in our house in prayer. He is resolved to serve God even if he has to leave his government post in fulfilling his purpose.'"

In China the Sunday School Union, through its secretary, Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, who is the field secretary of the World's Sunday School Association, is carrying forward very definite evangelistic work, especially in co-operation with the China Continuation Committee. Particular work was accomplished in the two summer conferences and in other conferences in Peking, Tientsin, Hangchow, Nanking and Shanghai. These conferences are a part of a great setting up campaign to vitalize the church and to prepare for the coming evangelistic campaign with Sherwood Eddy, as the leader. The Sunday school, church and Y. M. C. A. leaders are linked in this work. Definite individuals are assigned to special work in these city conferences. The particular activity of Mr. Tewksbury is to visit each church, holding personal interviews with the pastor, Sunday school superintendent and church leaders, urging that personal evangelism become a permanent feature of the Bible Class work. The "Adult Bible Class Movefent" will receive great impetus from such campaigns.

Tithing Pamphlets Free and at Half Price

We hereby offer to send gratis, postpaid, to any minister who desires to inaugurate the tithing system in his church, a package containing samples of practically all the tithing literature we publish, about two hundred pages.

Accompanying the package will be an offer by which he or his people can obtain all or any portion of the pamphlets at half price.

Please mention that you saw this offer in the Brethren Evangelist.

Laymen interested in Tithing are invited to call their pastor's attention to this offer.

Resume

December 1, 1914, the writer began as pastor of the Fort Scott, Kansas, Brethren mission. Our active work closed May 1, last, but we were present and preached to close the three years' service.

It is our present aim to give a summary of the work done during the period of active pastor.

Total number of sermons preached, 310; and in the interim, 56, or 366 in the three years. Persons received into the church at Fort Scott, 20; communions held, 3; funerals conducted, 13, and officiated at 8 weddings.

A live Sunday school; S. S. C. E. and prayer meeting were carried on. I think we can say we had the banner attendance at the Sunday school in the history of the mission, both as to Rally Day attendance, 145 and average for a quarter.

All of our local expenses were paid. The church property improved at an approximate cost of $500 in labor or work, thus leaving a better equipped plant to that extent. Services were carried on at Cherry Grove for a year and a three weeks' meeting held. A short meeting was held at Elk Head, Missouri, as well as at Mulvane, Kansas.. I organized a church at Altoona, Kansas, with 17 members, with Brethren Button and Sell in charge. Thus receiving a total of 37 into the church while pastor at Fort Scott.

We lost a number by death, a few by withdrawal and still more by moving away. So there remains a smaller resident membership than three years ago. There is yet a good body, a nucleus of a future church, and faith shows us the church of the future.

We wish to thank all who in any way aided us or helped in the work and pray that God may bless the laborers who are at Fort Scott to carry on the work.

Mulvane, Kansas

We came here December 1, to hold a series of meetings but conflicting interests forbade, so I am acting as supply pastor for a month. This field has its peculiar problems that time alone can solve. There is room and need for a work in south central Kansas and a pastor will find a fine community here.

I wish here to say a few words for Guthrie, Oklahoma. In and around here are found 20 to 30 of our people. A nucleus for a mission, where I am told results are obtainable if an effort is put forth and a mission put on a stable basis. Should not our Four-Year Program mean taking advantage of some of these places? and should not they be chosen from the viewpoint of proximity to other churches so as to be of mutual help to others as well as self?

Wishing and praying for the success of our work,

WM. H. MILLER.

We Are Seeking the Goal

A few weeks ago we had the pleasure of holding a two weeks' meeting with the Bethel church in the vicinity of Cassopolis, Michigan, which we feel was a great success. And God blessed the little flock with a baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire to such an extent that Dowagiac, a city of 6,000 population called as one of old, "Come over and help us or we die." On Sunday, December ninth, we made our way through the snow drifts thirty-two miles reaching the city in ample time to open our services at 7:30 P. M. With inclement weather and short notice our crowds were not so large but continued to grow and with interest and astonishment to know that there is a people and church which preach and practice the plain, simple gospel to the letter.

After one week's services we closed with three accessions to the church for which we are thankful. Elder A. A. Munson who is 72 years of age came forward and united with us after preaching for the Church of the Brethren for several years.

Two stand approved for baptism and there are others who will come with us soon.

Michigan is an open field for the Brethren. There are great opportunities if we will only grasp them. We expect to hold on to Dowagiac with what we have until spring when we will make greater efforts.

We covet the prayers and co-operation of one and all. Yours for Christ,

THOS. F. HOWELL.

Marriages

CARROL-WITTERS.—At the home of the bride in Huntington, Indiana, on June 24, 1917, Mr. Homer Carroll and Miss Ferol Witters.

KESSLER-BURNS. — Mrs. Lizzie Burns, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Garst, of Somerset, Indiana, was married to Ora Kessler, of Denver, Indiana, on September 23, 1917, by the writer.

D. A. C. TEETER.

HARP-SAYLOR.—Bowen L. Harp, and Daisy Saylor, both of Baltimore, Maryland, October 27, 1917.

YOUNG-SIMPSON.—Alton Young and Helen A. Simpson, both of Washington, D. C., November 10, 1917.

CAMPBELL-LYONS. — J. Allen Campbell and Mary E. Lyons, both of Washington, D. C., November 24, 1917.

DOBSON-HEFLIN.—Robert H. Dobson and Dorothy W. Heflin, both of Washington, D. C., November 29, 1917.

W. M. LYON.

CAMPBELL-MURR.—At the home of the bride's parents, on the evening of December 22, Mr. John G. Campbell and Miss Elizabeth Murr were united in marriage by the writer. The bride is a member of the Bear Creek Brethren church and a former student at Ashland College. The groom is by profession an efficiency engineer with a prominent firm at Dayton, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell will reside at Dayton.

A. J. McCLAIN.

ETTER-GAINES.—Mr. Harvey L. Etter and Miss Leona L. Gaines were united in marriage at the home of the writer in Xenia, Ohio, on the evening of December 11. The bride is a member of the Salem Brethren church at Clayton, Ohio, where she has rendered much valued service as teacher in the Sunday school. The groom is an estimable and well known young man of that community. At their return from the wedding journey Mr. and Mrs. Etter will take up their residence near Clayton. Their many friends wish them much joy and happiness.

ALVA J. McCLAIN.

OGDEN-STOUT.—On Thanksgiving afternoon at the home of the writer, Mr. John M. Ogden, of Buena Vista, Virginia, and Miss Elsie M. Stout, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, were united in marriage. Brother Ogden is held in high esteem in his home community and impressed me as being a very earnest young Christian. Sister Elsie is known to quite a number of our membership owing to her activity in Sunday school work. She was my faithful co-laborer while I was at Allentown and Bethlehem. Her friendly devotion and activity were phenomenal. She was quite a young girl when she entered the Sunday school work and for several years personally conducted the school after all the others had given it up; being quite a musician and singer, and able to teach and talk, she kept it open until the mission board decided to sell the building and locate in a better part of the town. The young folks have the prayers and best wishes of their host of friends.

E. E. ROBERTS.

DAVIS-MILLER.—Mr. Harry R. Davis and Miss Mary K. Miller were united in marriage at the home of the writer at St. James, Maryland, on October 6, 1916. The bride is a member of the Brethren church. The ceremony was performed by the writer who joins their friends in wishing them much happiness as they journey through life.

WILLIS E. RONK.

Our Dead

ORAM.—Paul Arthur Oram, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Pliney Oram, was born January 9, 1917 and died November 27, 1917, aged 10 months and 17 days.

The deceased is survived by the father and mother, four grandparents, one great-grandmother and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral by D. A. Hopkins and Rev. Dunlap.

SAPP.—Andrew J., son of Herbert and Philena Sapp, died at their home near Brinkhaven, Ohio, November 24, 1917, at the age of 18 months. Funeral services conducted by the writer. G. R. PETERSON.

RIDDLE.—Harold Andrew, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Riddle, of near Tiosa, Indiana, was born December 26, 1910 and departed this life November 22, 1917, at the age of 6 years, 10 months and 26 days. According to the words of a sacred writer, "Man cometh forth like a flower and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not." We find comfort and consolation in the words of Jesus, saying, "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

As the earthly home decreases the celestial family increases. Several years ago a mere infant brother passed on and is waiting for him. Again only a year and a half ago, Edward entered into that peaceful rest Harold leaves a loving father, a kind mother, four brothers and five sisters. The funeral was conducted by Rev. O. E. Oxley, pastor of the Tiosa Brethren church.

SMITH.—Mrs. Adam Smith was born October 3, 1876, died at her home south of Wabash, Indiana on May 7, 1917. Funeral services conducted by the writer at the Mount Vernon Church of the Brethren.

D. A. C. TEETER.

CLYMER.—Mary R., wife of brother P. B. Clymer, departed this life December 6, aged 73 years. She was a faithful, devoted Christian worker. Joining the old or German Baptist Brethren church about 40 years ago. She was active from the very first, largely in the mission which is now the Tenth and Dauphin church. She never lagged or faltered in her fidelity to it, even in its darkest hours. Others grew discouraged and quit; she never: Always at her place at the organ, never coming alone, but always bringing others. To no one is greater credit due for the success of that mission than to her. Working by her sude during the 18 years that I was the Sunday school superintendent, none knew her excellent traits of character better than I.

Brother and sister Clymer were two of the eighteen original incorporaters, six had passed, and now she the seventh, to enter into their final and glorious rewards. Who shall be the next? May God in his infinite mercy keep us, the remaining eleven, faithful to the end, or till he comes, for whose coming we pray. Services by the writer.

E. E. ROBERTS.

STAIR.—Barbara Francis, second, daughter of Ben. Swinehart, of Ashland, was born in Stark county, April 12, 1872, departed this life December 2, 1917, aged 47 years, 7 months and 20 days. She united with the Brethren church the winter of 1890 and proved a faithful member of the same till her death. She was united in marriage to Casper Stair December 24, 1891. Our beloved sister's life was a source of inspiration. In spite of the intense suffering for the past two years she trusted the one who finally removed her to the better home. Those left to mourn her departure are, husband, three sons, father, three sisters, three brothers and a host of relatives and friends. Services and burial at Fair Haven by the writer.

BENJ. F. OWEN.

RITCHSON.—Died suddenly on the night of December 2, at the home of Dr. Laughlin, at Hallandale, Florida, sister Ethel Ritchson who came here some time in October with Dr. Laughlin, from Hagerstown, Maryland. Miss Ritchson was formerly a student at Ashland College. Funeral services by the undersigned at the Hallandale Union church.

DANIEL CROFFORD.

GOOD.—A. Rowland Good, son of John J. and Louisa Cobaugh Good, was born February 11, 1858 and departed this life at his home in Conemaugh November 3, 1917, after a prolonged illness. He is survived by his aged mother, two brothers, three sisters and eight children. Brother Good united with the Conemaugh Brethren church, November 19, 1889 and faithfully continued in that faith until the end. The funeral was conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

Roberts.—Mary A. Cobaugh Roberts, wife of Herman Roberts, was born in Borough, Pennsylvania, December 8, 1881 and died in the Mercy Hospital, after a long and suffering illness. In 1902 she was united in marriage with Herman Roberts. To this union five children were born. She is survived by two brothers, one sister and three children, two of the children having preceded their mother to the spirit world.

Mrs. Roberts united with the Conemaugh Brethren church in 1901 and remained loyal to that faith until called home. The funeral was conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Brethren church.

GOOD.—Mrs. William N. Good, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O'rouke, was born March 20, 1867 and died at her home December 10, 1917. She is survived by her husband, Wm. N. Good, two daughters and one son. At an early age she was confirmed in the Roman Catholic church and continued in that faith until the end. The funeral was conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

NICHOLS.—Olive, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Nichols, departed this life very sadly, being burned to death in her home near Mt. Gilead, Ohio, while her parents were out attending to the evening's work. Her clothing took fire while alone in the room and inside of two hours she was dead. Little Olive was an unusually attractive child of five years her next birthday. Funeral services conducted by Rev. Welsh, assisted by Rev. Riggs and Rev. L. A. Hazlett, Mrs. Nichols former pastor. The family have the sympathy of all. Little Olive is asleep in Jesus. May the Lord continue solacing the bereft parents.

L. A. HAZLETT.

The Revival We Need and How to Get It

What specific form of revival do we need? If the Lord should send a revival, would we count it a success or a failure? "Pentecostal revival" is a much worked phrase these days, so much so that it has found its way into much of our singing. Measured from the standpoint of Pentecost preaching, and in the clear-cut answer to the question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" together with the prompt obedience rendered, it is actually a question whether the average evangelists would recognize a "Pentecostal revival," if they saw one. In the average meeting one never hears the apostles's inspired answer to the lost soul inquiring for light. That answer has been thrown to the winds, and a much easier and a more popular one given. But how do we know that man's substitutes will satisfy the Lord? We don't know. We can know what will satisfy him, for he has told us. Talking "Pentecost," and even singing "Pentecostal power" is one thing; but following the instruction given on Pentecost is quite another thing.

We need a revival of the cross. The cross of Christ with its shrieks and agonies and blood is the Father's exhibition to a God-hating world as to the lengths he was willing to go to redeem us from sin. What a stupendous task! What a mighty effort! The law was stated by St. Paul thus: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone." That precious grain went into the ground—in Joseph's new tomb—and since then, "The way of the cross leads home."

"I must needs go home by the way of the cross,
There's no other way but this;
I shall ne'er get get sight of the Gates of Light,
If the way of the cross I miss."

Yes, he is the way—he made it; walk in it. He is the truth—he revealed it; believe it. He is the life—he confers it; accept it. And Tennyson can be quoted again and again, if need be to make the thought stick:

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
But thou, O Lord, art more than they."

There was no revival until after the cross was stained by blood—the blood of the Son of God. Calvary came first; then Pentecost. His miracles startle, his preaching attracts and repels. Upon leaving the Mountain of Transfiguration he charges them to tell no one that he is the Christ. It would have been only half a truth, and half truths have always been dangerous. It needed to be said, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities." Ie needed to be said, "He was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Yes, and if we want a revival, we must get it V. I. A. the cross: that is, pay the price in good hard sacrifice. Paul in Romans 6: 6, 7, 8, states it like this: "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." That is why we must have our Calvary before we can expect a Pentecost.

We need a revival of the cross in every sermon. A sermon that does not cost hours and hours of anxiety and burn up a surplus of nervous energy is not worth preaching. Much of our preaching breaks down here, I admit. Before the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus spent the whole night in prayer. And the people were astonished—not at the speaker and his brilliancy—but at his doctrine. A sermon without its cross may cause some astonishment, but if it does it always centers around the speaker. But we shall have to go farther than the sermon. There must be a revival of the cross in our lives, as well.

Here is where the church—the church life—is failing today. It refuses the cross. We do not want to pay the price to bring in new converts, or care for them when committed to our care. In all of our planning to make the church grow, if the project requires effort or costs money, there is opposition at once. We are everlastingly choosing the lines of least resistance, the easy and pleasant things to do. O my soul, what if the Son of God would have chosen that road? Then there would have been no Gethsemane, no Calvary, no cross; and over the approach of every cemetery would be written, "Death is an eternal sleep." Then every good-bye would have been a long good-night. We will not pay the price, and so we sigh in vain for a New Testament revival.

We also need a revival of the authority of Christ. The heart craves for an authority from which there can be no appeal. The soul will find it somewhere. Romanists find it in the decrepit old father on the Tiber; but better there than not at all. If there is a revival in Romanism among the nations of the earth as many contend, Protestants who have been turning over the heavens and earth to destroy the inerrancy of the Bible, may thank their stars, for the soul must have infallibility upon which to rest. Some find it in the conscience; but the standards set up by conscience are variable and shifting. What is right today will be wrong tomorrow. Some find it in the church, but the church is made up of imperfect human beings, and it will endorse today what it repudiated but yesterday. I plead for the old-time supremacy of the Scriptures and the sovereignty of Jesus Christ. If the soul can not repose in security here, where, O where can it go. Jesus said, "All authority in heaven and earth is given unto me." And he proceeds as if there were no doubt of this. He never apologized to anyone for saying the wrong thing. He never spoke as if there were any doubt as to his positon. He spoke as if he never intended his truth to grow useless with age. He said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." "They shall judge you in the last day." There is but one throne in the Book, and that is Christ's throne. There is but one theme, and that is citizenship in his kingdom. One throne, one kingdom. There can not be two thrones in his kingdom; that would degrade both king and kingdom. All those entering his kingdom must have faith in the King, and submit to his authority in obedience to his will. The conditions of entering his kingdom are fixed, and it is but disloyal to question them. It is a burning shame how the very words of Jesus are ignored, and sinfully, and wickekdly set aside by his would-be friends. It must grieve him, and I plead for a revival of the authority of Jesus.

Three fundamental principles—FAITH in the King, REPENTANCE of wrongs committed against him and OBEDIENCE to his divine will—must ever remain essentials to our admission into his kingdom. Man by an act of disobedience, threw off the authority of his Lord, and by an act of obedience, he must recognize it and submit to it again. There is no hope for Christianity without Christ's authority restored over heart and life.

The Stolen Horse

An old saying used to run, "It is no use to lock the stable after the horse is stolen," but we suppose it would now be more up-to-date to say, "It is no use to lock the garage after the 'flivver' has disappeared." And yet that is what the American people are attempting to do all the time. While we as a people are quick to comprehend and quick to act in some things, yet in other ways we are remarkably slow. We would not say the fault is always with the people themselves as it seems in some cases they do comprehend and they do want to take immediate action, but they are held back by those who are in authority over them and by the provisions of laws that have become obsolete, but that are still in force.

Last summer, rice, one of the very common foods of the American people, was traveling along an even road when the people were advised to eat more rice and conserve certain other foods that were growing scarce in the world's market and immediately the rice market suffered from palpitation of the heart and the price was almost doubled. To save wheat for both the Allies and the submarines we common people were advised to eat more corn meal and corn products and immediately corn jumped to unheard of prices.

With the shortage of the potato supply that manifested itself a year ago the price soon advanced to about fifty cents per dozen for respectable looking tubers and the people were urged to plant war gardens and the large acreage planted and a fairly good crop reduced the price to reasonable proportions in some sections, but we are now urged to eat more potatoes and we can expect a special elevator to be constructed to enable one to reach the heights to which the price of this very humble article of diet is expected to go, and now since the Christmas season is over, and since candy dealers report they never before had such a large retail business in candy as during the last month, and since we have been able to carry all the sugar one can buy at one time home in one's overcoat pocket some of the cities, Cincinnati for example, have begun to make a "survey" to determine the availability of sugar in that city. Another case of "after the horse is stolen." We only wonder if the corps of volunteer investigators will be able to learn how much sugar the breweries of Cincinnati have in store.

The Reproach of Sin

The wise man of old said, "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people." The passing of the centuries has not changed the application of that saying for it is based on an eternal principle that is not subject to change, and the truth of it is being demonstrated daily. George Bernard Shaw, one of England's foremost writers of today, said to the British people, "Do not suppose you are fighting to punish the Germans for being wicked. They are wicked, being human, but no wickeder than you." Of course this statement is resented in England and we suppose it would be more deeply resented in America should any prominent American make a similar charge against his countrymen. But to be really honest about it, are we taking proper precautions to prevent conditions developing that would make such a charge possible? Everywhere our people are being told that the "flower of the American people" is being sent to the help of the cause of liberty in France where the cause is in so great danger. It is right to hold up high ideals, but it is also right to tell the truth to enable the people to adjust their ideals to the real situation, if ideals can be so adjusted.

Our government has taken the greatest of precautions to protect the American soldiers while in training and the government has the support of all loyal American people in this matter, but the pro-German brewers and liquor dealers that are strangers to the first principles of American patriotism, recognize no obligation to their country except as it fosters their business and they would undo all the government has done and turn the soldiers loose to satisfy both a natural and an acquired tendency to indulge in that which destroys both soul and body, and drunkenness and attendant evils have already disgraced the American people as these things have been indulged in by our soldiers in France.

The Board of Temperance of the great Methodist Episcopal church has issued a bulletin in which a charge is made that when a certain division of American troops landed in France practically every officer in the division got drunk the first night ashore. With such an example as a "starter" is it any wonder that more than one thousand soldiers from one section of northeastern America had to be placed under guard for drunkenness after their first pay day in France? These charges are not made by irresponsible enthusiasts, but by an officially appointed board of the greatest Protestant body in America, and they should cause every Christian man and woman in America to rise up and demand of their state legislatures the adopting of the prohibition constitutional amendment and of the immediate exercise of the authority necessary to keep liquor entirely away from our officers and common soldiers both in America and Europe. It is not an easy thing for many local and God-fearing American people to become really enthusiastic about contributing to the Red Cross fund and other similar funds to care for soldiers that are thrown into the hospitals as a result of sins and diseases that have fastened upon them because they have looked upon the wine when it was red, and have listened to the entreaties of the women upon the street.

The Last Farthing

In his sermon on the mount Jesus speaks of one being cast into prison by the judge and adds. "Thou shalt by no means come out thence until thou hast paid the last farthing." This is one of the things many people seem to forget, that life has its compensations and that one who violates the law of life must pay the penalty of that violation even to the last farthing.

When a man violates the social laws of which he is a part it is not always made clear at once that the penalty must be paid, yet we know that at some time and in some manner the debt must be paid. It is not always as clear a case as that of an old river pirate who preyed upon society for many years more than half a century ago, but who now has just been released from the Atlanta penitentiary after forty-five years' imprisonment. Just one half his long life of ninety years spent behind prison bars because he had no respect for the rights of society. Not every man who disregards the rights of society is compelled to spend forty-five years in prison and then be carried out a helpless paralytic and to be cared for by public charity, but even those who prey upon their fellowmen and rob them of their rights under guise of law will surely learn sometime, even though it then be too late to make amends, that they, too, shall be compelled to pay the last farthing of their indebtedness to human society.

A Wrong Theory

One is never qualified in doing a wrong because others do it and are not molested. The old saying is, "Two wrongs never make one right." When the government officials ordered that all electric display signs be darkened to conserve fuel most of the business houses and others who displayed such signs complied with the request; but it seems that many saloons, breweries, pool rooms, etc., failed to obey the order. And we are told that the pastor of a prominent church in Pittsburgh noticed that a brewery sign was not darkened on lightless nights whereupon he declared that if this sign was not turned off he would turn on the electric sign on his church and another one besides if he could find one. This was intended as a remonstrance against the disloyalty of the managers of the brewery, but it would not have been a justifiable method of procedure. No man can justify himself in wrong doing because others do it. Undoubtedly this pastor had more than once preached against the false standard which says, if you will I will. There is but one thing to do and that is to obey the law regardless of what others do. Acting upon this principle is what makes a Christian hero in time of opposition or persecution.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Ashland Theological Library

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

One Jubilee

Yes, we had a JUBILEE. With Beachler and Furry on the pro-program and with all the Indiana preachers sitting around to whoop-'er-up for Ashland and with a number of Ashland students there to help in the decorating and program, you need not be surprised that we had a good JUBILEE. We believe that it was worth while and we hope other districts will be as happy when they have done their "bit" or best for Ashland. To have reached that goal will be to fix your place in the sun on the balance sheets of this committee. So far as Ashland is concerned, they want the money; but as for this committee, we want every church to contribute their share of $100,000. Already, we know that Indiana has saved herself from lowly STARS. Indiana gets the FRONT LINE STANDING in District Goals, while some of her churches will never get it until they have given four times the number of their membership in GOOD DOLLARS. The average for the winning church in Indiana is $13. Hurrah for Mexico church. While Goshen tried to put one over on North Manchester and steal the prize for the largest gift, but they got left. North Manchester expects to hold this place in this state at all odds. North Manchester's total to date is $2,585 and more to come. Goshen's is $2,527.

Ready to Report?

Brother Pastor, are you ready to make a good showing on our great drive for the goals? Before very long you will be called to account as to your stewardship on the goals. By the first of March we expect to have every pastor report what has been accomplished in his charge or charges. The state organizations have been made, I think, and we are glad to have these organizations reported in these columns so that you will know who's who or whom you are expected to answer. Do not neglect to reply to any man of authority on this program. If he asks for information, he does it for a purpose and that is to get his goals finished at the right time.

Co-operation

This is a big word but a bigger work. The FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM will only be an inspiration if it is accomplished. If we fail, we shall lose inspiration instead of gain. We need not fail but if we FAIL TO START IN TIME, we shall fail to finish at all. We have task enough for four years and can not do it in three. Are you watching the chart?

Branded

Misquoting me, one young preacher said that I had said that if a preacher did not try to get his task done, we should brand him. Not that. But he will surely brand himself. This will be sure to show who is trying. For instance, if a preacher has not preached on either of the assigned or programmed subjects, to date, he has dangerously near fixed his church so that it can not come out FRONT LINE at the end of this year. He is branding himself; for at the end of the Four-Year period, we shall know what churches co-operated and we shall have on record a balance sheet for each year and any church can turn to these sheets and tell if it was the church or the pastor that pulled it down or up by referring to the goals that were to be made by the preacher and the ones to be made by the church, such as gifts, etc.

A Big Thing

The conviction grows on me that this is one of the biggest things a denomination ever undertook. Perchance, at the end of this wonderful achievement of the goals, at the end of the four years, some brother should move that we publish the summarized report of the Four-Year Program in book form for public distribution! It would be just like a lot of our people to do that very thing and then who is the preacher or which is the church that would like to be branded by their own inertness as a "slacker"? Branded for all time and that by their own conduct. And yet, the Good Book says that we are to give an account of—not only four years—all our years down to every thought! How wonderfully careful ought we to live in the face of these wonderful facts!

The Greatest Gift in the World

A Christmas Sermon by Miles J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Ill.

TEXT.—"If I had not come and spoken unto them . . . If I had not done among them the works which none other did." John 15:22, 24.

By way of introduction to what I want to say about "The Greatest Gift in the World," I call your attention to the portion of scripture recorded in Gal. 4:4 and 5. "But when the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law; that we might receive the adoption of sons."

These words are extremely clear and simple. There are some texts in the Bible that standing alone have little meaning in themselves, but need the light of their contexts thrown upon them to illuminate them and make them full of meaning. But it is not so with this text. Its meaning flashes forth from its setting like a glowing lighthouse across an evening sea.

These words do not even need the aid of reflection, for they crystalize themselves into one inspired, inclusive utterance setting forth the sublime fact of the Christ and his mission. They set forth the Incarnation as the purification of the human race and the impulse to moral and spiritual attainments. They explain the pathetic waiting when men lived in anticipation of the promised Messiah and died with their hopes unrealized. They show how and why the coming of the new-born Child in Bethlehem brought to the world a new being out of the far-flung night of travail and hopelessness and death.

That Infant so meanly wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a rude manger on that far-off day destined to be the focal point in the world's history and experience. Everything before that event pointed to it; and everything since is the outgrowth from it or points back to it. That birth marked the departure of the old world and its old law, with its many virtues absorbed in a new world and a more positive law where affections and aspirations take fresh forms and impulses. As some one has well said, "The birth of Jesus is the sunrise of the Bible. Toward this point the aspirations of the prophets and the songs of the Psalmist were directed as the heads of flowers turn their heads toward the dawn; and from this point a new day began to flow silently over the earth—a day of faith and freedom, a day of hope and love."

"When the fulness of time came, God sent forth his Son." The birth of Jesus Christ was not a thing of chance. He was not born in the earth too soon, nor did his advent come too late. At the time of his coming, preparation for it beyond the wisdom of man had been made. The Hebrew people with their conception of God and the discipline of his providence had prepared the soul for the coming of Christ. The Greeks with their love of art and culture and scholarship and travel, prepared the mind for the coming of Christ and for the transmission of his gospel in the most beautiful language among the tongues of men. And it remained for the Romans to prepare the physical man, or the physical world, for Christ's coming, with the establishment of a strong government bringing law and order and authority and well-built highways permeating every part of the empire, affording safe and easy travel for Paul the missionary and others who went forth everywhere heralding Christ's gospel of glad tidings and salvation. It was indeed "in the fulness of time" that Jesus came.

Of course, the world had long expected the Messiah. Down through the Old Testament world there flowed a golden stream of Messianic prophecy heralding the coming of the Christ, until it burst in a flood-tide of glory in the Bethlehem manger. And lo! "when the fulness of the time came God sent forth his Son," the fulfilment of cumulative prophecy, the Savior of a dying world.

Jesus came! But the text of the evening raises another very important question: What if he had NOT come? What if his voice had never been heard in the earth? Jesus himself calls our thought to a consideration of this in the words of the text. So let us dwell awhile upon these words of Jesus: "If I had NOT come," "If I had not come," "If I had not COME," "If I had not done the works which none other did."

It is said that one out of every three of earth's population acknowledges the sovereignty of Jesus Christ. We know that during the last nineteen hundred years the Christian religion has steadily exerted an increasingly dominant influence over the strongest races of the earth. And through the last sixty generations the foremost men and women in every realm of human thought and activity have been those to whom the Babe of Bethlehem has been the unfailing fountain of inspiration. Through all the years since the angels' song announced the coming of Christ, you can not think of a single political institution, social custom, intellectual movement, religious awakening, that has been constructive and productive of good in the world, but that has had its origin and dynamic power in him.

Let us look briefly along certain lines and see how true this is. For instance, look at the LITERATURE of the world since the birth of Christ in the Bethlehem manger. Or, to make the field more familiar, look only at our English literature. What would our books and our bookshelves look like if the contribution of Jesus Christ as a creative and inspiring force were blotted out? If we were to go through our libraries and take out the books we should most dislike to lose, it is almost a certainty that those would be the very ones that owe their purpose and distinctive worth to the Man of Galilee. Whether in history, biography, poetry, essay, philosophy, or what not, everywhere we look we find that which bears the indelible trace of the pervading influence of the Christ. The sweetest, the noblest, the best, the most inspiring, in all literature since his coming would be blotted out if Christ had not come.

Again, think of the beautiful CHURCHES and magnificent CATHEDRALS that are found all over the world. There is not a single city, town, village or countryside in any civilized land without them; and everywhere churches and cathedrals are the rarest and costliest examples of architecture, with the most beautiful carvings, mosaics, frescoes, and art-glass windows representing the scenes of his life or something connected with it, built by the sacrifice and religious enthusiasm of the multitudes moved and animated by the Christian faith. All these would be gone if Christ had not come.

And this leads us naturally to think of the influence of Christ upon MUSIC. The greatest, the most beautiful, the best loved musical compositions we have today were born of the inspiration of him who came "in the fulness of time" and proclaim his glory and majesty. The grandest symphonies, oratories and cantatas have him as their undying theme. And what comes closest to us all, and that which would be most sorely missed, are the old familiar hymns which have sung their way and their unforgotten messages into our hearts since childhood. All these would never have been known if Christ had not come.

And think of the contributions of Christian PAINTING and Christian SCULPTURE, examples of which not only adorn the walls of our homes and schools and churches, but which have made possible well-filled art galleries all over the world of inestimable value to inspire and awaken and cultivate the finest and most esthetic faculties of the mind and soul. We should be deprived of all these too, if Christ had not come.

Consider also the contributions of SCHOOLS and COLLEGES and UNIVERSITIES to the civilization and enlightenment of the world; and then always remember that from the day the boy Christ remained in the temple to converse with the wise men, Christianity has been the chief and untiring champion of education and learning. The intellectual giants of the past nineteen hundred years have been nourished and developed in the stimulating atmosphere of Christianity. And the matchless teachings of Jesus still inspire the greatest intellects, as the story of his sufferings still melt the hardest hearts. With the exception of a few godless state universities which have come into being comparatively recently, all the famous institutions of higher education, such as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Oxford and Cambridge, were founded by the Christian church. These and all of like purpose and power and influence would never have been known if Christ had not come.

And what shall we say of that great and ever increasing number of HOSPITALS and ASYLUMS and HOMES OF HEALING found everywhere where the mind has been made to think and the heart to feel by such parables as the Good Samaritan—these things provide for the weak, the unfortunate, the crippled, the incapable? All these are but symbols of the mercy and love and pity and compassion of him who healed the sick and cleansed the lepers and made the lame to walk and the deaf to hear and the blind to see and the dumb to understand. These, too, would be unknown even in our day if Christ had not come.

And so we might go on almost endlessly pointing out the things of comfort and uplift and blessing which the whole world owes to the coming of Jesus Christ; but enough has been said to set even the most indifferent and ungrateful and disobedient to thinking. While Christianity has to do primarily with teaching the art of right living and the building of character here as a preparation of the life that is to come, yet it accomplishes innumerable results for man's happiness and welfare; for what real happiness would there be in the world without Christian literature, churches, music, painting, education, hospitals and many other things that owe their existence largely to the ministry of the Son of Man? Christianity may be likened unto a tree which bears indeed the fruit of immortal life, but bears also other fruits for the life that now is.

There is no phase of human life and activity but that has felt and feels today the strange influence of the spirit of the living Christ; and, while we may not understand just how that power is exerted and how it pervades and moulds our mental, social and spiritual life, yet we know it is done. No one in all the annals of history except Jesus of Nazareth touches life at all points: in literature, in art, in song, in morality in philosophy, in politics, in business, and in religion,—and not only touches it, but touches it to purify and uplift and ennoble and bless.

Behold! at the very threshold of life stands the Man of Galilee, softly saying to all childhood, "Suffer them to come unto me." And then all along the journey of later life he is the ever-present Companion ready and willing and able to help and guide and save. At weddings, at feasts, at funerals, he waits to be a welcomed guest. And out in the swifter currents of human activities strong men lean on him, and weak ones cling to him. Men of wealth and position and culture and refinement, find in him a congenial companion, while the poverty stricken and the heavy laden lay their burdens at his feet. To the philosopher Christ is a guide; to the Magdalenes of the world he is the only brother they have who gently whispers to them, "Go and sin no more;" and to the consecrated ones among the sons of men he is the ideal of their highest affections.

For lost men seeking a safe path out of the wilderness of the world, Christ becomes the Way. Overcome on life's journey and sinking in weariness in the heat of its conflict, he is the Fountain flowing near by constant and refreshing. He is also the Vine growing along life's rugged and toilsome way making a bower of beauty for shade and giving rich clusters of spiritual food for our strengthening. And at last, at the end of the way he stands like a golden door of hope opening into heaven, home and immortal happiness.

In view of all this—what he has been in the world, what he is today, what he shall be—what if he had not come? Without him, what today would be the world's brightness, what would be its ideals of righteousness and justice and truth, what would be its hope? Standing at the close of his earthly career and at the threshold of the Christian era, he said, "If I had not come! If I had not done!"

And what a sobering thought this is? It is true, since his coming multitudes have assailed him, and some assail him still; millions have been indifferent to him, and millions are indifferent still; and yet not a single one can escape him for he is met at every turn. His influence pervades, permeates, and shapes what men think and do and say and are, whether they are conscious of it or not. We never put a date upon a letter or a business document without thereby stating how long ago it was that Christ was born. We never give a Christmas present without imitating the wise men from the East who lay their treasures before the cradle in Bethlehem. Whenever we see a red cross on an ambulance, or on a seal, or on a printed page, or even on a package of court plaster, we are looking at that which in the mind of the whole world is a symbol of the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ. We cannot escape him, and no power on earth can set him aside as the dominant factor in life. Even within the short hour since this service began, a host of souls all over the world have faced death and with a gentle smile have gone through "the valley of the shadow" soothed by his surpassing love and sustained by his spiritual power and living presence.

Ah, this old, sin-cursed world would be a strangely different world if Christ had not come. But "in the fulness of time God sent forth his Son." And he came not to redeem the world, but to redeem individual men and women in the world. Al lthese splendid things I have mentioned in our civilization which we owe to the coming of Christ are, after all, only by-products of the supreme purpose for which he came. He came primarily that men and women might find salvation from their sins. So-called civilization without individual salvation and redemption and regeneration is only a veneer for fair weather and will not stand the tests of storms. Christ's real mission was not to civilize the world, but to Christianize it; not to feed and heal the body, but to pardon and redeem the soul; not to save from suffering, but to save from sin.

He came into the world with new teachings about God's infinite love and mercy and goodness that thrilled the hearts of the people like the strains of sweet music. He came with forgiving love for the sin-sick and penitent. He came telling men of an immortal hope that gilded life's over-arching sky with splendor and promise. He came and in his life and in his words held aloft before the gaze of the world beckoning ideals of thought and conduct that still glow and shine above the sordid things of earth like diadems in the crown of life.

All this, and infinitely more, he did for you and me. What if he had not come? What if his voice had never been heard in the earth? He came on that first Christmas day, but "there was no room for him in the inn." We are told that "He came unto his own, but they that were his own received him not." And since that far-off day the living Christ has ever been the coming One.

Have YOU received him? Have you opened the door of your heart to let him in with all the heavenly treasure that he brings? He says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and will feast with him and he with me." He stands on the doorstep of every heart seeking admittance. Have you made room for him in the inn of your heart? Unless you have, so far as you are concerned, his coming has as yet been altogether in vain for you. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no excuse for their sin." He has come; he has spoken the words of Eternal life; and if one rejects him there is no excuse for his sin and its inexorable penalty and doom. God help us to receive him, and enthrone him and worship him.

That Uncertain Sound

BY W. M. LYON

Get the book and read 1 Corinthians 14:8. That is my text. What thought does it suggest to you? Men versed in military science get its meaning at once. What terrible things have resulted from using wrong signals. We are told that the awful disaster at Halifax a few weeks ago was the result of the use of a wrong signal. The author of our text warns us against giving a wrong spiritual signal. It is a fearful thing to sound a trumpet that starts men and women on the way to eternal death. Beloved, do we realize its full meaning?

I often think of how Jesus must have been moved in this way. we read that he was moved with compassion. Yes, he saw men and women "scattered abroad, as sheep without a shepherd." Matt. 9:36. It is pitiful to see a flock scattered and in confusion, not knowing which way to go. At this present time we see this increasingly manifest. Great spiritual confusion exists throughout the world after nearly two thousand years of what is supposed to be gospel teaching. Surely the trumpet has given forth uncertain sounds. Truly God's word is being marvelously fulfilled in these perilous times.

But I must tell you why this subject came to me just now. It has been impressed so much on my mind because of the experience connected with my work for the last several weeks. I refer particularly to conditions as I have found them existing among our young men who are on trial—yes, they are on trial—on account of adhering to the doctrine of non-resistance. I have not failed to notice that there is much confusion on this subject, not only among the different bodies of Brethren or "Dunker" people, but it is also true with the Quakers or Friends, the Mennonites and others. Why should there not be more unity and definiteness among all who hold to this great doctrine? Surely there is great need of calling attention to this matter. Some trumpets must be giving forth uncertain sounds! What is the remedy? Some of us have been before Secretary Baker and General Crowder and other high officials again and again because we are most deeply concerned along these lines, and I must confess that the experience has been painful, yea, at times, humiliating, that there is so much confusion on this subject. Brethren, it is surely high time for all to pray and work as never before to get the mind of the Spirit. And while I am on this subject let me say that the confusion is by no means confined to the capital of the United States. The trumpeters referred to seem to be found elsewhere. Let me give this illustration: It represents a union (?) Thanksgiving meeting in a certain country place. Several denominations were represented. Our sister church, (Church of the Brethren) kindly furnished the place for this union (?) meeting, and the Baptists furnished the principal speaker for the occasion. Said speaker did not fail to tell his hearers how very thankful they should feel, first of all because we're in this war, and second, all parents should be especially grateful if they have sons at the front, etc. (It might be well to note here that this preacher is quite a young man and therefore has no son to give him this pleasure (?).) Brethren, how does this strike you as an example of confusion? Is it any wonder that people don't know what to believe these days? O, what awful confusion! Who is responsible? To finish the illustration just given, it will be necessary to notice the fact that in the same community at a Thanksgiving service (union?) held one year previous the speaker emphasized the fact that all should be thankful because they had been kept out of war! Surely there is great need of true under shepherds today. One other illustration: A minister who preaches on the "Signs of the Times," who not only attends spiritualists meetings as opportunities are presented, but uses his influence to get others to go. May the good Lord look in mercy in these days of world-wide strife and confusion, and may we all seek the wisdom which he only can give.

One City's Drink Bill

BY WM. H. SCHAFFER

My work at times throws me in contact with the un-Christian side of life. Recently I heard with my own ears the following order given over the telephone:

Five quarters of beer; five halves of beer; five cases of ale.

The beer is $9.50 per barrel, and hence the above order amounted to $30.88. The ale is $2.00 per case and hence the order amounted to $10.00, or $40.88 in all.

There are just fourteen such places in Allentown which put in an equally large order (many a time larger) each week. Multiply the order by fourteen and you have $572.30 per week.

In addition to the type of place just referred to, there are in our city fifty-two club houses that put in an average order of $75 per week. And so fifty-two times $75 equals $3,900, plus $572.30 or $4,472.30 per week.

Multiply by 52 for the number of weeks in a year and you have the drink bill of Allentown's Fire Houses and clubs, which is $232,559,60, or nearly a quarter million dollars per year. This is by no means all that Allentown spends for alcoholic beverages in a year.

Also let us remember that Allentown is only one among the many "wet" cities of the United States. Is there not after all some consistency to the demand on the part of sober thinking people that the FOOD COMMISSION deal more effectively with this enormous waste in foodstuffs wrongly and harmfully manufactured and used? May God help us as Christians to stand four-square on this point.

A New World Consciousness

What is this thing—"a new world consciousness? "It isn't an easy thing to define for it isn't anything concrete, as the editor of "Men and Missions" soon found out when he tried to find a picture that would illustrate this very illusive topic chosen for the January number.

But some of the most real things in life are the ones you can't hold in your hands. So it is with this new, broad spirit of brotherhood which is emerging slowly, but inevitably none the less, out of the houlocaust of war. In a stirring article by Nolan R. Best, editor of "The Continent," many phases of the subject are treated, While especially emphasized is the challenge to laymen the world over to rise up and unite with a renewed missionary spirit in seizing this chance to "shape nations to the ideals of Christ."

The war is the one thing uppermost in all men's minds these days, naturally. However, it won't do to let home problems be neglected or we will find when the war is over that they have grown to impossible proportions. Read how one man is fighting enemies of drink and immorality out in the logging camps of the West. "Body, Boots and Britches," is the name of a breezy article by Dr. Thomas D. Whittles, superintendent of this work for the Presbyterian church, and tells the story of how "Haw Wired Fred" joined the missionaries at camp. When a "booze hoister" does turn over a new leaf he fairly pastes it down!

Only samples, these two articles mentioned, the January "Men and Missions" holds many more timely news items and stories.

The Sunday School

Suggestions for Studying Mark

BY VIANNA DETWILER

A million Sunday school children gave a million nickles to supply a million soldiers with a million copies of the New Testament. There never was a time in the history of the world when this Book has been carried and read by so many men as now. Among other millions are many who prize the "little book" more than any other article they find in the "comfort bag," as was recently noticed in the case of a Roman Catholic boy. That the people at home keep pace with the soldiers, the Vest Pocket Testament League ,urges its claims upon them, to read at least one chapter in the Bible each day, and to carry a Bible or Testament with them every place they go. Join with these groups, the rest of the Sunday school army and all other Bible lovers, and you have a force that staggers the imagination. What additional inspiration, if these millions were studying the same chapters the same week. Happily the International Sunday school lessons beginning with 1918 could not have been better chosen for this very purpose. It is the book of Mark, the entire book, so that we shall have something complete when we get through; and the six months we have to cover the book is enough time to become really acquainted with our Lord as presented by Mark.

We shall need first an introduction to Mark himself, nor have we far to seek to find that he belongs to the business type of men. His sixteen chapters, as over against the twenty-eight in Matthew; his sudden beginning and abrupt ending; his brevity and omission of our Lord's long discourses, parables only a few, force the conclusion that Mark is a man of action, used to getting things done. Unlike the other gospel writers, Mark gives no account of the life of Jesus previous to his baptism, the initial rite of his public ministry. Now that the time has come for the opening up of the momentous campaign, heralded by John the Baptist, Mark brings Jesus before us for the first time, just when everything is ready for action,—on hand at the hour appointed.

With these characteristics so strong in Mark, we would naturally expect the same characteristics in Christ to appeal most to Mark, and in reading the book, we find this side of Jesus life brought out most prominently. While all of the four writers prove his deity, Mark sets forth Jesus Christ, the Son of God, as servant, suffering servant. If you find this to be the theme of the book of Mark, or whatever you may choose, you'll find it will greatly stimuplate your reading, if you keep the purpose of the book before you as you go through the chapters. For reading, reading with open eyes, is the first essential in the actual study of any book.

You will notice what has been given thus far, are points that can be readily gathered by careful observation as the book is read through. In fact to come to an accurate knowledge of Mark, and that is the essential purpose in the six months' course before us, the thing required is not a commentary, but a prayerful reading of the book, close observing and careful thinking. The result will be more lasting knowledge, than could be gained by the use of a commentary and the ordinary way of reading. Where is any place in the soldier's limited baggage for a commentary, yet he surely needs the very best out of the Bible and rejoices to know of the book alone method of study. Also there are more homes without the so-called Bible helps than with, and the divine concern in this line is for the multitude. Certainly God would not have his Book of such a nature that it required outside help for the common people to understand it.

There is no book in the Bible that lends itself more readily for a beginning of this kind of study than that which has been selected for the world-wide Sunday school course,—the book of Mark. It appeals to more classes of people than the other Gospel accounts. It is brief and full of action, suiting the business man and the soldier. The portrayal of Jesus as the mighty Worker, a servant well-pleasing to the Father, carries its message to the laboring man; the mother is touched by his compassion and continual serving and she finds in this book so full of graphic pictures, a supply for the demand for children stories. And yet its problems are profound enough to interest the deepest scholar. Above all, Mark seems purposely adapted for the Home Department class.

At the very outset we shall have to decide to disregard, so far as our studying is concerned, the lesson divisions as arranged by the International Sunday School Committee, in order that we may be free to take up the systematic study of the book, which of course deals with every part of the chapter. To follow detached portions allotted by any one, may result in pleasure and some profit, but it is not study in the proper sense of the word. The Sunday School Committee recognizes this fact and expects the Sunday school pupil to study the paragraphs between the lessons, and why not do the work in a logical way? Nor may we allow ourselves to be influenced by the chapters and verses as divided by King James' men, in that first accredited translation of the Bible into the English language. These divisions are useful for ready reference, but as they are not a part of inspiration, it is not presumptuous to say they are quite irregular and often confuse the thought instead of helping to clear it up. The American Revised Version ,with an event or teaching grouped into a paragraph is an actual necessity to make the systematic study of the book easy. The paragraph being the logical division and taken as the unit of study.

With these objectionable features removed, and having noted, 1. previously the place the book of Mark holds among the other gospel accounts, we are ready now to take up the second suggestion for our study of Mark,—reading.

Read the book straight through at one sitting to gain a general impression of it. Read it again with an open note book at hand, in which record special phrases or words that often occur, or a repeated thought. And if you read with your eyes open, ears open and heart open, you'll see picture after picture; you'll hear the stinging remarks of the Pharisees, with the just rebuke by Jesus; you'll feel the strain if the suspended question, "Who is it?" till the break comes in the heart of the book, answered by open-minded Peter, "Thou art the Christ." 8:29—the end of the beginning, the beginning of the end of the book. If you are not familiar with Mark, read it again, or till you catch the general movement and its purpose. For "the general principle of a true system is that of first gaining a knowledge of broad outlines, and then concentrating upon details."

3. You are ready for this the next step, if you are willing to do the thinking necessary to give the contents of the book briefly in words of your own in outline form. The chief break has already been indicated (8:30) separating the PROCLAMATION of Jesus from his PASSION. His PREPARATION was necessary first (1: 1-13) thus the 16 chapters naturally fall into these three divisions. With the touch of the same hammer, as by the law of cleavage, each of these three parts, subdivides easily into sections. The section can be definitely located and named only as you go on with the closer study of the paragraph, but roughly speaking you will find them somewhat like this:

1. Opening. (1:1-45.)
2. Opposition. (2:1-36.)
3. Organization. (3:7; 4:34.)
4. First Over-the-Sea Trip. (4:35; 6:6.)
5. Second Over-the-Sea Trip. (6:7; 7:23.)
6. Over-the- Border, north. (7:24; 9:29.)
7. Over-the-Border, south. (9:20; 11:10.)
8. Temple Teaching. (11:11; 13:37.)
9. Triumph! ! (14:16.)

4. Paragraph study may now be taken up with zest, to see what material make up these sections. Keep your interest keyed up as you read closely, that when you finish a sentence, you may know just what it said. Choose a title for each paragraph in the section, and ever remember the paragraph is the unit of study, not the chapter. Think over these titles till you can call them in order without reference to the book. From these you gather your name for the section.

5. You have well earned your way to the most fascinating part of Bible study, relationship. Find the "thought relations of each paragraph to the ones preceding it and following it. The questions to have in mind are: Why did the writer put this paragraph in? Why did he put it where it is? Some times the connection is merely chronological." Note it all. Apply the above suggestion on a larger scale, to the section as a whole in relation to the preceding section and following it, ask yourself, What does the section add to the movement of the book? What would I miss if this section had been omitted? Thus you come to know the material of the book, not by note but by the logical method of relationship. Instead of the suggestive outline given under point 3, you can definitely shape one if time allows.

6. Write a list of ten observations on the section. This means to correlate facts and statements and expressions, then record results. By observation we do not mean a fact, as feeding the 5,000, which is a matter of content; nor is it interpretation or application. It is simply telling what you see that is striking.

7. Study the persons and places mentioned. If places or journeys are prominent draw a rough map indicating the same.

8. Having thus mastered a section, your thoughts are ripe for interpretation and application. To attempt these earlier in the study is like a child trying to do a problem in division, before it has learned subtraction and multiplication. It is necessary to distinguish the three: (1) Mastery, (2) Interpretation, (3) Application. In the mastery of a passage the question is, What does it say? taking it exactly as it stands. In an interpretation, the only question is, What does it mean? Not what can it be made to mean. (3) In the application, How does its meaning apply to me? How can I obey its teachings,—obedience. Knowing without doing checks further knowledge. This together with a conscious dependence upon the Holy Spirit, and the proper method, will keep one's interest high in Bible reading the year round.

Again and again let it be said, that an accurate knowledge of the material is necessary for a deep spiritual insight into God's word. Nothing will take the place of it, no amount of praying or commentaries.

"Patriotism is not enough," said Edith Cavell, the brave British nurse, on the eve of execution in Belgium. Action is needed to prove the soul's devotion. The government does not ask your life but your moral support and financial aid. Practice self-denial as a sacrifice for your country. Convert your savings into Thrift Stamps and Certificates and thereby sustain the army in the field. Do it now!

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

DO YOU KNOW that about twenty-five per cent. of the subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist expired at the close of the year? Have you looked at the label to see if yours is one that has expired? If it is, will you not please renew promptly? It will help our business greatly if you will do this much.

This week we add FOUR more churches to the Evangelist Honor Roll. They are Long Beach, California, Carleton and Falls City, Nebraska, and Burlington, Indiana. As you look over this list you will notice that it is beginning to assume no insignificant proportions and a great many churches will feel sorry if they do not win a place on the roll along with the other working churches.

L. B. Wilkins has certainly won a place for himself in the hearts of the good people at Washington C. H., Ohio, where he has labored so earnestly for the past two years. His ministry has been fruitful in more ways than one, and his willingness to take up a new work in some field where the church is not able to give a man full support is most commendable. By this method many churches can be strengthened and built up.

The report from Brother Carpenter of the condition of the work in Kentucky, of the progress made and of the activities of the mission, together with the financial statement for December is good reading for all who are interested in this great work among the southern mountaineers. This report shows that a goodly number of the brethren and sisters are greatly interested in this work.

One of the brethren with the right idea about building up Brethren churches is C. C. Grisso, who just recently conducted a meeting at the old Dutchtown church in Indiana. Knowing the condition of this field many evangelists would not find it convenient to conduct a series of meetings for the few who were left. But Brother Grisso was looking for an opportunity to really serve the Master, and he found it here and was amply rewarded for his labors. Ten souls sought their Savior and twenty-five reconsecrated themselves to Christ. The faith of the church was built up and steps have been taken to have regular preaching services once again.

To maks it possible to keep a record of the proceedings of the General Conference in a convenient form for several years the Conference paid to the Publishing House a sum sufficient to insure it against financial loss in the publication of the minutes. Last year the demand for these reports exceeded the supply. With this experience as a starting point the Publishing House felt it would be safe in offering to pulish the report of the last conference without any bonus, expecting a larger sale to insure it against loss. But the profits are all stored in the attic. A supply equal to meet any reasonable demand was published and at this writing there have not been as many copies sold as were sold last year. All the extra copies are a dead loss to the Publishing House, and unless the pastors make a greater effort to dispose of a larger number in their congregations the Conference will have to again pay a bonus to get the reports published as the Publishing House can not afford to take the risk.

While the Brethren people in Michigan are small in numbers they are large in faith and hope. Recently W. F. Johnson, of Berne, Indiana, held a short meeting at Lake Odessa, which was greatly appreciated. Though there were no additions to the church yet there were two young men of the congregation who were led to accept a call to enter the ministry which was a great victory in itself.

Miss Charlotte Hillegas, one of the workers at Lost Creek, Kentucky, reports the close of the fall term of the school at Riverside and the Christmas services of the Sunday school. The Sunday school has supplied a number of copies of the New Testament to the boys from that community that have been called into the army. The new nurse has arrived at Riverside and is busy with her duties.

G. W. Chambers, the new pastor at Buena Vista, Virginia, has been properly initiated and installed into the work by the Brethren coming together and giving him an old fashioned "pounding." From the report of Brother Chambers we take it that that the enjoyment of the occasion was mutual.

For the third successive year the North Liberty, Indiana, Sunday school observed a White Gifts Christmas and with greater enthusiasm and success than ever. A number of White Gifts were made to the King but the greatest of all was the gift of two young lives to the service of the Master. Brother Grisso is now engaged in a revival meeting in this church.

O. E. Oxley has recently concluded a revival meeting at Roanoke, Indiana, which resulted in six additions to the church, two of the number being converted Catholics. The Roanoke church is falling in line with the aggressive churches that are atttempting to carry out the provisions of the Four-Year Program.

One of the busy pastors in the Brethren church is H. F. Stuckman, at Falls City, Nebraska. It is a man-sized job to do the work that Falls City requires, but Brother Stuckman has been doing more than one man's work by looking after the interests of the church and by doing Y. M. C. A. work in the army encampment at Omaha at the same time. We are sure Brother Stuckman rejoices that he has succeeded in getting his church on the Evangelist Honor Roll.

Recently Brother Bame baptized seven converts at North Manchester and also had a most remarkable and unusual experience at a recent morning church service. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation today as it was in the days of the apostles and will convict of sin now as it did then.

Brother Beachler was home a few days at the beginning of the year to gather a little more momentum for the great drive he is making in Indiana. It might be well if a few more churches could be induced to "provoke one another to jealousy and good works," even as North Manchester and Goshen have done. The spirit that strives to excel is the spirit that will win in this Endowment campaign.

A break down of machinery in the Publishing House makes it necessary to get the press work on this issue done by another printing establishment, and the paper will be at least one day late, but we ask our readers to be patient with us. Other papers have their troubles too. Today we received our copy of the Literary Digest, four days late.

Goal Nine

How many of our readers know what Goal Nine of our Four-Year Program is? If you do not know you will know after you finish reading this page, if you will have the patience to do so. A large number of the goals have been treated by their directors on the Four-Year Program page of the Evangelist, but this is not one of them. Perhaps the one who conducts that page thinks it is not necessary to treat it there and he is correct if he does. The Publish- Company was made director of this goal and as business manager of the company it falls to me to act as spokesman. Also the various conference districts have made provision for district Goal Directors and it has fallen to my lot to fill that place for the Ohio conference. Goal directors from other districts have written for suggestions as to how to proceed to carry out the provisions of Goal Nine, but as my correspondence is entirely too heavy already to give this matter personal and individual attention in every case I hope all the information and suggestions may be found on this page.

When the chairman of the Program Committee asked me as the representatives of the Publishing Interests to set the goal for the Brethren Evangelist and I said seventy-five per cent. of the homes receiving the paper, he thought the goal was a little high; but unless a goal is high it is scarcely worth striving after. Little things are no challenge to men and women who are capable of doing big things. And if the Brethren Evangelist is worthy of a place in twenty-five per cent. of the Brethren homes it is worthy of a place in seventy-five per cent. of the homes. Knowing the great unoccupied field in this line of endeavor I felt safe in throwing out that challenge. The families are in the church and the workers want to keep in touch with all the church's activities and we are convinced there is no better way than to keep them informed and up-to-date in regard to all the church is endeavoring to do.

The Responsibility

Since the entire Four-Year Program has been adopted by the General Conference, and so far as we know by all the district conferences and also by a large number of individual congregations, it is now as essential that a church shall reach Goal Nine as it is that it shall reach any other goal set for its accomplishment. And a failure to reach this goals is just as much a failure as it is to fail to reach Goal Four or Eight or Ten or any other goal.

In fact the church that fails to reach this goal is no nearer a place among the front line churches than a church that fails to come up to the requirements of the College Endowment or of the Foreign Missionary offering. Not many of the goals established will be reached without effort. In fact one of the best features about the whole program is that it will require a stupendous effort to accomplish it and in many respects the effort required to reach the goal will be the greatest part of the reward. Knowing that it is not always the greatest effort but mostly the best directed effort that achieves the greatest results we offered to the Conference through the Publishing Company a plan that would help the pastors to reach the desired end in regard to the Brethren Evangelist.

The plan we offered was that of placing the Evangelist, not in seventy-five per cent. of the homes, but in ONE HUNDRED per cent. of the homes in every well organized church through an official action of the church and the expense of the same to be met by making it a part of the regular budget for the finances of the church. Sunday school literature is supplied in this manner and we could see no reason why church literature could not be supplied in the same way, especially when it would have this advantage over Sunday school supplies, that it would be mailed directly to each family and thus insure its regular delivery. As an inducement to the churches to adopt this plan we offered the paper at a reduction of fifty cents per year to all churches that will adopt the plan, making the paper cost $1.50 instead of $2.00 per year.

As iteration and reiteration are psychological principles to be considered in making a deep and lasting impression we trust we will be pardoned for repeating some things that formerly appeared on this page.

Making It Easy

To maks it as easy as possible for the churches to comply with these conditions we gave them as liberal interpretation as could be done consistently and ruled that it shall be left to the local church boards to determine WHAT is a Brethren home in their congregation. They may limit it to the active membership of the church or to the SUPPORTING membership as they think best, just so they reach the 100% of what they decided is the basis upon which they shall estimate their members, but at the same time we feel that it would be a mighty good MISSIONARY investment to send the paper to families that are not active and into homes that are not now giving financial support. We are sure it would be the means of winning some of them.

Another proposition that we submitted in order to make it possible for the very large churches that have a more or less uncertain membership, especially in the cities, was that to any church reaching one hundred subscriptions to the Evangelist the same reduced price of $1.50 would be made. At the present time the two churches reaching the highest places on the list are Waterloo, Iowa, with 147 subscriptions and Lanark, Illinois, with 135. But these churches practically followed the letter of the proposition and claimed no exemptions.

We do not expect EVERY congregation to adopt this plan, as some of us are still too conservative for such a radical departure from the practice of our fathers before us, but we feel that this plan generally followed out will be the easiest way to reach the goal. The churches that reach 100% will help to make up for those that do not go above fifty per cent. and thus we hope to reach an average of seventy-five per cent.

If the pastors will carefully consider the list of churches that have already won a place on the HONOR ROLL they can not help observing that it is a REPRESENTATIVE list. There are large churches and small churches, old churches and mission points, rich churches and poor churches. Consequently we feel justified in saying, what these churches have done other churches can do. Moreover we will say that while a number of these churches on the Honor Roll were among the best supporters of the Brethren Evangelist, yet there has been an average increase of more than TWO HUNDRED per cent. in their subscription lists. A man does not need to be a prophet to tell what this plan, generally followed out by the entire brotherhood, would do for the publishing interests of the church.

A Word to District Goal Directors

Some of the district goal directors have written me for suggestions as to how they can best get the churches in their district to reach this goal. I will say to all such, that if they have a desire to know how the various churches stand in their respective districts I will furnish them with the number of subscriptions there are to the Evangelist in each congregation in the district. They can then get in touch with the pastors and see what they can do to help along with this work. We also feel that it would be of great assistance to other pastors and other churches, if a number of our pastors who have led their congregations "over the top" in this part of the campaign would write and tell us how it was done. In fact we hope to have a symposium from a number of these successful pastors to present to our readers before many weeks.

But the best of plans will not work themselves, and the district goal directors should learn in the very beginning of the campaign to get at it and to keep at it. They may receive a rebuff once in a while, but they will soon get used to that and in time will acquire the ability to wear the "smile that won't come off." And they will learn that a smile can be carried through the mails in a letter just as readily as a frown can be, and it is usually a great deal more effective in its operation.

Something to Think About

The Brethren church is yet in the period of its infancy as we all know. Its plans and its policies are not complete and perfect. As a church we should never refuse to learn and when we learn we have been mistaken about some things we should be big enough to "back up" and take a fresh start. We have made mistakes in the past and it is quite likely we shall make mistakes in the future. But even our mistakes will not have been made in vain if we learn to profit by them and avoid greater ones in the future.

We are still a small church and there is a possibility of scattering our forces so widely that we can not make an effective "drive" at any one point. It would be absolute folly for a small nation like Belgium to attempt to throw her armies around the whole boundary line of the central powers of Europe, only a nation with practically unlimited resources is big enough for that. But in spite of the devastation and destruction that struck her little country without warning Belgium still has an efficient army, small though it may be, but it is a "concentrated" army. We feel that possibly the Brethren church could accomplish just a little more if her forces were more concentrated. Only yesterday we received a letter from a good, loyal sister from one of Indiana's good churches which said in part, "I hope to see the day soon when the Evangelist, Woman's Outlook and the Brethren Missionary will be all one paper. I believe we can have better success with subscriptions if people get ALL the church news together than to have separate papers even if the price has to be raised. It is hard to get subscriptions for any ONE of the papers because people say they only get a part of the reports of the work and they don't want to take so many different papers." We will not make any comment on this letter at this time, except to say that it is our belief that we could increase the size of the Evangelist fifty per cent. giving these other departments of the work of the church their regular department in the paper under the direction of their own editors, and with the combined support of it all do it at the present price of the Evangelist. Think it over brethren and if thought advisable to discuss the problem in a Christian spirit through the columns of the Evangelist they will be opened for such discussion.

We have been reliably informed that there have been more combinations made of religious publications during the last ten years than in forty years previously. This is the age of combining forces. It will be well to consider such a project on the part of the Brethren church.

Salvationists at the Front

Over $900,000 had been spent by the Salvation Army in France and Great Britain in the construction and maintenance of more than 200 rest rooms, 183 hutments, 70 hostels and 35 ambulances before America entered the war. At the beginning of August the first American contingent of Salvationists, consisting of twenty officers, sailed to begin work among the American soldiers in France.

Army huts and rest rooms have also been opened and are being opened at many of the cantonments in this country, where the new draft army is undergoing training. It is intended, further, so far as funds permit, to open Salvation Army rest rooms in every city near a camp site or where soldiers in large numbers are quartered in armories.

The McAll Mission

Rev. George T. Berry, American secretary of the McAll Mission, writes from France:

"The more I see of the work of our beloved mission, even in these days of tragedy and sorrow, the more my own faith in its future deepens and expands. The station at Rouen I have never seen more absolutely alive nor its devoted director more in earnest, and this despite the absence of a score of helpers who are serving as volunteers among the army of nurses or actually at the front with the colors. At least 10,000 refugees from the north and from Belgium have found shelter, food, clothes and friends in our big Solitaire at Rouen, and the 'Feminine Group' continues to sew and sew and sew for their loved ones on the battle line, or for the still poorer ones all about them. And it is the frends in America who have made this service possible."

Mr. Berry speaks of Paris as being "so sadly familiar yet strange," with sad-faced women in black blouses standing at the motors of the tramways, collecting fares in the crowded cars or washing down the streets with hose. Men on crutches, with arms in slings or bandaged eyes, are on every corner. The mission meetings for women are well attended, though, and have gone on without interruption."

Gipsy Smith in France

Gipsy Smith, who has been at work in France under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, recently wrote:

"The leaders of a large majority of the huts in France are clergymen, whose churches have loaned their services for a period to do this work. This means a closer sympathy on the part of the church for the Association movement and a new respect on the part of the men, for the clergy.

"The Association is, by its army work, proving itself to be a communication trench for the churches. My message to the American Association movement is that it should put all it has into this work—money, brains and heart. The boys are built of big stuff, and they are worthy of far more than we can ever give them or do for them. The more we do and give, the greater will be the harvest."

Chineses Coolies in France

Dr. James F. Cooper, of Foochow, China, has gone to France, with his chinese medical assistant and four nurses, to look after the health and comfort of some 3,000 Chinese coolies who are working for the Allies behind the lines. Knowing their language and their ways, and desiring to do his full share in the great struggle, he offered himself for this service when the British authorities called for a medical volunteer. He conducted his strange army across the Pacific, across Canada, across the Atlantic, and now he is their Good Samaritan in France. What an illustration of the far-reach of the war, its ramifications into distant parts of the earth! And what a testimony it is of the readiness of the missionaries to turn their hands to any service which comes along!

Missions to Jews in Russia

Dr. Fohwein, a representative of the Society of Friends of Israel at work in Wilna, Russia, writes:

"The work during the past year was chiefly a work of love and consisted of healing the sick, feeding the hungry, and comforting the unfortunate, and this opportunity was always used to point to him who was an example for this service of love. To this we must add the biblical lectures, which, by permission of the authorities, we could take up again. During the past year I received in my own home about 24,000 patients. All had opportunity to hear the gospel. Many took the New Testament and tracts which were offered to them; a spirit of inquiry was manifested and we hope soon to be able to see definite fruit.

"The work in Lodz, a city in Russian Poland, harboring 170,000 Jews has been carried on uninterruptedly during the past year. Missionary Kohl writes that the visitors at the Bible Depot were no fewer than during the year before, yet the number was a good deal smaller than before the war."

The Refugees' Problem

Miss Butterfield, an American missionary in Jeursalem, tells of having received many pitiful appeals from representatives of the thousands of Armenian refugees who were living east of the Jordan under the open sky, with scanty clothing and almost no food. Some of the men who came to her had been deacons in American mission churches in their own cities. One of these said:

"I have been sent by our members to you for advice. We have no home. Our food and clothing are insufficient. Many are dying of starvation. Thousands of our people in Armenia have been cast into the river. Some have been collected in rooms, and after being covered with oil, have been burned to death. Thousands have died on the roadside as we were fleeing. Our wives and beautiful girls are being carried off into harems. What shall we do? We have been promised food if we will change our religion. Shall we turn or starve? Can you not help us in some way?" "What could we say?" says Miss Butterfield. "There was but one reply we knew to make. It was this: 'Go back and tell your friends that if they die with Christ they will be happier than if they live without him.'" She concludes: "We have heard of many who stood true to Christ in the face of extreme suffering. On the other hand, many have been unable to stand the test and are nominally, at least, bearing the name of the religion of their oppressors."

Fathering the Other Man's Boy

Arthur M. Harris, of Harris, Forbes and Co., New York City, bankers, is about to sail for Y. M. C. A. work in France. Mr. Harris is actively identified with organized Sunday school work, being superintendent of the First Baptist Bible school of Plainfield, N. J., a leading officer of the New Jersey Sunday School Association and treasurer of the World's Sunday School Association. Recently Mr. Harris' son enlisted and the father has been eager to do what he can for the sons of other fathers and said, "I expect some one to look after my boy, and now I want to do my part in looking after other fathers' sons."

A PRAYER

By Julia C. Rea

Savior, who hath clothed the lilies
In their robes of spotless white,
Help me to follow in thy footsteps;
Make my garments pure and bright.

Grant that I may clothe the needy,
Cheer the sick and lead the blind;
Help me tell the weak and fallen
Thou hast died to save mankind.

I would ask thee, oh, my Savior,
That more worthy I might be,
Knowing that in helping others
Deeds may thus be done for thee.

And whate'er the future holdeth,
Joy or sorrow—none can tell,
Help me Savior to remember
That thou doest all things well.

"If we have much grace, we must have great suffering; if great suffering, great power; and if great power, great victory—all these things hang together in one undivided chain."—Luther.

The Battle Cry of Jesus

By J. B. Lambert

(Reprinted from the Purple and Gold.)

"A call to loyal soldiers comes to one and all." Since Jesus called the first four from their nets to become fishers of men, his clarion call has sounded through the ages. It has been a mighty challenge to red blooded men and women. Though oft repeated and oft rejected, it has lost none of its clearness, none of its definiteness. It rings out today like the silvery notes of a bugle, calling young men and women to the standard of the cross. Have you heard it? You do not know? Let us see. Is there a Sunday school in your town that needs a teacher? an empty pulpit in the brotherhood? a need of workers in Kentucky, Africa, South America? These are bugle calls to you. If you do not know of any such need, why not? If you do, then you hear the call. Why don't you answer it?

In view of this mighty challenge of Jesus no Christian should dare to choose a vocation without giving to this imperative "why" an answer satisfactory to conscience and to God. There are too many misfits in life because vocations have been chosen with out due consideration of the claims of Jesus. Many a person has chosen a position of temporary prominence and has found it a blind alley. Others have taken up work for which they were not fitted simply because it was offered them. Result, temporary disaster and often permanent loss of confidence. Still others have said, "I will make a lot of money and give it to the Lord." But my dear friend, God wants consecrated service, not conscience money.

But you say, "What can I do?" Who knows? Search your life, find out what are your potent capabilities. Purpose in your heart that you will do the biggest piece of work that your powers coupled with God's spirit will permit. And remember, no great purpose in God's good providence will fall useless.

This challenge that Jesus hurls at us will try the brave hearts and make strong the weak ones. Think of the heroes who have gone before in answer to the battle cry! Think of Paul fighting the good fight in spite of beatings, stonings, threats of death. Think of Luther defying emperor, pope, bishops, in defense of an open Bible. Think of Mack persecuted, robbed of property, driven from home that our beloved church might have birth. Think of Livingstone literally giving his heart to the black men of Africa! And all this in response to the call of Jesus? Can you afford to do less? With the help of God you can do as much—or more. The need is as urgent now as then. The opportunities for service are infinitely greater. The same qualities of heroism are desired. All he wants is an absolute surrendered life. Will you give it? Why not place your life on the altar and pray with David, "Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk, for I lift up my soul unto thee?"

Ashland College Night is the best time in all the world to settle this momentous question.

A LOOK AHEAD

By J. A. Garber

Too often individuals and organizations allow each recurring day to provide for itself. The life that is without a forward-looking vision proceeds aimlessly and unsuccessfully. To save Endeavorers and their societies from such a misfortune the leaders have selected a service theme for each month of the year. Thus our attention is concentrated on certain lines of Christian Endeavor and we enjoy the manifold advantages accruing from concerted effort. January calls for two leading activities:

Plannnig Christian Endeavor Week

The date this year is January 27 to February 3. Taking the form of a birthday celebration the object is to recall afresh the beginning, principles and history of the movement, to express our gratitude to God for the remarkable way in which he has blessed our united labors, to plan under the direction of the Holy Spirit the future development of this growing society of Christian young people. That we may discern his leading and come to know the mind of Christ for our work let us commune much with him, making January 29 a Sunday of special prayer.

Having prayed as if everything depended on God, forget not to work as if everything depends on you. Let others know that you are celebrating something worthy of their presence and invite them to share with you. Create a favorable atmosphere by decorating with red and white, displaying Efficiency Chart, Four Year Challenge and campaign slogans. Solicit the co-operation of pastor and superintendent who will help to give deserved publicity to your efforts. Present a demonstration of your strength, both in achievement and possibilities, on Sunday, January 27 when "Goals of Endeavor" may be presented. It is a program supplied by the United Society at the rate of $1.50 per hundred.

If local conditions warrant daily meetings in keeping with the activities indicated below may be held. But if they do not seem feasible it will be possible to use the committees and individual members to accomplish the desired ends. Monday, Increase and Enlistment Day, will mark the enrollment of scores of new members; Tuesday, Local Union and Extension Day, will present an opportunity for co-operation with others and the organization of new societies; Wednesday, Church Loyalty Day, should find all Endeavorers at the mid week service; Thursday, Intervisitation and Fellowship Day, may be devoted to a social with some nearby society; Friday, State Day, calls for emphasis of state activities; Saturday, Junior and Intermediate Day, recognizes the needs of the boys and girls; Sunday, Decision Day, will lead us to the crest of the wave of enthusiasm, increasing our numbers all along the line, yielding a fine company of Life Work Recruits and presenting a splendid offering for our work. More on this from Superintendent Lambert.

Organizing Classes in Expert Endeavor

This is the second line of emphasis for January. While interest is at white heat Endeavorers both old and new should be encouraged to pursue studies that will familiarize them with the fundamental principles and working plans of the society. Not a little of our inefficiency is traceable to the lack of knowledge. To promote its work one must know Christian Endeavor, and the way to know it is to graduate from the course in Expert Endeavor. One such class in every society is our ideal. Organize it now and within about six weeks you will be able to graduate the same. The text is "Expert Endeavor," by Wells, 50 cents in cloth, 35 cents in paper. We are asking for 500 Christian Endeavor Experts by 1920, and should have at least 150 this year. How many will your society contribute?

Despite the very full program seven persons found time to complete this course during the late General Conference. The names of the new Experts follow: Mary Eaton, Esther Pearson, Flora, Indiana; Mrs. Lillian Overholt, Goshen, Ind.; Mrs. Nora Grosse, Altoona, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Larmon, Listie, Pa. Others shared in the class sessions but were unable to complete the work at that time. We trust that each of these persons will strive to organize a class in their respective societies.

Thanks to every giver. The past year has been a splendid one in our mission work in a number of ways. We have been enabled to stay by our aim from the beginning. "No debt in this work." The credit for this is due the faithful supporters of the work throughout the church. The faithful workers on the field, backed by the support of the people in Kentucky whom they serve, and backed by the prayers and gifts of the numerous helpers in all our churches, have been enabled to do a great work, for which we thank God, take courage, and press forward to make 1918 a better year than the past year.

HOME MISSION NOTES

Christmas at Krypton

Brother Cook writes that they raised $53 at their Christmas eve services to help equip the chapel room. And he predicts that they will raise more than double that amount before they stop. A special Christmas program was given. Miss Ilo Ham, of Huntington, Indiana, sent little boxes of candy to the children. A number of the children wrote letters of appreciation to Miss Ilo and told her of the Christmas trees and the decorations of the school room with laurel and cedar. One boy writes: "We had two good drills in our program. There were 16 flags in one big drill. The people said that it was the prettiest drill they ever saw. The girls had white dresses on like Red Cross nurses and the boys had boy scout suits on. We all ate the candy and nuts and oranges that you sent us. There was just enough boxes for the school children and one for the teacher. There are so many things to tell that I can't tell them all, so I will close for this time."

Miss Gertrude Ham, the faithful teacher, is doing splendid service, and the people in and around Krypton appreciate having their children under the teaching and influence of a Christian teacher. One little twelve-year-old pupil wrote, "Miss Ilo, we have a nice time with Miss Gertrude at school. She never does get cross many times."

Lost Creek Helps Army Y. M. C. A.

Brother Drushal writes that the offering on December 23, for the Army Y. M. C. A. amounted to $15.22. That was splendid and we may expect glowing reports of increased local support of the mission.

Brother Lehman and Twenty Cents

Brother H. B. Lehman, of Glendale, Arizona, sends a liberal offering of $75 to brother Orion E. Bowman for the Thanksgiving offering, and writes in part: "Dear Brother. Wife and I are two who are required to give twenty cents each for home missionary work. That does seem like staggering down hill and tumbling in a mudhole. We claim to believe the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible, but are almost ignorant of how to raise funds to extend God's kingdom. Is the Bible silent in regard to raising money for church purposes? It is almost an insult to those who have been tithing for thirty or more years to be asked to pay twenty cents per capita. You ought to have asked $5 or more per capita. There must be a screw loose somewhere and I would locate it in the preachers. If you preachers don't preach God's system of raising funds, what can you expect of the laity. Twenty cents is the result of what we have been taught, and you will be lucky if you get that. Wife is 70 and I am 74, have 42 acres of land, milk a few cows, have some poultry. The tithe this year from the poultry amounts to about $500. This is what an old man and woman do here in Arizona, and this is the result of tithing on a small capital. I was at the bank this morning and find more tithe money than I was aware of, so I change our contribution from $60 to $75."

Tithing the Solution of Kingdom Finance

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Dear reader, try God one year faithfully and you will never quit paying him what he claims as his own and what you from every viewpoint really owe him. Let every member of the Brethren church tithe one year and the world would be surprised at the result, financially and spiritually, for the two are closely connected. As a rule tithers are deeply spiritual, that being part of the open window promise. Try God.

Manvel, Texas

Elder J. H. Peck is appealing for help for the Manvel church in the form of a series of evangelistic meetings. He wants to save our only church in Texas. Where is the evangelist who can lend a helping hand to this faithful band at Manvel?

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The most important development since our last report was the college jubilee at North Manchester, which was held in connection with the meeting of the India Ministerium. This meeting was altogether unique, and it was as enjoyable and successful as it was unique. As has been stated before, the purpose of the meeting was to celebrate the superb victory which has been achieved among the Indiana churches in the canvass for permanent endowment for Ashland college. And needless to say, the whole event was in splendid keeping with the victory which had been gained. Considering that the meeting was in the midst of the holiday season there was a splendid audience present; and though it had to be hastily done, the church was appropriately decorated for the occasion with the college colors and a goodly supply of college pennants. After the Manchester choir sang two of the college songs in a most lusty manner, Doctor Furry made the main address of the evening. It was an earnest message in which Doctor Furry made a strong appeal for the Christian college and especially Ashland College. Everyone present was made to feel that money given to permanent endowment represents one of the very best investments that can be made at this moment. After the main address the Manchester male quartet sang two selections which had been prepared by Brother Bame especially for this occasion, and they demonstrated that Bame is a poet of no mean ability. Already the man is in sight to prepare the special songs when we have reached the $100,000 and have the final grand jubilee. And then, after a few rambling remarks by the writer, Brother Bame followed with a stirring address on "Indiana Carrying Out the Four-Year Program." This was followed by a splendid address by brother G. W. Rench on "Indiana's Loyalty As Seen In Her Response to the Campaign for Endowment." After Brethren Carpenter, Wolford, Ditch, Brumbaugh and others made short talks we adjourned feeling that the jubilee marked a new era not only in the history of Indiana churches but in our entire brotherhood. Incidentally I might add that Herman Roscoe came from Goshen with enough more endowment up his sleeve to put Goshen ahead of Manchester. But it did not last long. For Bame got right up in meeting and pledged his church for enough more to beat Goshen. However, when Herman left to get his train he said something about Manchester hearing later from Goshen and I have no doubt it will. Indeed it would not surprise me a bit if those churches kept this thing up until they each reached the $3,000 mark. It begins to look as if, like the Kaiser, I had started something I am helpless to stop. But I certainly hope I shall be more forgivable than he.

From Manchester I went to College Corner with the pastor brother D. A. C. Teeter. Here we found a purely rural congregation made up of substantial people, and seemingly a great field in which to work. But when we found this congregation busily engaged in rebuilding and improving their church property we did not deem it wise to press the matter of endowment at this time. However, we spent several days very pleasantly and profitably among these people. And later when we go back I have no doubt College Corner will make a splendid gift to permanent endowment. I am grateful to Brother Teeter for the way he took me over the field and it was very cold and difficult to get around. But the next time we are going to wait for better weather.

It was our plan to canvass Roanoke after College Corner. We were going to Hunting to and from there to the field with brother O. E. Oxley, the pastor. On our way we stopped off a night with brother Frank Switzer at Wabash, and had a delightful visit. Brother Switzer is a prominent attorney in Wabash and he is also a member of the board of trustees of Ashland College, and a member of the endowment committee of Indiana. And needless to say, he is a real booster for the college; but when I add that he is also an alumnus of the college his interest is easily accounted for.

But we did not get to Roanoke. I got to Huntington about an hour before the blizzard did and I was obliged to come back to Ashland. However, the night I was in Huntington I preached to some of our people. On account of a driving snow storm not many were out, but those present were earnest listeners to the Word. Later I shall want to say more about the Huntington church.

In closing, I want to say two things. First, I hope the friends of the college in every congregation will make an effort to get the special educational number of last week's Evangelist into the hands of all the people in their respective congregations. Get folks to read that paper carefully and seriously and I have no fears as to what will be the result. I count that a grand number of the Evangelist and it ought to do much to awaken the entire brotherhood to the importance of carrying this campaign to a grand and successful conclusion. And second, I am more glad that brother R. R. Teeter, though already heavily burdened, has consented to inaugurate an endowment campaign among the isolated members through the columns of the paper. This is a splendid idea. and for the benefit and information of our isolated members let mo say that people are giving sums all the way from $1,000 down to $5 or even less. So there will be some place surely where you can fit in. And in the event you do not care to give cash just ask Brother Teeter to explain to you the different forms of notes we are taking. Indeed we are not asking for cash unless it is perfectly convenient for you to give in cash. We will be just as well pleased with your note. Now further than this I will not mix into this campaign among the isolated members of the brotherhood; but surely I shall watch to see this list of names grow. This ought to become one of the most interesting corners of the paper.

At present the campaign is like most of the streams of the country—frozen up. But when the thaw comes, look out.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Lake Odessa, Michigan

Although it has been some time since the brotherhood has heard from us, it is not a sign that we have been idle. We have been without a shepherd for some time but we have had Sunday school every Sunday with a fine attendance that went beyond the expectation of the superintendent and others. Brother W. F. Johnson, from Berne, Indiana, came and held us a 12 days' meeting followed with a love feast. He gave us a series of Bible studies on the different dispensations in the afternoon on the first few days and they were a great help to all that attended and they will not be forgotten until they be made a more perfect understanding when the King shall come.

We certainly are grateful to the Brethren of Bethel church for the loan of their pastor. He is well thought of around here. The people had just become interested when the meetings closed. The results of the meeting can not be seen as yet, that is not all of them because some of the seed that was sown may bring forth a harvest in days to come. We will send a more complete report after a while.

At our business meeting that was held on December 27, two of our young men were called to enter the ministry. They had been undecided until Brother Johnson talked with them. When a person talks awith Johnson he is made to feel there is something in preaching. We are hoping that one of these two boys may become our leader, or if they be called to other fields that we may get a shepherd from some where else as we are without a shepherd now. If some brother reads this and would like to get a church to serve we would appreciate a correspondence. May the Lord bless his ministry wherever they may be. We at this place are praying and working that we may keep the banner of the King floating above the tumults of this world. We ask the prayers of the brotherhood that the church may be a bright and shining light in the community.

L. J. MILLER.

Victory at Dutchtown

The writer spent three weeks in December with the old Dutchtown church, 9 miles from Warsaw, in an effort to revive and reorganize the work at that place. Here is where our dear brother Thomas Plew labored for 15 years and where at one time there was a large substantial membership, but by a series of reverses the work has suffered greatly and we found it had been pastorless for a year and four months, and about the only sign of life was a small Sunday school. Conditions in general were not at all conducive to a successful revival meeting. But a few of the Lord's faithful were there and they were not willing to stand by and see the work perish without putting forth one more effort. We preached to increasing crowds each evening and people came from far and near. Several heard the gospel who had not heard it for many years, though they live right here in Indiana.

Ten precious souls came out on the Lord's side and took their stand with the people of God. Seven were men, and all were adults. In addition to these 25 came and reconsecrated themselves tothe Lord's work and pledged themselves to be more faithful to the church in the future. A business session was called at which a complete reorganization was effected. A pastoral committee was selected and plans laid whereby they were to secure a resident pastor. Since then I have learned that their plans have materialized and a pastor will soon be on the field for full time.

Personally I feel that the meeting was a great victory. Indeed, it would have been well worth the effort if we had accomplished nothing more than to awaken the membership. Never in all my work as an evangelist have I met such responses in supporting and financing a meeting. They lavished their money and gifts until I was compelled to say, "Brethren, it is enough, you'll have to stop." May the Lord bless them mightily in the days to come.

Some Other Things

And now Brethren, there are other places and many of them where the same things, and greater, can be accomplished. I would be the last one to strike a note of discord with reference to the plans of our Four-Year Program, but it is my mature conviction that we shall never reach some of our goals, especially goal four, until we have some workable system to conserve our struggling rural churches and thus stop this terrible leakage of our membership. I agree with Brother Bell in a recent article when he says, "Our active pastors must take the initiative in this work and that our churches ought to be willing to loan their pastors for a few weeks to these needy fields."

There are some churches who refuse their pastors the privilege of holding revival meetings outside of their own parish. To me that church is standing in its own light and instead of refusing should urge upon its pastor to spend at least a month of each year in needy, neglected fields.

The Annual before me records 54 vacant churches. Look at Michigan with its good buildings, well equipped, its substantial, well-to-do membership, and but one active pastor in the state.

Brethren, here are some conditions that we must meet and we might as well face them and prepare to meet them. To me they are serious, very much so, and I here and now pledge myself and my church to help meet them. I am glad for the type of church I am serving at the present with such a missionary conscience that they are willing to divide time with the weaker churches and save them if possible.

Work at home is moving splendidly in every way. We will go beyond our share of the Four-Year Program, I am sure. And you who keep the records can credit us with the re-establishment of one congregation thus far.

Until these lines are read I shall be engaged in a meeting at North Liberty with our home forces. We are looking for a great meeting here. Many are looking our way. During the month of February I shall be with Brother Whitmer and the La Paz church.

Brethren, let us all be diligent as we patiently await the coming of our King.

Yours in the precious blood,

C. CLARENCE GRISSO.

Buena Vista, Virginia

Since our last report one of our dear ones who was out in the cold world returned to the fold. We were glad to have brothers N. W. Jennings and Elwood Rowsey to preach for us while visiting home. In our last report we failed to say anything about the pounding we received about three days before Thanksgiving. All unexpectedly our room was filled with brethren and sisters, talking, laughing and contributing sugar, coffee, potatoes, oatmeal and other articles in the grocery line before they departed. Our deacon, brother Charles Lynn, with the open Bible read in our hearing the eighth chapter of Romans and then poured out a most earnest prayer for pastor, church and community at large. And then on December 28 Brethren Scott, Teague, Camden and Allen, followed by many others with many useful articles visited us again. God bless the dear brethren and sisters for their kindness. You will learn more about our work through our church correspondent. Again we solicit the prayers of the brotherhood for our work here.

G. W. CHAMBERS.

Fairview, Washington C. H., Ohio

For the first time in two years we are reporting the work at Fairview. We have accomplished many of the things we set out to accomplish. And many of them are significant to both the church and brotherhood. We aimed high of course when we began our labors with the brethren. Perhaps too high, but nevertheless we do not feel that we have failed in everything. We have found the wor khere very hard. Not that the folks have not helped but for other reasons which of course would not be of interest to you. With all however we feel that what we have accomplished with the aid of the good people here will be of lasting benefit. Following are a few of the things we have accomplished:

From an average attendance of 18 January 1, 1916 in the Sunday school, we have today (January 1, 1918) an average attendance of 59. With no organized classes to begin with we can boast of three today. The Adult class taking the lead. All organized classes have or shall contribute to the Kentucky work as well as other needy fields. We have better facilities throughout the school. A Y. P. S. C. E has been organized and is doing excellent work. We have put the Evangelist on the budget and the church INTENDS to keep it there. We have an S. S. C. E. that we can indeed be proud of. It is older than our work here. The pastor's salary has been almost doubled with our check reaching us promptly the first of each month. This indeed is commendable. We have had three revivals with the pastor acting the part of the evangelist. In the first we had 14 accessions, the second 35, and the last one 2. At our last meeting we were snowed out or in, which? We have a live Home Department and Cradle Roll. We have increased our apportionments to all missionary work. I mean by this that more money has been given through the church for this work than at any time previous to our coming here. We have been holding the banner as first place school in the township and with my experience throughout the county I can say that we could lead the county. We have many other features of the work we could report but will not lest some one thinks we are boasting. However, let me state that all this success has been brought about not by our efforts but by the untiring efforts of the people here who have so nobly stood by the pastor.

After all we have tendered our resignation to take effect April 1, 1918, and after a great effort on my part I have prevailed upon the board to accept it. Therefore, we need a pastor. One who can begin work April 1. We prefer a young man as it is the wish of a greater number of the brethren to have a young man, and it is my conviction that none other but a young man could do the work. There is lots to do. Any one desiring to correspond with us may do so by addressing either brother David L. Hegler, Austin, Ohio, or myself.

I do not want to enter a work now which would require all of my time, so I have decided upon the following: That if these is a church in the brotherhood that has no pastor and is not able to support one, I shall be glad to correspond with that church. I prefer a church however located in a good farming community where I could rent or buy a small farm. Write me, Mr. Secretary, if your church is in need of a man. The people here at Fairview will be glad to answer any question and I am delighted to have them speak.

Brethren everywhere, pray for Fairview and for its present pastor as well as his successors, that victory may be ours.

LYMAN B. WILKINS.

P. S.—We are doing our part on the Four-Year Program.

Kentucky Notes

The fall term of school came to a very pleasing close and was considered one of the best of fall terms in point of numbers.

The attendance throughout the term was good. Everything went smoothly between student and teacher, and a good spirit prevailed.

On Christmas morning we enjoyed a very pleasing entetainment given by the young people and teachers of Riverside. We had a good attendance considering the inclemency of the weather, but were glad to see the day close with old mother earth covered with snow.

We had a small tree for the children and only the smaller children received gifts The other gifts were given in money, which was twenty dollars was sent to the Y. M. C. A. headquarters for purchasing Bibles for the soldiers.

We tried to emphasize the spirit of giving, and believe God has laid it upon the hearts of the people to give more freely.

Our Teacher's Training Class, consisting of nine members, meets with Sister Drushal every Thursday evening.

Our nurse, Miss Mary Newlin, of Des Moines, Iowa, is with us and has entered upon her duties.

We are hoping to start a personal workers class, and believe old and young will join the class and receive a great blessing by it.

Our Sunday school purchased twenty New Testaments for the soldier boys who have gone out from this community.

We also have about fifty people who are members of the Red Cross society and are doing their bit for the boys.

Considering the war times the workers have been very well remembered and praise God for the many blessings we receive of him. There are good prospects for a full school this coming term and all the teachers have been secured. With best wishes for a Happy New Year.

CHARLOTTE HILLEGAS.

Lost Creek, Ky.

North Manchester, Indiana

Some people are asking about how our revival turned out. Well, it was not like the Irishman's potatoes—it did not turn out. That was what was the matter with it; of course, there are a lot of reasons and no two would diagnose it the same and so, what is the use of trying. There were several confessions; and to date, we have baptized seven and several more to come yet. One went to another church and we feel that our revival is to continue for some time. We just discontinued and that with a resolution to begin again some time early in the new year with the best help possible. There is a move for a simultaneous or union campaign of some kind but with a shortage of coal that threatens all services, it is hard to predict just where we shall land in the melee.

Our church is in good shape. Money is coming easy and we are going "over the top" away ahead of all the demands of the Four-Year Program, so far. Our Sunday school and C. E. are going in good form and the prayer meeting is an inspiration, though we are to stay out of the meeting house until more coal is in sight. We plan to have two meetings a week to make up.

Sunday morning, December 30, we had a sensation in our morning service. A well dressed man came in late and was ushered near the center of the house where he fastened his eyes on the preacher, never to take them away to the end of the service. Most of the audience knew him and were astonished to see him in church; the pastor did not. He thought he might be some traveling man who chanced into the service. It was soon evident that the sermon was making a telling effect. Many wondered why the pastor closed without offering an invitation. I guess the pastor almost wondered why, himself. "Amen" had scarcely been said to the benediction till the man came rushing down the aisle and cried, "I want to confess my Savior." The pastor said, "have you never done so?" "No," said the man and "My record, oh, what a record I have." I said, "Will you pray?" and down on his knees he fell and prayed and cried for the mercy of God. Arising, I took his confession and promise to follow the Master and then, asking his name, he said, ————. I was almost dumbfounded when he said who he was, for he was one of the notorious characters of the town whose arrest was ordered by an association of which the pastor was a moving member.

Was God thus teaching his people how to deal with sinners and offenders? It is a fine question; but be that as it may, he will be given a fair trial now, to right himself by a walk that will not lead to jail or pen.

Thus we press on in the hope that the preachers of the Word will take courage in the power of God unto salvation of the vilest.

We have had a delightful Christmas and the many gifts of appreciation from our members and friends cheer us to go happily on our way trying to do the will of him who brings to the world once each year the Christmas spirit.

CHARLES A. BAME.

North Liberty, Indiana

A Christmas service was held by our Sunday school on Christmas eve and in several respects was better than any previous service. Although we had held the White Gift Service on the two preceding Christmases, we followed the suggestions of General Conference and used it again. We have found that each time it is used that greater benefits are derived.

Our program consisted of song, exercises, recitations and pantomimes rendered by children of the Beginners, Primary and Junior departments, anthems by a mixed quartette and a short play entitled "Gifts for the King," put on by eleven members of the school. During the latter part of the play, an opportunity was given for gifts and pledges of substance, service and self. One class brought canned fruit and jelly, which was given to worthy poor of the town. A class of Junior Girls made up the subscription price for the Youth's Companion to be sent to Brother Cook, at Krypton, Kentucky, for the young people at his mission. Other classes pledged definite amounts for the Kentucky-Ashland fund. In all over $45 was raised (will reach $50 when several pledges are paid). This was nearly double last year's offering and may average with other schools (Our average attendance is about 100). Pledges of service for various departments of church work, designated on printed cards were signed quite liberally. But best of all, two Junior girls gave themselves at the invitation of the pastor. What a glorious and blessed time to give one's self on the even when the world is celebrating God's gift of his only begotten Son to the world. The spirit of revival has already begun in advance of the special effort, which will begin on January 6 with the pastor, Brother Grisso, preaching. We covet the prayers of the brotherhood that telling work for the church may be accomplished here.

L. LEMUEL KILMER,
Superintendent S. S.

Roanoke, Indiana

As we haven't reported anything from Roanoke for some time we want you all to know we are still on the map. We had our revival a few weeks ago and are glad to say it was a good meeting. Six were taken into the church and two of them were Catholics. One sister accepted Christ the second time she came to church. It was the first meeting she ever attended only the Catholic church. We also received Brother Vern Stoffer into the church by letter. Brother Stoffer came to us from Ohio and got right into the harness and went to work. We were to have had the man "Beachler" with us the second of this month, but the blizzard came and Beachler and blizzards don't agree so he went back to Ashland which was a wise Go. We hope when he comes back the blizzards will be a thing of the past. We are trying to make our Four-Year Program go forward. We are looking forward for better things.

O. E. OXLEY.

Falls City, Nebraska

Taking an inventory of the past year, and especially the past four months, I am constrained to say that our experiences have been for the most part very much different than at any time during our ministry. This has been true because our experiences as a nation have been radically different. No wide awake spiritual leader will deny that we are living in a rapidly changing environment, and one that has as yet not made for great spiritual growth. But it does look to me now as if our revival of religion is about due, because of the fact that events point to coming sacrifice and suffering for us as a nation. All this will no doubt lead to a much greater interest in religious things. It will be contrary to past experience if it does not.

On the whole the year has been a fruitful one for our church. We have taken many advanced steps and have added materially to our numbers through the preaching of the gospel and the work of the Holy Spirit.

Coming home from General Conference we found ourselves confronting the task of preparing for district conference. It came and went into history as an onward looking convention. One can but be impressed with the changed attitude of our people along advanced lines of church organization and work. Just six years ago I was a member of an eastern conference that spent a whole day of valuable time debating a matter that was without question an advanced step in our work, and one that would be adopted, and and has been by every district conference without debate and very quickly. All this makes our future appear bright, no matter how slow we have seemed to be. Suffice it to say that Kanemorado will bring her part of the Four-Year Program to a successful culmination in the prescribed time.

Following Conference I spent several weeks in the Army Y. M. C. A. at Ft. Crook in our own state. The force there had been depleted through the secretaries enlisting in the service until the work was being impaired. I went at the earnest solicitation of those who had the matter in charge, returning on each Lord's day to fill my pulpit. Besides being able to help out in the work the experience was beneficial to me. There ought to be competent Brethren young men who could go into this religious work without a great deal of sacrifice, indeed there should be.

Brother Yoder was with us most of the past three weeks, preached often, and assisted us in every way possible. In return we tried to be of assistance to them. He was present at the communion service which although it was held late in the fall was largely attended. We are having our annual business meeting tonight and I am sure that some steps will be taken to place us well on our way in the Four-Year Program. We will at least have the Evangelist in the home of every active family in our church the next year. It will mean more than doubling our subscription list the comnig year. Let us hold fast to that which is true in this age when men's hearts are being tried perhaps as never before.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

The Yoder Auto Fund

Well, no doubt some have forgotten all about the pledge they made at the district conference to the Yoder Auto Fund. Now there are a number that haven't paid their pledges yet. It was to be paid by the "first of the year." Of course, Mary had to have a doll and Johnny a sled for Christmas, but our dear Brother Yoder needs a better way of conveyance, so let us get busy and get our money. Some have paid and doubled their pledges and all ought to that have gone delinquent. Those that have paid are the following:

My Father

If I owe anyone anything in this world it is my father and mother. They cared for me when I could not care for myself. They nursed me when I needed tender nursing. My father, John E. Copp, died November 9, 1917, at the age of 82 years and he deserves a last tribute of respect to his memory by having a notice of his death published in the Evangelist. He was a deacon in the Brethren church for thirty-three years, in fact, since its organization in 1884. There were six children of us, four girls and two boys. My oldest sister, Mrs Fannie Spiggle, wife of Rev. W. H. Spiggle and I are members of the Brethren church. My second sister, Mrs. Joanna Hockman, who died ten years ago, was a member of the Disciple church. My third sister, Mrs. Ada Frenkel, who also died some years past, was a Methodist, and my younger sister is a Presbyterian.

My brother, Z. H., is a Presbyterian minister of Camden, N. J. So you see the family religiously was divided up considerably, but with all our divisions religiously, they never gave rise to any dissensions in the family. My father was a deacon in the German Baptist church before the division, but as soon as the division in the church came my father identified himself with the Brethren church. He loved the church and attended all the district conferences as long as he was able to go. He practically built several churches here in Virginia for the Brethren church. I do not say this boastingly but in justice to his work and memory. Copp's Chapel, in Rappahannock county, is named in his honor. He was a robust, energetic man and by his energy and judgment accumulated considerable means.

The last words on his death bed that I heard him speak (and I shall never forget them) were the repeating of a stanza of that beautiful hymn:

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear;
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fears."

Death then was in his throat so that he could not fully articulate his words, and he was not fully conscious, but they were comforting words for ourselves as well as for himself. His constant pleadings were for us to meet him in heaven and he has a clause written in his last will for all his children to live in peace and meet him in heaven, a most glorious legacy for any father to leave to his children.

Brother J. M. Tombaugh, of Hagerstown, Maryland, preached his funeral to a large gathering of friends from Shenandoah, Warren, Clarks and Frederick counties. His body was laid to rest in Mt. Hebron Cemetery at Winchester. I miss my father's good counsel and his beaming face now more than ever.

Marriages

SWANSON-MUIR.—Irvin Swanson and Miss Ada Muir were united in marriage at the home of the undersigned December 20, 1917. Their many friends wish them much happiness and prosperity as they journey through life.

BENJ. F. OWEN.

SHENEMAN-STEELE.—On December 27, 1917, Mr. Fred Sheneman and Miss Alma Steele, both excellent workers and members of the First Brethren church at North Liberty, Indiana, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at the Brethren parsonage by their pastor the undersigned. May heaven's choicest attend their sojourn through life.

C. C. GRISSO.

SPEAKER-McILNAY.—At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. Charles W. Speaker and Miss Fern A. McIlnay were united in marriage on December 29, 1917. The ring ceremony was used and the service was performed by the undersigned in the presence of a number of near relatives and intimate friends. A few hours later the bride and groom boarded a train and started for Hagerstown, Md., where several weeks will be spent with the groom's parents residing near that place, after which they will return and make their home near Milledgeville, Illinois. These estimable young people have many friends who wish them much joy and happiness as they journey through life together.

MILES J. SNYDER.

CABLE-GLESSNER.—On December 12, 1917 Mr. Horace E. Cable, son of Norman E. Cable, and Miss Ruth L. Glessner, daughter of Curtis Glessner, were united in marriage at the Brethren parsonage at 8:30 A. M. The bride is a member of the Waterloo congregation, and both the bride and groom are highly estimable young persons. May grace and happiness attend them.

H. L. GOUGHNOUR.

GAYMAN-DAVIS.—At 10:30 A. M., December 20, 1917, Mr. Ira J. Gayman, son of John H. Gayman, and Miss Maude I. Davis, daughter of Mrs. Anna Davis, were united in wedlock at the Brethren parsonage. Both the bride and groom are members of the Waterloo congregation. They are highly respected young persons and the best wishes of many friends are theirs.

H. L. GOUGHNOUR.

WATTERS-BOWEN.—On Christmas eve, 1917, the marriage of Mr. Earl S. Watters, son of Samuel Watters, of Hudson, Iowa, and Miss Gladys B. Bowen, daughter of Cameron S. Bowen of Hudson, Iowa, was solemnized at the Brethren parsonage in Waterloo. This bride and groom are members of the Hudson congregation. They are young persons of splendid appearance and bearing. May joy and blessing be their lot.

Our Dead

REBER.—Adam J. Reber, an active member of the Waterloo congregation, a highly respected citizen of Waterloo, Ia., and a man of genial and unselfish Christian character, departed this earthly life on November 8, 1917, at the age of 59 years. For several years he had been in ill health, but he bore his disappointment and suffering with genuine fortitude and rare cheerfulness.

He was born at Lena, Ill. At the age of 7 years he came with his parents to Waterloo, where he resided until 1883. Then, for 18 years he lived in South Dakota. In 1901 he returned to Waterloo and made it his home the remainder of his days. He was a man of large affairs in the development of the city.

His widow, Mrs. Emma Miller Reber, and his daughter, Miss Vera, are active and beloved members of the Waterloo congregation and esteemed residents of Waterloo.

Rev. Wm. H. Beachler, who was a very close friend of Brother Reber's, and of his family as well, found it possible to be present and deliver the address at the funeral, which was held in the first Brethren church of Waterloo, on Sunday afternoon, November 11. The audience which assembled was the largest that has ever gathered in the new building at this place. Brother Beachler preached an exceedingly able and comforting sermon. In the evening of that day Brother Beachler again spoke to his former parishioners, being greeted by a large gathering. His coming was an inspiration and blessing to us all. May God continue to comfort the bereaved ones and sustain them in his grace.

H. L. GOUGHNOUR.

METSKER.—Mrs. Salome Metsker was born in Ohio, March 3, 1841. She was called home December 21, 1917, having reached the age of 71 years, 9 months, 18 days.

She came to Kansas in 1860. The following year she was united in marriage to Samuel W. Metsker and settled on a farm south of Lawrence. In 1910 she moved into Lawrence, which was her home until she was called to her home with God. She was the mother of eleven children, four of whom, with their father, have gone on before. She was converted to God in her youth and has grown in the faith as the years passed by. Her family and friends appreciate the nobleness of her life, which was given in Christian service for others and for her Master.

MRS. W. H. ULRICH.

Lone Star, Kansas.

FIDLER.—Addison Elroy Fidler died at his home in Fredericktown, Ohio, November 18, 1917, aged years, 5 months, and 27 days. He was united in marriage to Miss Theresa Marie, September 15, 1881.

Brother Fidler was a member of the Brethren church at Ankeneytown for many years.

The wife of the deceased and a host of friends mourn his departure. May the God of all comfort, bless and console the bereaved ones. Services by

A. L. LYNN.

WISMAN.—John H. Wisman, aged 73 years, 6 months, 16 days. He lived near St. Luke, Shenandoah county, Virginia, all his life. A Confederate soldier in the War of 1861-65. After the surrender of Lee to Grant, he became a Christian and lived as a consistent member of the faith in Christ. He was one of the pioneer members of the Brethren organization in this country in the year of 1885, and died in the faith of the Lord and Master.

"Lest We Forget"

"Lest we forget" our high obligation as a non-combatant church in this world crisis, it has occurred to me that we might endure a gentle reminder. We have taken the stand that we can not conscientiously take up the sword and strike down a brother man, that the spirit and practice of war is irreconcilable with the spirit and teachings of Christ. So far as practicable, it seems that the government is inclined to recognize our religious scruples along this line where they have been consistently held, and is not compelling our boys to enter the combative departments of its service. This very fact burdens us all the more heavily with the responsibility of proving our patriotism by co-operating with the government in other ways, many of which are daily being held out to us. Failure to make full use of these opportunities of service, to discharge our responsibilities as Christian patriots may bring upon us clouds of suspicion which may darken our prospects. It may throw us liable to dangers which should be avoided as scrupulously as the bearing of arms.

There is danger of forgetting or neglecting our duty of helping to bear the burdens and sharing in the sacrifices of this time of stress in our busy efforts to escape or to help our friends to escape military service. This is not a word against their seeking such privilege. We sympathize with the desire of Brethren young men who conscientiously oppose the bearing of arms to be exempted from such service, and gladly assist them in taking the proper legal steps looking toward such exemption. But we do not sympathize with the desire to evade duty. We can understand how conscientious followers of Jesus Christ can object to military service, but we can not understand how any conscientious Christian can seek to avoid doing the good Samaritan act to the wounded, helping safeguard the morals of our soldier boys, caring for their spiritual welfare and sending of relief to the starving millions in war stricken lands. The Brethren church does not stand for the evasion of any duty, most especially not of those so plainly God-given. A whole-gospel church will no sooner seek to pass over lightly such vital statements as, "Bear ye one another's burdens," "Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," and the parable of the good Samaritan, than it will seek to discount the importance of baptism or feet-washing. "These ought ye to have done and not to have left the others undone," would be our Lord's just criticism. We, together with the members of other non-combatant denominations, should seek the front ranks in the army for the alleviation of suffering, the supplying of food, the practicing of economy, in fact, we should co-operate with every plan and support every act of our government consistent with our Christian profession. If we are to approach as near the spirit of the Master's teaching as we profess to have attained regarding the letter of his law we must be willing to enter into the fellowship of his sufferings for the distress, sorrow and heartaches of the world.

There is also the danger that we shall bring upon ourselves the accusation of disloyalty and "slackerism" if we fail to show the proper patriotic spirit and co-operation, or appear indifferent to appeals of distress. We are not disloyal; nor are we "slackers." There is as loyal and courageous blood flowing through Brethren veins as can be found anywhere in the land. We love our country, esteem our rulers and obey our laws, even as our Bible teaches us to do. Those who are most determined in their stand against war are not so because they are "slackers" and those who most strenously oppose military training and service do not take such an attitude because they are purposely disloyal or unconcerned about their nation's welfare. It is merely because they feel that they ought to obey God, as they understand his commandments, rather than man. But there is danger that our motives shall be misjudged if we do not give the proper response to the calls for those kinds of service that any Christian ought to be able to do. If we neglect our duty along these lines, such neglect will register against our sincerity and worthiness of having our religious scruples against war recognized. No individual or organization has either legal or moral right to fail to comply with any reasonable or right demands that the government may make, for it is because of its guarantees that we enjoy the protection and manifold privileges that are ours. It would seem to be the plain duty of every citizen, not alone Christians, but rightfully more naturally expected of them, to render whatever public and private service is possible in this world crisis. Is it too much to ask that all Christians shall be scrupulously economical in consumption of food, fuel and clothing that those who are compelled to suffer the hardships of army life may at least have clothing and food and millions of needy may have a mite? Is it too much to ask that we shall cultivate all our waste land, plant wisely, cultivate properly, reap carefully and share generously our crops when others are giving their lives? Is it too much to ask that we shall deny our families their customary luxuries and even some of their less important needs that we may give to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. war work, the stricken Armenian and Syrian peoples when some are compelled to go to the front leaving behind their families to practice the most studied and even painful economy? He who would answer that it is too much could hardly expect a more complimentary term applied to him than "slacker." We would not look for any such in the Brethren church, for true Christians are not "slackers." Yet we may well be careful lest by our thoughtlessness we bring upon ourselves that reproach.

There is the further danger that our convictions on the war question shall cause us to drift into the position that our interests are entirely separate and apart from the affairs of the state. We can not hold ourselves aloof from the interests, problems and responsibilities of the government and at the same time maintain the Christian spirit. We dare not withdraw ourselves from participation in social and political affairs and merely "endure" until the day of our departing hence. We would not wish to return to the days of the monastics and become a selfish cloistered people. Nor would we lazily fold our arms in the face of the awful situation and wait for some miraculous intervention of God to bring relief and set things aright.

Some of our forefathers fell into the grip of this error and refused to exercise their God-given influence and rightful power in public affairs and thereby delayed many much needed political reforms and social regenerations. We do not honor them for this, but for the good they wrought in spite of this weakness. It would be inexcusable stupidity if we should add to our own innumerable weaknesses this glaring fault of theirs also. When any good move fails in this earth we should not excuse our failure by saying, "Well, God will bring it to pass in his own good time." It is scarcely conceivable that he has any desire to delay for a moment the complete regeneration of the whole human race; he waits only the co-operation of man. The failure of every good and righteous move must be laid at the doors of unfaithful and unco-operative men. And the sooner we, as a church, become fully aware of the fact that we are workers together with God in all his efforts to bring in his kingdom and give him the co-operation he desires the sooner will we rise in the estimation of God and men. He has often been grieved at our slowness to co-operate and even now must be pained at our failure to work together with him for the overruling of the awful evil at work in the world, for the advancement of the good. Censure for our slowness in the past may be miti-

As Dangerous As War

It may not be generally known that many of the so-called peaceful pursuits of the American people are almost as dangerous as war and are fraught with almost as great fatalities as an army on an ordinary battlefield. Many of the industries of America are conducted along lines that consider the output and the profit from the industry more than the lives of the workers engaged in performing the dangerous tasks connected with such operations. "Safety First" as adopted by the railroads of America is a mighty good slogan for any industry where there is a possibility of the loss of life from carelessness. The workmen's compensation laws as adopted in some states have a wholesome effect in many great industries, but yet there are many thousands of lives needlessly destroyed every year.

Reports from the state Department of Labor and Industry of Pennsylvania state that 3,152 persons were killed in the industries of the state during the year 1917 and that 232,125 were injured. The increase of fatal accidents over that of the year 1916 was about twenty per cent., though there was a noticeable decrease in the number of non-fatal accidents. When this great number of accidents is considered and one considers further the great number of other industrial states where there is likely to be a corresponding number of fatal accidents it is easy to see that every state and every industry should adopt the motto "Safety First."

There may not be as large dividends to distribute among the stock holders of some of these large industries that are built up and made profitable only at the expense of dangerous operations and loss of human life, but it stands to reason that men would give more willing and more faithful service if they knew every precaution had been taken to guard them against unnecessary dangers.

While we are lamenting the great destruction of human life in time of war let us give greater thought to the protection of human life in the industries of peace.

Leaving Home

The thought suggested by the words "leaving home" is as varied as the number of occasions that the act takes place. One of the most widely distributed pictures in America is one that portrays the "breaking of home ties." The breaking of home ties is not always an occasion of sadness though it ought always to be an occasion of serious thought. There should always be a reason that is something more than an excuse to bring about such an occasion.

One of the problems that has confronted social workers for years and one that has not yet been satisfactorily answered is that of young people leaving home. Perhaps all of us have read articles in magazines on "Why Girls Leave Home," or on "Why Boys Leave Home," and sometimes on "Why Husbands Leave Home." A great deal of light has been thrown on these subjects by social investigators and many suggestions have been offered with the hope that conditions might be so changed that such occurrences would take place less frequently and that all parties concerned might be greatly benefited. But now a problem that is even wider in its scope and more far-reaching in its influence confronts whole states and challenges the best endeavors of the most intelligent men of the states concerned to find the solution. We have reference to the unusual migration of the negro population into northern states.

It has long been considered that the south is the home of the negro, and when now and then one has ventured to go north he has been regarded as one who has left home. In former years this northern movement was so insignificant that it attracted no special notice. But within the past two years the movement has become so general that a number of the southern states are becoming alarmed. They see themselves robbed of the great source of cheap labor and the great cotton fields and sugar plantations are in danger.

It is but natural that shortsighted and prejudiced men should lay the blame upon the negroes themselves and feel that the white population and the employing classes of the states are in no way responsible. But it is always good to get just far enough away from a question to get a right perspective of it. One of the qualities of greatness that is attributed to Colonel E. M. House, confidential adviser and friend to President Wilson, is that of benig able to hold a question that is up for discussion off far enough to get a right perspective of it. A few southern men are doing this with the question of migration of the negroes. They know that it is wholly natural for men who have the ability to migrate from one country to another to seek the land where they may find the greatest advantages for their families even as did Abraham and Lot, and if the negroes discover that they will receive better treatment and their children will receive better educational advantages, and that the bread winners will receive higher wages in the northern states than they do or possibly can under existing conditions in the south, it is only natural that they should seek these greater opportunities for themselves and their families; and the southern people who close their eyes to these conditions and lay all the blame at the door of the negroes themselves are like the ostriches of the desert attempting to hide by sticking their heads under the sand.

The governor of Missouri has taken what seems to be a sensible view of the matter and has announced his intention to appoint a commission to study the negro population of Missouri and report what is needed for an improvement of their condition. If the governors of other southern states suffering from the migration of their colored population would do as Governor Gardner announces he will do and appoint COMPETENT commissions to investigate the conditions that surround the negroes at home, conditions of labor, of living, wages, chances for farm buying and home owning, etc., a great flood of light might be thrown on the situation. And then if the people had the courage to act according to the light gained it would not be at all difficult to hold the negro population where it is best fitted to be, for we are sure, other things being equal, the negro would rather live in the sunny south.

Owe No Man Anything

It is a rather difficult matter for any one to literally obey the injunction of the apostle to "owe no man anything" in these modern days when so large a portion of the world's business is done upon faith, or in other words, on credit. Pay as you go is an exceedingly good rule to adopt early in life and from many years' experience in following this rule the writer can recommend it most strongly to any young man starting out in life, but it seems that nations are just a little too ponderous to do as individuals may be able to do. If there is a nation in any part of the world that is not almost hopelessly in debt we are not aware of the fact. The United States was in a very favorable condition previous to its entrance into the great war, but in the last eight months its indebtedness has been multiplied five times and it is estimated that before the first of July it may be muliplied twelve times, bringing it up to the stupendous sum of $12,316,000,000 or an amount equivalent to $120 for every man, woman and child in America. The writer is just wondering where he will get his $720 to pay the share for his family, and if the war should continue another year the $1,500 or more that will be required. He will not do it by any tax on tobacco, cigars, drinks, moving picture admissions or other luxuries common to the American people, but we are not much worried about it for Uncle Sam is a rather resourceful old gentleman and we are confident he will find some way for all of us to do our part.

But while the national debt of America seems so large there is a little grain of comfort in the thought that others are a great deal worse off than we are. Our debt is only about one-fourth that of either Great Britain, France, Russia or Germany, and while our present indebtedness is only about 2½ per cent. of our estimated national wealth, that of the Teutonic allies is estimated at 28 per cent. of their wealth. Moreover there is not and will not be any of the devastation in this land that so many European countries have suffered from, so we are fortunate and not heavily burdened after all.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

A Report from the Director of Extension---the Situation is Serious if as Indicated

This paper by Brother Ronk, has some big things to consider. It is addressed to some who ought not be in that class. It is too bad if some who could be in a better class get into a poorer. But this is constantly true of men and women. It makes the work of the church constantly expensive and arduous. Read that paper again and again. Remember that if you churches that have failed to send a contribution do not yet "come across" with the "dough," one of the hardest of the goals will not be reached. We simply can not do the work of that goal in less time than the Program allows. We can not fail this year and succeed with that part of the Four-Year Program.

Failed

"You have therefore failed," and what a shock that gave me once upon a time when I had written for a teacher's certificate! Had two year grades on every branch save one and then, FAILED. But that was only the failing of a temporal ambitoin. This is for all time. THIS YEAR'S WORK FOR THE YEAR or FAIL.

Ultra Individualism and Suicidal Independence!

Whew! He says, "in some cases." Pray God that they may not be many. Pray that it may be only neglect or oversight, but we need to keep pace as the days go by, now, I tell you. Let us have no suicide; avoid the independence and individualsim.

A Fine Piece of Work

There has just come to my desk, one of the neatest and to Brethren, most valuable publications I have seen for a while. It is something every pastor and Sunday school superintendent ought to have and ponder over every day till they are sure they can make good. It is "STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE FOR BRETHREN SCHOOLS." Here are the 13 GOALS OR STANDARDS:

1 Accurate Membership Records.
2 An active Cradle Roll.
3 Organized Classes in Adult and Secondary Division.
4 A Working Home Department.
5 A Teacher Training Class.
6 Graded School and Promotion Day.
7 Graded Instruction in at least one department. (Some one should write something for the schools that adopted the new Lesson Ssytem and their relation to this goal.)
8 Definite Missionary Instruction (Quarterly) and Missionary Offerings.
9 Delegates to some convention.
10 Temperance Instruction at least Quarterly.
11 Use of Brethren Publications.
12 Annual Report and Offering for National Organization. (Brethren).
13 Reading Courses for Superintednent and Elementary Department.

But, send to Albert Trent, Johnstown, Pa., asking for a copy of this Standard Book.

Those Who Failed in the Thanksgiving Offering

Reports so far indicate that many churches failed to reach the necessary per capita of 20 cents to be enrolled as honor churches. This was no theoretical high mark but one set with due-regard to the needs of the work already under way and the large plans of the Extension Department of the Four-Year Program.

Those who failed to reach the mark set in many cases had very good excuses and it is not the intention of the writer to scold in this article. His own field has fallen down from the very good reason that he arrived as pastor too late to prepare for it and the church was pastorless too long. Incidentally, mission fields have their problems over and above the usual stock—that is why they are mission fields. In a few cases it was utterly impossible for the pastor to arouse the people to the situation, for if one would rise from the dead they would not hear. In some cases both pastor and people were suffering from that perpetual blight which rests upon us—of ultra-individualism and suicidal independence.

Whatever might have been the causes, we are more concerned with results, and invite all such churches to join with us in writing our worthy secretary, brother O. E. Bowman, Dayton, Ohio, pledging the balancs of our share before the end of the conference year, so the board can estimate its resources for the balance of the yeàr.

All this affects the Program and the plans for church extension in a very vital way. Our nation-wide survey of prospects is being completed at this time. I am now awaiting the reports from the balance of the District Directors to whom I have sent blanks. All reports should be in whether complete or not by January 15. Further work can be done with the slow or delinquent churches later. Some conscientious pastors require more time to investigate. It will be given. However, report if you are on a good trail. The director of this department wishes to get into personal contact with everything good in this line in the country.

As soon as reports are in and classified, definite work will be planned to try out these places and bring them help at the very earliest date. We have very definite plans culled from the best experience of the church. But they require money which must be handled through hte General Missionary Board. This department is simply a co-ordinating department working through the regular channels and doing a general work for the various boards and churches which they are in no position to do for themselves. It dare not infringe on the rights of the regular missions as that would not be an advance. As soon as the Thanksgiving offering passes the four thousand dollar mark some money will be available for this department for preliminary work. In answer to inquiries I will say that the budget of five thousand dollars presented by the Board at this season included one thousand for the work of this department. If you failed in your part will you not pledge it, that the work of extension may go on?

The director of this department is spending much time and thought on this work. Does the church mean business when it talks of increase and growth? or it is merely romancing about this Four-Year Program? Ere long we will know with circumstantial detail just where we stand collectively and individually. Right here at the heart of the program the test has come. I wonder how many are aware of it. This is not something that can be postponed for another year, for all the activities of subsequent years depend on it. Shall we come through?

G. T. RONK, Extension Director.

The Brethren Church: Impressions and Suggestions

BY C. F. YODER

Years ago I read the statement that missionaries who have lived for years out of immediate touch with the activities and thought of the church in the homeland are apt when they return to look at things from the point of view they had before leaving and thus to be in danger of thinking the church too progressive and in turn of being considered narrow by the leaders at home. I am, therefore somewhat timid about venturing upon some observations for the benefit of the church and yet, after all have concluded to give them for what they are worth.

I Signs of Progress

I wish first of all to note what seem to me to be commendable marks of progress. A church generally bears a name which indicates something of its distinguishing doctrine or methods, and so a church very generally known as "progressive," ought to show some fruit of that princople of freedom to follow the gospel, being led of the Holy Spirit rather than by any stereotyped statement called a creed which brought the Brethren church into existence.

1 Progress in Diversity

Perhaps some are lamenting the diversity that exists in the church both in doctrinal opinions and in church methods, and are trying to promote uniformity as a means of progress. But there is a right and a wrong kind of diversity. We are indeed to "preserve the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," but "where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." That is to say, if we are filled with the Spirit we shall be united in doing the will of the Lord without being enslaved by the letter of the law. I believe that the church has made progress in the application of its principle, "in essentials unity, in non-essentials harmony and in all things charity." In order to have strong races of plants or animals in nature it is necessary to prevent excessive in-breeding. Royalty runs to insanity as a penalty for violating this law and churches run to Pharaisaism when they ignore it. The apostolic church had many important questions to decide and would have been hopelessly lost in divisions had not the Spirit indicated the things that are essentials in doctrine (1 Cor. 15:1-4) and in commandments (Matt. 28-20) leaving many things to the principle, "let each man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Rom. 14:15.

2. Progress in Unity

Diversity without unity is chaos; unity without diversity is death; but unity in diversity is life and power. The wonderful diversity of nature is matched by a still more wonderful unity. The Word of God is likewise a miracle of unity in great revelations through the most astonishing diversity of mediums. The church also is a marvel of many members but one head. "There are diversities of operations but the same spirit." In the past we have had too much of the wrong kind of diversity and too little of the unity of the Spirit. I think I can truly note progress in eliminating harmful differences and promoting genuine co-operation. That this may be possible it is necessary sometimes to enter the forum of honorable but brotherly argument and sometimes when this fails to convince to follow the important injunction of the word—"Hast thou faith? have it unto thyself before God." Rom. 14:22.

Truth may sometimes be more important than peace but more often truth and peace are crushed together in needless wrangles over unessentials. True unity and right diversity are factors mutually essential to progress.

3 Progress in Intensity

When in Tiflis in the Caucasus I talked with a Norwegian who had witnessed the Japanese take Port Arthur. He said they concentrated all their cannon on one spot of the wall until they drilled a hole through it and then went through. That method is generally the secret of success. A veteran army easily conquers a mob because of coordination of effort, and a church which sticks to the program of preaching Christ and him crucified as a witness to the world will get a great deal farther in its mission than one which has no program. If the Brethren church had begun its work with the methods now being developed in our Four-Year Program campaign and had kept them up without losing spirituality in the care of machinery we might now be numbered not by thousands but by hundreds of thousands. Definite goals with sensible methods of reaching them are certainly a great advance upon our early methods. The campaign for endowment for Ashland College, the sending of the Evangelist to all the church members and the drives for recruits to the ministry and missions are only a few of the more important movements in the church which indicate progress and, better still, promise increasing progress.

II Suggestions

The few suggestions I have to make are along the line of the observations already made.

1 More Brotherly Confidence

Diversity is compatible with unity only when there is confidence that the brother who differs from us in a minor point is really one with us in essential points. The startling number of changes of pastorates I observed this year are not all due to need of change of climate. Sometimes gossipy members create an intolerable position for a pastor and sometimes an impulsive, sharp-tongued pastor stirs up needless strife among the members, but in either case it is the lack of brotherly confidence that makes fruitless the money and energy invested in the work and adds the expense of moving I am of the opinion that pastors who really and fervently love their people and consequently visit them, not as a performance of a disagreeable duty, but as an expression of loving interst, will in turn be loved and will not lack either for sermon material. Subjects and illustrations and ideas that interest are more easily found in homes than in books; and the empty pews that cause those present to be scolded on account of the absent might be filled by going as the good shepherd goes to find the sheep which he loves.

2 World Evangelization Our Supreme Goal

The goals outlined in our Four-Year Program are all of them good goals and essential to our progress, but I believe we should keep more prominently in view the ultimate and supreme goal to which the others lead—the great mission of the church in this dispensation, the evangelization of the world. Just as the body is not only the tabernacle of the Spirit but its instrument as well, so the church is not only the temple of the Lord but his agency as well to give his gospel to the world. The church is not for worship only, but for service and the great commission states the supreme work the church is called to do. Our Four-Year Program and all other programs should be arranged with a view to promoting as rapidly as possible this one great task before us.

3 A Return to Apostolic Faith and Fervor

It was John Wesley who said that the church needs a reformation every thirty years. It is time then for ours. Not that we have fallen into corruption such as debased the church of the middle ages, but there is need of a mighty revival. There should be agitation for it, preparation for it, prayer for it, fasting for it, weeping for it until it come. And, when it comes it should first of all be a purging fire that should cleanse the ministry and laity alike so that there should be no more tales of immorality to penetrate like poison gas among the churches and destroy their influence. And when it comes it should cause, as every true revival has done, a return to simple faith in the Word of God. The church needs the stimulus of a mighty conviction of its divine mission and the adequacy of the gospel doctrines to accomplish that mission. It needs to mobilize its forces and go forth to the conquest with the terrible earnestness that fires the troops in the lines of battle. When that revival comes it should come with the fervor that caused those Spirit-filled disciples to fill Jerusalem with their doctrine and then the Roman empire.

Let our preachers lead in the new consecration and the people will follow. The fields of the world are white unto harvest as never before. "Pray yo therefore the Lord of the harvest that he may thrust forth laborers into his harvest."

Blinded by the God of This World

BY A. J. M.

A certain man, Dr. W. G. Ballantine, has written a treatise upon "Religious Education for the Coming Social Order," in which he says that the church has failed in religious education and insists that it must be placed in the hands of those who have adopted the views of the "higher critics." The Old Testament he thinks should be practically abolished from the curriculum of the Sunday school because of the "hurtful character of its moral teachings." But this is not the worst. He lays his profane hand upon the New Testament, condemning the Galatian epistle as "hopelessly ambiguous," and "glaringly fallacious." Much of the New Testament is in his eyes "painful reading" and "has hobbled the Christian thinking of all ages."

It is well to bear in mind first that not all religious education is Christian education. But if the church has failed in religious education, it is because she has turned away from the Word of God. The remedy of this self-appointed physician is worse than the disease. He wishes to turn still farther away from the Word. The fact that he selects especially for his target the Epistle to the Galatians is a sad commentary upon his condition. It is this epistle that sets forth most plainly the gospel of salvation by grace apart from all works, yet to this man it is "hopelessly ambiguous." We are forcibly reminded of other words of the great apostle, "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not." It is said that this blind teacher has been appointed to teach the Bible to young men at the Y. M. C. A. training school in Springfield, Massachusetts, where they are prepared for secretaries. Let all Christians ask God to open the eyes of this man or remove him from his responsible position. He is able.

The Straight and Narrow Way

BY S. F. E.

These latter days in which we are now living are great days, perilous times for the church of Christ and for the world. Satan's methods were never more cunning than at the present time and as a result he has made great and disastrous strides against Christendom. We need not go into the dives af a great ctiy or into far off heathen lands to see evidence of his presence and deadly work. Simply step into many of the present day churches and there you may hear him deliver eloquently his catchy sermons, hear and see him in the well paid choir accompanied by the pealing organ as their anthems ascend—no higher than the ceiling. Feel his cold, clammy personality in the person beside you in the pew or in the throng as they leave the building.

There is but little evidence of 'the straight and narrow way' in the lives of our nominal Christians in general. That seems wholly foreign to their minds; they seem to have no comprehension of such a thing. Few and far between are those who have really grasped in its simplicity and grandeur, the meaning of the Christian life and the mission of the same. The masses have a vague and hazy idea of the genuine Christian's duty and of God's plan of the ages. There is evidence of this condition on every hand and you are bound to notice it if "the god of this world" has not blinded your eyes. Follow with me and notice the conditions of the church and places where we find God's people.

Note the present lack of distinction of God's people and how zealous they are to imitate the world. Instead of coming out of and being separate from the world, the church seems to think that her place is with the world and that forever. Instead of a peculiar, a distinct people she apes the ways of the world and like the tree frog adjusts her color to that of the surroundings. The masses are by far more interested in the things of this world than in those of the next. They gloat and glory over the achievements of man but do not realize that in eternity all of it is vanity, as Solomon said, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." Naturally one expects no other condition than this to prevail for "where a man's treasures are there is his heart also."

Also notice how the church has drifted into world politics in the face of the teachings of the Word that church and state are distinctly separate and their principles opposite. Both are appointed of God for the carrying out of his purpose here on earth, but, state is not Christian, was never intended to be so, never was and never shall be. God's children, we who are saved by the blood of Christ are to have no part in world government. Our citizenship is heavenly, not earthly. We are the salt of this earth, not the earth. Our only part with earthly government is submission to it. But nevertheless there are those who seem to feel that legislation is an instrument of warfare in the hands of the church for routing the devil. What folly on the part of God's children. How do you expect to spoil the devil's goods without first binding him and this you will never do by means of earthly power. Tell me where the church gets her commission to join hands with the world, with the children of darkness to work for a common cause that can not be realized if God's word is true. What concord hath Christ with Belial?

In the minds of many, reformation weighs heavier than regeneration. To the masses GOOD spells GOD and DEVIL spells EVIL. Reformation is only the by-product of regeneration, but the majority seem to be more interested in the dross than in the gold. I say, preach Christ and him crucified to a man and stop wasting your breath and tiring your listeners with reformation and social betterment, etc. For what is morality without spirituality? When a man is born again, regenerated and right at heart, he is moral. Get back to the root of evil, the heart; cleanse the fountain and the stream will sweeten.

And last but not least, listen to some of the ridiculous, inconsistent teachings of the day that Christians are willing to swallow and digest, such as world democracy and permanent peace, etc., which flows from numerous pulpits in this century. If God's word were difficult to understand, if knowledge of the past were unknown, then I might be willing to consider or listen to these ecclesiastical dreams and air castles. But God's Word is simple and easily understood by the unbiased, spiritual mind which is anxious for the truth; but not so with the carnal mind. The Holy Spirit has promised to guide us into all truth, so it behooves us to be spiritually minded and subjugate the carnal mind which is enmity against God.

The trouble is this; man has set his will, his reason and his puny experience above that of the Word and is not willing to "be still and know that I am God." It is in this class that one finds the origin of these inconsistent teachings of the Word so prevalent at the present time. Men are "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." These are the ones that teach that all things work together for good and forget or annul the condition—to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. I ask, does this apply to the world? the children of darkness? Certainly not for they are haters of God. Then how come to the conclusion that naturally sin will die out of the world and conditions in general will improve and continue to do so until the world is perfect and sin no longer exists? But away with such blasphemous teachings. Does the Word not teach us that as time proceeds conditions shall wax worse and worse, that a falling away from the faith is certain, that men shall be lovers of pleasure and themselves more than lovers of God, that wars shall become fiercer and continue till the coming our our Lord when he shall enforce peace with a rod of iron and dash to pieces like a potter's vessel the evil works of man.

Surely the days of the apostacy are upon us. Brethren, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light," and "seeing we are also encompassed by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Let us attend to the work to which we are called, let us pluck the brands from the burning and cease from our vain labor of attempting to quench the conflagration, for Sodom will burn in the face of all you may do. Let us pray for more and deeper consecration on the part of Christians. We need to be separate and distinct, walking epistles, true to the faith and zealous in the Master's work as the apostles of old, following the straight and narrow way which leads to eternal life. May we have the spirit of Paul when he wrote, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

"LEST WE FORGET"

gated by our lack of understanding concerning the social demands of Christianity. But in view of the wide-spread social emphasis in religion and the loud and insistent calls for relief from the terribly strained situation of today, no excuse will suffice to lessen our reproach if we fail to do what we can. God wants our co-operation, if we fail him it will be registered against us as disloyalty, both as to his kingdom and our native land.

"Lest we forget," then, the gravity of the situation, let us direct serious attention to it and co-operate zealously and in a Christian spirit with the manifold movements designed to serve the present crisis in so far as they are consistent with our Christian profession. And let us pray often for the boys in the training camps and on foreign soil, for those who have the destiny of nations in their hands, and for the speedy termination of the war.

Besides these, there are other and more normal ways by which we can help turn back the tide of evil that threatens to exterminate

As to Preachers' Sons

One of the fallacies that is growing thinner and more tattered every year is that the sons of preachers, as a class, are a bad lot and fall below the average of the sons of laymen. It is curious to remember what a singular satisfaction society used to find in this superstition, since we all know the strong predilection of humanity for things that are fanciful and that border on the realm of the unreal.

Thus, when the footsteps of a preacher's son were seen tending to "by and forbidden paths," it was greeted with a certain sense of satisfaction as a vindication of the wisdom of a class of censors who found in the families of clergymen an inviting realm of scrutiny and criticism.

But the notion that the sons of preachers are given, with some singularity, to conduct that holds them up to reprobation has about run its course and served its day. The Star speaks with the authority of experience on this subject. It is glad to have on its staff as many as a half-dozen preachers' sons and has reason to be glad for the mental and moral training of these "sons of many prayers." The lamented "Dick" Lindsay, the late Washington correspondoent of The Star, was the son of a clergyman and the father of H. J. Haskell, his successor, is a missionary. "Charlie" Blakesley, the "Kansas Notes" and the "Starbeams" man, is a preacher's son. So is H. R. Palmer, who occupies a responsible position on the reportorial force, and likewise Frank Evans, the foreman of the composing room. "Honorable mention" as a preacher's son is due to Melville Stone, who is known the world over in connection with his able management of the Associated Press, and to Charles H. Grasty, the brilliant associate of George Thompson of the St. Paul Dispatch.

The list of preachers' sons who have "made good" and have become prominent in the work to which they have devoted themselves might be indefinitely extended, as going to prove that the atmosphere of a clergyman's home is logically stimulating to good morals and to intellectual achievement rather than harmful in its influence.

It is with genuine pleasure, therefore, that The Star greets as the head winner of the W. R. Nelson prize, Ralph Foster, of Kansas City, Kansas, son of the Rev. Festus Foster, a Congregational minister. The lucky young man has a brother who won a Cecil Rhodes scholarship a few years ago and another who is in the Naval academy at Annapolis.

Don't you think that is doing pretty well for preachers' sons in one family, and for our ambitious and enterprising Kansas neighbor across the line?—Kansas City Star.

Distinguished Sons of Clergymen

The recent death of Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, noted son of a noted father, Charles Hadden Spurgeon, and for some years his successor as pastor in the Tabernacle he made famous, has incidentally brought up again the question about preacher's sons.

It has been one of the favorite slurs of the devil and his crowd that ministers' sons are the worst in the community. But the truth is that from no other source does a larger proportion of useful members of society come; and when we examine the lists of those who have risen to prominence and position the proportion of preacher's sons is startlingly large.

One twelfth of all the men whose biographies appear in "Who's Who," are the sons of clergymen.

Among our literary men who were raised in a parsonage appear such names as Emerson, Holmes, Lowell, Bancroft, Parkman, Sloan, Gilder and Henry James.

In politics appear the names of Henry Clay, President Buchanan, President Arthur, Senators Quay, Beveridge and Dolliver, President Cleveland, President Wilson and Former Justice Hughes.

The father of Henry Ward Beecher (and as well of the distinguished woman, Harriet Beecher Stowe of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" fame) was a preacher. As was also the father of Fields; Cyrus W., who laid the first Atlantic cable, David Dudley, the renowned lawyer, and Stephen J., the United States Supreme Court Justice.

Agassiz, the naturalist and Samuel F. Morse, inventor of the telegraph were sons of clergymen.

To the list which is interminable must be added that of the Spurgeons. Rev. W. G. Jackson of Northampton, a nephew of C. H. Spurgeon, has furnished the following history of his family which will be read with interest.

"The preachers in one family during the past century include the following names: Rev. James Spurgeon, in his roomy Independent Manse in Stambourne 110 years ago; Rev. John Spurgeon in quiet Essex in 1854; the Spurgeon in Cambridge in 1852; his sons in New Zealand in 1881 and in England in 1879; Dr. J. A. Spurgeon with his able ministry ending in Croydon not twenty years ago. And now his son Archer, assisting Mr. Phillips at Bloomsbury, may add another generation to his honorable forbears. Should the only son of pastor Thomas Spurgeon take up this honored calling, he would be of the fifth successive generation of preachers. On the women's side of the family Mrs. Jackson (Elizabeth Spurgeon), a minister's wife from 1859 to 1892, an able preacher with a beautiful voice; and Mrs. Henderson (Eva Spurgeon), another capable speaker. Of the grandchildren of Rev John Spurgeon, pastors Charles and Thomas Spurgeon and pastor W. G. Jackson, of Moulton, Northampton. Is this not a remarkable record of a family of preachers?"

It may not be inappropriate to embody here the tribute Dr. A. C. Dixon, now pastor of the famous Beecher Tabernacle ,paid to this recently departed noted son of the great Spurgeon. He regarded him as his father's equal in three respects, "in faith, fidelity and saintliness of character. As poet and artist he was superior to the great man. His metrical version of Psalm XXIII is, in my judgment, the best in existence."

In his memorial sermon Dr. Dixon gave this interesting bit of personal reminiscence concering the visit of Thomas Spurgeon to America twenty-three years ago, when he invited him to preach in his church and to stay at his house in Brooklyn.

"A very large company assembled, attracted by his father's world-wide celebrity. After hearing him, we felt he had no need to rest upon his father's reputation. His text was, 'I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?' I have rarely seen a congregation more deeply moved. His humble, unassuming manner, his earnestness, his homely and happy illustrations, his musical voice, his utter dependence on the Holy Spirit, and, above everything, his exaltation of Jesus Christ as King of all realms, made us feel we were listening to a truly great sermon from a truly great preacher."—Evangelical Messenger.

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

Illiokota Leads the Way

Gradually our district conferences are building up commendable Sunday school organizations. The plan has the two-fold advantage of establishing a connecting link with the National Association and of developing a fine lot of talent within the district. We are pleased to receive the suggestive message from Illiokota's new Teacher Training superintendent and commend her suggestions to all interested workers. Miss Garber has been a member of our fraternity a little less than a year, having been received into the Lanark church from the Church of the Brethren which she served as Sunday school secretary and mission worker. We welcome her into our fellowship, and sincerely hope that the ideal, a class graduated from the Three-Year course in every school of the district by 1920, may be fully realized. It represents a most worthy challenge.

J. A. GARBER.

To the Sunday School Superintendents of the Illiokota District:

Are you planning your Teacher Training classes?

Just as soon as the necessary literature is ready you will hear from me, but in the meantime, get to talking Teacher Training. If your present teaching force have not taken the work urge them to do so. Then get your young people interested in the work.

Here are some plans I have for the work. I want a Teacher Training class graduated from each school in the district at the 1920 conference. (Our course now covers three years.) This will be a fitting way to celebrate the completion of the Four-Year Program. Then think what an impetus that will be for the conference. It will cause a much larger attendance. It will increase the interest in trained teachers and will make a splendid program for one session of the conference.

Another plan is to organize an Alumni Association of those who have finished the work. Then we can have an alumni luncheon or banquet some time during the conference, each year. This, too, will be helpful in increasing attendance at conference and creating sentiment in favor of Teacher Training.

Now fellow Sunday school workers, get busy in your schools and get your classes lined up ready to begin work as soon as the books are ready.

Yours for better trained teachers,

ALICE GARBER.

Lanark, Illinois.

Bits of Sunday School News from Far and Near

Interesting items are always coming from the various field secretaries of the World's Sunday School Association. Howard of South America tells of a Sunday school workers' meeting that was held in Buenos Aires. Though a far reaching railroad strike was on and those from the suburbs could not reach the city more than 230 crowded the hall. A real teachers' meeting was held and the cake and tea were not omitted. The interested people who were present urged that such a conference be held every fifteen days. The day also celebrated the coming of the new Sunday school book in Spanish from the press. It was the translation of the first part of "The Elementary Worker and His Work."

Coleman of Japan tells of the very resultful summer school for Sunday school workers which concluded another annual session at Karuiazawa. The course is stiff enough to try the best in a similar group in the home land. Daily Vacation Bible schools have been held in Tokyo this year. One school was held in the Ginza Methodist church and numbered fifty. The other was conducted in the Tokyo Y. M. C. A. building, with swimming in the new pool as the chief recreation attraction. Here the service of worship included song, the use of scripture and prayers and Bible teaching. A general course of lectures was given and a course of hand work and Bible teaching. The enrollment in this school was 120 and the average attendance about 100. Only 19 of the whole number had ever attended Sunday school, and they were so well pleased with this school that they asked about suitable Sunday schools where they might attend, and a definite effort was made to get them in touch with some school. The attention of all Japan was called to the International Go-to-Sunday School Day which took place in America on November 4. Japan will soon adopt the plan and name a special day for a nation-wide drive.

Trowbridge of Egypt is now doing intensive work with the Arabic. He has been studying the language very energetically for the past two years and more and has attained a working knowledge so that now he can talk directly and not through an interpreter. Meanwhile much constructive work has been accomplished and a fair amout of Sunday school literature translated.

Needles for a New Conscience Relating Us to Our Boys

The foundations of manhood are laid in boyhood.

A future worth preserving rests upon a well-spent present.

Any desired greatness is dependent upon a thorough preparation.

Faith is foundered in boyhood. When faith weathers boyhood's stormy change it anchors in the harbor of heaven.

Habit is simply an expression of environment.

Heredity gets burdened with more reasons for failure than it deserves. It is easier to blame our ancestors than acknowledge our own deficiencies.

Looks are the evidence of our names, but inclinations that result in characteristics, are evidences of some one's incompetence. Might be dads.

Teen age is the time to teach purity. Boys need men to teach them sex relationship.

The boy "finds" adolescence. What a pity he is not taught its nature and necessity. The world's busiest teachers of procreation, are the half-witted imbeciles, who wander about in every village, town and city. Their penchant seems to be boys from religious homes.

If we only spent as much time for prevention as we expend in correction, what a leisure class America would have.

Memorial to the late Dr. George W. Bailey

A granite monolith bearing a bronze tablet has just been erected and unveiled to the memory of a great Sunday school man, Dr. George W. Bailey. The stone is in the Eglington Cemetery, Clarksboro, N. J., within a few feet of the grave of Dr. Bailey. Dr. Bailey has held the highest offices in the Gloucester County, New Jersey, International and World's Sunday School Associations. He entered upon his heavenly reward last December. Leading officials from all the organizations mentioned were at the unveiling and numerous addresses were delivered by them. The stone had been draped with the American flag. As the children from the neighboring public schools surrounding the memorial stone sang "Jesus Loves the Little Children," a granddaughter of Dr. Bailey, Miss Frances Bailey Elliott, unloosed the folds of the flag, which was then lifted till it flew in the breeze just above the hundreds who were present. The hour was in the early afternoon. The public schools had been dismissed for the occasion. The program was in charge of Samuel W. Downer, of Downer, N. J., a former president of the New Jersey Sunday School Association, who with others from the Gloucester County Association had worked indefatigably to make the event a worthy tribute to one of the best known Sunday school men in the world. Mr. Downer said in introducing Rev. E. M. Fergusson, of Baltimore, as the presiding officer, "We are here to pay a tribute to one of the great men who has lived on this earth," and then referred tothe day which was typical of the man—"sunshiny, warm, beautiful." Among those who took part were Charles A. Brown, Woodbury, N. J.; Rev. Samuel Price, D. D., Montclair, N. J.; Marion Lawrance, Chicago; Frank L. Brown, New York, and Seth P. Leet, Montreal.

REVIEW OF

This week we are glad to be able to report four more churches for the Honor Roll for the Brethren Evangelist. This time it is Meyersdale and Summit Mills, Pennsylvania; Mexico, Indiana, and Lordsburg, now La Verne, California. Also according to the report of Brother Ronk the still unorganized class at Mt. Etna, Iowa, is entitled to a place on the Roll as this class has put the church paper into every Brethren home comprising the class. The pastors of a number of other churches have written us that they are endeavoring to have their congregations win a place on this Honor Roll. We will rejoice with them when they succeed and sympathize with them when they fail.

The new Tenth Legion League superintendent of the National Christian Endeavor society of the Brethren church makes his initial appearance in a message to the societies this week. Any one who reads his contribution through can see that he takes his appointment seriously and that he expects to accomplish something definite by his efforts.

The Brethren in Spokane, Washington, are rejoicing greatly because of the many blessings that have come to them during the past year. They had a specially happy Christmas season. Their Sunday school is doing remarkably well for a school so recently organized and working under such great handicaps. Seven members have been added to the church since the last report and there are still others that are just about ready to come in. The church was able to make its last payment on the brick it had bought to complete their church building as soon as possible, and Brother Miller and the members rejoice again.

Brother Belote's report of the development of the work of the Brethren in Canton is of a specially interesting nature. Many things of importance have already taken place during the winter, one of which was the surprise on the pastor and his wife. The Christmas exercises at Canton were greatly appreciated as all such services are when held for the sake of others instead of for the sake of self. Brother Belote has been given a unanimous call to continue as pastor of the Canton church.

C. D. Whitmer, one of the newer workers in the ranks of the Indiana ministry, who is serving the Brethren at La Paz his second year is greatly encouraged with the prospects for the year. Their revival meeting will soon begin with C. C. Grisso as evangelist. Only recently Brother and Sister Whitmer enjoyed a splendid donation from the good people of La Paz.

C. H. Ashman is experiencing some things in the work in the Northwest that never came to him before in his ministry. Opposition from many sources makes him all the more firm in his stand for the principles of the old gospel and the whole of the gospel. The church and Sunday school at Sunnyside are going steadily forward in spite of opposition. Brother Jennings is expected to conduct an eveangelistic campaign with Brother Ashman in April.

Paul N. Brumbaugh, of Dayton, has been associated with the Washington, D. C. church for a few months only but finds the spirit of the work in the Capital City most admirable. He orders the Evangelist to his Washington address.

C. F. Yoder and family are now somewhere on the high seas bound for South America. His farewell communication written aboard the vessel reveals the fact that he did not have many idle days during his six months' furlough in the home land. But the churches will all have a more abiding interest in missionary work because of his visits among them.

It will take some time for our readers to get used to the change of the name Lordsburg, California, to La Verne, but if the church of that place continues its activities in the future as in the past year it will be worth noting. A splendid Sunday school addition has been added to their equipment for work. Their annual business meeting on New Year's day was a happy occasion and showed the finances of the church in a splendid condition. It is unusual to publish a report of the local finances of a church but the report of this congregation shows so clearly their interest in Christian work outside their own immediate neighborhood that it is worth studying.

A. E. Thomas recently conducted a series of evangelistic meetings at West Alexandria, Ohio. The severe weather of December interfered somewhat with the attendance of the meetings but there wer five additions to the church. The different departments of the church are active in their own fields and are doing good work.

After an absence of some months W. S. Crick is back on the field in the vicinity of Harrisonburg, Virginia, and is actively at work in building up the kingdom of our Lord. Ths is a rural field but the members of the churches are earnestly striving to do the work as the needs of the field require it to be done. A new parsonage was recently built by the Mt. Olive congregation, and the Mt. Zion congregation is making an effort to reach high goals in its work.

A most interesting watch-night meeting by one of the organized Sunday school classes of the Masontown, Pennsylvania school at the home of the teacher of the class is reported by one of the members who was present.

George T. Ronk has been some time on the field again in Leon, Iowa, and reports that work together with the work at numerous other points where he has labored during the fall and winter. At Leon a splendid meeting was recently held with the assistance of Brother Jennings. Mt. Etna, Baker and Udell have all been visited and helped by Brother Ronk in the past few months. And the field seems ripe if only harvesters can be secured to do the reaping.

It is an interesting story of the work in Kentucky that our readers get this week from the letters of Miss Ham and Brother Carpenter. Impressions are being made on the young life of the mountains that will be lifelong.

The pastors of the Maryland and Virginia conference district are requested to give heed to the call of their conference secretary as it appears in this number of the Evangelist.

Around the Editor's Table

A Quickening of Spiritual Life

Most people recognize the dual nature of human life. The simple act of breathing and moving about and of eating and drinking is not real life. The very most insignificant beasts of the field have that to a degree that is in many respects more highly developed than the human family has. But man is more than a beast and his life is a higher life than that of the beast; and it is not simply because he has intellectual power that the beast does not possess, but he has something in his nature that goes even beyond that of intellectual power and that is that almost indefinable something called his spiritual nature, or his spiritual life.

Since the breaking out of the great war the American people have been receiving a tremendous amount of teaching along the line of keeping physically fit to perform any service the country may need, and we have been told over and over again that the physical condition of the young men of our country is far from being ideal. Physical training from youth up is considered by many, even that afforded by universal military training, is regarded as the only method by which the efficiency of the American people can be kept up to the required standards of the age. And perhaps more young men and more middle-aged men are doing some kind of "physical culture stunts" daily now than ever before in the experience of America. It has become recognized that the physical life of America must be QUICKENED, and definite steps have been taken to bring about this result. We have not a word of criticism to offer against this awakened consciousness of the need of better physical training and living of the people of our country. In fact, except in regard to some of the methods advanced for bringing about the desired effect, we most heartily commend the idea for we believe a physically perfect being can give God better service than a physically imperfect one; but on the other hand there is a danger of overlooking the fact that a physically fit man, but one whose spiritual nature or life has been dwarfed by lack of spiritual food and lack of spiritual exercise and training is in a very poor condition to give God effective service of any kind. So long as more attention is given to the physical traning of man than to his spiritual training, just that long we may expect the physical life to predominate, but when once the spiritual life and the spiritual training of our children receives attention equal to or superior to that we give to their physical and intellectual development then we may expect the spiritual in life to predominate. It does not take a very keen observer to notice which life is predominating in most any community, and the support given the churches and the regard in which the church services are held by a community afford a very accurate method of measurement of the spiritual life of that community. But it is time that "judgment should begin at the house of God," and if the spiriutal life of the community would be quickened there must first be a quickening of the spiritual life of the church. Even in a local sense a spiritually dead or spiritually weak church is an altogether inadequate means for quickening the spiritual life of any community. Goal one of our Four-Year Program occupies a rightful place at the head of the list of achievements set for the church.

A Deepening of the Spiritual Life

Many a farmer has discovered in a period of drouth that his well has run dry. Of course this is a very inconvenient condition when there is a great deal of live stock on the place that must have an abundant supply of fresh water if their keeping would be made at all profitable. Sometimes when a farmer discovers his well has gone dry he sets about to dig or drill or drive or bore a new well, but we think more frequently he just deepens the old well, for he knows if he only goes deep enough he will get an abundant supply of water for his family and his cattle.

The spiritual life of many a church has run low because the spiritual life of the individual members of the church is as a shallow well in a dry season. An evangelist may be brought in to dig new wells when instead the old wells should be cleaned out and dug deeper. The spiritual life that has been, has proved ineffective because it has been a shallow life; the spiritual life that must be to make the work of the kingdom of God of some effect, is a life that is deeply rooted in the very life of God.

The deepening of the spiritual life of every member of the church is a task that will require the best efforts of full grown men and women in the Lord. This goal of our great program throws out a challenge to every church and every pastor and every active Christian worker in the entire brotherhood. There is no part or section of the church that can escape this responsibility or claim exemption from the obligation. The goal directors for this part of the program are laying their plans and if their plans are faithfully carried out we have a right to expect a spiritual awakening among the churches that will gather momentum as the years pass until by the end of the four-year period a momentum will have been gained that will be all but irresistible.

Since there are so many things that detract from the spiritual life of the membership of the church every effort should be put forth to discover as many things as possible that will aid in deepening this life that is so essential to the real happiness of the individual and to the success of the whole body of Christians. The following out by the pastors of the plans laid down by the director of this goal will get definite results, but it will not do to stop when that has been done. That is only a beginning; an effort must be made by each pastor to learn some of the causes of the lack of depth to the spiritual life. Great achievements are not won by shallow souls but by souls that have drunk deeply from the Spring of Life. Spiritual life is not deepened by the reading of much that passes as literature in these modern days. Even some of the high-class and popular magazines of the day which are exceptionally good in their line have no food between their pages that will in any marked degree deepen the spiritual life of their readers. The spiritual life requires food that is of a religious nature, not by implication only, but in reality. There is a place for distinctively religious and spiritual reading matter in every home. To people who have no special religious convictions such popular papers as the Christian Herald and Sunday School Times may be satisfactory, but to deepen the spiritual life of the people of the Brethren faith something more than that is needed.

Right here is where we wish to make a point in favor of the churches and the pastors using our own publications and especially the Brethren Evangelist to deepen the spiritual life of their members. Undoubtedly, other things being equal, you will find the deepest spiritual life among Brethren churches manifested most definitely among those churches where there are the most readers of the church paper. We believe practically every denomination will find this same condition, and those denominations that have a special plea to make to the world will find it more surely true than others. If the Brethren church has the special plea that it claims to have then it should use every means possible to bring that plea to bear upon the spiritual life of its membership and it should through its literature make that plea as wide-spread as possible. All these things point toward a more general use of all the publications of the Brethren church, and again we say of the Brethren Evangelist especially.

Thy Will Be Done

When we pray "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," we obligate ourselves to carry out the purposes and the plans of the Father who makes his wishes known. The last will and testament of our Father may have provisions that seem objectionable to us at times, but unless we recognize his superior right to make the provisions of his will as he thinks best we express a lack of confidence in his wisdom. We may not set about to "break the will" of our Father, but we make it of none effect by refusing to comply with its provisions, and in this refusal we often forfeit our inheritance. In after years we may regret it deeply, but then it may be too late as the estate may be fully settled and closed by the court.

Earthly Wills

The laws of every state provide for the handing down of bequests by owners of earthly riches to those to whom they wish their possessions to pass. The statutes provide that certain bequests may be made by "will" that the courts will recognize and make the title secure to the ones to whom the bequest has been made, unless some one files objections and through court procedure has the will set aside or "broken." Many lawyers grow rich by writing wills that they know can be broken by the courts, and the will of many a testator is not carried out because a technicality has not been observed in the writing of the will and the possessions and estate are diverted from the channels in which the testator had expected them to go. Especially is this true when bequests have been made to churches, colleges or other benevolences. We do not know how to account for it, but it seems that the courts are not altogether unprejudiced in the matter of carrying out the provisions of a will that has left money or property to such institutions when the wills are attacked by money-loving relatives however remote their relationship may be. The Brethren church has had just a little experience along this line, other and larger churches have had more experience. Just a few weeks ago the following appeared in one of our church exchanges:

The Preachers' Aid Society of Indiana Conference was bequeathed $15,000 by the will of Mary Brogden. The will has been contested and set aside, and the society will lose the money. This is still another case, among many, which emphasizes that the only safe and prudent way for charitably disposed persons to insure that their estates will be distributed in accordance with their desires is to be their own administrators, and pay the money while they live, or, if they need the income, to buy life annuity bonds. Every year, in fact almost every month, the boards of the church and local religious societies and charitable institutions are losing money, which was intended to care for the old preachers, or to extend mission work, or to mother orphans, when a little forethought would have put the funds where the covetous could not break through the wills and get at them.

It would be well for some of our aged brethren who are considering leaving a portion of their possessions to Ashland College to swell its greatly needed endowment fund to consider the experiences of other older and larger churches than ours. The old saying, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," is especially true in such cases as this. Five thousand dollars given to Ashland College now on the annuity plan would be a safer proposition to the College than ten thousand bequeathed in some will that may be broken in the courts by unfriendly relatives.

Palestine and the Jews

When Baron Rothschild was approached some years ago with a proposal that his family help to purchase Palestine from the Turks and re-establish the Jews in their homeland, it is said that he replied: "No! We will never seek to buy the land which God Almighty gave to our fathers. The day will come when he will bring us back into our inheritance."

The time seems to be approaching when this fine faith is to be rewarded and when more prophecies of the scriptures are to be fulfilled. On December 10th it was announced that the British forces under General Allenby had captured Jerusalem from the Turks and Germans. For two thousand years Palestine has been under gentile dominion and for twelve centuries the Mohammedan powers have been in possession of the Holy City. Only twice during that period have Christian forces occupied Jerusalem for a brief period, the last Christian ruler being Frederick II. of Germany (1229-1244).

Last December, after Beersheba, Hebron, Gaza and Jaffa had been captured, Jerusalem itself was surrounded, and surrendered without being bombarded. Both Turkish and British forces wished to preserve the sacred shrines from injury. A Mohammedan representative entered the city with the British and French commanders, so that the Temple Area, the Holy Selpuchre and other sacred places and relics, revered by Christians, Jews and Moslems, might not be profaned. Christians again possess the city but the Moslems still hold the Temple Area.

What will be the future of Israel and of the Holy Land? Political prophecy is difficult, but God has wondrous ways of carrying out his program. The British have signified their approval of the Zionist movement and restoration of the Jews to Palestine and of Palestine to the Jews—perhaps with an international government. On November 2nd, Arthur James Balfour, of the British Foreign Office, wrote to Lord Rothschild an official letter in which he said:

"His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object."

Some students of history and prophecy see in this declaration an event as important to the Jews today as was the decree of Cyrus in 536 B. C., which permitted the Jews to return to Palestine from Babylon. This declaration has raised high the hopes of the Zionists and has been enthusiastically received by millions of Jews. It may be that at the conclusion of the war hundreds of thousands of the "Peculiar People" will return to the land given to Abraham and will there await the further fulfilment of prophecy. (Luke 21:24.) All this in spite of the Moslem program. Djajmal Pasha, commander of the Turkish army in Syria, declared that the Jews must be exterminated or deported from Palestine. But God has said that they should return (Isa. 11:11-16). To carry out his will the gentile nations are advocating the restoration of Israel to their homeland. It is the Turk who must go.

When this fulfilment of prophecy takes place we may expect that the land that once flowed with milk and honey, but that has been devastated by Turkinsh mismanagement, will again be fruitful and fair. The soil is wonderfully fertile, and when trees, grass, vineyards and grains are restored, the land will be one of the most beautiful on earth. It is estimated that it could support at least 3,000,000 people in place of the present 400,000. The land holds the key position at the juncture of Asia, Africa and Europe—a strategic position enhanced by the recent railway building. Even before the war, Palestine was becoming increasingly Jewish—in commerce and industries, in agricultural settlements, in schools, hospitals, asylums and even in language. What may we expect if the Allies re-establish the Hebrews in their God-given home? Is their time of chastisement drawing to a close, in preparation for the return of their rejejcted Messiah? When that event takes place we may expect the Hebrews to become a great Christian missionary force to complete the evangelization of the world.

A Program for Eighty Millions

In connection with the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of Methodist Home and Foreign missions, the church has outlined a large program of advance in service and giving. The celebration begins on January first and is expected to inaugurate a new era. The aim is to bring Methodist Christians to realize the greatness and importanes of their task, just as the Allies are beginning to realize the necessity for unlimited devotion to the work of establishing peace on the earth.

Christian people must visualize the needs of the world and the inspiring possibliities of a redeemed and regenerated humanity. Every evil rampant today is the result of a disregard of God's laws and the failure to appropriate Christ's offer of life-power. The service of Christ calls for sacrifice even greater than is demanded in the interests of the nation and humanity; for Christian service includes all forms of service.

The Methodist Episcopal church is endeavoring to bring its members to see the vision and to accept the responsibility—none claiming exemption. They aim to mobilize the entire prayer life and all the resources of the church. They see not only the congregations at home needing shepherding, with the unenlightened millions of negroes, Indians, mountaineers, miners, lumbermen and foreigners in America, but they also see the 800,000,000 of the unevangelized in Latin America, Africa, India, China, Japan and Moslem lands. Methodism' share in this responsibility includes over 100,000,000 souls.

The Board of Home and Foreign Missions therefore call their churches in the next five years to quadruple their gifts—an $80,000,000 program. The Foreign Mission Board last year reported an $143,000 increase and now ask for eight millions a year for the next five years. The gifts to all Methodist foreign work reported for 1917 amounted to $3,146,,062, including amounts received from the women and Sunday schools. Men are just beginning to learn how to give. Every land presents new openings for Christian influence, and after the war there will be unparalleled need and unprecedented opportunity. The disintegration of Islam, the Mass Movements in India, the intellectual awakening in China and the new friendliness in Japan and Latin America point to new possibilities for Christian advance—if the church at home is not selfish or asleep. The program outlined for the Methodists will be more fully described in our next number. It is one that shows a daring faith and one that inspires to heroic sacrifice and service.

America's Opportunity in China

Events are moving rapidly in the diplomatic relations of the Far East. The war has not caused European nations to relax their interest in the greatest coming Power of Asia. In due time the Republic of China seems destined to far outweigh India's British-governed three hundred and fifteen millions and Japan's phenomenal assumption of indigeous hegemony in Asia. During these years of war and diplomacy of the Russian, French, Italian and Japanese chancellors has threatened China's autonomy or self-respect. Two nations indeed, have shown themselves her friends in this cataclysmic time, Great Britain and the United States. All the Entente powers (except Russia—owing to her financial straits) have manifested their good will by postponing until a later period the burdensome Boxer indemnity payments. China has followed the United states in declaring war against the Central Powers, and already has sent a large number of Chinese laborers to France.

The Ishii-Lansing agreement is doubtless intended to safeguard China's best good, as well as to unite Japan and the United States on a basis of mutual interests and the highest welfare of the Far East. That agreement, however, being made without referring to China the matters under discussion, has naturally led Dr. Wellington Ku, China's Minister at Washington, to send a solemn protest against such a settlement of his country's affairs.

How then, will this cloud affect the missionary work of American churches? We believe that the conditions enumerated emphasize, rather than destroy, the possibilities of missionary influence in China. Diplomats and promoters of foreign financial and mining interests always distrusted in that country, are now more than ever open to suspicion. But the men representing the financial and political interests of alien nations are rarely seen outside of the treaty ports and capitals of the Republic, while in nearly a thousand other cities and towns Christian missionaries are living their self-sacrificing lives in close touch with the Chinese, and are ministering to the people through 4,082 organized churches, 5,136 educational institutions, and 651 hospitals and dispensaries. Half of the 5,750 men and women engaged in this ministry are from America. These living arguments are admitted by the Chinese to offset the unChristian acts of many representatives of Occidental governments and mercantile and financial firms. Even if Christian Powers usually appear to be selfish, these Christian men and women, who seek not their own, show that they desire the highest good of the Chinese.

The Government of the United States realizes the importance of missionaries in China, as was evidenced by General Crowder's interest in the address of a Committee of the Board Secretaries of the United States and Canada who argued for the exemption of students, not theological, of military age, preparing to go to China as missionaries. He recognized that they are part of a body of men who can do more than diplomats or business representatives to maintain international peace and promote harmonious relations between the United States and the Far East.

America must bear a larger responsibility, for the war has crippled China's missions and all European societies are weakened financially and in the number of their missionaries. The recent enormous depreciation of gold in that silver standard country has also handicapped the work. The Presbyterian Board (North) states that this depreciation in the buying power of gold will cost an additional $200,000 or $300,000 in China alone. Never was the Republic more clamant, never more ready for the Gospel. It is in the "fulness of time" that Mr. Sherwood Eddy is going to China for a wide educational and evangelistic campaign. Truly this is America's day of opportunity in China. "Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Our New Superintendent

The article given below represents the initial message of our new Tenth Legion superintendent, brother E. A. Myer who succeeds brother F. E. Clapper. Brother Myer is one of the dependable workers in the Flora, Indiana church, spent a term of service at Riverside, and is an enthusiastic Tenth Legioner. He is especially eager to attain the goals indicated not for any selfish reason but because he knows that the enrollment of an increasingly large number of young people as tithers will result in added blessings to them and mean enlarging support for all the work of the church. Our Endeavorers are asked to yield him fullest co-operation in carrying forward the activities of his department. J. A. GARBER.

Tenth Legion Department

This is the beginning of a great campaign. One that will not close until General Conference meets in 1920. A campaign that will reach from California to Virginia; one that will reach every society and member in the whole brotherhood.

A campaign that will have a part in carrying out our Four-Year Program. It is a campaign of dollars and sense; a campaign to enroll members in the Tenth Legion.

The Tenth Legion deals with the material side of life. It is an enrollment of those who "render unto God the things that are Gods"; those who recognize that all they have came from God and belongs to him and they are only stewards who must give an account of how they used the material he placed in their hands.

It is an enrollment of those who give not less than one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work; those who have learned that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

To carry on this campaign we must organize our forces and do definite things. We must have a superintendent in each district who will be responsible for that district doing its best.

We must have a superintendent in each society who will seek members for our famous Tenth Legion.

I think our district superintendents have been named for this year. Each superintendent should get in immediate touch with each society in the district and have a superintendent appointed and a report given of the number of members of the tenth legion in the society.

If we succeed we must know definitely how many members we now have and how many we gain each year. So our success depends upon each superintendent making correct reports promptly. Our goal for the campaign is 2,000 members by 1920, divided as follows: Pennsylvania, 500; Indiana, 495; Ohio, 450; California, 250; Kanemorado, 100; Illiokota, 100; Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, 60; Michigan, 25; miscellaneous, 25.

Each district can see what it has to do and then get busy.

Our work will needs be educational. We must show that the tithing way is the best way and the way our Lord would have us do.

We must make use of our Bibles and leaflets and booklets. "The "Bible Truth Depot," Swengal, Pennsylvania, and "Layman," 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois, publish good literature on tithing and Christian giving.

We must make use of the Evangelist and Angelus to reach the Brethren homes. We should have several articles on tithing and giving written by our own superintendents and members to publish during the campaign.

If each does his best the campaign will be a success and in 1920 we can go "over the top."

Lastly: "Now then do it."

E. A. MYER, National Supt.

An Ignoble Ambition

A sardonic American essayist has commented unkindly upon a phenomenon that amazes no less than it affronts him. Why, he asks, do so many young girls cultivate with care and pains a meretricious appearance Why do they try so hard to look the unworthy thing they are not?

The criticism is harsh but not unprovoked. There is a type of girl perfectly familiar to all American town dwellers. She may be seen dawdling about the streets, singly or in groups. She is usually very young, but as uncontrolled apparently by parental restraint as by any saving quality of taste. She is a travesty of fashion, a travesty of vice. If narrow skirts are in vogue, hers are absurdly tight. If short skirts are worn, hers mount to the knee. If collars are loose, she bares her meager chest and her assertive little bones to every reluctant spectator. If hair is dressed high, she rolls hers on fearful-looking objects bearing the sympathetic name of rats. If hair is dressed low, she plasters it down in scallops and eartabs. She walks awkwardly, and without the spring of youth, on her high-heeled shoes. She has a pathetic belief in the transforming power of cosmetics, dabs her childish face with crimson, and whitens herself like a circus clown, without achieving his cheerful and piquant vivacity.

A boy possessed of ambition to appear a lawless vagabond can do no more than cock his hat, smoke cigarettes and swagger. Those are his simple and restricted methods of seeming other than he is and they deceive no one. Even the policeman eyes him with a contemptuous grin. But a girl has so many devices that she succeeds in looking, if not depraved, at least discreditable. To do that she sacrifices all the advantages that nature has lavished on her.

There is nothing in the world more decorative than a girl. Whether she be pretty or not (and she nearly always is pretty to an appreciative eye), she has the precious quality of youth. She has the quick step, the fearless smile, the charming indefinite outlines, the angularity that is so different in its litheness from the stiffened angularity of age. Books and cats and fair-haired little girls are three things fit to be looked at, says a wise French poet. The book is a permanent decoration. The cat gives always to the sheltering hearth an atmosphere of ease and comfort and security. The little girl has but a few flying years in which to embellish her surroundings. Poverty can not rob her of her charm. Vulgarity destroys it at a blow.

That she should know no better than to coarsen her own delicacy, debase her own comeliness and stale her own youth is inconceivably pitiful. That, being innocent, she should aspire to look depraved is at once tragical and grotesque. The poor little painted, plastered maid, in dirty slippers and a hat resting on the tip of her nose, is at best an absurdity, at worst a confession of defeat.—Youth's Companion.

Canton, Ohio, Happenings

It is not so long since an account of the work at this place appeared in the columns of the church paper, and it may seem a bit presumptuous for a report to be given so soon again, but if others have whereof to be glad we too can rejoice.

Some of the brethren at various points have been telling of the "donations" and "surprises" that have been pulled off on them by the good folks whom they serve, and I should be ungrateful if I failed to record the fact of the terrific "pounding" the Canton folks gave their preacher on the night of December 21. The pastor and wife and those who were drilling for the Christmas pageant which was given on Sunday evening the 23, had gathered at the church and were busily engaged in the preparations for a final rehearsal when the pastor noticed an unusual commotion in the basement and the next thing he knew he was seized by superior numbers and hustled upstairs into the main auditorium where brother Alvin Byers acted as spokesman in telling him that the folks were tired of being "pounded" from the pulpit so often with no chance to retaliate and that they had decided to do some "pounding" too, and they did. Sugar, tea, coffee, rice, tapioca, flour, potatoes, turnips, et. cetera, ad infinitum (or so it seemed to the preacher and his wife.) Honestly it was the sweetest pounding we have ever gotten (do not dare tell how much sugar they gave us or "Hoover" would have another secret service man out among the Brethren looking for hoards of provisions). It may have been a question with some if the Canton folks were appreciative, but it is no question with the present minister and wife—they know. We tried to say that we appreciated the spirit of fellowship and fraternity which had prompted the occasion, but words are pretty poor things to work with, and especially when the heart insists in getting up in your throat where the words ought to come out. And so we said like little Tim, "God bless us every one."

And the Christmas pageant was a decided success. It was entitled "Bethlehem," and depicted the scenes of the approaching birth of Christ, showing a panoramic view of the town of Bethlehem, groups of boys and girls from the town, the shepherds who had seen a wonderful vision and the wise men who had wandered far to find "Him who was born king of the Jews." The occasion drew a crowded house and was pronounced a decided succes; in fact it was said to have far exceeded the rendition of the same program by one of the large schools of the city. And we took an offering for Kentucky-Ashland, which puts the church in line for honorable mention.

Just here allow me to say that the Canton congregation always responds to the calls of the general work of the church. She has a contract with her pastor which says he shall be permitted to present the claims of all the various auxiliaries of the brotherhood without protest from the congregation. No complaining that they are too poor themselves to help these other fields and causes, just cheerful giving as the Spirit moves them. And the preacher has used all the themes given by the Director of Spiritual Goals, though the director might not have recognized them at first sight. And he is ready for any other suggestions that may come from the same or any other like source.

The first Thursday evening in each quarter is time for the regular business meeting of the Canton church, so the last one fell on January 3, when the largest crowd was gathered for the consideration of the affairs of the congregation that has been at any such occasion during the present pastorate. The reports of the various auxiliaries were highly gratifying, especially the financial status, there having been decided advance in all departments. The Official Board presented a plan for liquidating the incumbent debt on the church in three years, which was enthusiastically and unanimously adopted and the finance committee was authorized to proceed at once to put the plan into working force. And since it was time for the congregation to consider whom they should have to serve them for pastor for the coming year, the dominie and wife retired for a time so none would be embarrassed, but they were soon called back to be informed of a unanimous request to serve the good people of Canton for a third year, with a comfortable increase in salary. And after the spirited "pounding" they had given us so recently we decided to remain with them for another year. We are looking forward to a year of great things for the church in the name of the Lord.

We are hoping to have other and as good reports to offer from time to time, but this will be enough "rejoicing" for this time, so again we say with little Tim, "God bless us every one."

Fraternally,
DYOLL BELOTE.

La Paz, Indiana

Simply because the Evangelist readers have not heard from the La Paz church is no reason to think that they are not at work. When Nehemiah rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem he worked secretly until everything was in readiness, then he accomplished his task. So it is with the La Paz church. We have been working secretly preparing ourselves for the reconstruction period, which we believe is at hand.

We are making every effort to accomplish what God has in store for us. Our revival meetings will begin about February first when brother C. C. Grisso is going to wage war on sin in this community. I want the readers of this sketch to pray for this meeting that the church may be greatly strengthened and souls born in God's kingdom.

This is the pastor's second year as shepherd of this congregation. We are having splendid results so far this conference year.

To show you what the good folks of this church are I will tell you.

Last Sunday afternoon, December 30, these people prepared a splendid Christmas and New Year basket composed of beef, pork, chicken, groceries, in fact nearly everything in the eatable line and brought it to our home in South Bend, laying these articles on our table. All my wife and I could do was to stand back in astonishment and say thank you, for it was indeed a surprise, and the gift was certainly appreciated more than we can express in words. We want to say again, thank you.

Now dear readers, pray for our revival that great success may be had for God and his church.

Progress at Sunnyside, Washington

This report covers only since December 1. During the month of November, the church granted leave of absence to the pastor to conduct the campaign at Turlock, California. A word of appreciation and recommendation is due the Turlock Brethren. They are a consecrated, unified, loyal band. If they had the field of some churches you would soon hear of a large church. We found them true to the Word, spiritually minded, heartily generous and rejoicing in the hope of his coming. Our association with their pastor was most pleasant.

Upon returning we plunged into preparation for the Christmas celebration. The choir rendered a cantata on Sunday night to a full house. On Christmas eve the Sunday school gave their pageant to an audience which packed the church to the doors. The verdict was universally favorable. The gifts amounted to $185, varying from new chairs for the choir to missionary contributions.

Our New Years all-day meeting drew the largest gathering in its history. The financial reports revealed a good year with over $600 by the Sunday school with a balance in each treasury. A well chosen band of leaders will lead the church and Sunday school this year. A most excellent spirit of love and unity prevailed throughout the day.

In spite of opposition and real persecution because of her strict adherance to the non-resistant principles the church is moving on. Her numbers have gradually increased during December. False reports have been circulated, the church has been entered and property destroyed, newspaper editorials have been written, black hand letters received, but in the midst of it all, there are unmistakable evidences of progress.

Right now we are trying to line up with the Four-Year Program. We find a slight difficulty with some points because of being isolated from a district, but we are lining up with all possible. The last week in January is "Evangelist Week," when we are going after 75 new subscriptions! This is not a boast, but a goal. We are aiming on opening up a new point about 9 miles distant in the near future. Then all eyes are looking to the arrival of Brother Jennings in April to lead us in our campaign for souls.

One item more. The first week of this year, we began a Bible class in prophecy with 40 adult members. It promises to increase to over 50 the next weekly meeting. The Bible alone is our text-book.

Though far removed from the general brotherhood, we are watching every interest of the church and are ready as a congregation to do all within our power.

CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

Washington, D. C.

After a connection of a little over three months with the church at Washington I am impressed with the deep consecration and spirituality of the pastor and members. This is manifested in every auxiliary of the church. Everyone seems to feel it his or her duty to take some active part in the meetings they attend, however small and insignificant that part may be. In no place in which I have had the opportunity of working have I seen less difficulty in the matter of raising funds for missions and other charitable purposes. To my mind true consecration and spirituality can not be separated from liberal giving and especially in these times of stress and strain when sacrifice of one's means is demanded so urgently from so many sources the test of liberality is most acute. I believe that the great blessings which have come to the Washington church during the able ministry of Brother Lyon are due to the self-sacrifice of its most devoted members.

Without doubt there are tithers in this church and so long as they continue their practice of liberal giving the welfare of the Washington Brethren church is secure and its influence is bound to be felt in this city.

PAUL N. BRUMBAUGH.

Off for Argentina

When I wrote last I was just finishing my tour of the churches ending with Kanemorado. My visits to churches in Kansas and Nebraska were hindered partly by the December blizzards and partly by lack of time. I spoke again at Morrill and Falls City and then was kept busy getting ready to leave.

We are now in New York awaiting the sailing of the Swedish boat "Saga," due to leave tomorrow. We will have to change at Rio de Janeiro, but hope to reach Rio Cuarto by the middle of February. We are all eager to be back at work there, for while we love the friends at home and would love to visit longer with them, yet the work needs us and we love our people also who await our return.

I wish to thank the dear brethren and sisters who have helped to make this tour of the churches possible. Everywhere that I have been (and I have spoken one hundred and sixty times in five months) I have found a welcome for the plea for missions, and that means that the pastors have been working with us. The tour had for its purpose the information of the churches rather than the raising of money, yet the offerings totaled a little over a thousand dollars. They will be reported in detail by Brother Cassel. Besides this there have been offerings for a conveyance, an auto if possible, as follows:

Miss Snyder, Canton, O.	1.00
Morrill, Kansas, church	25.00
Falls City, Nebr., church	38.85
	$206.68

The price of vehicles in Argentina is about double that in the United States, so that the amount received is a lift for which we are very grateful.

Then too, there have been a few other special gifts as follows:

Falls City, Nebr., Sisterhood, $10 for chairs for primary department of the Rio Cuarto Sunday school; Maurice Focht, Gratis, Ohio, for tracts, $1.50; Mrs. Reid's class, Falls City, Nebr., for two individual communion trays, $11.58; Falls City Sunday school for tracts $5.50.

For all of these we are thankful as they will help very much in our work. There were also some gifts to the family which we were asked not to report, but the Lord knows and they will all equally serve the cause. May God bless you all. We believe that more prayers than before will go up in behalf of missions and larger things will be accomplished and larger blessings enjoyed at home and abroad. I am only sorry that I was obliged to miss a few of the churches on account of lack of time. I will write some observations of my furlough for publication later. We ask the prayers of all for the work and the workers.

C. F. YODER.

Spokane, Washington

The Lord has certainly been blessing the work here at Spokane in a great measure. When we look back and see what he has done for us during the brief time we have been here is it truly wonderful. And as we stand at the portals of the new year, we know that greater blessings await us, for he is faithful that promised. But we also want to thank you one and all for your most generous and willing sacrifices for this work during the year that is past, as well as for the help and interest we know you will give during the year that is to come.

The Lord has added seven more to us since the last report, and there are more about to stand with us. The last two who came were a local dentist and his wife, very fine people and filled with the Spirit. Our regular services are well attended and a splendid interest is manifested. Our prayer meetings are simply great and the climax came Tuesday, Christmas morning, at our sunrise prayer service. With a splendid attendance, the power of the Spirit fell upon us and we were all filled with great rejoicing and were loath to leave the place of blessing. Long shall that service remain in our memories. Our Sunday school is doing fine, with an average attendance of 120, and continually going upward. They gave a splendid Christmas service on Christmas eve; one of which a school twice its size could well be proud. It was a "White Gifts" service and we took up an offering, but it wasn't very large because our people have been giving so heavily to our building fund.

As to meeting our goal of paying for our brick by January 1, 1918, when it was due, we "went over the top," and paid the last dollar we borrowed, today. Now comes the greater expense of putting them into the wall. For the two thousand dollars now necessary to secure the completion of the building, of course we look to our many friends throughout the brotherhood. But we are going to hammer away at it just the same and do all we can. I believe that is why the Lord has blessed us so greatly: we have done all we could. "The Lord helps them who help themselves," is a practical truth.

We hold our annual meeting on New Year's Day and look forward to a great blessing. We also expect to hold our next communion on Wednesday evening, January 9, 1918. We expect Brother Jennings to be with us during the month of May, and our preparations will begin February the first. I am sure that the dear people who have so nobly given to this work right along, will soon see a great Northwest District of Brethren churches as the fruit of their sacrifices. Yours in the blessed hope of his soon return.

La Verne, California

Many things have been happening at the La Verne church which may be of interest to the Evangelist readers.

The Sunday school is jubilant over a fine new building for class rooms. For some time classes have had to seek meeting places outside the church building. In November a call was sounded to church members to assemble on Thanksgiving day to put up the new building. The members responded, and by evening a 28x40 building was well under way. The Thanksgiving feast at noon was not omitted either, for the women here are workers as well as the men. The building consists of six large, attractive class rooms, a kitchen and lavatory. The partitions between the rooms are movable thus making it possible to have one large hall for various purposes. It is unfortunate that the church has no electrician, else we might call the building a church talent one. However, outside of three days' hire for an electrician every service was offered. The class rooms are occupied by the Beginners, Primary and Junior Departments.

Our Christmas exercises were held before a crowded house the Sunday evening before Christmas and were in the form of a "White Gifts" service. Besides, blankets, towels, handkerchiefs and other articles, gifts from the different classes amountnig to $62.65 were sent to the Kentucky mission.

It has been the custom of the La Verne church people to have the annual business meeting on New Years day, followed by communion in the evening. Last year this was dropped but was missed so by the members that it was taken up again this year. A most harmonious and satisfactory business meeting was held. At noon a banquet was served by the ladies out in the new bungalow. In the afternoon a dedication service of the new rooms was held for the children. In the evening, following the baptism of two children (Dr. Broad's son of seven being one) a most blessed communion service was partaken of in the same place. In spite of the thousands around us who were going to witness the Rose Tournament at Pasadena, there was a splendid attendance at these meetings.

Another thing which we are enjoying immensely is a gas furnace. This was installed in the church about Thanksgiving time.

Our membership might be of interest. We stand to lay about:

Church	150

MRS. HARRY GOOD.

West Alexandria, Ohio

It has been a long time since a report from the West Alexandria church has appeared in the Evangelist. However, we are neither dying or dead. The work has been moving slowly but surely toward larger and better attainments.

Sunday, November 25, marked the beginning of our revival with A. E. Thomas as evangelist, but as it was impossible for him to reach here before Tuesday, we listened to a splendid message Sunday evening from J. B. Lambert and on Monday evening our pastor, Brother Wimmer, gave us an interesting message.

The crowds and interest grew each evening the first week until Sunday night the house was filled, but on account of the zero weather which followed, our meeting was handicapped as qquite a number of country people could not get here, but nevertheless the meeting was fairly well attended. The visible results were four confessions and one by letter, but through the wonderful and inspiring messages of Brother Thomas the church has been built up spiritually, for Brother Thomas is surely a man called of God with great ability to proclaim the gospel.

The meeting closed on Sunday night, December 16, and on Monday evening we observed our communion services and while the weather was yet very disagreeable a goodly number partook of the love feast. It was one of the best services we have ever had here. At the close of the service we assempled in the auditorium and gave a farewell reception for Brother Thomas.

The Sunday school has been moving along fine with brother Frank Wright as superintendent. While he is very busy with his grocery work yet he finds time to work the Sunday school program seven days in the week.

The Y. P. S. C. E. has been doing splendid work and with our newly elected president, sister Ruth Kreitzer, we are planning many things for the coming year.

The church needs the prayers of the brotherhood for the continued blessing of God that his name may be glorified and his kingdom advanced in all the earth.

May the Lord help us to be watchful for his coming.

SUSIE SNYDER.

Harrisonburg, Virginia, Mt. Olive and Dayton Churches

After spending the summer months in Philadelphia which was in a sense 'a far country' but which nevertheless helped the writer to "come to himself," I was called to return to the Valley of Virginia to serve the above named congregations for the coming year. The work of all churches in this vicinity was seriously curtailed by an infantile paralysis epidemic, but the quarrantine was lifted shortly after my return and we began to gather up the work and worship which had been temporarily discontinued.

The faithful workers of the Mt. Olive congregation labored and sacrificed during the summer for the building of a parsonage on the church property. With the coming of winter this project has been brought to a successful completion, and the church is to be commended in erecting so serviceable and comfortable home for its pastor. For years the congregation has felt the need of having the pastor located permanently in the community. Like all rural congregations, Mt. Olive has its peculiar yet common problems of a scattered membership, poor roads, and denominational competition so that in years past many have allied themselves to the church only later to drift away. But with the pastor located in the parish greater enthusiasm can be fostered and the various auxiliaries of the church more efficiently directed. At the request of the congregation a week's preparatory services were held anticipating the fall communion. These services proved helpful and at the close over 90 members surrounded the Lord's table, which is at least 66 per cent. of the present actual membership of the congregation. Although the Sunday school was discontinued for the winter months, an interesting and appropriate Christmas program was given on Christmas eve when the entire school received the usual treat, and the pastor was remembered with a substantial and appreciated gift. We are looking forward to greater things in the spring.

Brother L. G. Wood has been secured to hold our evangelistic campaign in May and at the close of this season of refreshing the district conference will meet and be entertained by the church. May the Holy Spirit direct the efforts at this place to redound to the glory of God.

The efforts of the Mt. Zion congregation at Dayton, Virginia, are very commendable and are being blessed in many ways. Despite the lapse of services during the summer, the Sunday school has rallied under the efficient and enthusiastic leadership of Prof. J. M. Bowman and made a splendid showing for the closing months of 1917 and still larger goals as set for the coming year. The Y. P. S. C. E. has a goodly number of loyal supporters and is filling an evident need in the work of the church. One of the recent innovations is a Teacher Training class which is making for itself a warm place in the hearts of its earnest and studious pupils. Althought the membership of the congregation is but fifty, the Thanksgiving offering for missions put the Dayton church on the "Honor Roll" by a considerable margin. The church as a whole is awakening to the cause of missions and besides engaging the services of the pastor for half time, substantial contributions are made to outside activities. In the near future the church will co-operate with the four other churches of the town in a union evangelistic campaign which we hope and pray will mean larger things not only for the Brethren church but for the unsaved and indifferent in the community at large.

We are endeavoring to keep before the people our Four-Year Program and hope and expect to do our share in the district toward the realization of goals. We ask the prayers of all in behalf of these zealous congregations.

W. S. CRICK.

Masontown, Pennsylvania

The Dorcas Class of the Masontown Brethren church held a watch meeting at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Kratz. I am sure all the members of the class who were present shall never forget the hours spent, as our teacher has all qualities she needs as a teacher and entertainer. We were sorry that all could not be with us, and our pastor and wife were greatly missed as they do not often miss being with the girls. We trust we will soon have them home with us again.

I know the girls of our class will strive more earnestly to help the teacher in everything she may ask us to do in the coming year. We have an enrollment of twenty-five or six.

A MEMBER.

Here and There

The new year finds us back in Leon where we have been a few weeks and where we expect to stay for the period of the war at least. The intervening months have chronicled some changes and there is evidence of the havoc of the war wrought within our little band. It seems to us all losses are more than made up by the individual growth in grace and the development of local leadership. The Jennings meeting was a spiritual benediction to us with nearly thirty confessions all told, including renewals. We expect our brother back next season when the season is not so far advanced and hope to reach the community in a large way. This year the town was thrown clear off its feet and out of its head by the war spirit. However, the reaction has already set it and folks are beginning to realize that it is not the way for a civilian population to win the war.

Under the leadership of the Spirit our field is developing some strong men and women for special service. F. G. Coleman has found his field in evangelistic work, union and denominational, the latter preferred, and has held some notable meetings during recent months. Ed Kemp has been making good as an evangelistic singer in union work and has been out all season. J. F. Garber has been doing some development work in the northeast part of the county and supplying in the absence of the pastor. S. F. Garber has been the efficient superintendent of the Leon Sunday school, has served as pastor to the Baker group, and supplied the regular circuit. Robert Pearson has become a strong man in Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and prayer meeting and has dedicated his life to the ministry. Mrs. Hale has cheered our hearts by becoming one of the really efficient Home Department superintendents of the whole church. Miss Sears has become a great leader of the S. S. C. E., with a flourishing society behind her. We have many others with vast possibilities for work in the kingdom, for the good Father has provided us with talent for leadership far beyond our numbers.

Mt. Etna Group

During the month of September I held a tent meeting at the above place in Adams county, more than one hundred miles west of here. Local conditions were very unfavorable, nevertheless we gathered a group of about twenty people together who have organized a Sunday school and are getting along pastorless so far. We might have organized a church here but preferred to constitute them as one of our "groups" for the forty new churches. These people have among themselves some mighty fine leadership and we prophesy that here will spring up one of our strong inland churches. We note that they have put the Evangelist in every home and sent in their quota for the Thanksgiving offering.(Brethren Teeter and Bowman take note.) Some of them have begun to tithe and we know that God will prosper them. We hope to supply their pulpit from this county as soon as we can get to it.

Baker Group

During the month of November we held a meeting here which did much good seed sowing. The time was too short for visible results but we hope to reap them later. We have here about a dozen members. The place is 14 miles west of Leon.

Udell

We held a meeting here in October which was much hindered by the unprecedented bad weather. Since we must draw from the fringe of the neighborhood several miles out we had little material to work on. Since the roads proved almost impassible to two determined preachers during the day, we found little fault with the people at night for not coming.

Udell now has a fine large membership with sufficient wealth to become a strong aggressive church. It has as fine undeveloped talent as we know of and a people whose unfailing excellence makes them loved of every preacher that works there. In Brother and Sister Cone they have shepherds whose whole being is consecrated to the work and who have the good will of everyone. However, the strong, aggressive business men in their midst must go after the work if progress continues in the future. When the local field is cleaned up evangelistically, the greatest problem facing any church arises. Effort must then be turned on the vast field within and other fields without. In the development of their brilliant young folks all the elders should take a prayerful and interesting concern. In the nearby county seat of Centerville can be found another opening as good as that at Leon which the church should rise and take in the name of the whole gospel. Let us all be up and doing everywhere lest the Lord remove our candlestick from its place. (Rev. 2:5, 3:16.)

FROM KRYPTON

"Pretty Good Youngsters"

All will be interested in a few statements from a recent letter from Miss Gertrude Ham, teacher of our school at Krypton. Miss Ham is doing splendid work and is a faithful assistant to Brother Cook. She writes in part:

"I'll tell you when twenty kiddies play together from July to New Years without one ugly quarrel and with only one being punished, and that for firing a firecracker, they are a pretty good bunch of youngsters, and they have played too, this year, just like other youngsters, and worked like little troopers. They have been the means of raising $90 for coal and seats, and without having to resort to the usual box suppers and pie parties. So I feel they have worked mighty hard for children God bless them!

"The magazines have helped us so much. I wish you could see the children devour them. We have learned more old world history and geography through current literature than they ever dreamed existed before. We have the first magazine to be mistreated yet. Some are worn out in spots, I am glad they are. I just wish the Sisterhood girlh and the Juniors at Warsaw could realize what the magazines have meant.

"It is easy to teach 'conservation,' when there are pictures and interesting articles to show how other children are conserving. I know of three boys who invariably left their plaes filled full after a meal, who will choke rather than do it now. I'm not sure which is worse but anyhow they have the point and the time will come when they will be able to measure their capacity more accurately. I am working on thirty of them now. We have had to turn several away because there was no place for them to stay. I wish we could rent a house and somebody be house mother and keep them. If we had a house we would do it, if we had a mother. And now comes the 'whoopin' coff.' Measles last year! What next."

Pastors and Leaders of Maryland and Virginia Conference District

Let your secretary call attention to the fact that it will not be many months until the meeting of our district conference which usually convenes near June 1.

Our beloved church has a great program outlined and our district is organized, so let us make this conference a great and telling blow toward the achievement of a part of the Four-Year Program this year.

Pastors and departmental superintendents please reflect, work and pray, then send some good suggestions to your secretary so that a program may be planned at an early date.

Let us plan a great program that we may have abundant reasons to rejoice when we meet together. In his service,

E. M. RIDDLE, Sec'y.

"LEST WE FORGET"

the good. Though they are not so spectacular yet they are more far-reaching in influence. We may speed up every department of our church's work; we may give more generously to missions, thus enabling a more rapid spread of the gospel of peace throughout the world; make stronger the home base by seeking to Christianize America more thoroughly and to build whole gospel churches in needy places; and to give more worthy attention to Christian education, the one thing we have most fearfully neglected. If we are to satisfy the demands of the present and be prepared to meet those of the future, we must set ourselves seriously to the task of equipping and sustaining our church school. President Wilson has urged that we do not slacken our efforts in this line, but rather increase them. In these and many other ways we may equip ourselves more perfectly for the tremendous burden that will be thrown upon us after the war shall have closed. That will be the day of the church's opportunity. The exhausted world will hunger for our message then as never before. Now is the time to prepare to satisfy that hunger. The meeting of the demands of a torn and bleeding, weary and distressed, sin-sick and despairing mass of humanity will test our efficiency as it has never been tested. Will we be able to stand that test? Will we be equal to the task that will then be set before us? It will depend largely upon how we conduct and equip ourselves now. To that end are these days sacred. Let us bestir ourselves lest we forget the seriousness of these times and be found wanting in the day of opportunity.

Marriages

WINGER-STAIR.—At the home ofthe undersigned, on January 1, 1918, occurred the marriage of Mr. Harold F. Winger and Miss Lydia Stair. The bride is a member of the Zion Hill Brethren church, while the groom is a member of the Mennonite faith. Both these young people are of sterling character, and they start out on the journey of life together with bright prospects. The groom is a farmer and they will make their home on his mother's farm near Wooster, Ohio. May all blessings and the Spirit's leading be theirs. DYOLL BELOTE.

MILLER-HOOVER.—Ralph Miller to Miss Martha Hoover at the home of the bride's parents, Altoona, Pa., Wednesday evening, December 12, 1917. Ceremony by the writer.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

DORSEY-CARBAUGH.—Glenn Dorsey and Bessie Agnes Carbaugh, both of New Windsor, Maryland, were united in marriage at Linwood at the home of the groom's mother, November 10, 1917. May their life be one of joy and happiness.

FRITZ-FLICKINGER.—Hallie Fritz and Carrie May Flickinger were united in Marriage at the home of the undersigned on Christmas eve. May peace and happiness be theirs to enjoy.

GARVER-DORSEY.—New Year's Day at 8 P. M., Roscoe Garver and Fannie G. Dorsey were joined in holy matrimony at the home of the bride at Linwood, Maryland. May their life together be a channel of blessing.

Above ceremonies by E. M. RIDDLE.

RATH-WINES.—Mr. Edgar Rath and Miss Fern Wines were united in marriage at the Brethren parsonage in Bryan, Ohio on December 31, 1917.

BEVER-KAISER.—At 2.30 P. M. on January 2, 1918, at the Brethren parsonage in Bryan, Ohio, occurred the marriage of Mr. Roy Bever and Miss Hazelle Kaiser. Miss Kaiser was a member of the Brethren church at Bryan and was a loyal member of the Sunday school at this place. Their many friends join in wishing them much happiness as they journey through life.

G. L. MAUS.

MEYERHOFFER--ROADCAP. — In Harrisonburg on December 12 John Meyerhoffer and Clara Roadcap were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Both are members of the Mt. Olive congregation and the best wishes of a host of friends are theirs.

PINKERTON-McGLAUGHLIN. — At the Bethlehem Brethren church on the evening of January 2, Miss Nannie McGlaughlin became the bride of Mr. Paul Pinkerton. The bride is a member of the church and spent one year at Ashland College. The best wishes of a host of friends are theirs for a joyous journey through life.

Our Dead

RAISH.—Sister Sarah Elizabeth Raish daughter of Jacob and Sarah Raish, departed this life after a brief illness on November 8, aged 29 years. She was for several years a consistent and beloved member of the Bethlehem congregation and her death came as a shock to her family and friends. Funeral services were held at the home, the writer officiating.

GARLAND.—Sister Columbia Isabelle Garland, wife of James Garland, departed this life October 13, 1917, aged 68 years. She was one of the charter members of the Mt. Olive congregation and her affiliation with the church dates from early in her life. She was a highly respected and consistent Christian and a devoted wife and mother. She leaves a husband, five sons and four daughters, together with a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss which is to her gain. The funeral services were conducted by her long time pastor Elder E. B. Shaver, assisted by the writer.

DAVIS.—Sister Margaret Davis departed this life October 29 at the age of 71 years. She was a member of the Mt. Olive church where she had lived and labored faithfully till the end came. In her last hours she gave assurance that she was ready to meet her God, and her resignation in death as well as her perseverance and faithfulness in life rest as a benediction upon her family and all who knew her. Services from the Mt. Olive church conducted by the writer.

HARMON.—Clarence Robert Harmon, a young husband and father who was drafted into the National Army in November met his death, due to heart failure, at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., December 7, 1917. His body was sent to Harrisonburg where appropriate services were conducted by the writer. Brother Harmon united with the church during the summer after recovery from a serious illness. He was well liked by his fellow soldiers in camp, and we rejoice that he heard the revellie of the Holy Spirit to enlist in the army of Jesus Christ before the end came. W. S. CRICK.

PURPOSE. To purchase a site and build a home for the aged and infirm of our beloved church, and an orphanage for our children.

POLICY. To increase the assets on hand fifty per cent. before beginning.

PLAN. To select a good site in a Brethren locality and build on the Cottage Plan. In this way some can build and occupy their own cottages, and upon their death the property to belong to the Home.

NEED. Gifts of money, property, endowments and bequests to increase the assets in accordance with the policy of the Board.

Information cheerfully given.

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1918 NUMBER 4

Personal Righteousness

There are religions of many kinds, each with its distinguishing features, but one of the greatest of the many distinguishing features of the Christian religion is the personal righteousness required of its true adherents. It is not enough that a man profess his belief in that system of religion called Christianity; there must be that element of personal righteousness in his life that justifies the profession for the Christian religion is not a religion of such general principles that it includes all mankind or even a group of mankind who shall be saved simply because they are included in the general system. Jesus' coming into the world was not that such a general system should be established that men anywhere or everywhere should be saved without giving personal attention to the matter or without bringing their personal lives under the requirements and regulations of the system. And yet, personal as the system is, it is not an impossible system but one that is made comparatively easy to those who will take upon themselves the yoke of the Master who will make the burden light.

In years gone by the righteousness that was approved of God was the righteousness of faith. The righteousness of Abel that was the cause of the bitter jealousy of his brother was a righteousness of faith but it was a personal faith, an individual application of the principles that make for righteousness that called forth the approval of God, and living up to the light of the day in which they were born the heroes of the Old Testament were made personally righteous by the faith they exercised in the one God who would be the God of all people, becoming such by a personal and individual application of faith on the part of each one who would honor and worship him.

When Jesus came into the world to become the light and the life of men, he made it plain that something more than blind faith would be required upon the part of his followers if their lives were to be approved by him. While the religion of Christ is a religion of faith it is a faith exemplified in the life of the one who professes it.

In his sermon on the mount Jesus laid special stress upon the necessity of personal righteousness saying: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." This would imply that righteousness is not thrust upon one against one's will, but is something that comes as a result of an intense desire or a great longing. It may be truthfully said that the principle reason there is not more personal righteousness exhibited by people who are professedly Christian is that they do not have sufficient desire for it to secure it. This righteousness is not beyond the reach of the humblest follower of the Master, but it is secured only after a great longing and hungering after it has been developed.

There was a righteousness in the period of time covered by our Lord's ministry that, while satisfying to its possessors, was far from being approved by the Master himself and he did not hesitate to make the requirements of his higher standard known. While the scribes and Pharisees may have appeared to the common people to be models of righteousness the sham and hypocrisy of their conduct, inconsistent with their profession, was read as an open book by the Lord and he did not hesitate to stamp his disapproval upon it by saying to his disciples: "I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The importance of this personal righteousness and the high regard in which it was held by the Master is indicated by the apostle Peter who said in one of his epistles: "Who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes we are healed." It may be impossible for one to acquire this righteousness of himself or through his own unaided efforts, but with the aid of the Son of Righteousness all things required may be obtained. As those who lived under the law were unable to keep the law in all things and thus became guilty of the whole and needed the dispensation of grace to supersede the dispensation of law, so those of the present dispensation find themselves helpless to become personally righteous without the aid that comes only to those who have been twice born. The apostle John makes this plain when he says: "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." Thus as each individual comes into the natural world through a personal birth, so is personal righteousness a product of being individually born of God. EDITOR.

The Miracle of Peace

Sometimes people speak more truthfully than they know, and we are inclined to the belief that such was the case with Maximillian Harden when he said, "Only a miracle can bring peace." With this statement we are in perfect agreement, but no doubt our idea of the miracle that will bring peace and Harden's idea are altogether different. Harden may be looking for some manifestation of a physical miracle within the next few months or the next few years to establish the peace he has in mind, but such a thought is entirely foreign to our way of thinking.

From the Editor's viewpoint the miracle that is to establish peace occurred many centuries ago in the little town of Bethlehem, and it will not be because some modern army is overcome or because a great fleet of terrible submarines has submerged never to rise again or because a great victory has been won by the denizens of the air in a manner so strikingly unusual that it shall be called miraculous that peace will be established in the earth, rather it will be brought about because the miracle which took place in the little Judean village nearly two thousand years ago will have been repeated in a measure many million times more as Christ is born in the hearts of men and they come to realize that he is the King of all kings and that to him the heart's most loyal allegiance belongs.

We have heard it said by sincere men that there is no place for a king in human affairs. It is not our purpose to discuss political matters, but whether we approve of the system of government that includes a ruler called a king or not we must confess that in the kingdom of the heart there is a throne that must be occupied by a ruler of some description if the life of man is to be worth while and after the experiences of humanity scattered through all the nations in every part of the earth and through all the centuries it must be admitted that the only king who can occupy that throne with real success is King Jesus. The miracle of Jesus becoming the acknowledged king of all the earth is the miracle that will establish permanent peace.

Makers of Morals

One of the thoughts that must impress the mind of one who attempts to read the history of the development of civilization is that of the radical changes that have occurred in what may be termed the morals of the people. Whether it has to do with what is sometimes termed public morals or the morals of private life the change is distinct in each passing age.

We have been accustomed to thinking that the moral requirements of any age were set according to the best light of the best people of that age. We know there have been periods of moral depravity which have swept over some of the nations in the past and we also know that they were compelled to pay the penalty for this moral lapse, but even in these periods of moral depravity there has always been a "remnant" of the people who have struggled for better things and in the end these better things have usually won out in the struggle.

There must be a foundation of good morals and that foundation must be sure or no abiding structure can be built upon it, but of such a foundation we fear some of our modern writers have a wrong conception. Only recently a prominent writer declared, "Good morals are only what the upper classes of society approve." With this statement we can not agree, for we know that all history shows that what has been considered the "upper class" in society from the days of Babylon and Rome and on down to modern New York has never set the standard for "good" morals. The upper class may establish standards to which those must conform who wish to find a place as one of that class, but if there were no higher law or no surer foundation upon which to base moral conduct than that, the moral tone of the world would be a great deal lower than it is.

Right morals are based upon right principles that are as eternal as the heavens and one's conduct is moral or immoral, not because high society has set its approval or its disapproval upon one's acts, but because it conforms to or violates the great moral principles which are founded in God.

The Permanency of God's Love

For so many centuries the people have heard the largest share of religious teaching from the lips of the preachers, which has been right and proper, that an occasional utterance from a distinguished layman carries more weight than it would coming from the professional or ordained ministry.

One of the great themes of evangelism since the days of Moody has been the love of God. A Jonathan Edwards might preach of the wrath of God and cause his hearers to cry out for mercy or to sit speechless from fear, but the evangelism that is most effective in modern days, while not denying or belittling the wrath of God, lays the greatest emphasis upon his love World changes have been moving swift and far within the last decade or so and some of these may cause one to wonder whether these great changes are an expression of the wrath of God or the love of God. While all the world is given over to struggle and conflict some may see only the wrath of God and to them it may appear that the love of God has been withdrawn from the world for a season and they may wonder whether this break in his love can ever be mended and his favor once more brought back to the earth. While such a condition may seem to prevail, in the minds of some, it is well if all can have the faith of the layman, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who said: "There is never a break in God's love." This statement is not true because Mr. Rockefeller said it any more than it would be true because any one man might have said it, but it was said because it is true.

It may seem like a strange paradox but we think the love of God is most surely shown in the wrath of God. It is his love for the true and the good in contrast with his abhorrence of the false and the evil. So while sometimes we see great manifestations of his wrath it is well to remember at the time that back of it all is his love which from the very beginning has sought to make his children righteous and happy.

Jealousy versus Patriotism

If it ever becomes the duty of a nation to engage in warfare it is a most solemn one and should be conducted in the fear of God rather than to win the favor of man. Much has been said during the past three years about certain participants in the present war violating all rules of civilized warfare, and it has been pointed out that such nations deserve to be torn from their place among the ruling powers of the world. But the question arises in our minds, Is there such a thing as civilized warfare? Is not all warfare rather a going back to savagery? Is any war humanitarian?

One of the things that leads us to propound these queries is the well known fact that practically no war was ever conducted but what the rulers of the country engaged in the war and those who have had the conducting of the war in charge have been unmercifully criticized and condemned by others who are on the "outside" but who would like to have a place on the "inside" of affairs as they pertain to the conflict.

Few people have had to face the storm of opposition and condemnation that the martyred Lincoln did during the Civil War. Jealousy, hatred and malicious persecution were met on every hand, but Lincoln rode safely through the storm of opposition to success even though it cost him his own life.

Just at this present moment a storm of opposition is brewing in Washington that is not unlike that which occurred in the sixties. It is a disgrace that men who once were held in the highest esteem by the American people should so far forget the dignity of the occasion and stoop to the lowest methods of politics in a crisis like this. These men who are organizing the opposition to the administration may be profoundly patriotic, but they will have a mighty hard time convincing the public that it is anything more than jealousy. And the criticism hurled against Secretary Baker by a bloodthirsty, but disappointed ex-statesman that he is "a humanitarian and as such would make a good alley inspector," is nothing to the credit of the ex-statesman. If the war is for the sake of humanity, why not have a humanitarian as the war secretary?

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

"All In"

There are several meanings to this expression, these days. I presume there is a way that the PROGRAM is "all" in if this weather does not change, pretty soon. I am sure that in more than 15 years of watching and praying for good Sundays, I have never seen more of the disappointing kind, than this winter. I am sure that it has been trying for the churches that have tried to hold revivals as well as for the evangelist who feels that every meeting ought to be an unbounded success. But "all things work together for good if we love HIM," and so, say "Hallelujah," and smile and then pray to be led to do the things the Lord wants done. These are days that ought to be spent on our knees finding the way and will of the Lord. He is not forsaking us; it may be the wilderness for us for a while, but defeat can not come if we keep in touch with HIM.

All In But Ohio

Now, what I mean by "all in" will appear. Every state organization has reported herself save Ohio, and, outside of Indiana, I would have wished and expected that Ohio would have been first. What's the matter with Ohio and the Four-Year Program? May be you think she's all right, but she is not right with this committee unless she reports her state organizaiton right away off. Who's who over there? Are you getting things done or are you putting it off until next year? It can't be done next year. Now is the accepted time.

REPORTS

Are you ready to report? Well, before very long, you will be getting a report blank and the real tabulation of attainments will have begun. Blanks are now in the printer's hands and will be in yours as soon as we can get them there. We may ask for three reports between this and Conference. This will take about ten minutes of each pastor's time but it will keep Goal Directors and all the organization in touch with the achievements of the congregations and we think, the best method of knowing. Each pastor or congregational keyman, if he is not the pastor, will be making his own measure as well as taking the measure of his congregation. If he reports promptly, or if he fails, he will be known very soon over the entire organization. But we do not want any to fail. It will be your duty to tell, by a very simple system, just what you have done—no more. We want to know if you have attained, but more, we want to know if you have not. It is more important to know who have not than to know who have, for the present purpose. But more anon on this.

Go-to-Church-Campaign

It occurs to me that reparation for failure in getting a revival might be made in many of our churches in a Go-to-Church Campaign. Many of our churches are situated in small towns where they have power of leadership. If our pastors will get busy and organize such a campaign for say, between now and Easter, making it include toward the last, a Join-the-Church-Day and a Church-Letter Day, they might get some results that would somewhat recompense the loss that will doubtless be tabulated against us if something extra is not done. In our own little city, we are just now working on such a plan; and with all the preachers in town preaching on the same topic and all working at some of the same fellows, who will say that we will not get some results? There will be advertising done in the name of all the churches cooperating and union men's meetings several Sundays—at least one in each church. Why not try this out as a recourse for what will be loss unless something extra is done?

Any Suggestions?

If any person has any suggestions that will help us get results that do not appear to be showing up this winter, will you please send them on for this page?

The Christian Endeavor Challenge

Christian Endeavorers, here is a challenge worth your mettle. While a good many of our good young men will be called to the front and heroically go to do their "bit," which may be to give their life, what will you be doing? Is there any service that you give that will be more worth while to "King and Country" than just to help make better Endeavorers and more of them? If you "loaf and fish" while your perfect (physically) fellow Endeavorer offers his life for the flag—which means for you—how can the Master say, "Well done?" I do not believe I would say it, would you? Well, then, there is nothing left but to accept the challenge. and here it is:

1 Thirty new young people's societies.
2 Thirty-five new Junior and Intermediate societies.
3 Two thousand new Christian Endeavorers.
4 Four hundred new church members.
5 Thirty-five hundred peace advocates.
6 Twenty-five hundred Quiet Hour Comrades.
7 Two thousand tenth legioners.
8 Two thousand new dollars for missions.
9 One hundred Life Work Recruits.
10 Five hundred Christian Endeavor experts.

Now, district secretaries and officers, have you sent out the report to your societies that this work should be going on? I hope so, but I have not yet heard of it? Do you know what is the share of your state and does each society know what is the share it is presumed to do? Remember, you are a part of the FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM. "Now Then, Do It." BAME.

Delinquent Preachers, Notice

In Vol. 39, No. 49, page 6, Brethren Evangelist, issue of December 12, 1917, was the outline of a sermon to have been preached on Christmas. I have been surprised several times in reference to this sermon. In the first place to know that one of the GOAL DIRECTORS failed to see it altogether and asked me to point it out to him, as he had failed to see it and therefore, to preach on it. Now, because Brother Bell does not know who it was, nor ever will if I don't tell him, I'll let everybody know what Bell thinks of a Brethren pastor who reads his Evangelist as he does. Here is Bell's comment: "I can not conceive that any preacher in the church is so indifferent to the contents of the Evangelist as to not see the special call to the pastors on the headline of the subject."

Others?

Here is what he says about possible others: "God pity the future of the Brethren church if such a subject as given for Christmas on the Sonship of our Lord and his advent in the flesh could not be preached on." So say I. But I do not believe the omission was on the ground of doctrine. Perhaps, some felt that they had to use the outline. Not that. The outline is suggestive. It is a labor of love on the part of Brother Bell to give them. Use your own, but keep in line on the subject. Another may be more important to the "doctrines that make us a peculiar people," as the original goal read, I believe. Do not miss the programmed subjects!

Another Chance

Now, in order that every preacher may have a chance to make good on that subject, we shall appoint the first Sunday in Februahy as the Second Chance Day for the sermon referred and if done then, or in the meantime will be in before the report card comes and will count the same as for Christmas and do just as much good, perhaps. BAME.

Secretary's Special Notice

There is being sent this week to each congregation in the brotherhood a Four-Year Program Chart. Each chart is valuable. The best paper money can buy was used in their production, and the printer did an exceptionally fine job in preparing them. They have cost the Four-Year Program Committee a nice little sum of money and every chart should be used.

These charts are to be hung up in the churches, one in each church. To those pastors who have charge of more than one congregation, as many charts have been sent as there are congregations in their charge. These pastors should kindly see to it that one chart is hung up in each of their churches.

In some cases the charts have been sent to Sunday school superintendents or to some other interested person in the congregation. Will each person who receives a chart please see that it is hung up in his or her church as soon as possible.

These are the charts upon which the stars that will be awarded by General Conference are to be placed. Consequently they will be in use until 1920.

If, for any reason, a congregation should not receive a chart within a week after this notice appears, a card sent to the secretary will insure that congregation of one as soon as the mails can carry it.

This work is requiring a great deal of time and rountine work, but the splendid interest that practically all of the congregations and pastors are taking in the Four-Year Program makes the work a delight. Will all persons concerned see that these charts are placed prominently in their respective churches, immediately? Thanks, brethren and sisters, many thanks.

H. L. GOUGHNOUR, Secretary.

The World's Need of Christ

BY EDWIN E. JACOBS, PH.D.

Text.—There is none other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved. Acts 4:12.

The implication here is plainly two-fold, viz., that the world needs salvation and that this salvation must come through a Savior. The idea of a national savior was not confined to the Jews alone, but was rather widespread, being found even among certain North American Indian tribes. For not only has a sin-consciousness existed for many years and among many people, but there has also been an almost universal recognition of the fact that at no time and at no place, has life been as good as it ought to be and that it could be made better. Hence, in many cases, the hope of a golden age was constantly being projected into the future.

Perhaps the author of the text could be excused for his enthusiasm for salvation through Jesus for he was not far removed from his life and time, and he may have been an eye-witness of some of the wonderful deeds of Christ, but today, how is it? Is the world still to be saved through Jesus? Do we still need the ideals, the inspiration, and the dynamic which comes from Jesus? Do our statesmen, with all the legal opinion at their disposal, need him? Do our scholars, with all the accumulated wisdom at their finger tips in the great libraries, need him? Do our business men, who handle millions of dollars, where he handled only farthings, need him? Lastly, do our churches need him? My answers to these questions is, that the world needs the lessons of the Christ as much, perhaps more, today as at any time within the past two thousand years.

1. First of all, we need him as a nation. Doubtless the two biggest words today on the lips of the best American people, are Christianity and patriotism—this because the two best gifts to the world in all time have been Christ and America. And there are those who just now do not see their way clear to be both Christian and patriotic, but I hold it to be the highest patriotism to make our nation thoroughly Christian. To insist that I practice Christianity in my dealings and relations with my next door neighbor and not to insist in putting it into operation in the small way in which I may touch our national life, is to stultify our holy faith. This is a Christian nation as distinguished from those nations that are distinctly pagan doubtless, but that we are Christian in any vital way has yet to be proven.

2. We need Christ in our social and industrial life. We need the ideals of him who prized the sigle human soul above all else in the world and who made human well-being the measure and guide of all things. We need the ideals of one who could scatter those accusing ones who had taken the woman in sin, and who, without raising his eyes to meet hers, could say all sweetly, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." We need the social ideals of him who said, "When thou makest a feast, call the lame, the blind, and the poor;" of him who sat with publican, sinner and Pharisee; of him who knew no distinction of place, or wealth, or the accident of birth; of him who said let him who would be great among you be your servant. We need the social ideals of him who could stoop down and wash his disciples weary, soiled and naked feet!

We moreover need the ideals of the One who taught us to pray, "Our Father," thereby making us all brothers, uniting for all time the whole human race in a bond of equality that has been the dream of the best men of all ages. This very day, we need the ideals of him who scorned earthly potentates, and kings, and armies, who brushed away all earthly distinctions and viewed man a naked soul who should some day stand before the God of judgment and justice.

Moreover, put whatever interpretation upon it you will, we need the ideals in our industrial life of him who said if you love lands, or wealth, or houses more than me, you are not worthy of me. We need his ideals of economic right who so soundly converted Zaccheus that he was willing to return manyfold what he had taken dishonestly in business. (What a conversion that would be today!) We need the ideals of him who taught not to lay up treasures upon the earth, but to lay up treasures in heaven. We need the ideals of him who could look upon those casting their gifts into the treasury and say of the widow that she hath cast in more than they all. We need his ideals in our industrial life who condemned in fiery words those who robbed widows, cheated the poor, and then took the uppermost seats in the synagogue.

3. We need his ideals in our schools and colleges. Volumes have been written concerning his methods of teaching, but aside from that we need his ideals as to the relative value of truth. He scorned the lawyers and doctors, not because they were lawyers and doctors, but because their learning did not redound to the welfare of their fellows. They laid heavy burdens upon the common folk, but did not so much as move a finger to help them. The spirit of the humble, toiling and unassuming Christ ought so to come into our educational world as to teach men of great learning that all they have, and are, and hope to be, ought to be laid upon the altar of service. His spirit ought so to enter our common and high schools that there the young would already get a vision of the great truth that it makes less difference what they learn but that it does mater tremendously what they do with their learning. Education withiout the controlling influence of the ideals as found in Christ, will not contribute to the advancement of our civilization as it ought. To bestow great learning untamed by the spirit of Jesus is little better than to sharpen the weapons of devils. The present conditions in central Europe prove my case. Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away, but love abideth for ever.

4. Bnt do we need his ideals in our churches? We do. I believe I may say all kindly that what the great Roman church needs today above all else is the spirit of the simple, unassuming Christ; and Protestant churches need it too. We need the ideals of conduct in our churches of him who, rather than compromise, would go to his Calvary. We need the ideals of him who taught that the way into the living and holy church of God is by way of the new birth—and the only way! His idea of life was, that one can not serve two masters. We need the ideals of him who said, wide is the gate and broad the way that leads to destruction, but strait is the gate and narrow the way that leads unto life. In days of division and wrangling, moreover, we need the prayers of him who prayed that we might be one.

I am wholly convinced that this blood-smeared, distracted, old world needs the lessons that come from the life of Jesus. But Professor Ely long ago pointed out that to say that Christianity would solve our problems and then sit idly by and do nothing would get us nowhere. The Golden Rule never did a golden deel in all the world, until it had a concrete expression in some one's life.

World Renowned Church Edifice Changes Ownership

BY JOSEPH B. BOWLES

The historic home of the Moody Church, Chicago, formerly known as the Chicago Avenue church, has been sold to the Moody Bible Institute, together with the adjoining young people's building, and the ground on which the two structures stand.

There has seldom been a more important transaction of the sort, viewed as to its significance for the proclamation of the gospel. The Moody church, always aggressively evangelistic, was compelled to seek larger quarters over two years ago, and erected a tabernacle of 5,000 seating capacity a mile north of its old location. On the other hand, the Moody Bible Institute has long been urgently in need of increased class room facilities, and especially a large auditorium for public conferences. Hence this famous church structure, the scene of unceasing revival, will witness hereafter the training of thousands of young men and women for Christian service in all lands, while continuing as a rallying point for Christian leaders the world over. Of a truth, Dwight L. Moody's works do follow him.

Contrary to the general impression, these two Chicago organizations, founded by the great evangelist, are separate, independent, institutions. The prevalent belief that they are two branches of a single organization has worked inconvenience in many instances to both, as well as to the Christian public. Hence the need for emphasizing the fact that the Moody church, pursuing its God-given ministry as a congregation of believers, has no organic connection whatever with the Moody Bible Institute, raised up of God to send forth trained gospel workers into all the world. The methods of the two are different, the control is different, the appeal is different. The church is undenominational, but the Institute is strongly interdenominational, as represented in its trustees, its faculty, its student body, the character of its curriculum, and its basis of financial support. All the churches and all the mission boards appeal to it for helpers, and it is glad to be able to respond to all.

The host of friends and former co-workers of D. L. Moody around the world will rejoice to learn that the purchase of this sanctuary of sacred memory signalizes, in many respects, a new stage in the growth and development of the Moody Bible Institute.

This great institution is the largest of its kind in the world, with property assets now exceeding $1,500,000.

Its total enrollment in all departments has passed 25,000.

There are at present over 1,100 students in attendance at the day and evening classes, and more than 3,500 scattered throughout the world are taking its correspondence courses.

It maintains an Extension Department with a staff of Bible teachers, preachers an devangelists, constantly at work in various parts of the country.

Its music department has recently been enlarged and the music faculty strengthened, providing for instruction in more advanced work than hitherto, so as to raise the quality of gospel hymn music both in composition and in rendition in the evangelistic field; and a summer music school has been instituted, teaching gospel playing and singing for the sake of those who cannot attend at any other time.

Under the pressure of current conditions in the world, the Moody Bible Institute has made plans for four additional buildings besides the church—a men's dormitory, a women's dormitory, a dormitory for married students, and an administration building. It has also enlarged its provision for missionary preparation by the addition of special missionary courses, and now has in operation a literal "training camp" for volunteers for home and foreign missions, on a scale perhaps not fully duplicated in any other school in the world.

A Normal Birth. By E. W. Deitrick

God always does things normally. Too many times he is accused of the opposite. Accused by the philosophy and wisdom of men. The wisdom of this world has long told us and is trying to tell us in the face of the events of today that the world is slowly ascending to its zenith. But to the contrary it is fastly descending to its utter destruction.

Centuries ago a great image was born in the mind of a great king. According to the teaching of the worldly wise the feet were born first, but not so. The head is first spoken of. They have man evoluting but God says man is degenerating. Thus God puts the gold first and the clay mixed with iron last. The great (?) men today reverse the order. But this was a normal birth, for God had something to do with it. The word tells us that "The dream is certain and the interpretation thereof is sure." (Daniel 2:45.) God knows how things ought to be done and he does them according to his omniscience. Accordingly he gave the dream to the king of Babylon, likewise the interpretation to Daniel.

It began at the head and finished with the feet. The head was of the finest metals and the feet were of clay intermingled with iron. A very poor combination of ingredients to insure stability and fixity. But we are told that man began with a very vague idea of brotherhood and government and has climbed up the mountain of experience. Soon he is to reach his "Excelsior," eventually entering the golden gate. God says man has been going down the mountain from its golden tip to the valley of clay beneath. This was the message given through Daniel to the king. It is the message that God gives today.

How long oh man, will it be before you will see your doom? You will blindly go into the very jaws of destruction. It is foretold in Daniel 2:34-35. "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." The man that says that all is getting better and brighter will soon cry for mercy when the Stone of the ages, the chief Corner Stone, rejected of men but accepted of God shall grind him into powder.

My friend, remember the normal birth. The head of gold was first mentioned and then the silver, the brass and the clay mixed with iron. The order is downward and backward. Be normal in your thinking. Be normal in your living. Accept God's truth. Look for the coming of the Stone. Keep out of its way. Remember Matt. 21:44, "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it falleth it will grind him to powder." My brother, fall on the stone. Have your selfish, degenerating and poor blinded soul broken and find your safety and eternal salvation in the shadow and shelter of the Rock of Ages before it is too late. For the time is coming when men cannot fall upon the rock for it will have fallen on them in awful judgment. BE NORMAL.

John 7:38, 39 and an Illustration, etc.

BY S. KIEHL

John 7:39 is an exposition of the preceding verse and the thought contained in the two is about the same as if Jesus had said When I am glorified, after my ascension to the Father, he that believeth on me shall receive the Holy Ghost (the Spirit of God 1 Cor. 2:12; Rom. 8:9), and from within him shall flow rivers of living water. Verified (Acts 10:44, 47); demonstrated (Acts 10:46.) (See Acts 10:42-47.)

A cannon stove having no fire in it when the mercury reads 10 degrees below zero imparts no comfort to those in the room shivering with cold; but if there is sufficient fire in it there will be flowing from it rivers (waves) of living comfort to those present. The cause of the comfort is not the stove, but the fire in it. The stove in itself has no power to generate heat. So the natural man not having the Spirit of God in him can not impart comfort, peace and joy to the one who is hungering and thirsting for the bread and water of life. Like the fireless stove what he does not have he can not give.

Spirit-filled workers in the vineyard of the Lord are a blessing to sin-sick souls; they tell (or show) them a "word of God" that enables them to turn from darkness to light and from the power of satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in Christ Jesus (Acts 26:18). Such consecrated men and women, workers together with God, know that they themselves can do nothing (John 15:5), but that the Spirit of God in them is doing the work, using them only as instruments to bring about such marvelous results in them that believe—heart and soul regeneration.

As from the fire in the stove flow rivers (waves) of living comfort, so from the Spirit of God (the fountain) in the believer flow rivers of living (life-giving) water—the Word and the Spirit inseparable (John 6:63) flowing out of the heart of the worker into the heart of the anxious enquirer become in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life (John 4:14).

Since it is God's (by his Spirit, Eph. 3:16) working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure (Phil 2:13), let us give him all the praise for the good work being done in us, and worked out by us in a godly walk and chaste conversation.

Dear reader, if your walk or conversation is not according to the "Word" it is an evidence that you and I do not have the Spirit of God dwelling in us; consequenlty, no salvation (within) to be worked out. Only when "first things come first" is "safety" assured. It is written, no good thing will the Lord withhold from them that walk uprightly (Psa 84:11); and, whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved (Prov. 28:18). The Lord help us so to walk. We ask in his name.

The Sunday School

The Sunday School Secretary---An Undeveloped Field

BY PAULINE LICHTY, Waterloo, Iowa

In years gone by the Sunday school secretary has been regarded as a necessary article in the school rather than a vital part of it. He did very little, chiefly because very little was required of him. He merely counted the attendance, added the collection, and made notes on the weather conditions. Any one who could count, add, and make comments on the weather could fill the place. However, we can happily say that a great awakening is coming over the office of secretaryship, over the entire country.

This is an undeveloped field, and the history of the modern school shows that criticism is not to be directed at the secretary in contrast with the other officials. For the other officers, excepting perhaps the treasurer, have had plans all worked out and not only offered to them, but urged upon them and their schools. Volumes have been written for nearly every department and officer except that of the secretary.

In most schools we find a desk or table in some far off corner upon which there is a pile of class books or cards, and some faithful worker patiently doing the monotonous, uninspiring, unappreciative work which has in it the undeveloped germ, which is beginning to stir itself and which when it bursts into full power is bound to give the modern Sunday school an unprecedented momentum.

What is meant by Sunday school records? What is the business of the secretary? Are his duties merely to count the school and report the number present? If so there are thousands of perfect secretaries. If not, we would do well to seek information and instruction where record-keeping has come into its own. Where it has attained its greatest degree of efficiency—the modern business world, the manufacturing establishments of the commercial institutions.

In all big corporations or companies, who is the one that can tell you the most things in detail about the establishment? Upon whom does the responsibility of statistics and records of things achieved depend? Immediately you must agree it is the secretary.

Now if the secretary of the modern corporation would do no more for his company than most secretaries of the Sunday school are doing, I am afraid it would all go to sticks, or else Mr. Secretary would be given his walking papers. We are not blaming the Sunday school secretary for the poor records so much as we are just anxious that he should wake up to the opportunity which lies open to him.

The cost expert, the efficiency engineer, the business statistician or whatever you may call him is an indispesible factor in the business world. For years the church has been urging the business man to take religion into his business, now it seems about time to ask that same man to bring some of his business training and experience back into the church. And many a trained expert would gladly, for the asking, give the Sunday school his experience, when the great possobilities of the work are shown to him and a chance is given him to work out the solutions, as in his every day life.

Far too few schools have seen themselves as a modern Sunday school secretary helps them to do. When record books show that certain parts of the machine are not doing their work, most Sunday schools will send for an expert if they can not repair the thing themselves.

Now, why are records poorly kept? First. There may be a lack of desire. Second. A lack of knowledge as to how to make out records.

Would you ever try to establish an enterprise in the business world on the basis of the scattering data found in the records of most schools? It is a fact that a very large per cent. of the reports which go to the state and denominational headquarters are based on estimates or guess work. How long would a business concern last run on a basis like that?

Let me say right here that a superintendent that has a poor secretary can blame no one but himself. For what, Mr. Superintendent, do you ask of your secretaries? Do you give them anything to do? Do you care whether you know how many pupils were enrolled in your school five years ago? Do you care to know how many of the pupils in your school joined the church in the past five years? The work of the Sunday school is to teach the Bible and eventually lead all pupils to the acceptance of Christ. But listen friends, do you know whether your school is doing that? If it is not you had better take down the shingle and lock the doors If you had a real live Sunday school secretary he could tell you exactly what teacher is leading souls to Christ and which ones are not and by getting your data from him you could find some remedy for the one who is not.

Isn't it a fine school that can go to their record book and find such things as these?

In the past three years the Young Men's Class has doubled in attendance and fifteen of these young men have been led to Christ, or, in the Young Ladies' Class three years ago there were thirty enrolled and twenty-two were Christians. Today they have forty-seven enrolled and of the forty-seven forty-five are Christians.

Of course these are only illustrations but wouldn't it be fine to be able to know what each class has done and is doing? By well kept records made by a live wire secretary you may be able to see all these things. You may note that the teen age class has fallen off and is dying and a remedy can be applied before it is too late. But you may be wondering what the Secretary has to do with this—listen! Who knows more about your neighbor's household, the kind of a housekeeper she is, etc., the front door caller or the grocery boy? Why, the latter of course. All right, who will know more about the Sunday school class, the teacher, his teaching, etc., the visitor who is brought to the door by the superintendent and introduced, or the secretary, who sneaks in in a seemingly uninterested manner from Sunday to Sunday? He can tell you whether that teen age class teacher is talking about yesterday's ball game or today's Sunday school lesson. Or in the girls' class, whether last week's party is being discussed instead of its social service obligation.

A secretary must organize a force to collect and compile all of the information, all of the vital statistics, which the up-to-date superintendent and his assistants need in performing their executive functions.

He is not an executive officer but in his unique position he is able to judge the work of the executives as they can not possibly do themselves.

The secretary is the statistician, the investigator. He likes to deal with figures, not merely to keep neat looking sheets, but because by the compilation of these records, by comparisons, by the study as to the real meaning of the figures, he can get at the root of the problem and place before the superintendent and his corps of teachers a general, comprehensible, dependable survey. He has tact and patience and will need both. He is not theoretical because he faces conditions as they are. He must be optimistic. Blue glasses are permissible in some places, but he must never use them. He never scolds, he never flatters.

A true secretary tells how many were on time and lets you figure out the tardiness. Those who come on rainy days are commended and not scolded because others are absent. It is the purpose to send pupils home with a firmly fixed idea that he is an important part of that school and that it is well worth while to belong to it.

We have been giving the general things a secretary must do; now a few concrete things:

Every record system starts with enrollment and this is the first thing he must do. No matter how this enrolling is done in your school the general secretary must have the opportunities to secure his information for the records. It is advisable to bring the new pupil directly to the secretary so that he may get his recrod first hand. The details will vary but certain things must be known.

These are: (1) name, (2) address, (3) birthday, (in younger scholars the exact age so as to grade them and older ones their approximate age so as to classify them.) (4) school grade, (5) when united with church and lastly parents names and address and if there are any of the family that are not Sunday school attendants.

Care must be taken not to take data that will never be used as the purpose for all this data is to furnish a basis for real construction work. It is a good thing, when a new scholar comes, to find out the other members of the family that are not in Sunday school, then notify the proper classes or membership committee.

When the child comes to the secretary care must be taken to give the child a favorable impression of your school. As it will never again be so easy to get the information needed.

The second step is Class Records, or in other words following up the new pupil. Watch Mr. Secretary if your new member sticks to your school. If not, find out why. Of course some of this can and must be done by the teacher in co-operation with the secretary. Even if the teacher does this work it is the duty of the secretary to collect this information. And here is where the class secretary and general secretary must co-operate. The general secretary must inform the class secretary of his plans and I would advise a meeting between the general secretary and the class secretaries at least once a quarter so that no misunderstandings and mistakes shall be made in the class record books. The class record must include not only presence, but also on time, bringing of a Bible, collection, home study and church attendance.

The first specific thing for the secretary to do is "The Study of Absences." After all of the class records are handed in and the absences filed there is a good opportunity for the secretary to make a summary on "Absences." And at almost all executive Sunday school meetings that question comes up. After he has studied the reasons he can determine whether it is a class or school problem.

In close connection to absences come withdrawals. Not only is it true that a large percent of those reported withdrawn, can be brought back by the efforts of the secretaries' office. But a study of the causes for withdrawals will enable the executive officers to know the weaknesses of a teacher, department or even of the whole school. An accurate list of these reasons for withdrawals will form a most vital part of the records of any school.

Oftentimes a tactfully worded personal letter from the secretary will bring back the pupil.

It has been said that three out of every five persons who enter Sunday school drop out and are never brought back. Here, Mr. Secretary, is a golden opportunity to lower that ratio. It has also been said that out of 7,000 churches last year, 2,000 did not have a single conversion. Mr. Secretary, find out what is the matter with the teachers, the school methods, etc. And let us not have a Brethren Sunday school that can not say "Our school saves the souls of its pupils."

Now, let us look for a moment at the report itself. There is some difference in opinion upon the time when this report should be given. This, of course, depends to some extent upon the nature of your school. Where the different departments open and close sessions by themselves, the report should be given by the department secretaries, but where the school reassembles after class the General Secretary can get in some very effective words such as comparisons, comments of different classes, etc. Some like the plan of having last Sunday's report read next Sunday. Personally I do not care so much for that plan, for figures a week old are apt to be stale and can not have the effect upon the school as the reports read the same day. However, there are some advantages with that system too.

The report itself should vary in form. Get out of the rut and bring some new, snappy items into the roport and let the weather item rest awhile. Make some comparisons; tell how many new scholars enrolled that day; invite the visitor back.

Many of our Brethren schools are in rural districts, and they may be saying this does not pertain to them. But it is just as vitally essential to have well kept records in rural schools as city ones. Absences and withdrawals happen there as well as in city schools. Watch for the new family and get them lined up at once.

A man once asked at a rural Sunday school convention: "How many of you people own a cow?" Nearly every hand went up. Then he said: "What would you do if one got out of the pasture?" Answers like this came back: "Bring it back." Then, "Find out where it got out;" and, "fix the fence." That settled the withdrawal question at that convention.

Now just one more thing. The secretary and decision day. He has a big part in connection with this day. The reports called for from denomination, state and international associations all ask for the number of conversions or church accessions. The secretary having a thorough knowledge can step to his records and at a glance give you the totals and that would do away with the "guess system."

In conclusion, I feel that this subject has just been touched on and if some one gets just a little clearer vision of the secretary's field, this discussion shall not have been in vain. Do away with red tape and have efficiency. There is a wide difference between the two.

Ralph McIntire, the great secretary man says: "The real test of efficiency of the work of the secretary is not to be found in scientifically ruled books or beautifully kept records, but in fact as to whether or not the work and records have benefited the school. It is not a question of what tools have been used, but of results achieved. If the attendance is not more regular, if withdrawals for poor reasons are not checked, if a larger per cent. of the members do not unite with the church, if the efficiency of the officers as well as the teaching force is not raised, if the school is not better for the work which has been done, then the real purpose of record keeping has not been achieved."

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

Three more churches are added to the Evangelist Honor Roll this week, Flora, Indiana, First Brethren, Los Angeles, California, and Salisbury, Pennsylvania. Brother Lytle sent in a list of 136 names which gives the Flora church second place on the list so far as numbers are concerned. E. D. Burnworth, at Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, has accomplished an unusual feat in getting all three of the churches comprising the Myersdale circuit to take up this system. Other churches and pastors are striving to attain this goal and we expect to be able to report one or more next week.

Because of the extreme cold and the scarcity of fuel, no Sunday services were held at the College for two weeks, but last Sunday the chapel was opened once again for services and the attendance at both Sunday school and church was good. The morning sermon was preached by Dr. Miller.

L. A. Myers supplies our readers with a very good report of the progress of the work of the kingdom at Denver and Sidney, Indiana. At Denver nine members have been added to the church since the last report, six of the number by baptism and three by letter. The Denver church recently gave Brother and Sister Myers a very pleasant surprise which was greatly appreciated.

Some of the difficulties that must be met by our rural churches are portrayed in the report from the Hammer church in West Virginia; but the report makes it plain that the good people of that congregation can have an enjoyable day together even in the extreme weather of the winter. The services of Brother Fogle as pastor are greatly appreciated.

C. E. Kolb, of Warsaw, Indiana, was called to Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, to assist the pastor, M. A. Witter, in an evangelistic meeting. The preaching of Brother Kolb was very acceptable and ten souls accepted Christ as Savior as a result of the meeting. Brother Kolb has a number of good things to say about the Waynesboro church and also about their faithful pastor.

Another note from Louisville as the title of a communication from Brother Baer implies that he has not waited an excessively long time between reports, but he makes a report that is worth while. The activities of the Louisville church have been of such varied interests that a report of their accomplishments is worth while. Their White Gifts service was splendid and then the congregation did not fail to remember the pastor and his wife at Christmas time. The church has added to its equipment by installing a modern heating plant with more than sufficient funds subscribed to meet the entire expense of the improvement.

W. J. H. Bauman writes his farewell as the church correspondent from Long Beach this week. A younger man will take his place in this work. Brother Bauman has reported many good things from this congregation. His final report tells of the baptism of 22 converts with more awaiting the rite at this place.

L. G. Wood as director of one of the goals in the Four-Year Program in the Maryland-Virginia district, calls attention to the things the Sunday schools of the district must do to reach these goals. The only way the goals will be accomplished is through the pastors of each district heeding the calls of the goal directors and by co-operating faithfully with them.

The Fair Haven, Ohio, church is going forward in good works under the leadership of Brother Owen. This church remembered the college with a liberal donation in the fall and did not forget its pastor at Christmas time. Two have recently been added to the membership of this church.

Z. T. Livengood's report from Carleton, Nebraska, is brief but it is to the point and tells in a few words of the wonderful liberality of the Carleton brethren when a great need is presented to them.

The National C. E. Organization makes a special appeal in this issue for a faithful celebration of Ashland College Night by all Endeavor societies. A number of things have interfered with the arrangements for this program, but the societies should go ahead in spite of these hindrances. J. B. Lambert's experience with the programs according to his announcement is only one of thousands of similar experiences of others because of the interruption of American industries.

Sister Detwiler has been assisting Brother Braker in the work of the Third Brethren church of Philadelphia and she has found that God has blessed the work of the faithful people who worship and serve him in this place. A very serious question of duty has come to the mind of Sister Detwiler and she is puzzled as to what attitude to take in the matter. The only suggestion we feel qualified to make at this time is, "Seek ye FIRST the kingdom of God."

In a few days the second number of the Brethren Missionary will be published. Will all readers heed this notice: Do not send subscriptions to the Brethren Publishing Company for the missionary magazine. All we are SUPPOSED to do with it is print it and mail it. Send your subscriptions to L. S. Bauman, Long Beach, California.

The report from Secretary-Treasurer, Albert Trent, shows that the Sunday schools pretty generally held a "White Gifts for the King" service at Christmas, and as far as reported the offerings were very good. The schools that have not yet sent in their reports should do so at once.

It is no Whittier's "Snow Bound" that is keeping Beachler at Ashland for a couple of weeks, but the real thing. However, he is attempting to make the most of it and his campaign notes this week should appeal to hundreds of our people who will not be able to meet him personally in his campaign for the endowment for Ashland College because they are isolated, but nevertheless they are now given an opportunity to help. Examine the coupon notes on the last page of this issue, sign one of them and send it to Brother Beachler.

An Explanation and an Apology—A Tale of Woe

Four weeks ago we announced that we were compelled to have the press work on that number of the Evangelist done by another printing establishment because of a breakdown of our engine and pending the arrival of repairs from Kansas City; knowing the congested condition of all railway traffic, we thought to provide for delays by installing a portable engine; but after this was done it was found that the engine lacked but one thing and that was power to run our big cylinder press. We then had the Garber Company do the press work on one number of the Angelus and another number of the Evangelist. Then came the order for all industries east of the Mississippi river to close down for five days.

With no repairs in sight and no one to do our press work there seemed but one thing to do and that was buy an engine with sufficient power to do the work. This was immediately done and one of the best makes of engines in the country was installed as speedily as possible, but to make matters worse, on the day the new engine was set to running our Intertype operator was stricken with appendicitis and had to lay off three days; with operators so scarce a substitute could not be secured for love nor money, so we simply threw up our hands and surrendered to the inevitable, which in this case meant the dropping out of one number of the Evangelist. The usual fifty numbers will be published during the year, but it was not according to our choosing to drop out a number at this time.

Everything is now running smoothly, but with the enforced Monday holidays for the next eight weeks, we hardly see how a plant that was running to its capacity six days in the week can get out its publications promptly in five days per week. But we will do the best we can and ask the Brethren to be patient with us until the days of trial are over.

Christian Vices

It may seem impossible to some to believe there can be such a thing as a Christian vice. Christianity is supposed to remove or to destroy vice and immorality and sin of every description or kind, then how can there be a Christian vice? But there must be for

Robert E. Speer has said so, and who are we that we should contradict anything one of the most consecrated and most able Christian workers in all the world says? We Christian people have long had a sort of smug satisfaction in the thought that we are the elect of the land, the "salt of the earth," and we have rather felt immune to the charges that are made against the irregularities of the common herd, but according to Dr. Speer right here is one of our weakest points. Dr. Speer says: "The most fatal vice in a Christian is to be self-satisfied." We have long felt that one of the most fatal weaknesses of the church is its self-satisfied condition, but we had never before looked upon it as a vice. Yet it may be the only remedy for this weakness in either church or individual Christian is to regard it as a vice and then let Christ come into the life and destroy that which has been destroying one's Christian usefulness for years. Calling things by their true names is a mighty help sometimes in an effort to get rid of what is evil. One day a young woman came to the late Dwight L. Moody and said: "Mr. Moody, I have such a bad habit of exaggerating things; I wish you would tell me how to get rid of it.' In his blunt but kindly way Mr. Moody replied: "Just call it plain lying and I think you will have no trouble in getting rid of the habit."

So if we Christians who have a tendency toward self-satisfaction in our own lives or in our past achievements or present attainments will only get Mr. Speer's viewpoint and see the sinfulness of the attitude it may not be so difficult to get rid of this "vice" which keeps one from entering into the larger life that should be the portion of every follower of our Lord.

The Church and Patriotic Obedience

The situation because of America's entrance into the war grows more tense as the weeks go by. Today, the first day of the enforced idleness of all industries east of the Missippi river, is perhaps the most eventful day that has come since the declaration of war, even more so than the day of registration for military service, because this day awakens the people of the entire eastern half of the United States to the fact that in spite of our bigness it is not impossible for us to become helpless without intelligent and united action by the millions of American people. It is a verification of the old motto: "United we stand; divided we fall." So drastic as the action of Director Garfield seems to be we have no objection to offer, providing the order is modified so as to become really consistent.

A great deal is expected of the churches in these tense times, and they are supposed to be models of patriotism, observing every restriction and obeying every regulatory law. If the order is to close they will close, if it is an order to combine for services to conserve fuel they will combine. But while the churches will observe all these orders or requests it yet has the right to reply to the authorities, "We are willing to close the churches of any town or village to conserve fuel when every other institution of less value to a community has closed, for then and only then is there any just ground for making the request."

The Michigan Christian Advocate says:

"We have not heard of the authorities asking the saloons to close. We did hear something about their closing an hour earlier. The saloons are open sixteen or eighteen hours per day for six days, while the churches are open a few hours in the week. Yet fuel-administrators see the salvation of the fuel situation in closing the churches, but for some reason have overlooked the saloon and the breweries. By all means close the churches, but close the saloons first. Don't stop the forces of salvation and let the forces of damnation run full blast.

"Close the churches? Yes. But close the pool-rooms first. We have heard of no command that these festering spots on our streets, these school of vice, should be closed. To be sure it needs a command. For saloons and pool-rooms are not moved by humanitarian appeals, unless the proprietors chanced to be the humans benefited. There is not a single interest that would suffer if every pool-room in the state was closed, and that forever. Yet the churches are asked to step aside for these pest shops. Why not ask them to combine? The fewer the better, fewer places for young sports and toughs to hang out. Close them up for the winter and some mother's boy will be saved. By all means close the churches, but close the pool-rooms first.

"Close the churches? Yes; but close the theaters and dance-halls first. This is not a homily on amusements. We simply raise the question of which is likely to better conserve the interests of the Republic, to keep the heart of the people true to high ideals in these strange days; to comfort the stricken; to strengthen the young manhood of the land to make the supreme sacrifice; to prepare the mind and heart of all for the burden that is being thrust upon us. The church, or these places of questionable, if not harmful, amusements? Better close the places of flippancy rather than the place of prayer. Better close those institutions which dissipate the stuff of which life is made and keep open those which conserve the best.

"As a sheer matter of good sense and good patriotism, it is the height of folly to close the churches of the land. It is the church that supports the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. Every constructive and healing agency that has to do with this world-war finds support and inspiration in the churches. To ask the churches to do anything that will impair their efficiency is folly bordering on idiocy on the part of those who have to do with the government and its war problems. The loyalty of the churches is constantly imposed upon."

The Life Beyond

For many centuries the religious leaders of the various periods of time have endeavored to offer definite and positive proof of a future existence, of a life beyond the grave. Their efforts have been fairly satisfactory to themselves, but there have always been and there is now a certain type of people hanging around the edges of civilization and the church who are not satisfied that the doctrine of the church concerning the hereafter is well grounded. But according to the statements of the noted Harry Lauder the great war has done more to establish a firm belief in "the life beyond" than all the teaching of all the philosophers and theologians of all past time. As everyone knows, Mr. Lauder's life has been touched by the loss of his muchloved son, Captain John, who fell in France, but his life has not been embittered and he has become one of the most valued single assets to the Allied cause that the war has developed. In speaking of his experiences in the trenches, Mr. Lauder says:

"I spent many days in the trenches, in the rest-camps, the hospitals, and in the surrounding towns, and the most definite impression I carried away was one concerning the spiritual atmosphere which surrounds the French and English soldiers in France. I talked with some of the men for hours at a time about their experiences in battle, about their thoughts of home, about their feeling toward the enemy, but one thing I came away with, above all other impressions, was the conviction that every single one of these men, no matter what manner of life he had lived before, now possesses a calm, clear conviction that if he falls in the thick of the fight, he will pass into the life beyond.

"'That's why we take such chances,' one man told me simply. 'Do you think for a moment that if we thought life had nothing for us than the earthly body we possess, we would fight with such a confidence and eagerness? We would not be able to, because we would be doing everything in our power to preserve this life of ours. But seeing men die as I have seen them, I know better than to disbelieve in a future life. And because we have no fear of death, every one of us flings himself over the bags and on to the Huns with a fierce, almost savage joy. We are almost Japanese in our fatalism, and because that spirit is sweeping among our men we are going to win this war. We don't believe it possible that men who go into battle, knowing that they are fighting for a righteous cause, and unafraid of death, can be beaten back forever. Some day, at some point, the enemy must weaken, and then we will sweep over the tops and nothing will hold us back. We know it just as surely as we know the sun will rise tomorrow.'

"In the days before the war, young Englishmen and Frenchmen were leading gay, careless lives, with hardly a thought for the morrow or such shadowy things as death or a future life. 'Let us live and be merry," was the cry then, but now it is all different.' Because when men know that at any moment a shell may explode in their midst and blow them to shreds, or that an order may come during the night for certain regiments to make ready to go over the top at dawn, their thoughts are mostly on their God and on the life to come. And because they are all thinking of the same thing, a spiritual silence seems to come among them. The men go off by themselves and write their wills, to be delivered at home in case they do not come back, and all through the night you see silent, yet calm and peaceful faces in the dugouts, and, somehow, the religious atmosphere makes a definite impression upon you. So much so that one night an officer said to me, very quietly:

"'When I see men this way, I sometimes wonder if this war was not brought about by God as the only means of making the world think of him and his laws more often!"

THINKING IN CONTINENTS

(In The Missionary Review of the World)

Some of the early missionary pioneers had visions of world campaigns to win the world for Jesus Christ. The promise to Abraham was that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. The commission of Christ to his disciples was world wide in scope and the early missionary apostles started out to go with the gospel into all known lands. When church and state became united, plans for political conquest were linked with those for spiritual victories and the spiritual end was defeated. Then came the Reformation and the division of Christendom into independent and non-co-operating sects. The result has been the multiplication of missionary agencies with the division of missionary effort. The Church of Christ has failed to unite on any general program for world evangelization and much time, money and labor have been wasted.

Today missionary statesmen are making a heroic effort to correct the mistakes of the past. They are meeting in conference, are planning campaigns to occupy continents, are promoting union work and are dividing territory to prevent overlapping. The Edinburgh Conference and the interdenominational Missionary Conferences in America and England have made long strides toward the desired goal of united missionary effort to evangelize the whole world.

The latest special conference to study missionary strategy and co-operative effort met in New York last November to consider the Continent of Africa. It met under the auspices of the African Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference and studied in statesman-like manner the problems presented by the whole continent. One of the most able and striking papers was by the chairman, Dr. Cornelius H. Patton. It views Africa as a whole—the progress of evangelization, the menace of Islam and of commercialism, the most successful methods of evangelization, the need for co-operative effort and the demand for an adequate missionary strategy.

Other papers took up the unevangelized regions, the advance of Mohammedanism, the value of medical work, the progress of educational missions, and typical missions and successful methods.

Some of the ablest missionaries participated including Bishop J. C. Hartzell, of the Methodist Episcopal church; Bishop Hamilton, of the Moravian Board; Bishop Lambuth, of the Southern Methodists; Dr. Chas. R. Watson, president of Cairo University; Dr. Karl Kumm, of the Sudan United Mission; Dr. Catherine Mabie, of Banza Manteke; Dr. J. H. Taylor, of Zululand; Mrs. W. H. Johnston, of the Kamerun Mission, and others connected with Protestant Episcopal, Christian, and Africa Inland missions.

The time is ripe for greater advance in Africa. The races are awakening; the railroads are highways for advance; the commercial progress involves both dangers and opportunities. Ruin or redemption confronts the African. In view of these and other facts, the conference adopted, unanimously, the following resolutions (here abbreviated):

1. That at the next Foreign Missions Conference the need be presented for arousing the churches to the Moslem peril and the present opportunity for dealing with the problem.

2. That the Committee of Reference and Council be asked to present to the French Government the reasons for allowing Protestant missions unhampered opportunity for work in French territory.

3. That the evangelization of Africa calls for the quadrupling of the missionary forces within the next five years. These should be distributed so as to occupy the strategic lines of trade.

4. That the Standing Committee seek for a basis for co-operation with other bodies to secure the fullest consideration to the rights of the native races in the peace settlement.

5. That the attention of Protestant churches be called to the need for making sure that the Christianity of Africa shall be dominantly evangelical.

6. That, in view of the disastrous effect of the importation of alcoholic liquors into Africa, the executive officers of the Mission Boards be requested to petition the House of Representatives in favor of the proposed Constitutional Amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

7. That large emphasis be placed on the selection and training of native evangelists in Africa; that special Bible courses be prepared; that more adequate provision shall be made for industrial training; and that there be prepared and translated, in the chief language of Africa, a small book describing the pentecostal work in such fields as the Camerouns, the Nile Valley, Uganda, Nyasaland and the Lower Congo.

8. That in view of the necessity of the fullest co-operation on the part of the several branches of the church, the conference recommends well equipped Union schools for training a native minsistry, and a scientific survey of the South African field with a view to greater unification of missionary effort.

9. That the conference urge on all African missions the importance of the production of religious literature in the vernacular adapted to native needs.

10. That, in view of the great need for and effectiveness of medical missions in Africa, the medical force and equipment should be greatly increased.

It is expected that a permanent committee will be appointed by the Foreign Missions Conference to study the needs and plan for missionary advancement in Africa. The report of this conference is to be printed and will form a valuable basis for the study of Africa as a whole and the program needed for its speedy evangelization. The period following the war must be a period of readjustment and should be active for the crystallization of plans and for united effort. But, after all, only the power of God can convert the African and only Christ can redeem Africa.

Some of the districts, in comparison with last year, have gone "over the top" with flying colors. Others are yet behind the position attained last year. All have not been heard from at this time and we are still expecting some fine contributions.

May I ask the superintendents of all districts to check with these reports and ascertain your district's position? If you do this, your loyalty to the work will determine your duty, I am sure. We can understand that Christmas is not the most suitable time for taking this offering in all schools, but we do expect every Brethren school to take an offering for this fund, no matter how small, so that you may not lose out on Front Line standing by lacking on this item in the program.

An Open Letter to Brethren Endeavorers

Dear Fellow Endeavorer:

Ashland College Night is again at hand. It will be February 3 or 10 (or as soon after as convenient for EACH society). Our goals this year are the same as last, in harmony with the Four-Year Program, viz.:

1. An offering from each society to raise $250 to support the Chair of Religious Education at Ashland.

2. As many Life Work recruits as possible toward the one hundred we are to have by 1920.

The three-fold purpose of College Night is still the same:

1. Information—about Ashland College.
2. Consecration—of Resources:
   (a) of Life to Definite Service.
   (b) of Money to Further Religious Education.

The Department of Religious Education, which three years ago was an experiment, is now an established and indispensable fact. It has the unanimous approval of the entire church. I am sure we, as C. E. workers, may justly feel proud of the part we have had in its establishment and maintenance. College Night has twice been a grand success. We are now ready for another "Big Push." We must have the co-operation of every society—of YOUR society. We can tolerate no slackers. Observe College Night. Take an offering. Secure your quota of recruits, and so score some points on the Four-Year Program.

Now, my dear fellow- worker, will you not boost for A. C. Night in your society? Let's make it the best yet. All surplus funds will be turned over to the Endowment Fund. Let's make it $250 plus. "Every member of every society on the job," must be our motto.

Programs will be sent to each society. Let me know if you don't get yours by February third. College songs will be published in the Evangelist. Cut them out and use them.

Thanking you for past co-operation, and anticipating the pleasure of its loyal continuance, I am,

Yours for Christ, the church and Old Ashland,

J. B. LAMBERT, Life Work Supt.

P. S. Please send all money and names and addresses to me at New Lebanon, Ohio.—J. B. L.

Pennsylvania Endeavorers, Attention!

Christian Endeavor Week is almost upon us. It opens with Christian Endeavor Day, January 27, with the topic, "Christian Endeavor Goals and How to Reach Them." Turn to page 82 of the late Minutes and Annual and read the Four-Year Challenge. You will find there ten points. The vice-president and secretary of the Pennsylvania State Union will each tell you something about other points in this challenge, but I want to say here a few things about points points 7, 8, and 9.

Tenth Legioners

I need scarcely call your atention to the Legion, the instrument with which Rome conquered the world. Time and space forbid going into the tactical side of this great war machine, suffice it to say simply this, that it was system. Rome conquered because she produced a military system which the enemy could not match. It was Military Endeavor systematized. NOW WE ARE CONCERNED ABOUT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, a more worthy endeavor. We, too have a legion, a system of operation. Ours is the Tenth Legion and each member is known as a Tenth Legioner. ARE YOU A TENTH LEGIONER?

You are if you make a practice of giving one tenth of your income to the Lord. If you are not a Tenth Legioner, you should be. I am glad to be able to bear the testimony that after giving one tenth for two years, we would not think of going back to the old haphazard way of supporting the Lord's work.

Think of being a missionary to South America, Africa and Kentucky all at once. This is made possible through the Legion, which in the days of Rome, conquered the world.

The goal is 2,000 for the National Union, of which Pennsylvania's share is 500. Five hundred new legioners by 1920? Yes, we can make it easily. How many will your society furnish by the close of Christian Endeavor Week?

Dollars for Missions

We want $2,000 for missions. We Pennsylvanians are asked to furnish $500. To me, this looks too small rather than too large. If we get the TENTH LEGIONERS we will be sure of the $500.

Brethren Endeavorers should be missionary as never before. Brother Yoder and family are on their way back to South America, and the Gribble party has started for Africa. Furthermore, several splendid young Brethren have gone to France and others are to go to Italy soon in the Ambulance service. This may come to mean Brethren missions on continental Europe. We started in Europe in 1708 and were driven out in 1718. Why not go back and show that sin-cursed and creed-ridden continent that they need the whole Gospel which they drove out 200 years ago?

So as Endeavorers of the Brethren church, we must get our missionary vision. But let us not forget the Kentucky work and the immigrant in the homeland.

Life Work Recruits

I close with a few words on another point, to me very sacred. Nothing can be more sacred and touching than the consecrating of a life whole heartedly to God's service.

RECRUITS! Yes, this is the day of recruits: Red Cross, ambulance, infantry, agricultural and industrial, food conservation, etc. But I raise here a still nobler cry: RECRUITS FOR KING JESUS! The National C. E. Union asks for 100 such recruits by 1920. The societies of Pennsylvania are asked to furnish within one of skidoo. Twenty-three is skidoo, but we are asked for only twenty-two. Yes, but 23 will do, or even more.

The best way to help us to get the 22 is by becoming a LIFE WORK RECRUIT yourself.

Take your talents before God in prayer concerning this point, and he may classify you in some branch of the service.

WE CAN IF WE WILL! WE WILL!

Rah, Rah, Rah, for Ashland

Tune—"My Maryland"

There stands a College on a hill;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
Her welcome light is shining still;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
In troublous times her work begun;
O'er troublous seas her course has run;
But praise the Lord for vic'try won;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.

Purple and Gold her colors true;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
They speak of royal worth to you;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
We love her faithfulness to truth;
We love her charity forsooth;
We love her care of all her youth;
We love our dear old Ashland.

She serves the Christ who died for men;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
She serves the church with tongue and pen;
Rah, rah, rah, for Ashland.
Her sons and daughters all are true;
Her praises now they bring to you;
And ever will they be and do
That they may honor Ashland.

The College for Me

Tune—"My Bonnie"

O sing of the College at Ashland,
Where all of us love so to be;
Her joys we would ever be telling;
O Ashland's the College for me.

CHORUS

Ashland, Ashland, O Ashland's
The place for us all to be;
Ashland, Ashland, O Ashland's
The College for me.

The College I love best is Ashland;
She stands for the truth that makes free;
And life is made better at Ashland;
O Ashland's the College for me.

O Ashland may not be so famous;
O Ashland may not be so grand;
O Ashland may not be so wealthy;
But Ashland's the best in the land.

All hail to the College at Ashland;
Her praises can never be told;
Fling out to the breezes her banner;
All hail to the Purple and Gold.

News From the Field

The Brethren Missionary

The second issue of The Brethren Missionary,—the new magazine being published by our Foreign Missionary Society,—is now going to the publishing house at Ashland, and will be ready for the mails soon. It is largely devoted to the African work and contains the pictures of all our African missionaries. The farewell messages are therein. Also, all reports of money received for our foreign mission work appear, and will continue to appear, in this magazine.

Remember that the first issue was sent to all the subscribers of the Brethren Evangelist as sample copies. Only subscribers will receive the magazine hereafter. The subscription is 25 cents a year. Through an error, the magazine was very late in reaching our new subscribers the first time. This will not occur again.

Remember, if you are a member of the Brethren Foreign Missionary Society, you are enrolled as a subscriber. The subscription fee is taken from your annual dues. In other words, when you send your $5, four dollars and seventy-five cents goes into the mission funds and twenty-five cents goes into the magazine fund. But you must keep your membership dues paid up. See?

Send in your subscription NOW. Postage stamps will be all right. Address, Louis S. Bauman, 1905 E Fifth Street, Long Beach, California.

Denver, Indiana.

It has been more than six months since we reported the work here. We have probably been a little negligent and yet too many reports with not much news soon become stale.

Since our last report we have received nine into the church, six by baptism and three by letter. This gain has been somewhat offset by several letters we have granted. The first year's work here closed October 1st. It has been a pleasure to serve this church as pastor and the year's work has been successful, although we have not accomplished as much along some lines as we should have. The new year starts out with evidences of a more fruitful year than the last. We hope to reach a majority of the goals laid down in the Four Year Program.

Our Rally and Promotion day exercises were held October 20. This was an all-day service and Brother Garber, of Ashland, was with us. There were about twenty promotions and the entire forenoon was given to the Sunday school session. The dinner hour was a special feature, and an hour of fellowship and general sociability was very pleasantly spent. The Teachers' Training commencement service followed. This was a joint service of the two classes of Denver and Tiosa. There were nine graduates. We had a short program and Brother Garber gave the class address after which he presented the diplomas. Brother Garber also preached in the evening. There were many words of commendation for him, and his work with us was of great good.

Christmas came with its usual feeling of good cheer. On Wednesday evening after Christmas when the pastor and some members of a certain committee were in session at his home the door voluntarily opened and the church people began to file in. Shortly we had a full house and were at once reminded of a like feature one year before. A good jolly evening was enjoyed by all. But before leaving Brother Brower presented the pastor and wife with a beautiful set of silverware. In a little more than two years' ministry with these people we have two remembrances that will constantly remind us of the good will and fellowship enjoyed at Denver. Many other things were left with us which proved very useful in these war times scarcity.

We are now planning our winter campaign. Because of a shortage in fuel our churches here are uniting in a union effort somewhat similar to last year. We are securing an evangelistic singer and pianist. The pastors will conduct the service. Our services will begin February 17. The church is also making an effort to place the Evangelist in every home and thereby make another point in the Four Year Program. This is a short outline of some things that have been going on at Denver.

Sidney.

We accepted the work here October first. The field is new and we are just getting acquainted. But we find Sidney a very pleasant place to work, also a loyal and faith-loving people. Brother A. T. Ronk served these people as pastor the preceding year but decided to take a short rest from pastorial duties. Brother Ronk has many friends at Sidney. Our evangelistic meeting will begin here the last week in January. Brother Jennings has been secured for these services. The church is looking forward to a harvest time and also a soul refreshing season.

L. A. MYERS, Denver Ind.

Which?

The Third Brethren church of Philadelphia is in the beginning of a revival in which I am happy to help, for we find the unusual here,—a growing city church that has never had a regular worker engaged. Brother Braker, has from the beginning carried as exacting a position in business as any of his people. God's blessing rests upon his effort and that of the same few faithful ones. The Sunday School is passing the 150 mark through the revival canvass. Let every H. D. superintendent be as wide awake, and doube the list, wherever a campaign for souls is on.

Another unusual thing, I find here, is the absence of the popular Red Cross affairs, and instead a deep concern for souls. In visiting several churches of different denominations lately, they seemed to have the Red Cross as their chief business, hearing far more of that than any missionary effort. It stirred up a qquestion in my mind, that hasn't solved itself sufficiently to give the unswer to the Christians who have asked me whether they are justified in giving to the Red Cross, seeing they have but a few dollars to give. Which? to missions, or to the Red Cross? My own duty is clear since my work is to gather funds for the great North West work, and I have been getting enough for this my part of the work. Yet lately I feared there might be a principle at stake and that I need to know the scope of their work, and I write to see if some one would clear up the question. I became more perlexed when there was given the other night a "Red Cross dance" in our town when strangers gathered from far and near to join in with the churches of the town to swell this fund, the churches having taken up an offering of the Lord's money for this same fund. I have not taken the time to inquire, but I wondered what relation the Red Cross has to the cross of Christ if they minister only to the body. If we can know this we shall be clear as to our answer, for the work of the church is primarily for the soul, and with a dollar through the Sunday school Times, a half doz en soldiers can be supplied with New Testaments, and their heart hunger met.

VIANNA DETWILER.

Another Note From Louisville.

Our busy Christmas season is past, but it's simply out of one busy season into another. All the year is busy time here, as I suppose it is in every live church.

Our White Gift service was a grand success. One striking feature of it was the larger number of adults taking part this year. Most of the adult classes had practically all their members taking part in the exercises with which they presented their gifts. And every class and department in the school made its gift. Our White Gift amounted to $75.06 and the spiritual uplift received by all present was greatly enjoyed.

On New Year's day instead of the regular annual business meeting we had an all-day meeting with a real convention program. The general theme for the day was "A Greater Brethren Church in Louisville—How Attained". Our speakers were all home product, but we would not have been ashamed of them if they had been speaking before a state conference audience. The attendance was unusually good and the enthusiasm ran high. We are not going to divulge all our plans for the attainment of our slogan, but we will say that the Four Year Program has been made our own program with local goal directors to correspond with the state and national organizations. The reports of the heads of the various auxiliary organizations as well as the church officers proper showed every department in splendid condition. The election of officers was done with such speed and harmony that it proved to be a real pleasure.

After the dinner and social hour when the pastor was trying to re-assemble the people, another spokesman succeeded in getting the attention and revealed to the pastor and his wife a cargo of groceries brought by the various members. Some currency was also quietly placed in the pastor's hands. The provisions had been kept so skillfully concealed and the surprise was so complete that both of the recipients found it difficult to find words to express their gratitude. The beaming faces of the members indicated that they enjoyed the surprise about as much as the pastor and wife who are deeply grateful not only for the value of the gift, but also for the kind spirit that prompted the giving.

Another expression of love came from the "Dorcas" and "Friendship" Bible classes in the form of a beautiful golden oak telephone table. (Mrs. Baer was the organizer and is the teacher of the "Friendship class"). Thank you, ladies, we shall be glad to answer your "calls" any time.

Just two more words that should have been written in any former report. Creditable mention is due the young men of the "Big Brothers" and "Tri-Un" classes to whom the official board gave the task of raising $650.00 for a new heating system during last summer. Within a month they had secured subscriptions to the amount of $827.00. The new furance cost a little more than estimated due to rising prices in steel, but still the over-subscription reached $150.00. And the shrinkage will be scarcely noticeable. Our S. S. C. E. made the church a present of a beautiful individual communion set of four trays. It was used at our fall communion and was the delight of all.

We rejoice in the faithfulness and cooperation of these good people. Their support of the work was never more liberal and their desire and efforts for "A Greater Brethren Church in Louisville" never more unamimous. Pray for us.

GEO. S. BEAR.

Roanoke, Virginia.

To Bible school workers—especially those of the Maryland-Virginia district:—Greeting:

Having been appointed director of Sunday school promotion in our district,I hereby earnestly solicit the hearty co-operation of every worker in the district.

The Sunday school goal of our "Four Year Program" is 75 per cent of our schools reaching the front line standard set by our National Association. Have you a "Standard of Excellence" up in your Sunday school room? Keep this standard ever before your workers.

If, for any reason you have not received one of the standards, let me know and I will send you one. Study each point carefully, and then check up your school, and see how many of the points you have already attained. Can you not reach them all by the time our district conference meets with the Mt. Olive church in June?

There are thirteen (13) points in the standard of excellence,and the Sunday school has been given the thirteenth (13th) goal in the Four Year Program and I am sending out this call on the thirteenth day of this glorious new year, and thirteen is the number that calls for heroic effort and that stands for success. May we hear and heed the call of the Holy Spirit not only at "Attention" but "Forward March".

I am sending to each school in the district, a letter and a question sheet, to which I will appreciate a prompt reply. Let us make our district conference in June not only a "Rally Day" but a "Reunion of all Forces. If I can help any school in any way, command me.

Yours for service and a greater Bible school and all of the goals of our "Four-Year Program".

L. G. WOOD.

Fair Haven, Ohio

It has been some time since any word appeared in the columns of the Evangelist regarding the work of Fair Haven. But let me assure you that we are at work and intend to do our best as a church to reach the denominational goals as prescribed by the Four-Year Program. The writer has never served a finer class of people. They are very tolerant and have done much for Ashland College and its students. Last fall when potatoes were scarce and prices fairly high the church was asked by the pastor, to donate potatoes to the college. The response was immediate. Two of the good brethren drove 12 miles to Ashland with 30 bushels of potatoes for the college absolutely free. Then a few days before Christmas two brethren came into Ashland again with a well laden rig consisting of flour, meats, lard, apples and a number of good things to eat. But this time it was for the writer. One of the good brethren said there is yet more to follow. And it did. The day before Christmas I was escorted into a gent's furnishing establishment and there fitted with a fine new overcoat and cap. It seemed like Christmas.

The church thought it advisable during the Christmas vacation to hold a few days' meeting. We began this meeting by placing the Evangelist on our budget. If you want a good meeting try it. Every active member is a subscriber to the Evangelist. The weather conditions were not at all favorable for our meeting, but our heavenly Father was with us, and the results were one for baptism and one reclaimed, with a good spirit prevailing.

BENJ. F. OWEN.

Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Having been called by the pastor and congregation of the Waynesboro church to lead them in their special meeting the call was accepted as the definite call of God. The word of God was preached as faithfully as the ability of the writer permitted and the visible results of the effort were ten souls who accepted Christ as their Savior. The work though hard and requiring much effort was unusually joyous and we trust profitable with all to the work and workers there. Brother Witter, smiling, genial, zealous, proved to be an efficient partner in the duties of each day. He has builded well through these many years of service a work unto God and has good reason to have large confidence in the staying qualities of those whom he has led into the baptismal waters. Suffice it to say that in all particuliars the people responded nobly to the call to preparation which was sounded before the writer arrived and to the call to personal service during the actual meeting. The church perhaps needs some additional deacon work. Brother Gher whom we learned to love would make an excellent citadel around which a number of stalwart young men should rally to assist the pastor in serving the spiritual provisions of the church. The Pennsylvania conference and the brotherhood is justly proud of the Waynesboro church. The church is at peace but not "at ease in Zion" for it has seen and responded to the heavy vision to seek the lost and established well the work of the Lord. God will surely bless the congregation in this it's first year of independence from outside assistance. Space forbids the mention of names and menus but never say Hooverize to me if I set foot in Waynesboro again.

Special mention is made of the faithfulness of the choir and of their kindness during the services. All is not gold that glitters, but gold surely glitters. There was always a number of members of this organization ready to lead the singing to the glory of God. The kindness of the Christian Endeavor is likewise remembered and it occurs to the writer that some earnest labor could profitably be expended in strengthing this branch of the church. Every member of the choir and all the Sunday school teachers should be interested enough to attend and help. Likely a comfortable room downstairs could be made "the C. E. room" and this would add to the interest in the work.

Opening with a grand Rally Day and closing with a large communion service at which more than the required Four Year Program number was reached the meeting was rightly called successful, and may the Lord bless all his workmen and especially the pastor and his family.

C. E. KOLB.

Long Beach, California, Items

Since our last report 22 have been baptized, one, who had become isolated from Brethren fellowship was gladly welcomed again into full fellowship. Two more await baptism. One of those who received baptism by triune immersion, Brother McConnel, had been an able and efficient minister and evangelist in the Baptist church. He was reordained, and is now in charge at Ashland, Oregon.

On December 26 the church met at 2 P.M. in the capacity of a worldwide missionary society. Brethren Reagan and Lowman, of Los Angeles, were with us and gave us some splendid talks. At 6 P. M. we all partook of a bounteous supper, of a social character, in our large basement room. Brethren Reagan, Lowman and the pastor again gave short addresses bearing on the social fellowship which should characterize all of God's people. We all enjoyed it hugely. After the social services closed, the church convened in her regular annual business meeting. Much important business was transacted. And now, Brother Editor, I want you to print in capital letters with reference to the goal fixed by the Long Beach congregation. It was decided to make an effort to assist, through our regular budget system, to supply every Brethren home in this church with the weekly visits of the Brethren Evangelist during 1918. One, at least, who was present, felt like shouting, Hallelujah, Amen.

So Brother Editor, please do your level best to hold tenaciously fast to the old time

Brethren slogan, The Bible, the Whole Bible, and Nothing but the Bible. The writer of this article thanks God from the fullness of his heart for A.D. 1708 and A.D. 1883.

This congregation has also recalled her pastor to service for 1918, at an advanced salary. This was done without his asking for it.

The money outlay of the church during 1917 amounted to something over $8,000. Nearly $2,000 of this was expended in finishing the basement. Over $2,000 were contributed to Home and Foreign Missions. The rest went to the church's poor fund, miscellaneous expenses, pastor's and janitor's salaries. All this money comes by the free will offering route. The Brethren here have many friends who also contribute. All seem to regard it a privilege to give and therefore give gladly.

Our winter revival, to be conducted by the pastor is to begin January 13.

And now, in conclusion, let me bid the readers of the Evangelist farewell as church correspondent. Another has been chosen in my place and this was done in harmony with my wishes. For certain reasons I have always felt that while every Brethren congregation ought to have a regular correspondent, it ought not to be the pastor, neither his daddy. I will not tire the patience of the Evangelist readers to state my reasons, but will simply introduce my successor. I take great pleasure at this juncture of introducing to the readers of the Brethren Evangelist our much loved and highly respected brother, A. H. Kent, as church correspondent for the Brethren congregation at Long Beach, California.

The next report from this congregation will appear over his signature. I will, however, not promise you to avoid turning the flashlights of God's old time and inspired truth upon you. May the Brethren Evangelist go forth during 1918 with renewed power in its testimony for God.

W. J. H. BAUMAN.

Hammer Congregation, Franklin, W. Va.

It is pleasure and encouragement to us to read the reports in the Evangelist from different places of the brotherhood. We have not given a report for some time, a few words may be of interest to some of the Brethren who have preached for us in past years, E. B. Shaver, J. I. Hall, G. A| Copp, J. A. Garber, J. A. McInturff, J. S. Gribble. We will give a few words for the cause here. We had a good Sunday school this last year and kept it up until December 30; but closed now until April first on account of this being a rural congregation and we are having right severe winter. At the closing of our Sunday school we took an offering for the poor, hungry, suffering little children in the foreign lands and our donation was ten dollars and fifty cents. The children of our Sunday school were remembered at Christmas with a treat of oranges from our generous hearted pastor S. P. Fogle. He also kindly remembered all the members here with a Christmas present for which we can not find words to express our appreciation of thankfulness to him. Brother Fogle has been so faithful to the cause here since he is our pastor. He faced the storms to come so far to preach for us in mid winter. The last Sunday of December there was snow on the ground and the thermometer registered 22 below zero. He preached for us on New Year's Day of the "Prodigal Son" another good sermon. Then on Sunday, January 6 we again met at eleven o'clock and remained at the church until three-thirty. Brother Fogle preached a good sermon at eleven. His subject was "War Spirit and Peace Talk". Text, Jer. 6:14, saying peace, peace when there is no peace. Then a social hour was enjoyed and we had just nice apples for lunch. Next a song service, lifting our voices in praise to God by singing a number of good old hymns such as "Some Sweet Day When Life is Over We Shall Meet Above", and "The Parting Hand". How pleasant thus to dwell below in fellowship of love and though we part 'tis bliss to know the good shall meet above. Then at 2:30 Brother Fogle gave us an other excellent sermon from 2nd. Tim. 4:6. For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand and the closing hymn was, "We'll Never Say Goodbye in Heaven". For all these blessings let us rejoice together giving God the glory.

Africa Prayer Bands

Brother Gribble has asked me to act as General Prayer Band Manager. It will be my duty to receive reports from the mission field, make copies and send to the district managers, who will then send them on to the local prayer bands.

I now have a message for these prayer bands, but do not know how many copies to make until I learn the total number of bands we have. The following district prayer band managers will please try to get this information into my hands immediately:

Southern California, Mrs. L. E. Srack, Long Beach.

Central California, Eld. J. W. Platt, Manteca.

Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Miss Vianna Detwiler, Spokane, Washington.

Kansas-Nebraska, Eld. A. E. Whitted, Portis, Kansas.

Illiokota, Eld. R. F. Porte, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Maryland-Virginia, Eld. L. G. Wood, Roanoke, Virginia.

Pennsylvania, Eld. E. L. Miller, Uniontown.

Ohio, Eld. Edwin Boardman, Ashland.

Indiana, Eld. E. W. Deitrick, Howe.

Sister Srack of Long Beach, is to be my assistant in this work. I have asked her to be responsible for the first four of the districts named above. Those managers will please remember that they are to report to her and she will keep me in touch with your four districts.

Now, please remember, the first thing is to let me know how many bands there are in your district, so that I may know how many copies of letters to make and send to managers for distribution. Since this work is important and we dare not have delays, I have asked the Evangelist to print this first message. Make a copy of it, or clip it out and call a meeting of your prayer band that you may get in touch with God (1) to praise and thank him, and (2) to ask of him in behalf of this great work in the Dark Continent.

New Orleans, La., January 7, 1918.

The following is the first list of subjects of praise and prayer to be sent to the various prayer bands that are in working order:

Praise

For the privilege of once again going to Africa and telling the old, old story to those who now sit in darkness and have no one to point them to the Savior.

For the two new recruits that he has raised up to go with us.

For the wonderful guidance that he has given us concerning going at this time.

For his wonderful provision and the supplying of our every need.

Prayer

For the needed grace and strength for the accomplishing of the task before us.

That peace and harmony might prevail in our party, and when any differences arise, as are almost certain to arise in any party, that each may be given the grace to yield unto the other, that the heathen may see that we have the love of God in our hearts.

That the supplies which missed the ship at New York may reach us in due time. Most of these will be shipped by way of the West Coast of Africa, but some we desire to have sent as baggage with the next party of Africa Inland missionaries.

That we have a safe voyage.

That the volunteers who have offered themselves may soon have the way opened for their going to the field. And that those who stand in need of further training may receive just such training as is required to make them to be efficient workers on the field.

That we may be guided to the very spot in Africa where he would have us begin our work.

That he will give us ability to master the language rapidly. Work upon French will be begun at once.

As we go forth this time, we can say from the bottom of our hearts: "My cup runneth over." Even though we were obliged to go to Africa and leave many things behind which we so much desired to have with us, the same God who has supplied every need for his trusting and obedient children in times past, is still with us. HALLELUJAH!

Endeavorers Attention

Due to the unexpected order of the Federal fuel administrator which caused a five day shut down, the programs for Ashland College Night may be late in reaching some of the societies, especially those in the far west. They are now in the press and will be rushed as rapidly as possible. If they do not reach you by the third of February you can have your college night program a week later. Don't give up the idea of having the "best yet." Even if you are obliged to put it off for a week or longer. Don't give it up. We are going "over the top" and you must go too. No slackers is the motto of Uncle

Sam. Let's make it ours also. Look for your programs. They will be there. Use them.

J. B. LAMBERT,

Our Christmas exercises came off the finest yet. The building would not hold all who came. The Sunday school and choirs gave a good program. The total White Gift offering was $262.25. The average attendance at the Sunday school for 1917 was 141. This two was the best yet.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

In our last Campaign Notes we announced that Brother Teeter would promote through the Evangelist the campaign for permanent endowment among the isolated members of the church. We also said at that time that we would not mix into that part of the campaign. However, conditions sometimes arise which lead us to reverse decisions. Since the cold weather has brought to a complete standstill our work among the churches, the opportunity came to turn our attention for the time being to this other phase of the campaign. Hence in this article I want to try to talk permanent endowment to our isolated brethren and sisters just as I would if I were in their homes.

A Proof of Your Interest

That there is a keen interest among our isolated members in the endowment campaign has already been demonstrated. Already six individuals, four women and two men, living all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have contributed almost $75 cash to the cause of permanent endowment. And this has come practically without solicitation; for little has been said up to this time directly to our isolated membership. Certainly this is a sure evidence of interest. The names of these six individuals shall be withheld for the present; later they will doubtless appear in the Evangelist. But I am happy to announce that part of this amount came in the form of a $50 Liberty Loan. Needless to say, this looked good to everybody on College Hill who saw it. In my work among the churches I have said considerable about our brethren giving Liberty bonds to the endowment fund; but nobody took favorably to the suggestion. Is it not strange that the first bond should come from a brother whom we have not seen and perhaps will not see during the campaign? But what this brother has done a lot of our people could do and ought to do. This is a fine way of helping your government and your college. I have the information that the membership of a certain denomination has given one of their colleges a very substantial permanent endowment by turning in to that institution their Liberty bonds. That denomonation is the Church of the Brethren, and the college, Juniata, at Huntington, Pa. And thus once more our mother church has set us a good example. But coming back, I want to repeat that the developments thus far lend strong proof of the fine interest to be found among our isolated people in the College and the cause of permanent endowment.

Stating Some Important Facts Again

As we go from church to church and from home to home there are some facts which are stated over and over again. But they are important facts and a people asked to enlist in this cause ought to know these facts. Perhaps it should be pointed out first that there is absolutely no debt on our college buildings and grounds. We have more than 18 acres of ground with the college, all located within the city limits of Ashland city. And to say that buildings and grounds are worth $150,000 is putting it moderate. Now I am always careful to make this fact clear so that our people may fully understand that they are not being asked to help defray some old debt on our property, for such is absolutely not the case. Now then, the second fact I shall mention is this: This money which is being raised is called Permanent Endowment because it is invested in interest bearing securities. And in the many years to come the interest which this money earns will be used for the maintenance of the college, but the principal will not be used. ..And this means that long after we are dead and gone who are now providing this endowment fund this money will go right on working and earning interest for the support of our only school. In other words, by this plan we can make our money work and do good long after we are done with the things of this world. And I may say that my observation up to this time is that it is this idea of our money serving our Lord and Master after we are gone that appeals more to our people than any other consideration. Yet one other fact: Our college has been able to operate during the years for the most part from the interest on what has been known as Temporary Endowment. But practically all of the temporary endowment notes have expired. And this explains particularly why the campaign for permanent endowment has been launched in this time of world upheaval. It was not left to the college to choose the time when it would promote the matter of permanent endowment. Stern necessity dictated that we get busy at once or see the doors of the school closed. And we got busy, and we are going to stay busy until we go "over the top" with this thing—the sooner the better. And our people ought to find certain consolation in this, that while it may seem inopportune to be seeking endowment in these times of unsettled conditions, yet practically every denomination is appealing to its people to endow their colleges NOW in a bold, pretentions way. So then, the situation resolves itself into just this: There is no debt on the college; but a college though out of debt can no more operate and measure up to the standards which are set by this age without an adequate resource behind it, than a fine automobile all paid for can run without gasoline. And I like to think that raising permanent endowment for Ashland College means providing "gasoline" for the many years to come.

The Terms

I am anxious that our isolated members shall avail themselves of the same terms we are offering to those who are living in congregations. While the gifts from our isolated people have all been in cash thus far, yet, we want everyone who is interested to be assured that notes are just as acceptable as cash. And we have put our two forms of notes in this issue of the paper that our people may look them over. Moreover, we are hoping that many among the isolated (not those who are in touch with Brethren congregations) will cut out one or the other of these notes, fill it out and sign, and mail back to me at Ashland. The straight note is simple. An individual may have 5 years, or 10 years, or any number of years to pay the principal, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum. Or the principal can be paid at the death of the individual if such a term is desired. The installment note is also simple. It means that you agree to pay your gift in equal annual installments—most of these are payable in five annual installments. However, more than five years can be given if desired. Now assuming that one should want to give an installment note for $100, it would work out as follows: The first payment will come due any time during the year as you may indicate; if it is one year from now the first payment will be $20 plus $5 interest; the next, one year later, will be $20, plus $4 interest and so on until the principal is paid. I may add that this is proving to be the more popular form of note because it is easy for one who must earn first what he gives. And again I suggest that you look over the notes and send us one or the other properly filled out.

Give Until You Feel It

We are not saying how much you ought to give. Nor are we saying how much we might reasonably expect from the entire isolated membership of the church. However, I will say this, that in many instanes folks who are isolated ought to be in position to hit this matter harder than folks who are constantly appealed to to support their own local work. I think it might do no harm to say here that as a rule the isolated membership of the Brethren church get through a lot easier than the isolated membership in many denominations. But my only recommendation is that you do YOUR BEST, not YOUR BIT. This thing can not be done by doing "bits." In other words, give until you feel it. And if you can give $10 a year for five years, don't allow your conscience to be satisfied by merely sending $10 cash allowing the matter to stop there. If you can give $50 in five years your duty does not end when you have given $10 cash. The task before us challenges our loyalty and our means. It is a monumental work we are doing. Every member of the denomination ought to insist on having some part in it. Decide before God just what your share is and get under it right now. Don't let a note scare you. A note won't bite. A lot of folks today would not be riding in automobiles if they were as afraid of giving notes in business affairs as they pretend to be afraid of giving notes to the college. Do your best: Give until you feel it. Mail your notes to me at Ashland, Ohio. All notes are taken with the understanding that you may pay them sooner than the date indicated if you choose to do so.

DYING AT THE CROSS-ROAD

The other day I was studying some of the rare words found in the New Testament. I found a fine suggestion in one of the words used by St. James. I was the more impressed by it because we have a meaningless slang word derived from it. It is the word Dipsychus to which I refer and it is used by James in 1:8 and 4:8. It is rendered in our versions by the word "double-minded."

Read James 1:3-8 and compare it with the following translation from Moffatt: "Whoever of you is defective in wisdom, let him ask God who gives to all men without question or reproach, and the gift will be his. Only, let him ask in faith, with never a doubt; for the doubtful man is like surge of the sea whirled and swayed by the wind; that man need not imagine he will get anything from God, doubleminded creature that he is, wavering at every turn." This is a very fine rendering of the words of James. One other thing should be said at once about the word and that is that James perhaps coined it. It is found nowhere else in the New Testament Nor is it found in the Septuagint.

But what does the word mean? An almost complete parallel in meaning is the Hebrew of Psalm 12:2: "With flattering lip, and with a double heart, do they speak." "Double heart" is in the Hebrew "with a heart and a heart." Really the expression means speaking with "two hearts." Spurgeon says, "A man with a heart is a wonder, but a man with two hearts is a monster." A very old writer has the following: "It was said of Judas, 'there were many hearts in one man;' and we read of the saints, 'there was one heart in many men.'"

While the word under study is not found elsewhere than in James in the New Testament, it is used by the apostolic fathers. Thus in the Teachings of the Twelve Apostles we have the expression, "Thou shalt not be double minded." And in another place of the same work "double- heartedness" is one of the sins of the "way of death."

Let us take one more illustration of the use of the word. "Distrust not the fear of the Lord; and come not unto him with a double heart." Sirach 1:28. From the same writer, ch. 2:12, "Woe be to fearful hearts, and faint hands, and the sinner that goeth two ways." Also in 7:10 he says, "Be not faint hearted when thou makest thy prayer."

Dying at the forks of the road! This double-mindedness is in all the references I have been able to find used in connection with prayer. According to Matt. 7:7, Jesus urged the disciples to pray with the promise that God would answer their petitions. But Jesus himself attached a condition to prayer that receives an answer. IN Mark 11:24 he says, "All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye have received them, and ye shall have them." James says, "Let him ask in faith, nothing doubting." God does answer prayer, but not the prayer of a man who doubts. To doubt is to have a divided mind, "double minded." A man like the surge of the sea whirled about and beaten into a foam by the winds—such a man need not look for an answer to prayer. My brethren and sisters in Christ, let us take warning here. A Christian losing his grip on God in prayer dies at the forks of the road. Doubt or faith! Life or death! Doubt slays.

Think again what a miserable life the man or woman lives who is two-faced. "A double minded man, wavering at every turn." If ever there was a day when men had difficulties thrown in their way of trust in God and faith in prayer it is ours. Science, true and false, leaves many minds groping in the dark. The false interpretation of history leaves God out of human affairs, just as if man could get on as well without him, and leaves him in a real "whirl of surge" lashing itself into a veritable brainstorm of perplexity and indecision. The break of the much vaunted and boasted modern civilization has seemed to sweep away the very foundations of faith. The most terrible war of human history with its unspeakable horrors has clouded the sky and hidden God from the faith of many. Yes, faith seems difficult. Seems, I say. For really I believe that we have more room for faith now than we have ever had. We must not allow ourselves to be deceived. Doubt must not be harbored. We must pray and that in faith. Half-hearted, doubtful and indifferent praying will never be answered. It is an insult to God. It is the listless gasp of the dying soul at the forks.

This double-mindedness appears in another quite different aspect from that just considered. Sirach's words, "Woe..to the sinner going two ways," are apt. Many a man starts out in the Christian life with fair colors and under most favorable circumstances. Then secret sin steals in, first the temptation, then the indulgence. Then as every one knows the spiritual life loses its zest ,its reality. The man appears to be what he is not. He knows and perhaps he alone. He is a sinner going two ways. It is Bunyan's Mr. Facing Both Ways" over again. Now, follow Jesus in the analysis of such a character and his experience. There is the temptation. But faith can foil it and turn it into all joy. But there is the temptation that draws away, entices and ends in sin. This sin, full-grown, ends in death. Verses 2 and 13-15. Unrestricted temptation destroys the power of the spiritual man by first of all casting up doubts. It divides the man in his thinking. It lashes him into distrust. He dies the spiritual death at the meeting and paring of the ways. He dies because he is dipsychus, double minded.

Almost as fatal to the life of the Christian as sin is that other test that comes in the daily toil and labor, the injustice and the hardship of a sinful world order. To meet all the trying responsibilities of even the ordinary routine of life and hold fast one's faith is no small test. It is often under the daily monotony of the grind of life that men and women break. It is a fine thing amidst all the stress and strain of our modern complex life to hold fast our confidence in God without wavering. Many a one loses out. Many a church loses her power because of the same conditions. Listen to James once again. The brother of low degree must remember the high estate to which he is heir. The rich brother must remember that he is made brother to all men on the plane of equality in Jesus Christ. Both are in peril and each may help to sustain the other by an unfaltering faith. Let them ask God who gives liberally and does not reproach. At the crossing of the ways in the struggles of life as you stand there may there be no double-mindedness. Wealth, fame, worldly pleasures, all—fade. Faith lives into the life to come.

A man may have help from God. That is the lesson from James. But he must not be a divided man. The unstable man must become fixed in his determination to stand firm. The double minded man must choose Jesus Christ and by a faith that does not waver. "If any man lacketh?" to him God says, "let him ask and he shall receive." But he must ask in faith. God gives help.

Let there be a note of absolute and utter confidence in our religious life today. This is the note that will win. It is the note that will characterize the winning church. It will mark the winning pastor.

Pray. Only remember that it must be "in faith, with never a doubt; for the doubtful man is like surge of the sea whirled and swayed by the wind; that man need not imagine that he will get anything from God, double minded creature that he is, wavering at every turn."

MILLER.

From the Editor's View-Point

"Ye Shall Be Free Indeed"

As the bird beats its wings against the bars of the cage that confines it when taken from its native forest and held captive, and as the tiger walks round and round the narrow confines of the circus wagon ever seeking an opportunity to regain the freedom of the jungle, so man, when held a prisoner, shut off from social intercourse with his fellow men and held captive behind stone walls and steel bars ever longs for the day when the bolts shall be pushed back and the doors shall swing open that will restore his place in society to him once again.

Pardon boards and state clemency boards are earnestly besought in every state by the friends of prisoners in our penal institutions that their freedom may be restored, if not through a pardon at least through parole. Ideas in regard to the function of penal institutions have undergone great changes within the last decade and the treatment accorded men convicted of crime has kept pace in a measurable degree with the advanced ideas, and prison boards now realize that in many instances reform in the criminal is secured more surely outside the prison walls than it is inside and many pardons and paroles are granted. Only last week the Ohio Clemency Board granted eighty-eight paroles to prisoners confined in the Mansfield reformatory, but not all who made application for parole were successful; some were disappointed. No doubt many of the eighty-eight who had their requests granted will make an honest endeavor to keep faith with the law that has given them this limited freedom, and will eventually grow into trustworthy citizens. But while the pardon may give to one his place in society so far as his personal and physical being may be concerned, no pardon board can restore him to his place in the confidence of his fellow men; this he must do for himself, and it can be done only by painstaking and faithful effort to be a man in every sense of the word.

But while some few men are held prisoners because of violation of human laws and are sometimes restored to liberty by men in authority, the whole human race has been imprisoned by sin, though one of the sad features about it is that millions of people do not realize their imprisonment, and for many centuries the thinking people of the ages have sought methods and systems whereby this bondage may be thrown off and man may have freedom of spirit and soul. Morals and social ethics may be improved upon, but this has not given the freedom the human soul seeks. One way and only one has proven successful and that is the way of the Cross. When Jesus came into the world he came to set the captives free and the pardon secured through him is far beyond and above that which may be secured from any earthly board of pardons or any court of the land. "When the Son shall set you free, you shall be indeed."

Whole-Hearted Loyalty

It is the popular thing in these days to declare one's loyalty to his country and many people are quick to take advantage of the present opportunity to do so. When American college presidents are removed by the trustees of the institution because they refuse to make a positive declaration of their undivided loyalty to the American government, it is time for common folks to take notice. It has been but a few days since such action was taken in the case of the president of one of Ohio's popular colleges and the whole state has been made to realize that this is no time for half-hearted loyalty to America.

There are some institutions and some organizations in America that are anything but loyal, and some people have tried to drag the labor organizations into the disloyal group, but without apparent success. American labor has repeatedly demonstrated that it stands by the government in this time of great crisis. There may be agitators in the ranks of labor that seek to sow seeds of disloyalty but they do not represent the spirit of the rank and file of workers of America. The millions of American laborers know that while there are some things in America in connection with industrial institutions that are not ideal, yet the most they can do to better their own condition is to stand true and loyal to the government that has given them opportunities not secured in any other country.

One of the most striking movements upon the part of a labor organization to demonstrate its loyalty was the action recently taken by the Ohio Miners' Convention when it approved an amendment to its constitution which provides that an alien who has lived in this country three years and has taken no steps to become naturalized shall no longer be eligible to membership in the organization.

One of the things we have never been able to understand is why any one should leave their native land because of the greater opportunities America affords them and then when the test comes show an inclination to uphold the government and institutions of their native land when they left because of its restrictions. We would almost favor the deportation of any alien who refuses to become an American citizen after five years' residence in this country.

Saloons and Jails

The school of experience has been pronounced a dear school, but we are told certain people will learn in no other. However we are inclined to go a little farther than that and say some people will not learn even in the school of experience, and among such we would place the ardent advocate of the saloon and the liquor business. One of the wet spots in Ohio that will require a great many sponges to dry up is Cleveland. There are many good people in Cleveland and it is a beautiful city and deserves to rank as the sixth city in America, but the liquor influences are the dominatnig influences in the city after all and apparently the rural sections of Ohio will have to make up in dry votes what the great cities lack.

Just recently the sheriff has appealed for a new county jajil in Cleveland as early as possible and asks that all red tape be cut that no delays may interfere with the county's need. The old prison is packed with nearly two hundred prisoners which are packed almost like poultry in a poultry car being shipped to market. Cuyahoga county, Ohio, might send to one of the southern states where one of the principal cities had just completed a magnificent new jail just previous to the enactment of state-wide prohibition, but after the saloons had been closed in the city and in the state, found no use for the prison. Just lately the city has offered it to the federal government to be used as a convalescent hospital for wounded American soldiers that may be brought back from France. If Cleveland gets a new and expensive jail building now it may be but a few years until it will not know what to do with it, for surely no one doubts now that Ohio will go dry with a shout next November.

An oft repeated expression of one of the old time preachers of the writer's boyhood days was, "In life we are in the midst of death." Trite as the saying may be it is none the less true and one need not go to the battlefield to have it demonstrated. Many a one has sought to avoid the dangers of the battlefront only to meet with a serious or fatal accident at home. During the Spanish-American war a boyhood acquaintance of the writer desired to enter the United States army, but as he was under age and his parents refused their consent, he was not permitted to do so. But before the brief conflict was over he accidentally received a load of fine shot in his anatomy, painful but not dangerous, and while the surgeon was carefully extracting the many shot from beneath the skin's surface the boy blubbered: "I wanted to join the army and you would not let me, and the other boys joined and none of them got shot and here I stayed at home and did get shot." Just last week a young Canadian who went "over the top" at Vimy ridge without a scratch from German shot or shell, met instant death from a shot from a small target rifle in the hands of his young brother while he was home on a furlough and teaching the boy how to shoot. Yes, "in life we are in the midst of death," whether upon the battle front in Europe, or in our own back yards.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

This week we have the Christian Endeavor goals. Endeavorers ought everywhere get this in their heads and hearts. Carpenter says it is up to the district organizations to get this program put across, but to date I have heard nothing from anyone. Some one ought to be keeping the eyes of the C. E. workers open on these Standards or Goals. It can not all be done on the pages of the Evangelist, either. I hate to say it, but if you will forget these goals otherwise, cut out this page if you have any state office that makes this part of your work and keep it before yourself and any who can help you to get things done. "Now then, do it."

BAME.

Goals of Brethren Endeavor

From the inception of the movement Christian Endeavor has insisted upon standards definite and avowed as one of its constants. The pledge represents a noteworthy example of this invariable principle. Other illustrations are to be found in memorable efforts like the Increase, Increase and Efficiency and Thousand-Million campaigns. The adoption and attainment of specific goals is no new endeavor for our Christian Endeavorers. Before the announcement of our church's epoch-marking Four-Year Program we had planned the program given below, using the title:

Our Four-Year Challenge, 1916-1920

	General	Pennsylvania	Indiana	Ohio	California	Kanemorado	Illiokota	Md., Va. & W. Va.	Michigan	Miscellaneous
Young People's Socs.	30	6	5	4	3	3	3	3	2	1
Jr. and Int. Societies	35	6	5	5	4	4	4	4	2	1
New C. E. Members	2000	500	475	400	250	115	115	90	30	25
New Church Members	400	95	85	75	35	30	30	25	15	10
Peace Advocates	3500	750	700	650	400	345	345	200	60	50
Quiet Hour Comrades	2500	575	550	525	325	160	160	130	40	35
Tenth Legioners	2000	500	495	450	250	100	100	60	25	25
Dollars for Missions	2000	500	490	440	225	110	110	75	25	25
C. E. Experts	500	105	100	95	50	40	10	30	20	20

Obviously enough, the general goals have been apportioned among the several districts. By "Miscellaneous" we mean churches in unorganized sections. The district goals are to be apportioned among the various societies of the district. District officers will encourage each society to accept a due share of the apportionment. They will accomplish this end through the distribution of posters prepared by the national officers, which provide spaces to check up yearly attainments. Through this instrument both national and district unions and the societies comprising the same will be able to ascertain definitely their standing, provided that

Statistics Are Carefully Kept

Carelessness in this regard made it most difficult for us to draft a general program of endeavor, and may make it equally difficult for local officers to determine the proportionate share of their society. Judged by our statistical reports not a few of our societies fail to keep a record of departmental achievements, and are unable therefore to make a creditable report concerning the number of Quiet Hour Comrades, Tenth Legioners and Peace Advocates. The absence of detailed monthly and quarterly records may give your society a lower rating than it deserves, and prevent us from realizing our aims.

Pastors may help to obviate this difficulty and to correlate the two programs by exercising needed and proper supervision. The Four-Year Program anticipates an increased membership, deeply practical efficiency. Our Four-Year Challenge calls for 400 new church members secured through the influence of Endeavorers, 2,500 additional young people pledged to daily Bible study and prayer, 2,000 more consecrating at least one tenth of their income to the support of the Lord's work, 100 surrendered lives for ministerial and missionary service, 500 graduated from Expert Endeavor which provides practical training for all kinds of church work. Here then is the strategical opportunity to put into the young people of today what we hope to find in the maturer individuals of tomorrow. The minister and church that are too preoccupied with other things to supply a vital ministry for their young people are too busy to build the church of the future. To maintain a vigorous Christian Endeavor in the passing now is the surest way to provide trained church workers of the highest order for the days which follow. To transmute the young people of the church into an ever living, serving force in the church, activities conducive to their normal spiritual development must be maintained; and such lines of Christian Endeavor are set forth in our Four-Year Challenge. All at it and all the time at it until it is done.

Dollars and Toilers

1. Two Thousand New Dollars for Missions

We can if we will—if we will adopt more largely God's own plan of financing the work of his kingdom on earth. Every loyal Endeavorer knows that plan, for Christian Endeavor has stood for the practice of tithing during all these years. And Christian Endeavor's contribution to the church of Jesus Christ is tremendous when measured by the cumulative influence and gifts of the increasing numbers of tithers from her ranks from year to year. Christian Endeavor is interested in world-wide evangelization, but has adopted a special field in which to center her activities, namely, in the mountain district of Kentucky. The responsibility resting on Christian Endeavor during these war times and after the war ends will be greater than ever before, and may the response in the present year, 1917-18, be the best yet, and may each year find an increase of the number of new dollars for missions. Two thousand dollars in four years! We can go "over the top" in fine shape if every society in the church will fill its place in the ranks. Has your society helped this year? Come on with your share of the new dollars for missions.

2. One Hundred Life Work Recruits

The dollars for missions are useless without faithful, prepared toilers to go as Christian laborers into the Lord's harvest fields. How many life work recruits in your society? How many of your members are considering the call? How many are counting the cost? A special call to enlist life work recruits came to all our societies on the first Sunday in February. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth workers. God grant that there may have been twenty-five life work decisions and two hundred and fifty dollars for the work of preparing the toilers for actual service. Every society ought to respond to the call for a special offering and also make special prayer and effort to secure life work recruits from among her members. God help us to go over the top! $250 College Night Endeavor Offering! Twenty-five Life Work Recruits! Christian Endeavorers, Over the Top!

Contributions

America—Some Problems

BY C. F. YODER

There never was a time perhaps since the formation of the American Republic that so many great minds have been struggling with the problems of her destiny as at present. It is little that my pen can contribute of worth, but experience in other lands is worth something in understanding and meeting the problems in our own. I wish, therefore, to record just a few thoughts upon the situation as I see it. There are five outstanding problems I wish to mention briefly.

1. The Negro Problem

One of the first things that impressed me in my travels is the increasing number of negroes to be seen in certain sections of the north. The colored population seems to increase more rapidly than the white and the problem of race relations is already very serious in some sections. In Washington it was common to hear the fear expressed that when the soldiers leave there will be race trouble. I believe that the negro race is loyal, but there are causes which making social conditions unequal. A number of times I saw negroes occupying seats on trains and white people standing rather than sit with them. The question is not all together one of color for if all negroes were like some cultured negroes that I have known there would be no race problem.

The solution to my mind, does not consist in "Jim Crow" cars and negro segregation in cities as is practiced in the south, nor yet in intermarriage and social equality as exists in Brazil. The latter may be all right for Brazil, but not for the United States, while the former is only a temporary expedient which does not touch the root of the problem. In several places I noticed negro districts allowed to exist with unhygienic conditions and moral conditions which would not be tolerated in white districts. Such centers become breeding places of vice and the population spreading in undue proportion from such places constitutes a menace to the country. The solution of the problem does not consist in separating and neglecting the unfit, but in making the unfit fit. The government should set apart sufficient funds from its many millions to provide schools, especially industrial schools for all the colored race and then strictly require the education of all the children and their thorough preparation to be useful citizens. Laws guarding them from drink, drugs, tobacco, etc., should be enforced and other laws added looking to the decrease in multiplication of the unfit. In addition to this and more important than this, is the work of the church in teaching the gospel which more than anything else will elevate the race and make it possible for the races to dwell together in harmony.

2. The Immigration Problem

The immigration problem is somewhat similar to the race problem. The vast number of aliens who annually come to our shores bring with them for the most part lower ideals in living than those which dominate our country and in consequence the liquor traffic and kindred evils continue in many places where it would otherwise soon be driven out. It is not right to call these immigrants "dagos," or "sheenys" or "hooligans," or something else as the case may be and pass them by on the other side. To do so is to leave them to the ranks of the enemy to be a menace to all.

Brother Arthur De Lozier, at Allentown, is doing what the church should do in every community where there is a similar opportunity. A special effort should be made to evangelize and care for these immigrants religiously so that they may take on our ideas and be amalgamated harmoniously in society. Any policy which leaves them unevangelizezd will leave them a peril to the country.

3. The Wealth Problem

As I have gone from one side of the country to the other I have been amazed at the evidences of tremendous wealth which one sees on every side. In spite of the war and calls for economy and contributions to many causes the mass of the people seem to be able to continue to live in super-heated houses and load their tables with a super-abundance of food and spend ten times as much in follies as they do for religion.

The nation needs a baptism of suffering to bring it to its knees. To squander time or money or energy selfishly while so many millions suffer want is a crime against humanity and it is one of the over-ruling providences of the war that the nations are being starved into the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the conservation of food and other necessaries of life. Luxury has always been followed by decay and destruction and our country will do well to make permanent the restrictions found to be required by war. Here again the gospel with its simple, consecrated living is the only solution to the problem.

4 The War Problem

The present war so eclipses all previous wars both in size and ferocity and in the great issues involved that it may well be considered the beginning of the end of the age. The good providence of God has so brought it about that the United States occupies the most influential posiiton of all the nations and this brings the responsibility of following such a policy as will lead the nations to bring their glory and their honor into the kingdom of God. Never has a nation occupied higher ground than the United States occupies in its leadership of the nations today and never has a ruler sounded calls to duty to the world that have the gospel ring as our president has been doing. But the problem of war will not be solved by simply accepting the fourteen articles he has propounded as a basis for peace. Only the evangelization of the world and the coming of the kingdom of our Lord can change the selfish human heart and replace the narrow patriotism of men by the broad and deep and eternal love of God.

5. The Reconstruction Problem

The war is like a crucible into which is cast the crude ore to be refined. Out of it will come the purified people who will rebuild the civilization of the world. Purified? Yes, even though many once pure shall have been corrupted by war. The forced co-operation and the wider sympathy and the wider patriotism and the juster principles that have filled the moral atmosphere of the world are the fruit of the gospel which some thought to be down and out because the war came in. Far from it. The gospel principles are still the only principles on which permanent peace can come and a world of righteousness be established. The policies adopted will amount to nothing if not supported by regenerated peoples and that means work for the church. Government control or ownership of public utilities, all forms of socialism must fail where the gospel has not first prepared the way. The preachers of the gospel are therefore in a position of solemn responsibility today. It is they who should speak out as the prophets did of old, pointing the way in this wilderness of new things. The reconstruction of civilization shoulud not be left to the hands of ungodly politicians. It is the work of God and his ambassadors in the world. God pity the preachers and teachers that are not serious and studious and prayerful in these times. God pity them if they are not eloquent and inspired in their messages. It is a time of blood and fire, but also a time of breaking dawn and budding flowers. I have faith that my beloved country has a God-given mission to perform and that it will perform it, and I have faith that the Brethren church and ministry will help to make the standard of the gospel operative in national policies as it is in individual Christian lives.

Impromptu Flashes

BY W. J. H. BAUMAN

Men should study the Bible in the light of its fundamentals.

It is not word, but thought inspiration, that we claim for the Bible.

Poor people ought to highly appreciate the Bible; it is their best friend.

Unbelief in the Bible tends to a lonesome and hopeless life.

Intelligent love and kindliness is not given to flattery toward things wrong. It loves the wrongdoer too much for that.

Character beauty by far outshines all other beauty, especially so when it has the grace of Jesus for its foundation.

My, oh, my, how pretty some people would look if they were not fashion mongers.

Young man, young woman, you will never attain to real greatness in life unless you develop a spirit and disposition of unselfish humility.

Snowflakes may be noiseless. But they are beautiful, when not tossed hither and thither by wind storms. Many a quiet Christian resembles them.

In appearance, the devil is not nearly as ugly as some people think him to be. In wielding influence he is much uglier.

Young man, young woman, please don't neglect the opportunities open to you in the observation school of human life. Study nature unselfishly. It will strengthen your faith in God.

Upon every attribute in nature's realm is engraved the image of thought. Surely there must be a God and if so, he must naturally possess infinite and miraculous power.

David tells us that man is "Fearfully and wonderfully made." Study yourself from a physical, mental and spiritual viewpoint. Be impartial, and the chances are 99 per cent. that the evolutionary theory will become a dead letter to you; and protoplasmic matter as dead as any other matter.

Don't think for a moment that God hates you, but praise him for the intensity with which he hates your sin.

Say, dear readers, let us all try to find out how little we know now.

How comforting and glorious the thought that in heaven we shall "know, even as we are known."

It is exceedingly dangerous to simply depend upon our feelings as a guide in the affairs of human life.

Love for God means love for humanity and for righteousness as revealed in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ .

Let none of us forget to "Trust and obey."

The Second Coming of Christ

BY CHAS. S. McCONNELL

"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go unto heaven." Acts 1:11:

Jesus Christ is coming back to the earth again. The Bible iterates and reiterates this great truth from cover to cover, in fact, this theme is the key that largely unlocks the mysteries of the sacred writings. Unless the return of the Lord Jesus is understood, the word of God, which is truth, must sooner or later impress the close student as being a conglomeration of chaotic statements.

By the use of this key, under the Holy Spirit, the Bible presents a beautiful symmetry, a harmonious whole, the perfect, sublime plan of the Creator to bring this prodigal world, temporarily alienated from him by reason of sin, back to its proper place and position in his great universe.

I. God's Plan Is Marching On

While to the ungodly and superficial the world-wide conditions today seemingly indicate the collapse of true Christianity, the devout student of the book, rightly dividing it, knows that his God has purposed to bring about the reclamation of fallen man and the blighted earth, through a series of dispensations, divisions of years, and that as quickly as his great purpose for a dispensation is accomplished he closes it up and ushers in a new one. This age has lasted longer, already, than any preceding one. God's purpose for this age is not the conversion of the world, that task will be successfully consummated by his Son in the next dispensation, but the gathering out from among the nations of the world, an elect people (Acts 15:14). His church, the bride of Jesus Christ ,who will reign with the Son as co-partners during the millennial dispensation of one thousand years. (Rev. 20:6.)

II. More Heathen Each Year

The church will never take the world for Christ in this age, a blind man can see this, instead, the age will grow worse and worse (2 Tim. 3:13) until the Lord returns for his people, the blood-washed, and takes them out of the maelstrom of sin to himself in the heavenlies. (1 Thess. 4:17.)

This first stage of the second coming is a secret one; the second stage of the Lord's return is instituted seven years afterwards, and is open and visible to the nations of the earth (Rev. 1:7) .

III. Orthodox Jews Look for His Coming

The old Jewish prophets wrote in detail of Christ's second coming, but the mass of Jewish people made the mistake of spiritualizing his first coming, while accepting literally, what the scriptures told them with respect to his second coming, thus they knew not their Messiah. (Luke 13:34, 35.)

Many Christians today make the converse mistake of spiritualizing Christ's second coming, while, of course, accepting literally the first advent.

By all sources of interpretation, the sacred passages that speak of his second coming are just as literal of interpretation as those that tell of his first coming.. God's redemption plan for the earth embraces two comings to it, of his Son Jesus Christ: First, to put away sin by the shedding of his precious blood on the cross ,and then, secondly, to take the government of the nations upon his shoulders and reign at Jerusalem, as Israel's Messiah and the Gentiles' Prince of Peace (Isa. 9:6, 7).

We will have no lasting peace until Jesus Comes (1 Thess. 5:3).

IV. But Why Stress This Theme

Because the Word of God stresses it. Over three hundred direct references to the second coming of Christ in the New Testament alone. If we are wise we will learn to make much of the things God makes much of. Since we can not thwart his plans and purposes, why not get his perspective? Will we beat the air and work at cross purposes with him? He has given to his Son, as a compensation for the suffering and shame of the cross, the conversion of the nations of the earth, during the millennial age (Isa. 2:2-4).

V. The Midnight Cry Is Being Sounded. (Matt. 25:6). God's Last Call In This Dispensation of Grace

Practically all the devout soul winners of international fame today, not to mention the spiritual giants of past centuries, concur in the personal, pre-millennial return to this earth, of their Lord and Savior. The hope, the panacea of the world lies not in socialism, man without God is a demonstrated failure, nor in social reform, education, culture, or the deification of man, but in the personal, bodily, return to the earth of the rightful King, to displace the usurper, pretender, prince of the age, Satan (John 14:30) now inciting men to hatred and violence everywhere. Friend are you adjusted to this great imminent event.

"Even so come Lord Jesus."

The Woman Weakling

Weakness is a crime.

It is a crime against yourself. It is a crime against all with whom you come in contact. And weakness in one sex is just as culpable as it is in the other. There is no reasonable excuse for the weakness of women.

To be sure, the corsets, skirts, high heels, and other hampering abominations of the feminine costume, have a great deal to do with the prevalence of physical frailty in women; for strength can only be developed where it is needed and used with a reasonable amount of regularity. The mincing step, the curtailed movement, that comes with an unyielding waistline, could never develop the suplness and strength which should be possessed by the mothers of the race.

Now that war is with us, every woman should realize that it is her plain duty to develop her physical resources.

We do not know what is before us. Let us hope that this country will not be shattered and torn, as Belgium, France, Poland, Roumania, Serbia and Russia have been.

But we do not know. No woman can tell when an emergeeny may arise in which her vitality and strength will be tested. Weakness on such an occasion may mean the loss of life.

But disregarding dangers of this nature, a woman's first duty is to herself, and it is never too late for her to begin to develop her physical powers. Strength, and the courage and resourcefulness that are usually associated with it, is an asset of extraordinary value at any time.

On the battlefield of life emergencies are likely to arise daily in which steady nerves and strong muscles are of value.

If you are not able to buy Government Bonds, you can at least give some of your time each day to your country. You could add strength and health to your own body, and if women had the faintest conception of the tremendous influence of such vitality on their progeny they would make every effort to build the highest obtainable dergee of vigor before they think of assuming the responsibilities of motherhood.

Though the average woman may question the statement that weakness is a crime in her case, will she not have to admit it if her child is frail, delicate, sickly? If it is a miserable weakling, when it could just as well have been strong, sturdy and pleasing to look upon?

A frail, sickly child is a disgrace to the mother. And when women realize that any effort they make to add strength to their own bodies bears fruit a hundredfold in their offspring, they will find time and opportunity to develop vigorous womanhood.

Weakness in woman is a disgrace. A woman who is weak should be ashamed of her defects. If she has failed to appreciate this viewpoint, her education has been neglected. The future of this nation depends upon the mothers. Weak mothers lead to race suicide and ultimate oblivion.—Bernarr Macfadden, in January Physical Culture.

Women in Industry

That the war has brought about an unlooked for condition, that it has advanced rather than retarded protective measures for women and children in industry, was the pronouncement of Miss Ida M. Tarbell, who spoke in Philadelphia last week at the annual meeting of the Consumer's League of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Miss Tarbell, who is a member of the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense, was talking to a large company of women interested in industrial conditions for their sex.

Those who had been laboring for years to secure the legislation which would safeguard the lives, health and morals of women and children in industry, feared that the war would lower standards already recognized, because of its urgent demand on all hands for a speeding up in munitions, clothing factories, etc., where many women and minors are employed, and in other work where women have succeeded drafted men.

This fear has not been realized, said Miss Tarbell. On the contrary the leading manufacturers are voluntarily lifting the standards already set. There is a new tone among men, which chords with the diapson of a world-safe-for-democracy. Such employers are already preparing safeguards—not only safety devices on machines, but the arrangement of factories looking to the health, comfort and morals of their women employees. There is a rising tide of responsibility for the welfare of humanity, for the sacredness of human life.

"Manufacturers are learning that they must study women, observe their needs and then adapt their factories," Miss Tarbell pointed out. "They have found that if 1,000,000 men are drafted, the women who take their places can not be regarded as 'cheap labor.'"

Miss Tarbell showed how the Government has set the pace for the employment of women. In the Ordnance Department, for example, in the conduct of the great storage warerooms where the vast supplies of clothing and equipment for the soldiers is being handled, women are being taken on, though some of the men have protested. In the handling, sorting,, shipping, etc. of such things as millions of tooth brushes, there is no reason why feminine labor should not be utilized, and men released for matters requiring greater physical strength. Also, said the speaker, "although thousands of women have gone in for the heavier labor heretofore performed by men, many new inventions for heavy lifting and laborious moving have arisen out of the necessity. So conditoins have eased up beyond the knowledge of the general public. Devices have been contrived to make it possible in many cases for two women to perform a task that formerly one man performed. Yet there remains much to be done along the lines of industrial reform.

"We are apt to repeat the deplorable conditions that the war wrought in England, where thousands of women broke down physically, because of the lack of proper protective precautions. The great group of our women in industry and agriculture ,the larger percentage of them unused to hard labor, must have reasonable hours, regulated by the Government, must work under the proper sanitary conditions, and must be safe-guarded against accidents and preventable casualities, and against the spread of illness. Never was conservation of human life so urgent as now, when we are engaged in the death struggle and must come out victorious."—The Presbyterian.

First Steps in Breaking Bad Habits

The first thing necessary in breaking a bad habit is to want to break it. Some people don't. They fancy they would like to stop smoking or whatever it may be, but in reality the thing that they want to do is the thing that they do.

The same thing is virtually true of many other habits. There is often the feeling that—oh, well, it is not so bad after all. It is only when one arrives at a strong conviction that the practice, whatever it may be, is truly detrimental, and the desire for self-betterment is sufficiently intense to dominate one's course of action that the breaking off of any bad habit becomes possible.

The second great requirement is to substitute something in the place of the habit that you expect to abandon. This is absolutely indispensable. Remember that nature abhors a vacuum, and that this applies to time as well as space. If a certain space or a certain time is occupied by one thing, that means that something else will be crowded out. This, of course, applies to your mind as well as to space and time. If your mind has been occupied with a certain practice that you wish to abandon, it will never do for you to try to forget it without, at the same time, putting something else in its place to occupy your mind. This should be the fundamental philosophy of all habit-breaking methods.—Selected.

A preacher at the conclusion of one of his sermons said: "Let all in the house who are paying their debts stand up." Instantly the entire congregation, with one exception, rose to its feet. The preacher seated them and said: "Now every man not paying his debts stand up." The exception noted, a careworn, hungry-looking individual, clothed in his last summer's suit, slowly assumed a perpendicular position. "How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "that you are the only man not able or disposed to meet his obligations?"

"I am an editor and run a newspaper," he meekly answered, "and the brethren here who stood up are my subscribers; and—"

"Let us pray!" exclaimed the preacher.—Selected.

The Sunday School

More Teacher Training Graduates

BY J. A. GARBER

As promised recently, we will now report additional teacher training graduates.

Roanoke, Virginia

While in Indiana brother L. G. Wood graduated a class in the first standard course, and induced some of the graduates to enroll for the Advanced course. Sister Wood was one of that group. Even though her membership was discontinued by reason of their departure to their present field of labor, she continued her studies by correspondence, graduating from the Advanced course prepared by the Standard Publishing Company.

Denver, Indiana

The sowing of one contributes to the reaping of another. The teacher training activities of Brother Wood created favorable sentiment that made it easier for brother L. A. Myers to organize another class. He proved himself to be an efficient teacher. On the last Sunday of October we enjoyed the delightful fellowship of his church and school, talking at the Rally Day services in the morning, addressing the graduates a tnight an dpreaching at night. The graduates are as follows: Miss Rebecca Eikenberry, Mrs. Sylphia See, Oscar Bond, Mrs. L. A. Myers, Richard Gilbert, Mrs. George E. Flora.

Tiosa, Indiana

At Tiosa, his other church during the past year, Brother Myers had conducted another class. Nearby location made it possible for the three graduates, Mrs. A. C. Fieser, Mrs. Edith Miller and Miss Ruth Williams, to come to Denver where they shared in the joint commencement. It was most gratifying to learn of plans for new classes, particularly at Denver where a new class is working on the Three Year course.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

The Sunday following Thanksgiving found us in the Smoky City. In the morning we were privileged to observe the good work of a well organized school and to proclaim the message. In the evening we delivered the address to a class of seven and an inspiring audience of friends. These gradauting were: Miss Mary E. Wilcox, Frederick J. Stalker, Mrs. Pearl Stalker, H. F. E. O'Neill, Walter Stump, Mrs. Mabel Stump, Donald R. Koontz. The pastor, Brother Harley taught this class in a very satisfactory manner, and is organizing another class for the Three Year course. Such fundamental labor represents one more substantial contribution that he is making to the Pittsburgh work, which seems to be in a most promising condition.

Important Teacher Training Information

As most Sunday school people know, the old First and Advanced Standard teacher training courses have been discontinued. That is, Sunday School Associations no longer allow full credit for work accomplished through said courses. If the class was organized early in the year and made application, diplomas may be granted. But classes organized within recent months or from now on will not be entitled to diplomas on completion of the work. The plans for the new Three Year course have become effective and all classes of recent or future organization are expected to conform to the requirements of such plans. Classes pursuing any one of the old courses should make needful readjustment with the association with which they have enrolled, and thereby receive whatever credit may be allowed. New classes should enroll for the Three Year course, adopting one of the approved texts. Those published by the Westminister and Pilgrim Presses have been approved. The First Year Book of our own course will be ready at an early date. Brethren classes will find it especially valuable. Write for full information.

HAVE YOU CONSIDERED---

THAT the Improved Uniform Lessons for 1918 are the finest offering ever made to the Sunday school world? I do not say this on my own authority, but on the authority of men high up in Sunday school work and achievement.

THAT the last objection to the Uniform System has been removed.

THAT during the first six months of the year 1918 you and your class have a fine opportunity to MASTER the Gospel of Mark?

THAT during these first six months' study of Mark every syllable of the gospel is included?

THAT these lessons are now graded for Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Senior and Adult classes?

THAT Mark, the gospel which we now study is the gospel for youth? that it has a special message to us NOW, with the world at war.

THAT Dr. Charles R. Erdman's Exposition of the Gospel of Mark makes wonderfully clear all the distinguishing characteristics of this Gospel?

THAT you can have this book sent direct to your address for only SIXTY CENTS cash mailed to the Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio?

From the Foreword

"Mark is the Gospel for youth; it is so brief, so vivid, so stirring, so strong; and these same qualities adapt the story to the active, restless, vigorous spirit of the whole modern world.

It represents our Lord as the mighty, wonder-working Son of God, and thus bears a special message to an age which needs a word of divine authority, and a new vision of the present, limitless, redeeming power of Christ.

"It is a story of service, and is in harmony with the heroism and of self-sacrifice which illumine these dark years of cruel suffering, as it pictures to us the Servant of God who came 'not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.'"

Just This Foreword Makes You Want The Book

Are You a Teacher of

(1) An Adult Bible Class? You will find exactly what you need in THE TEACHER, and easy to find. Send for a FREE sample copy of the February number and convince yourself of its merits.

(2) An Intermediate Class? Then be sure to send for the free sample copy, and learn how to present the lesson to boys and girls of the Intermediate age. Use it in connection with the Intermediate Quarterly and you will have a fine equipment wtih which to meet your class.

(3) A Junior Class? Try a copy of the Junior Quarterly and THE TEACHER, and learn by practical experience in your class how splendidly these two publications adapt the lesson to the boy's or girl's mind of Junior age—the best time in all the life of a child for forming impressions. Send for the Teacher.

(4) A Primary Class? Then do not fail to secure a copy of THE TEACHER and a copy of PRIMARY BIBLE STORIES. The two combine beautifully and constitute an ideal equipment for teachers in the Primary Department. Send for the February number of The Teacher. It is FREE.

Are You a Member of

A Bible Class, men or women, Senior or Adult? Send for a free copy of the February TEACHER and the next Sunday morning surprise your teacher by greeting him with a prepared lesson the secret of which he is utterly unable to understand, unless he, too, has a copy of THE TEACHER. Send for it today.

KEEP AN EYE on this column for the next thirty days, that is if you are interested in Sunday school work and what is doing in the Sunday school world. Some things of exceptional value are "coming to you." It will be worth your while keeping vigil.

REVIEW OF

This week we are glad to add the name of the Nappanee, Indiana, church to our Evangelist Honor Roll. This has been a great victory for Nappanee as the result was obtained by a systematic every-member canvass. Every time such a canvass of a congregation is made for any good cause it must result in other good than that for which the canvass was primarily made for it will surely bind the membership together and make all feel that they are included in the plans and work of the church. Another one of our largest churches is now conducting a similar canvass and we are looking for splendid results to report another week.

It will pay every pastor to read page nine this week as the matters touched upon are vital to the growth of every church. The pastors and churches that are taking the Four-Year Program seriously are the ones that will prove a force for good in future years. Other churches like the Flora church have sent the Evangelist to all their isolated members because they want to keep in touch with them as they are interested in their spiritual welfare.

Aften an enforced idleness for a few weeks, the pen of our College correspondent has again become active and reports the doings on College Hill. In spite of the rigid weather and the many inconveniences because of fuel shortage the students are endeavoring to make the best of things and are pretty generally in a cheerful mood. We have the assurancce that these College Notes will be continued.

E. B. Shaver reports that the Brethren at Maurertown and up and down the vaalley in old Virginia, stand fast by the principles of the old Gospel upon which the Brethren church was founded. Maurertown made a splendid record, as did so many other churches at Christmas time with their White Gifts for the King service. So long as this spirit continues the success of missionary work in the Brethren church is assured.

There is a splendid enrollment in the Riverside Institute at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Miss Hillegas, one of the workers reports one hundred and twelve. They have planned a short revival service for February as there are a large number of students that are not Christians . The future prospects of the work seem good.

There are a number of calls and challenges from different departmental officers of the Christian Endeavor society this week that should be heeded by all Endeavorers. We can not give space to mention each one in detail, but the calls are distinct and easy to understand. Read them as they appear in connection with the young people's page.

G. C. Carpenter furnishes our readers with some interesting matter in connection with missionary and educational work among the mountaineers of Kentucky. One can not read of these vast changes without being impressed with the vital importance of the Kentucky work.

The news Brother Ditch sends us from Mexico, Indiana, this week shows that they have taken hold of the task set for the Four-Year Program in a manner that assures success. Every department of the church seems to realize its responsibility for its portion of the work and where all work together it will not be difficult to reach the established goals. With the assistance of a local preacher, P. M. Fisher, the Mexico church held a short series of meetings just before the holidays which resulted in four confessions.

Among the many members recently added to the Long Beach, California, church was a gifted minister from another denomination. Brother Bauman makes an announcement concerning this addition in another column to which we would direct your attention. Also you will find among our contributions this week a paper prepared by this new addition to our forces, Brother McConnell.

After a year or more spent in secular work, Homer Anderson, of South Bend, Indiana, has again buckled on the gospe larmor and is now breaking the Bread of Life to the Dutchtown, Indiana, Brethren. Brother Anderson finds this a very promising field after the breaking up of the fallow ground by Brother C. C. Grisso. As Brother Anderson intimates there is many an old and almost abandoned field that might bear fruitful harvest if only some one could be found to till the ground for a season.

The last item in the financial report of the work at Spokane, Washington, reveals the fact that Brother Miller's congregation is made up of a class of people who are willing to do all they can by themselves before they ask any outside help. There is some satisfaction to be derived from giving assistance to a people of this kind. Moreover we believe it is true that "God helps those who help themselves."

Our readers will surely be glad to read the message from the Gribble missionary party, written upon the high seas by Estella Myers, one of the members of the party now on its way to Africa. We have an idea it will be some time before we hear again from the party and we are sure the brotherhood will anxiously await news of their safe arrival in the dark continent.

N. W. Jennings and wife spent the holiday vacation in their old home state Virginia and immediately after the New Year got started Brother Jennings began a revival meeting in Hagerstown, Maryland. One would hardly expect such cold and stormy weather in the "sunny south," but this winter has been a winter of extremes and surprises, so nothing seems to startle us any more. From the reports of both Brother Jennings and Brother Cover we learn it was a splendid meeting with thirty-five confessions, thirty of which have already been added to the church by baptism, and there are others to follow.

The Flora, Indiana church is a church of courage, but the blizzards of the first of the year were too much for Hoosier flesh and blood to stand and to make a revival meeting a success. So in spite of their disappointment, after all arrangements had been made and with Brother Bell on the ground ready for work, the meeting was postponed indefinitely. When Brother Bell does once get started at Flora we expect to hear of a most glorious meeting. Brother Lytle also calls the attention of all Indiana pastors to the reports they should hasten to him as the Indiana Goal Director.

With many trains held up by the storms of the past few weeks and because of other unavoidable hindrances, we are not surprised that a number of our good people have become impatient in regard to receiving the Evangelist. Some obstacles may be overcome by human ingenuity but others can be overcome by divine providence alone, and some of these delays seem to belong to that class.

Hearers and Doers

We well remember the words of commendation the apostle has for those who are not content to remain hearers of the Word only but who, upon hearing, resolve to become doers, that is to put into active operation the things they have heard and have been taught. The Christian church has always had more hearers than doers and one of the ever present problems Christian workers of every age must face is that of setting those who have heard to work in a manner that will enable them to become active doers and thus make their lives count for the kingdom.

We believe the Brethren church has never before in its history given its members, including its ministers, such an opportunity to become doers as it has done by launching the great Four-Year Program Campaign. If there is a man, woman or child in the church that is not included in some manner in the provisions of this program we would be glad to have that weak spot pointed out and we are pretty sure the director of the campaign or some goal director will be able to come to their relief and provide something to do for the one who feels neglected.

No Dummy Directors

One of the plans of some of the "big" financiers of the country to evade the law controlling certain forms of organizations and corporations has been to elect a certain number of directors of the corporation from the force of office boys, elevator boys, or people who knew nothing about the business, who were to occupy the place of "dummy directors" while the "big boss" behind the scenes did all the planning and directing for the corporation of which, according to law, he had no right to be a part.

We think every conference district in the brotherhood is now organized with its district goal directors and we hope there may not be a dummy director in the entire organization. If there is, it is the duty of the chairman of each district to keep his eyes open and locate that "dummy" and get life into him at once or else get him off the board, for there is no room for a single slacker in this campaign. Whatever part of the organization may not be regarded as a wing is most certainly a weight, and a part that is not a propelling force in itself is a brake, and we are not yet ready to apply the brakes to any part of the program. The momentum developed, even though it seems to be gaining, has not yet reached the danger line. We may have gotten beyond the first speed and have shifted into the intermediate gear, but we are not yet running on "high" and one of the things to watch is that in the next shift we do not make a mistake and throw our gears into reverse. Forward, ever forward should be our watchword and every man and woman appointed to a place on this great program committee should be alive to every opportunity. Not one should be lost for the losing of one opportunity now may result disastrously as we near the end of the campaign. So all at it and always at it should be the principle upon which we work until the nineteen twenty Conference.

Directors of Brethren Publications

Each district conference now has a goal director for Brethren publications and it is but natrual that the editors and business manager of the Brethren Publishing Company should be intensely interested in the work of these directors. The movement to place the Evangelist at the very forefront of our endeavors and to reach the goal set for it goes steadily forward in a manner that is very satisfactory. In the five months that have elapsed since the meeting of the Winona Conference as much progress has been made as we really expected for that length of time, but that does not mean all has been done that could have been done or that may yet be done.

We know the pastors have rallied patriotically to this call for an advanced movement in the way of handling the subscription list in the congregations and we wish here to again express our appreciation and also to express our sympathy to those pastors who have honestly tried but who found their congregations too conservative to be led into any new movement. We are impressed with a statement contained in a letter from an enthusiastic pastor who failed this time but who does not intend to give up. The statement was, "the work in this congregation will not go forward until we have about four funerals and the sooner the better." We know such conditions are discouraging, but practically all of us have met them in our ministry but we have lived through it all and so will our brother. Just buckle on the armor a little more securely and bide your time, another day will come and even the most conservative congregations will wake up by and by when they see what others are doing.

A Brief Analysis

Ever since coming into our present position we have been trying to analyze a number of things about the condition of our publishing interests and we have made some very important discoveries and have come to some certain conclusions that we think will be helpful to the business; for the work of the kingdom should be our business as much as the work in a store or in a factory. If our readers will turn to the Evangelist Honor Roll they will see the names of thirty churches that have adopted the budget system for placing the Evangelist into the homes of every active Brethren family in the congregation or by personal canvass have accomplished the same result or reached the one hundred mark in their canvass. One of the best things about this list is that these thirty churches have added a FIFTY per cent. increase to the Evangelist subscription list. It requires only a little figuring to see that should sixty churches adopt this system it would mean the DOUBLING of the Evangelist subscription list, and should one hundred churches adopt the plan it would raise the list to undreamed of heights. And pray tell us why there should not be one hundred churches on this Honor Roll before the end of nineteen eighteen? Such an achievement would make the Evangelist a power for good that would tell on the life of the Brethren church for generations to come.

Another remarkable thing about this list is that, beginning with the Flora, Indiana, congregation where the writer became pastor of the little handful of Brethren as a part of his first circuit and following his twenty-one years as a pastor on to Milledgeville, Illinois, Waterloo, Iowa, Falls City, Nebraska, Nappanee, Indiana, and Canton, Ohio, though the last named place has not adopted the budget system, has practically reached the goal through personal attention of the pastor, these six congregations today represent very nearly ONE-SIXTH of all the subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist. We are glad to give the present pastors all the honor, but we rejoice that it was our happy privilege through all our pastoral experience to serve such loyal and big hearted people, and as we look over the hundreds of names on the list we are free to confess a warm feeling goes out to many of them and we trust they have the same warm feeling for us. We are proud of the churches it has been our lot to serve.

Striving to Excel

There is no development of worth while character without great effort, effort even to the striving point. Hard muscles are not developed in a morris chair and vigorous souls are not grown by those who rest at ease in Zion. Action is not only an indication of life but it is a law of life and the vigorous soul is an active living soul. The law of the playground that spurs the boy on and on in his efforts to excel his playmates is the law that should be put into operation by every one who would accomplish worth-while things in the kingdom of God.

The desire to excel is natural and inborn and when a boy or girl does not have a desire to excel in any one thing such a one is spoken of as having no ambition and no future prospect. The Christian and the entire church as well need to acquire the habit of striving—striving to excel. A little rivalry, engaged in in a spirit of sincerity and good will, is a mighty good thing for many people and many churches. It provokes "unto love and good works," and this is what the entire church needs to keep constantly in mind for the church that is not actively loving and actively working good is no church after all.

One of the beneficial effects of the complete organization for the carrying on of the Four-Year Program by the Brethren church is the power to provoke one another to greater activities in Christian work. Not many people are content to be outstripped even in efforts to do good without making at least a reasonable effort to prevent it. So in accomplishing the goals set as a fulfillment of the program, the pastors and lay workers in the church will find a satisfaction that can not be theirs apart from their endeavors. The rivalry that will develop should be a generous, even a holy rivalry, each one striving to excel the other in love and good works, in devotion to the cause of Christ and in labor in his vineyard.

A Duty of Hospitality

The soldiers of the American army, the Canadians, and the Australians of the British army are too far away to get furloughs for their own homes. Most of them come to Paris and live in the hotels or the Y. M. C. A. buildings. These officers and soldiers, Protestants generally, and very young, know little of our own country. It would be very good and useful for them to know the real French Protestant homes, and to become acquainted with the various aspects of our country. From several sources, it has been suggested to us that Frenchmen should show hospitality to these men who have come from the extremities of the world, in order to fight for the defense of our native soil, in the name of the great principles of liberty. Among these are ministers' sons, divinity students, young men educated with care by pious mothers, distinguished pupils of the universities. There will doubtless be, in all parts of France, many of our families who will be glad to provide hospitality for one of them during a furlough or during convalescence. Some of these soldiers may offer, if necessary, to be received as paying guests. We expect numerous offers, as a manifestation of fraternity. Send all offers and particulars to Andre Monod, Secretary of the FRENCH PROTESTANT COMMITTEE, 102 Boulevard Arago, Paris 14."

On the "City of Cairo"

How often we have read the words in his book, during the months of waiting in the homeland, "Commit thy way unto Jehovah. Trust also in him and he will bring it to pass. He will give thee the desires of thy heart." We could not but thank God for his faithfulness to us as we left the land of our birth to go to a foreign field. Many times in the past years hard places seemed almost impossible to pass, but God always gave strength. With peace and joy in our hearts we committed our ways unto Jehovah and trusted him. We praise his name for opening the door for us to go to that needy field Africa and we pray that he will lead and guide us all along the way.

We are enjoying the the voyage with the exception of sea sickness. We are so glad to have with us on our trip Mr. Haas who has been the only missionary in the Ubangi Shari province, and is returning to his work to establish new fields of labor. We have class in French at 10 A. M. and Sango at 3 P. M. under his teaching.

Brother Haas is a wonderful man used of God. We enjoy so much his Bible class after prayers early in the morning.

The steamer is carrying forty-five missionaries. A good many of these were coworkers of Brother and Sister Gribble while in British East Africa. A theatrical party also is sailing with us to South Africa. Our stewards are Hindoos who are or nearly so Mohammedans. The crew aside from officers and engineers are Chinamen. The weather is very warm and it seems strange to learn from the wireless messages you are suffering from sever cold. We had our life boat drill but feel we will not need it.

Sunday morning we met in the saloon and had an Eipscopal service (this being a British boat). In the evening we had vesper services.

We are happy trusting in God's protecting care and hope the ones at home have the peace and joy of heart as we have in crossing the water. We feel your prayers. We thank you for the loving messages you sent us; they helped. We leave you placing our future in his hands.

The Result of Missionary Strategy

In one week in November the Young Men's Christian Association workers in the United States secured pledges for over $50,000,000 to be expended for soldiers and sailors before June 1. Thus they obtained in seven days, nearly twice as much as all the Protestant missionary forces of America have hitherto been able to secure for foreign work in twelve months. And this was on top of the hundred million Red Cross drive, two Liberty Loan campaigns, Belgian Relief, Armenian Relief and other appeals.

How did they do it? First, they presented a great cause with an unusual appeal; second, they had a thorough organization for every state, city, town and village; third, they secured the co-operation of men of large affairs; and fourth, they used effective methods in the presentation of facts and to create enthusiasm among the solicitors and the givers.

But this is not all. There are greater lessons that may be learned from the Y. M. C. A. work for the soldiers in this World War. The greatest is the value of co-operation and unity in a sacrificial effort to carry forward a great campaign to save men.

The associations in America and Great Britain—in fact, throughout the Allied world—are conducting a united campaign. National and denominational and personal differences are forgotten. The whole field is mapped out as by a general staff; each point is viewed with reference to need, positive and comparative; the best men available are selected and placed with a view to the work to be done and their fitness for the task; there is no overlapping and the least possible waste. Money is spent freely to help soldiers wherever they are in need—in the training camps, in the base camps, in the trenches, on furlough or in the prison camps.

Wonders have been accomplished. In two weeks after war was declared the British Y. M. C. A. was mobilized and was represented in 250 centers. In two years there were 1,500 centers occupied by over 3,000 workers. Today, with America in line, there are some 5,000 workers in nearly 2,000 centers. America alone has 2,200 men in American camps and 400 men in armies abroad. A thousand buildings have been put up in camps and at the front.

The whole field has been served from the home office and personally inspected. So far as funds permit, centers are established wherever there is need—in America, in the British Isles, in France, Belgium, Russia, Greece, Egypt, Malta, East Africa, South Africa, Palestine, Mesopotamia, India and Australia. Everywhere the armies go, there goes the Y. M. C. A.

In an incredibly short space of time these thousands of workers have been called, specially trained and equipped. All evangelical Christians are included in the staff—Presbyterians, Baptists, Reformed, Methodists, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Disciples, Brethren, Friends. There is no question about non-essentials of creed, only as to Christian character, and readiness and ability to serve in the name of Christ. There is little or no sectarian rivalry—seeking to lead men into particular branches of the church. Soldiers know little and care less what denomination a Y. M. C. A. worker represents. Help is given in the name and spirit of Christ and the glory goes to him.

The buildings and privileges are open to all and meetings are attended by Protestants, Jews, Catholics, Atheists, and those of other faiths and no faith. The "huts" are not expensive cathedrals or churches used one day a week, but are built with one idea—service. The workers have responded to a great need—leaving family, business and comforts of home to go into the place of danger and sacrifice.

What are the results? Forgetting self in the service of men, the Y. M. C. A. has gained a world-wide fame. The Red Triangle is known and welcomed everywhere and its initials have come to mean You Make Christianity Attractive. The political and military leaders give it unqualified endorsement. All classes of men are attracted. Money has poured into the treasury. Men press forward with applications for service. Hundreds of thousands of men have been saved from vice and ruin, have been enlisted in educational classes, and thousands have been quietly but effectively led to Christ.

What then? What would happen if the whole Christian church should take such a comprehensive view of its task? Surely no greater cause could be presented than that of saving men for time and eternity. What might not be done if the forces of Christiandom should unite to study the needs of the world; should readjust their organizations, home expenses, their workers in the field, their plans of campaign—not with a narrow view but from the standpoint of the whole? What would happen if China and Africa and India and South America were studied and occupied in this way? Would not this Christian statesmanship appeal to multitudes, so that there would be an unprecedented response in workers and money? Overlapping and rivalry would cease. Money and men would be saved and Christianity would make an impression on the world such as has never been possible with a divided church. Past excuses for failure would be forgotten. The united prayer that would follow would mean new power—for no amount of men, money or organization would avail for bringing new life to men without the direction and power of the Spirit of God.—Missionary Review of the World.

A Japanese-American Understanding

Everything that brings about a better understanding and better conditions among nations helps to advance Christianity. Misunderstandings between America and Japan have fostered suspicion and caused unfriendliness toward Americans in the Island Empire, and so have hindered Christian work. For this reason the recent visit of fifteen Japanese educators to America and their cordial reception, the Economic Mission of nine men and a Parliamentary Mission as well as the mission of Viscount Ishii and the successful result of his conference with the State Department at Washington, have a distinct influence on the progress of Christianity. They show the Japanese desire for the best that America can give and supplement America's mission to Japan to give them the best in the Christian religion and practical ideals of life.

C. E. Four-Year Challenge, Points 1, 2 and 10

If you as Endeavorers and churches have been keeping up with the Christian Endeavor news, you have learned that the latter part of this January and the first of February we are emphasizing the goals. We cannot become efficient societies unless we have some definite aim before us. We have set up some high ideals for our societies and we are striving to reach these. We hope that every church and every society will unite with us in trying to attain these ends.

The first challenge of our Four-Years Program is more societies. According to statistics we have a number of churches who have no Christian Endeavor society. Probably these churches do not know what they lack. Every church has young people or if they do not they ought to have, for no locality is without its younger generations. If a church does its duty it will take care of its young people. And we find today that one of the best ways to interest and hold them in the church is through the C. E.

This organization is an efficient training school for the boys and girls, young men and young women. It differs from the Sunday school as a training school, in that it is an organization in which its members have ample opportunities for self expression and public expression; while the Sunday school is our Bible school with little opportunity for expression outside of class work. The time is not far off when the church will see that the C. E. is as important preceding the evening service as the Sunday school is preceeding the morning service.

We would urge that if you have no society that you call your young people together and organize. You'll find that it will pay you a large dividend. Help us attain this goal.

The second point which we wish to emphasize is the Junior and Intermediate Societies. Some of our churches are large enough that they can have all three societies: Junior, Intermediate and Senior. If you have no Junior nor Intermediate society then why not organize? Where are the boys and the girls of the Sunday school? Put them to work in a C. E. and give them proper training from the beginning. There is a proverb which says "train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it". If you have a Junior Society in your church, in a few years hence you will not be in need of a Senior Society, for you will have one and one that will be at work. And it will be better because of its early beginning.

Now we are going to take a long step, from goal two to goal ten. And this goal calls for C. E. experts. Here is where a great many of us fall down. There are some of our Endeavorers who do not know what we mean by C. E. experts. A course of study is given in Christian Endeavor known as Christian Endeavor expert. This is put up in a small book which can be had at a low price. The course deals with the history of the organization, the officer and their duties, the committee work and the work in general. This study is very important, for we cannot carry on our work intelligently until we know something about it. The reason that many of our societies are not advancing as they should is because they do not know enough about the work in general. James Samuel Knox says: "The Great American desert is not located in Idaho, Arizona or New Mexico. It is located under the hat of the average man. The Great American desert is not a physical but a mental desert". And so too, we fear that there are some desert wastes in our societies. So let us go to work and irrigate lest we become like the barren fig tree.

You can secure the Expert Endeavor book from the United Society of C. E, Boston. Order your book and organize your class. Choose a teacher from among your efficient Endeavorers or from the church. No doubt your pastor will be glad to teach your class. When you have finished the course write Prof. J. A. Garber, Ashland College, and he will send you an examination. Then having finished your work and having passed the examination you will receive your Expert certificate.

Pennsylvania's Share.

Again I must speak to Pennsylvania. According to our four year challenge, we are due six more Senior Societies and six Junior and Intermediate Societies. We wonder where these twelve are coming from. We are glad to say that Vandergrift is one. Where are the other eleven? We'd like to receive a card in the very near future from some of our churches asking us to place them on our record. From whom shall we hear first?

As to Endeavor Experts the church looks to us for one hundred and five. That means that we must go to work and make a study of the C. E.. In our local society we have come to the conclusion that we are not really capable of the work that is before us until we become Experts. So we will begin our work in Expert in a few days. How soon are the remainder of you ready to take up this study?

Now Pennsylvania, let us do our best. We don't want to be slackards—do we? Let us have a better report this year than we had last year. If you need any information or help in any way, then write your secretary at Vandergrift or our state president Rev. A. L. Delozier, Allentown, Pa., and we shall be glad to assist you.

Every One Must Register.

In a previous article we called attention to December as Quiet Hour month. Since then others who were interested in the Quiet Hour department have contributed their appealing suggestions, which, no doubt, are bearing fruit. Among other things, let us believe, the presidents and secretaries have determined the exact number of comrades in their society, and have announced the required number (fifty per cent of your membership) to enable the society to qualify on our Four Year Challenge; the prayer meeting has emphasized the need of regular devotional habits; the pastor has given his endorsement of daily Bible study and prayer.

What next? In the language of the evangelistic preacher "draw the net." Or to employ the words spoken concerning young men of the years that come with the Selective Service Law "Every one must register". A half dozen or more of your Endeavorers may observe daily Bible study and prayer, but they do not count on your or our records unless they are definitely enrolled as Quiet Hour Comrades. Hence the urgent need of definite enrollment and accurate records. Your society may fail to qualify on Point 6 of our Challenge because of indifference or carlessness. Send us a report of your accomplishments on December 30th, Quiet Hour Sunday.

J. A. GARBER.

The Quiet Hour

Christian Endeavor Decision Day should be a time for our Christian young people to decide to draw nearer to God than they have yet, and to solemnly and earnestly rededicate themselves to God. This is probably as needful as for the unconverted to decide to follow Christ. The Quiet Hour should receive special notice at this time. Let the superintendents of this department, or others authorized to do so, present a most urgent plea for new comrades. Surely no one is so busy but that he can find fifteen minutes sometime during the twenty-four hours of each day to devote to quiet meditation and communion with God. You may send your list direct to Rev. Francis Clark, if you like, but please send me a copy of the list. I would like to have a list of all the comrades in the brotherhood, both old and new comrades. We must have 2,500 new comrades until 1920, if we are to reach our goal. Let us all be dilligent in our Father's business.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.
Superintendent of the Quiet Hour.

A Call To Prayer.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for faithful intercession. Read the following from Brother Drushal's pen and think seriously and then if the spirit leads join us in daily intercessory prayer.

"As we now have it, there are 47 pupils in Riverside school who are Christians and there are 65 who are not. The 65 are largely among the older scholars who have come here from some distance and are boarding. Of the twenty boys or young men in the normal department only three are Christians. What a chance that means for effective Christian work. We are doing what we can to reach them, but we have decided that we should have a week's meeting sometime early in February. We had ten confessions the fall term".

It seems to the writer that perhaps two weeks would be more nearly a sufficient time for a successful meeting, but surely there is a great opportunity, both for intercessory prayer and for soul-winning. We want FIVE THOUSAND to join us in intercession and we want the Lord to call the right evangelist to hold the meeting. Who will pray and who will go? May the will of the Lord be done.

Open Jail Doors.

Those who invest in mountain missions or in missions anywhere want to know that they are making an investment that will pay. Let the "Practical Man" read the following extract and remember that similar statements can be made concerning the fields of Brethren Missions in the mountains of the south land.

"Read this extract from the Beattyville Enterprise of November 23, 1917, Beattyville being the county seat of our Lee County.

'This is the second week of Circuit Court, and during the whole week the jail doors have been standing wide open, the first time such a thing has happened in the history of the county. There has been no murder nor manslaughter case entered on the docket for more than eighteen months. Several times in the past few years the jail has been without prisoners, but never before while the court has been in session. In 1907, just ten years ago, we will not say how many men were killed in the county, but we well remember once while the court was going on that the jail was filled twice. Our county has been breaking a good many records lately—in Patriotism, Politics, Business—but in our estimation here is a record that will rank with the best of them.'

"It would not be quite fair to claim all of this as the result of our Mountain Missions, but many men here say these Missions more than all else, have led to the betterment.

"This very town of Heidelberg, with nowadays never a fight or murder, used to be given to such things. There was a triple murder here one night a few months before our work was started. The change throughout Lee, Owsley, Breathitt and adjoining counties is wonderful.

"Without reckoning the loss of life, loss of character, the wretchedness, the mere loss of dollars then far exceeds all the money expended in carrying on the Missions.

"How does the Practical Man look on this matter?"

Sixty-Five New Societies.

Sixty-five new societies in four years is not asking too much. That constitutes one of the items in our Endeavor four-year challenge. The call is for thirty new Young People's Societies and thirty-five new Junior and Intermediate societies.

Note below what one denomination is doing. They are very much alive and doing.

"The Disciples of Christ are making a remarkable effort to organize 2,400 new societies in twenty-four weeks. The latest figures are 2,087 societies organized. This "Victory Drive" closes in Christian Endeavor Week, January 27 to February 3."

We can if we will. Let every Endeavor society in the Brethren church say, "We can and we will". There are many churches that need Junior and Intermediate societies and are only waiting for some one to lead the way. It is hard to maintain a highly efficient young people's society without the aid of the junior organization. Every new society should be reported through the Evangelist. Who will be the next to report a new society?

Zeppelins Help Endeavor.

"During an air-raid in London, England, a society held its meeting in the basement and invited, successfully, passers-by to come to the meeting".

Some young people in America need an air-raid or some other effective means of bringing them into active Endeavor service.

Christian Endeavor Patriotism.

If a Christion Endeavor service flag could be made large enough, and hung outside the Christian Endeavor headquarters in Boston, says Dr. F. E. Clark, it would show more than 100,000 stars .In some camps more than ten per cent of the men were Endeavorers.

News From the Field

Lost Creek, Kentucky.

The winter and spring term of school opened at Riverside December 31 with a good attendance, and students continue to come, as the weather was not very agreeable at the beginning.

There are now enrolled 112 and others are planning on being in soon. Both dormitories are practically full and all seem to be getting along nicely.

We are glad to have with us Miss Elizabeth Haddix and Mr. Jasper Mullins, two of our home teachers, and especially glad to have Mr. Akens back again. And all are getting along very nicely with the work.

We are looking forward for great things here at Riverside this winter. Pray that our hearts may be revived, and that we may truly have a revival in the church here, and many souls may find Christ as their personal savior. Brother Drushal is laboring earnestly with the work here. We ask the prayers of all for the work and the workers.

FLORA HILLEGAS.

Mexico, Indiana.

Being much helped by the many reports given in the Evangelist I am constrained to give encouragement to others to do my "bit" to make the Evangelist still more interesting and helpful to others by telling of the Lord's work at this place. I suppose one reason why we do not get more church news is because when there is no revival, or unusual doings we do not think it worth while to make reports. Another is pastors do not always fulfill the duty to report their doings, and churches are slow to appoint regular secretaries for that kind of work.

The Brethren church of Mexico with all loyal Christians is trying to faithfully do her "bit" in the present world crisis, and while we are not much seen or heard, we are hard at work in the trenches. We are trying to make radiant with gospel light, and active with spiritual power one place in this world of darkness and deadness.

When the pastor returned from the national conference he had a larger vision of Christian service and a greater desire to make the church a great power for Christ than he ever had before. We began at once to launch the Four-Year Program with the beginning of the conference year October 1, 1917. This was done by programing a Rally and Home Coming day for the Sunday school and church. In this we were quite successful. While the Sunday school did not quite come up to last year's record the attendance at the services following was the largest of any service since I became pastor. The purpose and plan of the Four-Year Program was explained and then commented upon. The people seemed eager to help make it a success. Our work for the coming year was by an unanimous vote to do "Our portion of the Four-Year Program".

To some this looked like a task too great, an ideal too high, but it takes hard tasks to call out latent powers. It takes high ideals to make high character. Since Rally Day all departments of church work have taken on new life and an increase has been noticeable in the Sunday school, church services, the Endeavor meeting and prayer meetings.

Early in the year the pastors and official boards of the churches in town had planned to hold a union revival meeting in the fall. But one denomination decided later to withdraw its support. Not wishing to hold such a meeting unless all could work together, the union meeting was called off.

Not feeling ourselves justified under present condtiions to employ an evangelist and launch a great work the church decided to hold a service for the good of the church and to gather such fruit as seemed good for the spirit to bring. The pastor suggested that we use home talent. We have in our congregation a splendid man, a good preacher, but he never held a revival meeting. I urged that we give him an opportunity. Accordingly the church gave brother P. M. Fisher a unanimous call to do the preaching. The pastor arranged a series of Bible lessons which were to be given previous to the sermons. A call was made for a ten days' waiting before God. Ten days of Bible study, prayer and teaching. But the day of beginning was also the beginning of a cold wave on the part of the weather man. He beat us out for three days and hindered us greatly the rest of the week. Then came the week before Christmas. The Sunday school was preparing for a White Gifts service. We tried to hold services and drill, too, but came near spoiling both. However, the meeting was not without results. Four young people made the good confession. And those who could attend were strengthened in spirit and encouraged for a more aggressive service.

The White Gift service proved to be the best Christmas program ever given in this town. The results will be a better and truer Christmas spirit. The offering surpassed all previous records. Recently this church has been called to give as never before in her history. But not once has she called a halt or suggested a retreat. She has met every opportunity with cheerfulness and did her full duty to every demand. In fact we have come to know that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Thus we have started well on the new year. A year with heavy clouds on the horizon, dark, foreboding in many hearts. By faith we see the dawning of a better day. A day when the world shall crown our Christ Lord of all. We await the coming with joy. L. W. DITCH.

Ashland College Notes.

We are sorry we could not give our readers the notes during the past few weeks. For various reasons this was not possible. But Ashland is still on the hill though "silvered o'er" with a blanket of nature's making. Ashland College in winter is an aspect pleasing to all lovers of the beautiful.

Since last writing a joint literary reception has been rendered. Philo-Hesperian lavished every effort to make the affair a success. The library was the scene of the reception. During the course of the evening a playlet presented by a capable cast was given. Refreshments were served and laugh prevailing games and novelties were later introduced.

A seriousness unusual to freshmen was noted in the deportment of many of the new students as they approached their first college examinations. The midnight lamps burned for many an anxious Freshman—a beacon light that presaged good results with the last examination and the carefree look returned to their various countenances. Can't expect a Freshman to stay serious very long.

To relieve the tension and allow for congeniality and relaxation the girls staged a mid-semester surprise party in honor of Miss Edith Wood. The dormitory students were all present. A musical and recitation program was presented and tasty refreshments rounded out an enjoyable evening. Not many social affairs have been the rule in Ashland this year but the few have been successes.

Last week Brother Beachler "snowbound" in Ashland delivered a series of evening discourses for the students. Mr. Beachler always "takes" and it is needless to say the chapel was crowded.

A most impressive C. E. service conducted by the Freshman class was observed last Sunday evening. Miss Lois Teeter and Earl Detsch led. A girls' quartette—Miss Irene Brumbaugh, Miss Marie Stoner, Miss Ruby Brubaker and Miss Edith Wood rendered a beautiful number. The quartette was in splendid voice. Much interest is being taken in C. E. work under the leadership of Fred Vanator and Lester King.

The Theological Association meeting weekly was addressed last Thursday by Prof. J. A. Garber, on the subject, "Soul Winning". This association is one of the most helpful and instructive to the seminary student in the college. A full turn out of the theological students can almost certainly be counted on at every meeting for they realize how vastly important are the discussions and thoughts imparted through the medium of this association.

The special Bible classes still continue to hold the attention of the students. Books which have a bearing on student life are studied in connection with scriptual references. On account of adverse fuel conditions these studies had to be conducted last Sunday in the dormitory. Mr. Beachler later addressed the students in a brief service using as his theme "Going Around The Walls"—a theme based on the story of the fall of Jericho.

Robert Frehse '19 was a visitor at Allen Hall Thursday and Friday. "Bob" has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work at Camp Sherman this state. Howard Leslie '18 was also in Ashland some days ago. "Hodie" looks fine and enjoys the camp life immensely. He is at Camp Lee with the 305th engineers.

The notes will continue we hope uninterrupted for the remainder of the school year. The writer is pleased to note the widespread interest in the notes. It shows that Brethren people are thinking of and are interested in Ashland College and that they realize Ashland is a college which "Serves the Christ who died for men Serves the church with tongue and pen."

All hail to Ashland fair.

J. B. L.

Maurertown, Virginia.

I beg to advise our Sunday school is alive in its work. At the Christmas offering we found it to be $89.35 in cash and a barrel of white gifts laid by the children at the cross all for the Lost Creek, Kentucky mission. All our missions have been remembered by our congregation. The church building now is to be supplied with new and comfortable pews. Also a furnace will be installed and we also rejoice that none of our men are on the firing line. Some are in the U. S. service on non combatant duty. All our people are in full accord with the principles of the primitive church teaching of the Prince of Peace.

E. B. SHAVER.

Are You Needing a Pastor?

There has just come into the fellowship of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, California, from our Baptist brethren, a talented minister of the gospel, who has been a most successful pastor for years. His name is Charles S. McConnell. He is a man of ability, consecration, and fine social qualities. Moreover, he knows the Word of God. He will make any church a fine pastor, or render excellent service as an evangelist. If southern California had a vacant pulpit at the present time, or if the southern California Mission Board did not have an evangelist engaged for its work, this notice would not be put into the Brethren Evangelist. We wish we might keep Brother McConnell here in southern California, and we may plan to do so yet. At the present time he is assisting me in my work here. But, we are letting it be known, and if there is some church without a pastor, and they wish to get in touch with Brother McConnell they can do so by writing me. Brother McConnell is a man forty-four years of age and has a most excellent wife and three children. He comes to us highly recommended from all that have ever known him.

LOUIS S. BAUMAN.
1905 E. 5th St., Long Beach, Calif.

Hagerstown, Maryland

In our last report we requested the prayers of readers in behalf of our coming meeting with our dear Brother Jennings. We are pleased to report that we had a glorious meeting and that prayers have been answered.

Brother Jennings and wife arrived in our city amidst one of those frequent cold waves. We launched the campaign Sunday, January 6th. In face of the zero weather we had fair sized audiences at both services. But with the effort launched there were difficulties to be met. The weather was the most severe people ever experienced there; there was much snow, ice covered sidewalks and extremely cold. This, with sickness and other hindrances kept many from coming. The fuel situation also threatened to halt the meeting, and on account of illness Sister Jennings was compelled to leave us and return home. But in face of these hindrances and satan's activity God gave us victory and to him belongs the praise.

Some Features of the Meeting

First. Brother Jennings was at his best and brought us soul stirring messages. He pleased the members and was used of God to bring conviction to the unsaved. He was optimistic and as we braved snow and storm to speak to unsaved souls it was with the purpose of being about our Master's business. We were everywhere courteously received.

Secondly. We owe to the faithful membership our gratitude for their loyalty. Night after night they came and by their presence and prayers encouraged evangelist and pastor in the work. Each night a faithful band met for a brief prayer meeting. The response was noble. People prayed earnestly and labored unceasingly and thus brought souls to Jesus.

Thirdly. We must commend the faithful services of the choir. We made a special effort to have a large choir. We had this and they were with us and sang to the glory of God. The special numbers were much appreciated. The male quartet of the U. B. church were present on several occasions and rendered beautiful music.

Fourthly. On two Sundays we had afternoon services. The second Sunday a special service for women only. A large audience was present and went away filled with a splendid feast. The third Sunday, a special service for men. A large crowd of men were present and enjoyed a message that broadened man's opportunity and responsibility.

The Results of the Meeting

From the foregoing report it is evident that there was united effort on the part of all concerned. United effort, faith, coupled with the working of the Holy Spirit will always bring results.

We wish in closing the report to merely mention the following visible results:

First. There was a growing interest. The attendance grew in numbers until the night of closing we had the main auditorium packed full and the balcony well filled. We aimed to reach the climax in closing and we succeeded.

Second. There was a manifest spiritual quickening. The Spirit seemed to take possession of the membership and they came to the prayer meeting, prayed as we never heard them pray and then went out gleaning souls for the Master and brought them night after night. This spirit will mean much to the future welfare of the church.

Third. And now we chronicle results as to souls saved. Thirty-five made the good confession, one was reclaimed, and to date thirty have been received into church membership, with others awaiting the sacred baptismal rite. This was a splendid victory considering all things and we rejoice for this splendid victory. We sent the evangelist away with a splendid offering and pray that God may continue to mightily use him in pointing souls to Jesus.

The pastor and church ask you to pray for us that we may properly conserve this new material and measure up to our responsibility. A. B. COVER.

Travel Notes

Our visit in old Virginia during the holidays was interesting in many ways. It did us good to meet many of our good, warm-hearted friends in Roanoke, also in Buena Vista, our spiritual birthplace. At both of these places we were asked to break the Bread of Life to the people which we most gladly did as best we could. Both of those churches are working hard to carry on the Master's work. Like all other church work the problems which they have to solve can only be done in the light and guiding power of the Holy Spirit.

Hagerstown, Maryland

On January sixth we fired our first gun in the new year, loaded with the eternal atonement which was blessed of God in plunging young and old under the fountain "which was opened up in the house of David for sin and uncleanness." Sins were washed away and men and women came up with new faces shining like new moons, reconciled to God to work with the King and Prince of Peace. So the first battle in the new year was a glorious victory. Brother Cover, who is a praying man leading his praying band, opened the way for the campaign, but the deep snow and blizzard came and many high drifts, but with heavenly tools put in our hands by the King who gave us our marching orders, we began to open the way again, and the old time power fell and men and women took great delight in coming in through the storms and over the ice to get to hear the old time gospel.

We went from house to house praying with the people and inviting them to the gospel feast. They came and in return invited us to come and share of their hospitality which we did and better meals we never sat down to. Old Pennsylvania and old Virginia cooks have nothing on the Marylanders, they can and do deliver the goods.

It will take eternity to tell the good accomplished through our prayer band which convened in the Sunday school room fifteen minutes before preaching. In the little prayer room men and women prayed in public for the first time in life, and when the writer saw the pastor lead thirty precious souls down into the waters of baptism I said thank God this is in answer to prayer. Then on the last Sunday of the meeting what a beautiful picture to see thirty men, women, boys and girls received into the church of the living God, and there are five others to follow.

I don't think I ever had more liberty and power in the declaration of God's holy word than I did in the Hagerstown church.

To work in this campaign with Brother Cover and his good helpful wife was a real joy. They are both loved by not only our own church people but by the people of the town. Both are efficient workers in all the work of the church.

Brother Roy Long who has retired from the ministry for the present on account of his health was a splendid help to us. I trust he will be able to take up the good work again in the furture.

Our dear Brother Tombaugh was shut in being crippled and did not get to our service in body, but we believe he was with us in the spirit of prayer. Let us pray that God may restore him to normal health. Dear Brother Witter of Waynesboro and a delegation of his good people came over several times. It was a great inspiration to see their faces as they brought cheer and sunlight to us and they have a great place in my heart having worked with them in two campaigns. I know their faith and good works in the Lord.

Brother Miller, pastor of the Church of the Brethren and his people worked with us; also other churches and for all these blessings we praise our God and his Son Jesus.

Prof. McClure stood with us from beginning to finish and the Bovey Sisters added strength to the work, singing the songs of Zion. The choir and leader were on the job each evening.

Brother Koontz offered the pastor and evangelist both of his autos to be used in any way to the glory of God. Is your car on God's altar?

We left Sunday night, January 27, after we had preached, for the West. We reached Altoona nine hours late and on account of the snow drifts from ten to fifteen feet high around the horseshoe bend we were held up about ten more hours while about five hundred men shoveled snow from our path. In twenty-four hours the writer managed to get one meal. He thought of good old St. Paul who was shipwrecked and fasted for fourteen days. It was interesting to hear the varied conversations of the people.

Thank God it came to pass that we all went through safely. The Hagerstown people showed their appreciation of our labors among them, but in a very marked way in their generous offering which was a freewill offering and the largest I have ever received. May the God of all grace continue to bless both pastor and people. Your humble servant in our Master's work with a life on God's altar.

N. W. JENNINGS.

Dutchtown, Indiana

I am now located at Dutchtown, where brother C. C. Grisso spent less than three weeks in revival meeting, reclaiming and restoring the church. It is strange that such good people as this church has must go pastorless when they are willing to pay a reasonable sum and willing to work. We were with them on Saturday night, January fifth. It was a bad night, but there was a good number out, and Sunday it rained and was a very bad day and there were 17 at Sunday school and I think that was splendid. I think Brethren that it would be a blessing to our stronger churches if they would not be so close hearted with their pastors and would let them go to these needy churches and give them a few weeks' service. I think Brother Grisso has set a good example and I think we should not table this example and that a custom should be started at once to look after the rural church. I have been out of the work for some time, not because I did not like the job, but God doth know. But now I have consented to do the best I can for the Dutchtown church. It is a big undertaking for me for the church at present needs some good leadership. The prospects are good, people are earnest and want to do all they can to get on good ground. The devil is on the job and planting the seed of the tares in some, so we find plenty to do. We are glad we have the word of God and the power of the Holy Spirit to lead us to victory. A few prayers from our beloved brethren and sisters would certainly strengthen us for the work here, and oh, how we need them. I wonder how many will pray for us, I wonder how many will have time to pray in this great busy world of ours. It seems as though Jesus ought to come soon. It seems as though the time can not be far away. Will we have time to pray? Pray for us at Dutchtown.

HOMER ANDERSON.

John Copp—An Appreciation

I learn with mixed feelings of the death of brother John E. Copp, of Virginia. I rejoice for him that he could be released from his tenancy of an old tumble down house of flesh and could go away to a "place prepared" for him. Death is the most beneficent incident that can come to such an one as Brother Copp. We had noticed his gradual failure for some years past, indicated most plainly by his absence from the district conference. This very absence proved the gravity of his condition for nothing, not grave, would have kept him away. Now we can rejoice that the limitations of humanity have fallen from him and he has entered into that fuller, freer, unhandicapped life which "remaineth for the people of God."

For those of us who remain here there is the distress of deprivation and loss of personal association. This for us will always be acute and must be continuous 'till we rejoin him. I met Brother Copp in May, 1888 at the first conference of the Maryland and Virginia District. (It was called "convention then.) It was held at St. James, Maryland.

I was a convert of a few months' experience and he was a veteran Christian. At that time I learned to love, admire and esteem him and these feelings did not change nor falter in nearly thirty years' fraternal association.

He was a man of faith, courage and vision, and it is not too much to say that if all the men of the Maryland and Virginia conference district had been equally endowed a different report would be made annually. Advancing years did not make him reactionary nor even conservative. He looked forward for better things and was willing to plan and work for them.

While this district will be poorer in personnel because brother John E. Copp has gone out of it, it is yet immeasurably richer because he was so long in it, and while some of us know that we will miss him sadly, yet we will have greater courage, hope and fidelity, because we knew him. I loved him and was proud to call him my friend and brother.

Indiana Churches

Every church through its pastor or in the case of no pastor, someone closely connected with the work has been asked to make its report upon the blanks furnished by the secretary of the Four-Year Program Committee for the congregation to report to the District Director of Four-Year Program. This report needs the attention of each one concerned, immediately, so I can maks my report to the General Director, C. A. Bame, not later than the first of March.

Now, please, get in these reports. Do not wait. Do it now. I have discharged my duty and the responsibility for success in these reports remains with each one who has been asked for a report. Remember when I give my report you will face your record, not mine. Let us do our work well, brethren, so we can rejoice together in our victory in Jesus' name.

W. T. LYTLE,
District Director for Indiana.

Over the Top, Off On High, and Froze Off the Bell

In the above heading some perchance will be confused, but we will make plain the statement if possible, so all who read may understand with us the condition of our work at Flora. We faced a great task in assuming the completion of our new church and getting the deficit in every way satisfactorily settled, which was done in a very magnificent way with the aid of our Brother Beachler, then it was to get started with our organization of Sunday school in our new quarters which made it possible for a more efficient and better organized work. Having our departments and class rooms with more classes and more teachers very thoroughly organized our Brother Whetstone as superintendent serving in his seventh year, we were off in this department of the work then by the placing of the Evangelist in every home, placing the expense in our budget, we were off in this department and by the desire for all time services of a pastor beginning with the first of next October shows progress with real zeal for doing well the things these brethren have chosen to do. The above action was taken and passed upon by the church at its last business meeting held the first of January.

And Froze of the Bell, is a statement that needs to be explained we are sure. With the foregoing over we had looked forward to brother W. S. Bell coming to us as had been announced from time to time and all preparation to have him with us on January 8. Brother Bell arrived and the same day he arrived the thermometer went down and down until Friday, a heavy snow fell and before Brother Bell got started we called the meeting off for the present and Brother Bell left for Dayton, leaving behind snow drifts and thermometers registering as low as 26 degrees below zero, something that no one had ever dreamed of at present. So probably Brother Bell will write in his diary, "Janaury, 1918; Flora, Indiana. Froze off the field." Yet we hope that at a later date Brother Bell will come to us again and that there will be victory in Christ's name. May all who read remember us as brethren together in prayer and supplication for preparedness in our service and devotion.

Total received	$1016 37

For these wondrous blessings, we can not praise our heavenly Father enough and we wish to express our heart-felt gratitude to the true and loyal hearts who have so nobly sacrificed to do what has already been done. The amount given by Spokane herself is a great victory when you consider that our people are all wage earners. It means real giving and true sacrifice. "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." But we want the brotherhood to know that they are helping a people who are doing their level best to help themselves.

Marriages

COBAUGH-ROSENER.—Daniel W. Cobaugh and Miss Rachel Rosener were united in marriage December 12, 1917, by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church. Mr. Cobaugh is a member of the Brethren church and the bride is a member of the United Evangelical church. They have the best wishes of many friends.

KOHLAR-HEADLY.—At the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. A. R. Headly, Milton, N. J., on the afternoon of December 26, 1917, Private Ludwig Kolar, Camp Dick, N. J., and Miss Ester Headly were united in marriage by L. Garvin Smith, pastor Conemaugh Brethren church. Both are estimable and well known young people. They are earnest Christian people, and faithful church workers. The bride will "keep the home fires burning," while the groom serves his country across the seas.

Their many friends wish them much joy and happiness.

MUSSELMAN-KINGERY.—Hay Musselman, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Musselman, and E. June Kingery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Jacob Kingery, were united in holy wedlock by the writer at 8:30 p. m., December 20, at the home of the bride in the presence of the immediate relatives. Mr. Musselman is a teacher in the Bringhurst school and is a young man of fine habits, and Miss Kingery proved herself for two years as devoted to the church as a Sunday school teacher and pianist of Flora church.

CRAMER-TEAGUE.—Charles O. Cramer, of Ashtabula, Ohio, a sergeant in training at Camp Sherman, Ohio, and Octave Teague, of Roann, Indiana, a teacher in the Roann schools for many years, were united in holy wedlock at the bride's home in Roann at noon December 24, by the writer, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends. The groom was drafted and called to service in September and is trying to acquit himself as a true American, being a member of the Methodist church of Ashtabula, and the bride a teacher will pursue her teaching and prove herself a true companion establishing a happy home and throw a mantle of protection as a true helpmate around her husband as he seeks to do the bidding of the "powers that be." The bride is a member of the Roann Brethren church. May God richly bless these unions, and may joy and happiness be theirs.

Our Dead

WYCOFF.—On December 5, 1917 Mrs. H. F. Wycoff was called to her reward at the age of 58 years. Three daughters and one son remain. One daughter, Miss Ada, now Mrs. Grover Butt, will be remembered by many as a faithful teacher in our mission school at Lost Creek, Ky., several years ago. Another, Miss Nell, has cared for her mother through a long illness and much suffering and has borne the burdens of the home with a brave and loving spirit. The others are Mrs. Laura Bair, of Portland, Ind., and Charles E., of Delphi, Ind. The deceased was a faithful member of the Center Chapel Brethren church and had a host of friends. Services by the writer assisted by Rev. Roy Brumbaugh.

G. C. CARPENTER.

WEBB.—Brother Leonard Webb has gone home to God. He passed away at Ft. Scott, Kansas, after a brief illness of four days. Then his devoted wife, with their two children, Margaret aged four, and Charles, aged 13 months, struggled back through the blinding snows, to her old home, near Goshen, Ind., for burial. Brother Webb died in the hight of his ambition—to once more be in the active service of his Lord. He had hoped to return to South America, and wear out his life pleading for a superstitious and ignorant people to return unto God, but it was his will that his final resting place should be in the beautiful, shady cemetery at Goshen.

Brother Webb was one of those sweet-spirited Christians whose gentleness would make one feel that the storm was over, and the sun was once more shining. His patience, even when suffering, was sublime. I shall never forget the little visit we had together last fall at Mrs. Webb's old home, when he let me look into that great soul all aflame with holy zeal for his Lord. He took me into his confidence, and for a few minutes we were entirely absorbed in the things of the kingdom, and in the coming of the King. We were both blessed. My ambitions to "just do his will," and to endure more for him, have been higher since that afternoon. The smile that would break through that face of suffering is still lingering, and is leading me higher.

Sister Webb, with a brave, motherly heart is returning to the mission at Ft. Scott to do alone what they both hoped to do.

BEVAN.—Russel Wilbur, son of Brother and Sister W. A. Bevan, died Jaunary 8, 1918, aged 10 years, 2 months, 20 days. The funeral was held from the Hamlin Brethren church conducted by the pastor assisted by Rev. Clarke, of the Baptist church. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the church and community. May they find consolation in the hope of immortality through Jesus Christ.

S. C. HENDERSON.

OVERSTREET.—Ruth Marie, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Overstreet, of Roanoke, Virginia, was born June 14, 1916 and departed this life December 29, 1917, at the tender age of 1 year, 6 months and 14 days. Brother and Sister Overstreet and the remaining children have the heartfelt sympathy of all. The funeral was conducted from their home in Roanoke. Eld. James S. Gribble assisted the pastor in the service.

L. G. WOOD.

BROWN.—Sister Hettie Brown, wife of Verne Brown, departed this life January 4, 1918, at the age of forty-one years. She united with the Brethren church at Darwin, Indiana, under the ministry of R. R. Teeter twenty years ago. Her death has cast a gloom over the church, Sunday school and the S. S. C. E, as she was an active member in all. She leaves a husband, one daughter and three sons to mourn her departure. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Arthur Hoppes, assisted by W. T. Lytle, of Flora.

SAYLOR.—John B. Saylor, a loyal member of the First Brethren Church, of Canton, Ohio departed this life Jaunary 8, 1918, at the age of 58 years. Brother Saylor was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, of good Pennsylvania Dutch stock and inherited many of the qualities that make these good people so well known. A blacksmith by trade, he was always busy, working at his trade the day before his death, and in the continual knowledge that his life might be snuffed out at any moment. Brother Saylor leaves a wife and five children to sorrow at his "home going," but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. His entire family are members of the Brethren church, and it is hoped that his death may serve but to bring them all into a closer and truer fellowship with the church and the Christ. Funeral services were conducted at the family home on January 11, 1918, in the presence of many friends and neighbors who had met to pay their last respects to a friend and to sympathize with the bereaved family. May grace sufficient be vouchsafed unto the loved ones who remain to bear this parting and to abide faithful "till he come." Funeral services by the writer. DYOLL BELOTE.

BEAL.—Pearl Miller was born at Danville, Ohio, of those stalwart pioneers of the Brethren faith, Simon and Sarah Miller, on August 16, 1876. She was united to our brother Eld. J. C. Beal, on April 4, 1901. To this union were born two children, Donald S. and Elizabeth G. Our Sister Beal departed from among us to the paradise of the just made perfect through Christ, on January 6, 1918, as the result of an internal hemorrhage after an operation, the primary cause being appendicitis. Her death occurred in a hospital here in Long Beach, California, where she patiently spent her last days on earth. She was, indeed, a patient sufferer, utterly willing to go to be with Christ, and to stay with her earthly loved ones, as the lord might will. It was the sad duty of the undersigned to conduct her funeral, assisted by Brother Broad, of the LaVerne church. It was one of the hardest tasks of our life, as it recalled similar circumstances in our own life nine years ago, at Ashland, when we, too, were left with two little ones. They two were friends, and there was but one day between their ages. And Brother Beal had the same hard journey to make that we had to make. He took the body of his beloved one on a long journey—all the way back to Danville, Ohio, at which place interment was made.

Mrs. Beal was for a number of years at the head of the Department of Music in Ashland College, where her husband was also a professor. They came west, first to Sunnyside, Washington, in the hope that it might improve the health of his wife and mother. Later they came to California for the same reason, and Brother Beal became the pastor of the Compton Avenue church in Los Angeles. But in the mystery of his will, her journey on earth was ended here. The hope of the Master's early return never seems so sweet as in hours like this. And heaven itself will now ever be dearer to the heart of our faithful brother and his little family.

Services at Danville, Ohio, were conducted by J. L. Kimmel and W. H. Beachler.

Long Beach, California.

MILLER.—Eliza Jane Stoughteagle was born in Morrow county, Ohio, April 25, 1836, departed this life on January 6, 1918, aged 81 years, 7 months, 10 days. She was married Wm. A Miller January 2, 1866. To this union were born seven children, five of whom preceded the mother to the next life.

Sister Miller united with the Brethren church in 1889. She was a faithful Christian, a kind and loving mother and a good neighbor. May God richly bless the many friends who survive to mourn her loss.

CASSEL.—Eliza Cassel, the wife of Henry P. Cassel, died September 28, 1917, aged 87 years, 2 months and 24 days. Sister Cassel was a faithful member of the Brethren church and believed implicitly in our peculiar doctrine. A short time before she died brother A. E. Thomas and I were called in to anoint her according to the Word of God. May God continue to comfort the bereaved ones and sustain them in his grace. Services by the undersigned.

A. L. LYNN.

OAKES.—Master Wayne Wagoner Oakes, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. David Oakes, departed this life December 17, at the early age of 43 days. The funeral was held by the writer at the home on the afternoon of December 19. May God with his blessed Holy Spirit bind up these bereaved parents' hearts and show them they have a "treasure above." Besides the parents there is left to mourn his departure, two brothers and one sister. May God lead them all to Jesus' feet, as the mother is a member of the Flora Brethren church. W. T. LYTLE.

MILLER.—Mrs. Susan Sons Miller, widow of Hugh Miller, was born April, 1846, in Bedford county, Pa., and was a daughter of Samuel and Isabella Berkeblie Sons, died at her home, Franklin Borough, December 17, 1917. She is survived by three children, six grand children, three great- grand children, two sisters and one brother. She and Hugh Miller were married more than fifty years ago. In 1892 Mrs. Miller united with the Conemaugh Brethren church and continued loyally in that faith until called home. Funeral services in the Conemaugh Brethren church by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the church.

SMITH.—Curtis J. Smith, son of Samuel J. and Mary A. Smith, was born June 27, 1876, and died January 2, 1918 at his home in Franklin Borough. He is survived by his mother, two brothers and three sons and one step son. In 1896 he united with the Conemaugh Brethren church and remained a faithful and consistent member of the church until called home. Funeral services in the Conemaugh Brethren church by L. Garvin Smith, pastor.

COBAUGH.—Mrs. Mollie Till Cobaugh, wife of John Cobaugh, was born in Allegheny City, Pa., September 7, 1869, and died at her home in Dale Borough, Pa., January 3, 1918. In 1891 she was united in marriage to John Cobaugh. She was a member of the Conemaugh Brethren church. Funeral service conducted at the home by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

GOSSARD.—John W. Gossard, son of Crist and Mary Goughnour Gossard, was born July 16, 1878 and died January 8, 1919, at his home in South Fork, Pa. In 1910 he married Miss Elizabeth Penrod, who with one child survive to mourn his departure. He became a member of the Brethren church before death claimed him for its own. He is survived by his wife, one child, two brothers, two sisters and his mother. Funeral service in the Mount Hope United Evangelical church by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

Bowman.—Henrietta Bowman, the daughter of Monroe and Rosanne Lenheart, was born at Garret, Pennsylvania, December 11, 1849. She died at the family home in Glade City, Pennsylvania, January 11, 1918 at the advanced age of 68 years and 1 month. On February 14, 1880, she was united in marriage to Samuel Bowman and this home was blessed with one son and five daughters, all of whom survive her, the mother being the first death in the home.

Sister Bowman was a charter member of the Main Street Brethren church of Meyersdale and maintained her devotion to her church and family until the end came unexpectedly last week. Following the family custom one week ago Sunday the entire family met at home little expecting that the next Sunday they would all gather to bury their mother. The church and community as well as the family will miss the presence of Sister Bowman. Services conducted by the pastor by using the suggestive scripture for a text found in 1 Peter 2:7.

The Keynote in Music

We are told that the greatest orchestra, with its scores of trained musicians and their instruments, is helpless without the keynote. In the old fashioned singing school, the first task was to find the keynote. This was essential, for all other notes were modulated by it. If, for any cause, that note was not ascertained, the discord was so marked that the singers had to stop and start anew. We soon learned that this note was fundamental.

David is known as "the sweet singer of Israel." As one of God's prophets, he had discovered the keynote. In the preaching of the gospel, that sweetest of all music, is it not necessary to have the keynote? What is that note? In these days of weeping, praying and shouting, when, in the din and noise of the battle, with visions of "The rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air, Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there," are we not likely to lose sight of the keynote in our preaching? Listening to some men, we would conclude that the keynote was culture. Brethren pulpits, as a rule, are in no great danger of a surplus of the thing we call culture. But I have heard men who labored incessantly to create the impression that this old world was sick, not because of sin, but for lack of his type of culture. The diction of Macaulay was not so pronounced as his, and the oratory of a Webster could easily be improved. He hides the sermon in his culture, instead of sinking himself in his sermon. The people who were hungry of soul were lost in the flights of oratory, and were unable to distinguish the soundness of the sermon and its sophistry.

The world is going culture mad. The race between many a church and its competitor is to see which can appear to be the most cultured. Real religion is a secondary concern. My church has lost enough members in the last twenty years to make a congregation larger than it is now. And why? Because our people had not the truth? Not a bit of it. It was because the god of this world had blinded their eyes until culture looked better to them than New Testament religion. Jesus washed his disciples' feet, and told us to do as he had done to us. "Oh, yes," they say, "that might be a religious act, but it is not refined." Oh, it isn't? Poor Jesus, if you could have had a few lessons from our 'cultured' folks, then you would have known how to make a gospel! Lord, when you come back again, ask some of our 'cultured' folk what you should teach, for they think you are rather coarse in John the 13th chapter.

From others we would get the impression that the keynote is social service. "Questions of public health, punishment of crime, reformation of criminals, an equal distribution of wealth," is sounded from every sermon. There is much in these things that is good, and should be taught. It is in perfect keeping with the spirit and teaching of the gospel. But are these things the bugle blasts of the gospel, or are they the minor notes—the mere ripples on the mighty deep of our redemption? Are these things of primary importance in the preacher's work, or are they secondary? I do not hesitate to take the position that the things stressed by the social service propagandist is the effect of a bad life, rather than the effect of a bad system. Better environment? What was wrong with the environment of Adam and Eve? They went to the dogs, although surrounded by luxuries untold. It was a bad life that proved their undoing. If some Socialists would let Jesus possess their souls, they would have less to say about their "hard life." A great man has said, "Much of what is called Christian sociology is mere sentimental nonsense. There are some things to be remembered. One is, that the soul is of infinitely more value than the body. To heal a man's physical infirmities in the name of the Lord Jesus while neglecting the far more important matter of his spiritual welfare, is unspeakable folly." "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" And we should never forget that eternity is longer than time. To make the present life a dream of beauty, our homes veritable palaces, and cultivate the mind until it can not be satisfied except it revel in literature and art, what are these, indeed, when one reflects that life here is but a handbreadth, while the life beyond reaches away into incalculable periods of duration. The central thought of the gospel is not to live (here), but to get ready. Bethesda with its crowds of impotent folk and the mighty works of Jesus there, is not the central fact of Christiainity. Calvary, WITH ITS BLOOD, is its center, and the supreme question is the application of that blood to the souls of men. The better environment will then follow. A pig in the parlor is a pig still. There may be a change, but it will not be the pig that will change.

Listening to others, we would conclude that the keynote is the question of spirituality, and with a vague idea as to what that might be. The speaker manages to get the words "Holy Ghost" in about every alternate sentence. He talks much about the "Baptism of the Holy Ghost," and what with shaking the Bible in the air, and stamping the floor, and shrieking like a steam whistle, he would show people that he was spiritual. In other words, he gives people to understand that noise and spirituality were one and inseparable. He does not preach doctrine because doctrine, from his viewpoint, is mere formality. He fails to grasp that back of all of God's requirements as recorded in his Book, is the same Holy Spirit. Why some forms of worship, like prayer, are spiritual, while other forms, like baptism and the communion, are not spiritual, he has never thought out, only he has taken it for granted that they are not. While denouncing forms in worship, he does not hesitate to throw to the winds such forms of the Holy Spirit as Acts 2:38 and Acts 19:1-6, and substitute for them forms of his own making. The reason is, he can get more noise in his forms than he can get into Bible forms, and noise being a proof of the presence of the Spirit, in his estimation, Bible forms must go, and Bible people who are determined to know nothing else save Jesus Christ and him crucified, and whatever forms given in the Book necessary to know this, must be denounced as a 'formal people.'

Now, these words are not written as though the Evangelist readers were all preachers. Oh, no. There are a great many people besides preachers who know sound preaching when they hear it. There are a great multitude who know what their respective communities need, and every year our preachers are masured by our members in extending a call, and these laymen are anxious that the keynote shall be recognized, and that all other notes shall be modulated by it.

When the Wayward Girl Would Turn Back

It has long been known that it is rather difficult for the girl who has walked the primrose path to retrace her steps and to begin life over again on an honest basis. For this situation or condition the world and even the church have been severely criticised. It has been claimed by certain emotional and sentimental writers that the whole of human society is against all efforts of such girls to reform. It has been claimed that once it becomes known that a working girl has had a questionable past she invariably loses her position, that employers discriminate against such workers.

Because of such claims a feminine writer has taken the trouble to look into their validity with the following conclusions, based upon an interview with a girl who claimed to want to do honest work and earn a living but that the world would not let her. Two things the business world had asked of this girl, a reference and the nature and extent of her experience as a worker. Because she could give neither her opportunities for either securing or holding a position or a job were greatly lessened. This girl said she had tried for a position as bookkeeper, as a stenographer, as a clerk in a store and for housework or the care of children, but no one wanted her, and she claimed the world was unfair. But why did not the world want her? Was it because of her past? Hardly that as the lady writer who tried to help her find a position soon found out.

In the first place the girl didn't know how to keep books and she was a very poor stenographer, and the business world has no time to fool away with unprepared office help regardless of past sins or established character. Then she woulud not be on time in the morning and couldn't get a position as clerk and she couldn't guarantee to have dinner ready at a certain hour, and she didn't know how to boil potatoes and she couldn't bake any kind of bread and she didn't want to try cake and she had never roasted a piece of meat in her life, but finally a place was secured for her to straighten up the rooms and to make up the beds in a hotel, but the manager reported that she wasted her time and interfered with the work of the other girls in idle gossip.

From these experiences the writer concludes that it is not the people that will not let such a girl earn her living, but it is the girl herself after all that makes it out of the question for the business world to keep her in its service. Earning a living is itself a matter of business, and very little sentiment enters into it. The world is not altogether unjust in the matter. It is looking for work, hard work, earnest work, honest work and competent work from those who would find employment in it. If either a man or woman can give that, the world wants them and it is not going to be over scrupulous about one's past, but if one can not give faithful and honest service there is no place for them in the labor or business world even though their reputation and character from a moral standpoint be without spot or wrinkle. It is not a matter of injustice or a lack of sentiment, it is simply common sense.

An American Characteristic

Many people seem to be proud to be known as being characteristically American. Undoubtedly some American characteristics are far in advance of the characteristics of other nationalities, but not everything that is American is superior to all these. There are a few characteristics that are distinctively American that could be well improved upon.

The American people are among the most energetic people in all the world, in fact it may with all propriety be said they are in a class by themselves when it comes to energetic action, but the American energy is expended at the price of some other characteristics that are equally desirable, and even as it is may properly be said that a part of what is considered energy is nothing more than impatience. Many things in the commercial and industrial world at the present time are exceedingly trying on the patience of those who are directing the world's work. Business is greatly handicapped by conditions that may be prevented in the future but that seem to be beyond the control of man for the present, and business men chafe under this handicap.

The whole country is working at a disadvantage because of congested railway transportation and the delays in shipments of goods and raw material. The railway freight departments are besieged with tracer telegrams from men who are endeavoring to locate shipments of goods that are long over due, and frantic endeavors are made to get their shipments in ahead of other equally anxious buyers. At a recent convention of the Telegraph Superintendents' Association it was said that fully fifty per cent. of such telegrams are entirely unnecessary and practically useless, so far as expediting the movement of freight is concerned. But the impatience of the people is clearly shown in this rapidly increasing wasteful use of the telegraph wires and an effort is to be made to get the officials at Washington to adopt some plan that will give even the overworked wires a rest. The American people should learn that patience is a Christian virtue greatly to be desired

Woman's Work in the War

Agreat deal has been said and written concerning the place women shall occupy and the work they shall do while America is engaged in helping the Allies throttle once for all the spirit of Prussianism that is endangering the liberties of the people of all the world. Also a great deal has been written and a great deal prophesied concerning the place of woman in the industrial and business world after the war is over. It is only right that this question should concern the people, but it is always well to take a reasonably safe and sane view of such matters.

That the American women are able to step in and in a measurable degree successfully fill many of the places vacated by the men goes without saying and is accepted without authoritative proofs, but however much the womanhood of America may be taxed in this crisis and however willing it may be to perform any duty we most sincerely trust the time will never come when, controlled by the military spirit that controls Germany, the American women shall be called upon to do the work the women in Germany have been doing the last two or three years. Real conditions are not made known to the outside world, if there is any way to prevent such information leaking through the lines, and what information does leak out may be greatly exaggerated, but just two lines, in very small print, in a recent daily paper tell as much as whole volumes, if the statement is true. The statement is: "Women in Germany are doing the work formerly done by horses, that of being harnessed to a plow." Is it any wonder that we wish a better fate for our American women?

Slaves to Habit

There may be quite a difference between a habit and a custom, but what is regarded as a custom by the public frequently becomes a fixed habit with the individual and is as difficult to break as it is to change the custom of the public. Too often the term habit is applied only to those things which are considered detrimental to one's moral wellbeing while that which has no distinctively moral effect is regarded as custom. But one may become a slave to custom as well as a slave to habit.

Men have become so used to beginning their day's work at seven or eight or nine o'clock in the morning that they think the only way they can begin an hour or two earlier is to have all the clocks turned on one or two hours, then when when they go to work at five A. M. it will seem to them like seven. The agitation, which begins as regularly as the winter season passes, for daylight saving by having the time changed and regulated by ordinance or statute is but an acknowledgement that the people are such slaves to habit that unless the clock is turned on an hour or two they can not go to bed at night or get up in the morning at a respectable hour without artificial or mechanical aid.

Let all the stores and offices and factories begin work an hour earlier in the morning if they want to, but let the poor old clocks alone. They have troubles enough of their own.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Hear! Hear! Pastors! Keymen!

I guess you have the blanks. They are the first call to the churches to help make the record. This will be permanent; it is to be filed for the future. If you report, you will have the credit; if you do not, you will have discredit.

By February 20

This report is to be in the hands of the District Keyman who sent it and asked for its return by February 20, or you will not be in the first count. Reports received with post mark later than that date will not be counted at par.

What to do With Them

The District Keymen will tabulate these reports on the district blanks which they have received and send reports to each of these directors: Bame, Bell, Ronk, Miller and Wolford. It will be of vital interest to these men to know all about this report. The tabulation will not take long and will be well worth while. District reports that have a post mark later than February 23, will not be counted at par. Discounts will appear on a system to be made known later.

System Is the Word

Be exact; be particular; be prompt! Delay will spoil the plan and work disaster. We can not wait. Another report will be asked for in June, perhaps, and the last for the year, in August. If a church has not received a blank, write to your District Director, or the secretary, H. L. Goughnour, Waterloo, Iowa.

Will It Never Come?

How terribly lost I feel! My Evangelist for last week is not yet here and it is nearly time for the next. Wonder what's up? Of course, the weather is terrible, but how can we get along without the Evangelist? How can we measure the temperature of our churches when the mercury goes clear down into the bulb? Well, that is what it has been doing for several weeks by spells in the latitude of most of our churches and we shall feel the consequences in the reports, I am afraid. But I hope every one feels the loss of the Evangelist as I do. My! but it would be a spur to the new subscribers and the Honor Roll column if everybody got lonesome without it. I am interested in Goal 9 as much as anyone can be, I think, and every church ought to be seriously considering one of the two attractive offers the Publishing House is making to get churches classed right in its attitude to the church paper. But that Honor Roll has to get a lot longer if we get to Goal 9 by 1920.

A Fine Baby!

Did your mother ever tell you how they used to say that of you? Mine did; maybe she spoiled me by saying it, but here is where that psychology stops. We have a fine baby church down at Clay City. Not old enough to be called much but a baby and yet, see what a record they are making! Brother Kinzie sent me this report and did not even tell me or ask me to send it on to the page. But I can not forbear doing it in order that some more churches may tell us what they are doing. They are not yet out of the arms of the Mission Board, but listen to the way the pastor talks about all the goals, even to doing their share for Ashland College! And if I can rightly judge, several of the members have helped other colleges to endow before this. But ours is theirs now ,and Ashland will get her share from Clay City—baby church—just the same. Good luck to you down there. But look at this, people of other churches:

Goal 1 Will average considerably more than twenty-five per cent.

Goal 2 The required per cent. were present at communion services last year.

Goal 3 Depends upon me, and will be reached.

Goal 4 Membership already increased thirty per cent. over that of 1916.

Goal 5 Have never failed to do so, and too old to begin now.

Goal 6 Have one man taking up pastorate now.

Goal 7 Have voted to adopt Budget System. Now working out details.

Goal 8 We are awaiting Beachler's arrival. Expect to do nothing less, in spite of strain under which we have been.

Goal 10 Paid in full.

Goal 11 Our percentage paid last year. Expect to do no less this.

Goal 12 Will be taken care of.

Goal 14 Will be reached this year.

Goal 16 Have had full quota both last year and the year before.

Ohio Blows In

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good," and only a day or so after I wrote as if Ohio was about "all in," there came with an eastern breeze the proof that Ohio needed no prodding but that they were coming, slow but sure. Of course, Ohio had a poor chance to get started as Brother Baer got the chief place some weeks after Conference, through the resignation of Brother McClain. It was not fair to ask Baer to get on his feet as quickly as some and here's to his success. Baer, we believe in you and your organization and we believe that what you lost in delay, you will gain in zeal, and we still wish Ohio all the success that is her due in the race for the goals. If churches need information as to the reaching of certain goals, let them ask the leader of that goal in their state. Directors, specialize! Be informed! Be ready to give a reason and a plan.

Finis

Well, here I am at the close of my page and if you do not like it, help me to make a better. Thirty days more, and we shall have the real facts about you or know if you are "slackers" or the reason why you have not succeeded. If there is anything you can do to get across the plate what you have failed to do to date, get busy. Blanks will soon be coming to you asking for a definite report of what you have accomplished and I shall have the fun of telling on this page how well the churches are doing. Am I afraid? Not awfully! I do know that one of the goals that Indiana thought would be hard to attain has not so proven. Indiana has easily and without covetousness, I believe, rendered her verdict in favor of Ashland College. Of course, it took a lot of the time of a good strong man to get it, and that leads me to say to the DIRECTORS all along the line, you can not get yours done without some diligent work, also. Specialize on your line! Keep busy!

BAME.

A Word to Pennsylvania

Pennsylvania, how about the Four-Year Program? Reports received indicate that the district is going to make the goals in fine shape. But, brethren, there has been only a 50% response to my appeals. Your congregation may be making good, indirectly I hear that some are, but if you are to receive credit and if the district is to be reported in full, you must report to your District Director. Read again my letter of December 21; look up the Pastoral Survey Report blank, fill out and return to me at once. Where there is no pastor I have written to the Sunday school superintendent, and now kindly ask you to act as Congregational Keyman. A word to each keyman. On January 30, I mailed to you a Congregational Report blank. Please fill out and return to me not later than February 20. Perhaps I should ask you to pardon this publicity, but then it is not to be compared to that which you will bring upon yourself later, if you fail to report. Please don't criticize. At the appointed hour I will report to the National officers, and we want you in the front line and have not time to write you personally. Pennsylvania is the largest district and should have a full report. Now is the time to do the work that in the end we may "go over the top." W. C. BENSHOFF, District Director.

An Explanation

To set Ohio right, I wish to explain to General Director Bame and all who read the "calling" he administered in Evangelist of January 30, 1918. Ohio IS all right on the Four-Year Program and the Ohio director has very likely done as much as any other district director in the time he has been serving. In the first place, he was appointed to that position after the resignation of the first appointee and therefore the other district directors had the jump on him by several weeks. In the second place, he had to appoint his state helpers by mail and had to contend with a number of refusals. And with a few other things to do besides this one job the Ohio director feels that he is not one whit delinquent and deserves no censure. Every member of the Ohio organization as published in the above mentioned Evangelist issue, can be depended on to pull his share of the load. Yes, we are getting thinsg done over here, all we have been instructed to do, besides some plans of our own. We will be with you for mutual deference and co-operation.

Facing the New Year

Preached at Williamstown Brethren Church January 6, 1918, By W. R. Deeter

THEME: "Hope, Opportunity, Courage." Ephesians 5: 1-16

Another year of opportunity; another year of joy mingled with sorrow, of success, of failure, of faithful service to God and humanity or selfish indifference has passed. Whatever the soul's business has been the accounts have been made up, and the book for the last year has closed. Has this book been closed forever? It is only fools that say, "The past is past, and we can not change it." The past is part of the present and helps mold every fresh experience. What we are to day, what we shall be tomorrow, depends very largely upon the influence the past has had upon us. Memory holds last year and all our years in her grasp. Her images are not dead things. They smile or weep, bless or sting us.

The days come and go, and the experiences of yesterday help us on our way. We are all borne out of our youth into maturity and old age, and finally beyond the reach of all earthly scenes by a force beyond our control. The garnered wisdom of the past is carried forward to work out the problems of advancing years. The whole past of humanity, all that man has ever done or suffered, is available for our education, and every year adds to its treasures. Men and women like us have made the past, and we are to study and get from it a heart of wisdom.

Once more the bells and whistles have blown, to announce the outgoing of the old year, and the welcoming in of the new year. What this new year may mark on the dial of eternity we can not tell. As we face the tragedies of our big world, it makes our hearts shudder. Did ever our old world face such a new year? Was there ever so much wrapped up in twelve months as there is tucked away in the leaves of 1918? Who would dare to push the curtain aside even if he could! Oh, no, let the tragic scene unfold slowly, for we can not stand many of them at a time. We have an idea of what lies beyond, but God keeps them hidden from us as long as possible, that we may acquire strength for their disclosure.

Usually we enter upon the New Year with new resolutions, new hopes, new ambitions, new desires, and higher ideals for a better life, but our aspirations and inspirations seem to be throttled; our hopes for better things seem to be fighting for existence in the dying embers of a year fraught with bloodshed and distress. What is there to hope for, or what have we to spur us on to a better year than any of the past!

So far as this world is concerned we are hopeless, but we remember that the Psalmist said, "Why art thou cast down, O, my soul....? Hope thou in God."

So that is my message to every discouraged heart, "Hope, not in the arms of the world kingdom to bring us out of this awful chaos; nor in the military tactics of heroic and courageous men, but 'Hope thou in God.'" He is the captain of all armies, the generalissimo of all battles, the King of all countries, and he will bring us out on the victorious side, if we "Hope in God."

This is the time we should do well to remember the words recorded in Deut. 33:25: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." It is well that we live only one day at a time, for, especailly is it true now, that "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Today's load is all we can carry, so let us be careful that we do not shoulder any of the burdens and responsibilities of tomorrow. For if we make good today in the sight of the Lord, he will give us strength for tomorrow with its load. May the prayer of our heart be:

"Each future scene to thee I leave
Sufficient 'tis to know
Thou canst from every evil save,
And every good bestow."

May we have the mind that was in Christ Jesus and thus be prepare for anything that may come to us or ours. May we get a heart-grip upon the almighty, and hold fast there 'till the storms of life be past, and we are safely anchored within the vale where war with its heartaches and its distresses shall be left behind and where we shall see the King in his beauty.

It is true that we enter the threshold of the new year with trembling step, but let us remind ourselves that,

"To thy saints, while here below,
With new years new mercies come;
But the happiest year they know
Is at last, which leads them home."

No new year has dawned in history with darker clouds hanging upon the horizon of the future, than the present. The world war goes forward with unabated fury; the ever widening circle of the maelstrom of hate and ruin continues to suck into its powerful swirl the nations of the earth.

The words of our Lord Jesus Christ as recorded in Luke are literally fulfilled in these perilous times. "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." There has, perhaps, never been a time when uncertainty and anxiety so pervaded the minds of world rulers and political and military leaders of the people.

Nineteen seventeen has turned over the world's events to the new year 1918, leaving only memories of war, strife and ideals of worldwide liberty to note its passing. This is America's first war-time New Year, but the year 1918 can never be what it otherwise might have been in vie wof this utter and regretted self-sacrifice. While they fight abroad to establish democracy, we at home must live to establish Christianity. In the face of their heroism and self-sacrifice how utterly despicaole the frivolity of sensualism of the gourmands and guzzler welcoming the new year amid the depravities of the cabaret! How utterly hateful the greed of the brewer and selfishness of the profiteer! Those men abroad are our challenge to be useful men and loyal men; self-sacrificing and Christian men. While they are fighting in the trenches for freedom from Prussianism, we at home should be cleaning up the evils of our land so that they may have a place worthy to come back to when this cruel war is over.

Coming upon this year's heels is the young and sprightly year of hopes, promises and a future in which America is expected to fully re-establish free peoples in the world—an epoch of civilization.

New Year's resolutions, good wishes, plans and dreams will characterize the new cycle, and we as a people are expected to do our share in making it what a great year ought to be. The closing year has seen many strange sights, but the new one has many others in store no doubt. There have been Liberty Bonds, Liberty Loans, Thrift Stamps, taxes and revenues to carry on the war,—at an expense never dreamed of before. Rationing diets for the hundred millions have succeeded in eliminating much waste, and new ideas of government have been propounded to the world.

This is a year of COURAGE. That's what we all need to meet the demands that will be made upon us. How can we then wish each other a happy New Year when we know this will be the unhappiest year of our lives? No home in the land will be untouched by sorrow. Again will be heard the words of the prophet, "In Ramah a voice is heard, lamentation and weeping, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not." It may not be your boy who lies under the sod in France; it may not be your boy who comes back sightless, maimed or crippled; but it will be the boys of thousands of your fellows, and no wall will be thick enough to deafen you to the cry of others. Shall we wait with an untouched imagination for death to knock at our very door? The circle of woe is widening and it may soon swallow us. What mockery then to wish any one a happy New Year? Is it not like wishing one to be blind, deaf and unfeeling? Should we not say rather, "I wish you a courageous New Year," for courage will be the one thing we need.

And yet I still believe it possible to wish any one a happy New Year. It can not be a year made happy by the gratification of any merely personal desire. It can be only the happiness which comes to him who has completely forgotten himself in a great love for something greater than himself. If you believe that from this war will come to man a better earth on which to live, freed forever from the curse of war; if you believe there will issue a free humanity; if you believe enduring peace can come only by paying this fearful price, then, in spite of the woe, you can be happy. It will be a new and sacred kind of happiness—the happiness of the early Christian martyrs at the stake; so happy in their vision of heaven above they did not feel the flames of earth. If a vision of heaven in the skies could make them happy, can we not be made happy by the vision of heaven on earth?

These are days of realism, and with the Psalmis twe can rightfully say, "Get you a mind of wisdom and remember, that righteousness exalteth a nation." Psalm 90:12. As American people we can rightfully say, we entered the present great struggle with a righteous purpose in view. We have gone into it not for financial gains, for honor, for possession, or for any other reason that might be considered an unworthy one. We have entered it for the sake of liberty and humanity. America is fighting for freedom of the seas; to compel Germany to restore Belgium; for the salvation of France, England and Russia, and last, but not least, for America. It not only means a world democracy, but more than that it means world peace and Christianity, purchased not only at the price of millions of lives, but through the shedding of the blood of the Son of God, Christ, the Savior of the world.

The coming year ought to be a year of great religious revivals. One more year is ahead of us to snatch men from hell. A great revival is ahead of us if we pay the price. It is God's truth glowing in the hearts of his prophets in every age that levels all the barriers of time, race, station between men and brings past, present and future into one. This old world is marked with the battles and ravages of war; she is powder stained, wounded and bleeding with shot and shell, but some day this will cease, and from the debris of the past will rise no more the roar and shriek of cannon, and smoke of guns will no more dim the horizon, and the battle cry will be hushed forever, when men will turn to other avocations to perpetuate the human race rather than destroy it. And we will see then a new world calm and peaceful from the storm, as the ocean wave that has been lulled into a quiet sleep and restful pose. Then in its reconstruction, we will feel the mighty power of the most high God revealing to the world that his Son has come to live and reign with his chosen ones for a millennial season.

The dawn of the new year is for many the signal for new and good resolutions. What better resolve could be made than the determination by the grace of God to have a sweeter home life than ever before? Home can be heaven on earth, providing the Lord has his rightful place in it. Let us see to it that the year 1918 be a year in which he shall have the pre-eminence in home and heart. Raise again the family altar if perchance it has been broken down, and around it renew your covenant vows. Gather the members of the family around the Bible and together kneel in a new consecration which shall carry you through the untrodden track of the year. May we trace the untrodden path with our eyes looking to God for guidance, wisdom, direction and help. Pray for grace to make Christ pre-eminent in all your ways during 1918. Christ first in heart, home, business and recreation.

Nineteen eighteen is to be for this nation a baptismal year as our soldiers, fruits of our own loins, are in France, tens of thousands of them. Their in answer to our country's call, ready to do and to dare, ready to die in the cause of freedom.

Shall we not as Christians at home be even as loyal to him whom we all serve. God is calling us to arms, to serve in the ranks of his church and its auxiliaries. We need volunteers for Jesus to serve his banner true.

It seems to the writer there never was a time in all the history of the world when it was half so glorious to be a minister of the gospel; to be able in the midst of the wreck and ruin of the times, to point the people to things imperishable, to tell them of a city which hath foundations, far beyond the reach of the enemies' guns; a home where peace undisturbed shall reign forever.

Now is the time for the minister to encourage the people in the work of the church, to unite themselves to every good cause and plan for relieving the suffering of the world. Now is the time to stimulate them to high and holy effort; to call the idler into the vineyard to unselfis hservice. No man can stand idle in the market place saying: "No one hath hired us." Today there is work for every one, and work is a great blessing. Every man, woman and child may find something useful to do, something to help our poor, staggering world upon the road to a glorious destiny.

The time of God's judgments has come. The Christian's opportunity has arrived. His words of warning no longer appear to be dreams; tremendous facts look us in the face. The foundations of society are tottering. All people who have any right to claim intelligence, are thinking seriously; they are ready to give attention to the man of God. They want to hear from the headquarters of the universe. In these times they have no desire to hear some one orate on the difference between Milton and Browning, or Paul and Shakespeare,or some other trifling subject that has no right to be discussed in the pulpit, that has no comfort for the troubled soul, no pardon for the broken-hearted sinner.

Hearts that are thirsting for the water of life in these days, and the New Year will mark many a new pilgrim on the way to life eternal. Men are craving the companionship of true hearted souls, are asking to be fed upon the living bread, that they may be sustained in this day of trial.

We need to comfort the sorrowing, the dying; wounds need the Balm of Gilead to make them heal. God has not forgotten us, and our faith should be strong, and our heart fixed, that out of this war will come peace; out of this struggle there will come joy and rest, in spite of the confusion and destruction we are moving forward to a golden age. In the home, the church, the camp, on the march, in the trench, among the wire entanglements, among masses of dead and dying, and in the hospital, there is the great and invisible, compassionate Christ, ready to forgive the penitent and save the lost.

This is the glorious fact that looms up in the wilderness of sin and confusion. This fact is a sun-burst amid the smoke and cloud of the hour however hard the wind may blow, however high the waves may roll. Let ships go down, let cities burn, let cathedrals fall beneath crashing shells, let villages and farms be swept away, while God remains to love us, Christ to forgive us, and the Holy Spirit to comfort us, we hope on and sing with inward joy in the midst of the conflict, rejoicing as we march on in the great Christian warfare for the salvation of souls for his kingdom, with hope in God, courage for our tasks and hearts and minds open for the opportunities before us.

The Budget System of Subscribing to the Evangelist

Every individual squanders a lot of money in his life time in trying out unwise plans. Had the writer never made any unwise expenditures, he might be making his pastoral calls in a Hudson super-six, or a Cadillac eight; as it is, he is saving up his money to buy a bicycle this spring! Then he expects to go "over the top."

Organizations are quite as free as individuals in squandering money upon unwise plans. If the funds which the Brethren church and auxiliaries have spent unwisely could be gathered together, and the sum total turned over to Ashland College, it is quite probable that a very fine Brethren preacher could be released from a very undesirable job and a very efficient pastor added to our very needy ranks, while Ashland College would have more endowment than she needs.

Unwise expenditure of money, however, is not always to be deplored. It gives valuable experience to such as have the ability to learn. We usually learn the right methods of doing things by first trying out, disastrously, all available wrong methods. Yet, it is desirable that experience be forced to yield dividends as soon as possible.

If the Brethren church is to become a strong and efficient organization, her supreme needs are a strong and efficient college and a strong and efficient publishing house. It would be difficult to state which one of these institutions is more important.

These two institutions are the ones that pour life-blood into all the congregations, Sunday schools, conferences, S. S. C. E. and Y. P. S. C. E. organizations of the church. Our missionary organizations reach out after new converts and new congregations, and give assistance to weak and struggling congregations. The college and the publishing house support all the missionary endeavors of the church, both at home and abroad, and in addition minister in indispensable ways to every vigorous and self-supporting organization in the brotherhood.

In a word, the College and Publishing House contribute invaluable service toward keeping the established congregations and organizations of the church strong, and also support every expansion activity of the church.

For years earnest conviction has been growing upon the writer that the Brethren church is not giving proportionately enough support to her sustaining and strengthening institutions. Our enthusiasm for the development of our institutions has not kept pace with our enthusiasm for expansion.

A glance at the Four-Year Program shows that we are now aiming at an annual offering of $15,000 to the General Missionary Board and $10,000 to the Foreign Missionary Board. If these amounts are added to the amounts expended for district missions, and the missionary contributions of Sunday schools, S. S. C. E. and Y. P. S. C. E. organizations and congregations that do not pass through our regular missionary treasuries, we, certainly, shall be expending $35,000 annually for missions by 1920.

This is as it should be; or, at least, it is not any more than we should expend. But, compare with these amounts the contribution we have made to Ashland College, the Publishing House and the Superannuated Ministers' Fund.

The campaign for $100,000 for Ashland College endowment seems a big undertaking. But the Four-Year Program, at least if district missions are figured in, aims at more than $100,000 for missions. The campaign for college endowment is only occasional. For years we have put the college of with mere pittances.

The Four-Year Program calls for the magnificent (?) sum of $1,500 annually for the Board of Benevolences. This board provides support for all of our superannuated ministers. (May God kindly take us home before we need the assistance of this board.) The Four-Year Program provides nothing specifically for the education of poor, but worthy young men and women for the service of the church.

The Four-Year Program requires "The Brethren Evangelist in seventy-five per cent. of homes." For all these subscriptions, however, the Publishing Company will give to the subscribers, full value in materials and service. There is not a gleam of an idea in the Four-Year Program that would assist our Publishing House to become a large, powerful, adequate institution.

Frankly and honestly, therefore, we are forced to confess that the Brethren church has not been giving, and is not now planning to give, adequate and proportionate support to her vital institutions. She has not been supplying sufficient sustenance to the blood streams that course throughout her entire body. Some of these days she may find the opportunity to strike with all the force of a British tank, and find herself unable to sustain and operate a Ford.

The plea of this article is primarily in behalf of the Publishing House. It is an unsolicited article.

The Brethren church has not yet learned the potentiality for propaganda that inheres in the printed page. Modern freak religious movements gain their multitudes of adherents largely through the lavish use of printing. Why should not a sane denomination use the same effective method?

Our Publishing House ought to be distributing, free if necessary, millions of forceful and attractive pamphlets and tracts. The Evangelist ought to be brightened with more cuts and illustrations, perhaps with a cover printed in colors. Through the Publishing House, unique novelties advertising our various beliefs and activities should be poured throughout the entire brotherhood.

No criticism of our Publishing House officials is here implied. The very opposite in intended. It never ceases to be amazing how well Brethren Teeter and Gnagey do their work when their multiplied tasks are considered. That we are allowing one man to be both the Editor of the Evangelist and the Business Manager of the Publishing Company should cause us to blush with shame. The manufacturer who forces his employees to work 14 hours a day is no worse than we. "All hail," to the entire personnel of the Publishing House for the splendid work that is being done. Yet, both the personnel and equipment of the Publishing House are inadequate for our present needs.

Why should it be thought improper to take an offering each year for the Publishing House, or to provide a gift for her in the annual budget of the congregations? No institution contributes more, perhaps no one contributes so much, to the welfare of the entire church. It would not be improper. Neither will the Brethren church ever grow as she might, nor become as strong as she should, until something of this nature is done.

The Publishing Company is not asking for contributions and offerings, however; much as she is entitled to do so. She is asking only that the congregations subscribe to the Evangelist according to the budget system, and that the Sunday schools purchase their supplies from her.

Brethen congregations and Sunday schools that do not do these two things manifest a deplorable lack of Brethren loyalty, and show themselves pathetically incapable of appreciating and supporting a constructive program of Brethren advancement.

The budget system of subscribing to the Evangelist means simply that the Evangelist is sent into every active home represented in the congregation, and the bill is paid through the congregation's treasury. As an incentive to the use of this system, the Publishing Company charges $1.50 instead of $2.00 for each yearly subscription sent in according to this plan. If some of the yearly subscriptions in the congregation have not run out, proper deduction is made for them.

Viewed from every angle, this is a constructive method. It lessens the amount of detail work that must be done in the publishing office, as all the subscriptions from one congregation are sent in at the same time and paid for in a lump sum. It brings the church paper into the very homes that need it most, which under the old system would never receive it. It permits the publishing plant to be run more nearly to capacity upon its essential output, and thus makes possible a little more profit on each subscription sold. It builds up and makes strong one of the vital institutions of the church by a method that brings back full value received into the congregations in the form of literature that will build up and make them strong. It is a constructive plan; it is a plan that manifests vision.

Is it costly? The congregation which the writer serves receives the largest number of Evangelists of any congregation in the brotherhood. They are secured by the budget system. An effort is being made to have the members of the congregation increase slightly their payments into the local treasury and many of them are doing so. It is expected that in the course of a few years the Evangelist will wholly pay for itself. The first year the use of the budget system will not cost the congregation as much as one of the numerous contributions to missions. This would no doubt be true of practically every congregation in the brotherhood, if wisdom is used in adopting the system.

Certainly the future development of the Brethren church lies in the direction of building up and making strong her vital institutions that minister to the life and strength of the entire church, while at the same time her expansion activities are given proportionate, enthusiastic support. The budget system of subscribing to the Evangelist is a peculiarly happy method of building up one of her vital institutions. It is mutually advantageous to the Publishing House and to the congregations that use it. A strong Publishing House and a large circulation of the Evangelist and more intelligent support of every other general activity of the church. It appears that a congregation which can not find a way to use this constructive system in running the risk of becoming a "slacker" congregation in a predominantly important respect. That so many congregations are adopting the system as they become acquainted with it is highly encouraging.

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
"I would be pure, for there are those who care;
"I would be strong, for there are those who suffer;
"I would be brave, for there is much to dare.
"I would be friend to all—the foe, the friendless.
"I would be giving and forget the gift;
"I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
"I would look up, and laugh, and love, and lift."

The Sunday School

Improved Uniform Lessons

BY AMOS R. WELLS, LITT.D., LL.D.

The Internatioual Uniform Sunday School Lessons have been the pricipal factors in the growth of the Sunday school to its present noble proportions. Before these uniform lessons were adopted there was chaos in the Sunday school world, a variety of courses being put forward by many publishers, with only meager sets of helps for any one course. The coming of the International Uniform Lessons changed all that. The large field thus opened attracted many publishers and the best religious writers. Upon the passages of scripture chosen for the Uniform Lessons a wonderful flood of light was poured. Lesson helps of the greatest variety and of the highest helpfulness were multiplied. They appeared even in the secular newspapers, and all the religious newspapers treated the Sunday school lessons as a matter of course. Weeklies, monthlies, annuals in abundance contributed their guidance and inspiration. Every teacher and pupil had at hand all the aid needed for satisfying a Bible lesson.

All these advantages are retained and many others are gained by the Improved Uniform Lessons issued in January, 1918. The Committee have sought to meet all the legitimate criticisms that have been brought against the old Uniform Lessons, and produce lessons retaining as far as possible the advantages of uniformity, while incorporating as far as possible the advantages of the Graded and Departmental Lessons.

The framers of the Improved Uniform Lessons, admit of course, that there are many passages of scripture which should not be set for the study of children, and that there are other passages so familiar that they may not furnish a helpful basis for the study of adult classes. It will not be found that many of the first-indicated passages are suited, eitherfi for the Sunday school study of adults, and it will also be found that the Graded Lessons use the most familiar passages for the older pupils as well as the younger. But, aside from this, the Improved Uniform Lessons present to each grade or department a lesson that may wisely be taught to pupils of that age. These Uniform Lessons recognize every grade or department. In framing the lesson for any week the committee takes up each grade in turn and considers carefully whether the scripture passage will furnish a thoroughtly teachable lesson for that grade. If it will not, another passage is chosen for the grade. This is made possible, without departing far from the principle of uniformity, by the inclusion of rather larger portions of scripture, often an entire chapter, in the assigned lesson. It usually happens that if one part of the chapter is suited to the adults but not to the primary pupils, another part, closely related, is precisely adapted to the younger classes. The older pupils are set to studying the entire chapter, with special emphasis upon the parts that appeal to the mature mind, while to the younger classes are assigned the verses of the chapter that are within their compass.

While this is done as often as is necessary, and while the committee would not hesitate to appoint a lesson for any grade from quite a different portion of scripture rather than assign a passage unsuited to that age, yet in practice it has been found that usually the same passage wonderfully adapts itself to all ages and grades. Bible truths have a marvelous range. They are milk for babes and meat for strong men.

The first improvement, then, of the Improved Uniform Lessons consists in grading the uniform lessons. They have always been graded in the treatment of the lesson writers, but now the Lesson Committee makes the grade adaptations so plain that no one can fail to see them. Different titles, even, are provided for the different grades, and different golden texts, if no one memory verse can be found that is suitable for all ages. Illustrative story material is pointed out for the younger classes, if the lesson passage is not a story. It never could be said justly, save of very exceptional lessons, that the Uniform Lessons were not adapted to all ages; now this criticism can not be brought against any lesson of the uniform series. While the thought of the family, the school and the entire religious world is centered upon one passage of scripture, there are drawn from that passage just the truths most helpful to pupils of all ages. We have a graded uniform lesson.

Another improvement, and a very decided one, which has been made in the Uniform Lessons is the introduction of frequent topical courses, courses which depart from the cronological or historical order and study the Bible by themes. These courses take important subjects and trace them through the entire Bible, thus gaining a view of the scriptures as a whole, and focussing upon each theme all Holy Writ. Thus in the first year of the new lessons we have a quarter devoted to Studies in the Christian Life, with lessons on beginning the Christian life, on the Bible, prayer, obedience, growth, helpfulness, church work, speaking for Christ, giving, conquering evil, winning the world to Christ, and the fruits of the Christian life. Certainly the youngest as well as the oldest should be set to studying the Christian life, viewing it as a whole, building up its elements into a complete structure. Certainly every theme in the quarter has its applications to the youngest as well as the oldest. And certainly there are enormous advantages in setting fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, to studying obedience at the same time, or prayer, of the Bible, or helpfulness, or any others of the fruitful subjects.

Similarly in the second year of the new series we have six months given up to Great Teachings of the Bible, on such subjects as God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, faith, sin, salvation, the Sabbath—the lesson in each case being brought within the range of the youngest and widened out to stimulate the most mature.

In the third year the Life and Writings of Peter and John furnishes a topical course on a historical basis. In the fourth year (which is as far as the committee has definitely gone) there is a quarter devoted to the Social Teachings of the Bible, and it has been interesting to see how all the great social interests, such as labor, wealth, education, recreation, have their beginnings in the life of the child, and their easy and natural adaptations to all grades of the school; how easy it is, also, to find great central Bible passages for them all, passages within the child's compass while they present most inspiring outreaches for the most advanced student.

In the use of the Improved Uniform Lessons numerous minor improvements will be noted, such as the naming of a devotional passage for reading in the general exercises of the school when the central passage selected is not of devotional tenor; such as the numerous references to illustrative passages throughout the Bible given in each lesson for the use of teachers; such also as the many "additional references" for the older grades. These all mean unstinted labor on the part of the committee, and add much to the value of the lessons to both teacher and pupil.

The Improved Uniform Lessons meet every just criticism ever made of the old Uniform Lessons. To be sure, they do not begin with Genesis and plod straight through the Bible, but neither do the Graded Lessons. The charge of "hop, skip and jump," can certainly be applied to the Graded Lessons, if to any series that ever was put forth. They are constantly leaping from Old Testament to New Testament and back again, making the "hop, skip and jump" many times in the same year and even frequently in the same quarter.. To a far greater extent than the Graded Lessons the Improved Uniform lessons present a continuous view of the Bible history and an orderly view of Bible teachings. For the first six months they take up the study of Mark, and every chapter and every verse of the gospel is designated for study. Then they in three months present an orderly view of the Christian life, gathering material from the Bible as a whole. Next they begin a series of studies in the Old Testament which proceeds in historical order from Genesis to Malachi, pausing here and there for further topical studies, or for the constantly recurring studies of the life of Christ and the history of the early church. There is no confusion, no jumping from Elijah to Jacob, from Jacob to Nehemiah, and from Nehemiah to David, as in the Graded Lessons. When a course of study is begun it is followed steadily, though not continuously, to the end. Not continuously, because it is earnestly felt that no pupil should be allowed to spend many months in the school without meeting face to face the matchless figure of Jesus Christ.

The Improved Uniform Lessons are not modeled upon the secular schools, nor should they be. The public school analogy is a false one, though it is constantly pressed by the advocates of graded lessons. No one in his senses would advocate teaching calculus to six-year-olds or the primer to high school pupils. There is an age for natural history and an age for language, and an age for the higher mathematics, economics and metaphysics. But in the Sunday school we have one text-book, the Bible, and one theme and object, the development of Christian character. The work in all

The Thought and Work of the Church

A cable from C. F. Yoder says: "We have arrived safely in Buenos Aires."

The second number of the Brethren Missionary has now been mailed to all subscribers and will now continue regular quarterly visits.

Once again we are adding the name of a Brethren church to the Evangelist Honor Roll. This time it is the Berne, Indiana, church with W. F. Johnson as pastor. This is one of the live country churches of Indiana and the pastor seems to have the respect of all the community. Fifty-five subscriptions are sent us from this congregation which Brother Johnson says represents more than one hundred per cent. of the active Brethren families of the church. Here is our hand Brother Johnson, we loved you before you accomplished this feat, but we love you more than ever now.

Brother Drushal's pen has been silent for some time, though we have heard more or less frequently from Lost Creek through other sources, but we are sure our readers will be gald to read the news once again from Brother Drushal himself. There have been both glad days and sad days at Lost Creek, but the glad days seem to be in the ascendency just now. The incident related by Brother Drushal of the sacrifice made by Elizabeth Haddix for the good of Lost Creek should shame some of the rest of us.

Brother Lambert writes interestingly of the events of college life at Ashland and we are glad to give room to these notes weekly for we have learned that there are hundreds of former students scattered all over the brotherhood who are glad to keep in touch with old Ashland and to be permitted to catch a glimpse of college life and thus to be reminded of days long gone by. Moreover there is always something worth while to be reported from the activities of the student body and Brother Lambert makes a good reporter.

Morton L. Sands, of Sergeantsville, New Jersey, is another one of our pastors who seldom writes of his work, but this week he gives us a splendid report from his charges. At Sergeantsville three members were added to the church as a result of a special effort by the pastor. Brother Sands has been retained on this charge at a substantial increase in salary and he has been the recipient of a number of other valuable tokens of the friendship and love of his people.

Brother Cover seems to have been too excited to report all the good things that had happened at Hagerstown when he wrote last, so he makes request to be allowed to give a supplementary report this week. We gladly give him the opportunity for we are sure the entire brotherhood will be glad to rejoice with him that his people whom he serves hold himself and family in such high esteem. Sometimes people make light of a pastoral donation party, but he must be a hopeless case who would not rejoice over such an expression of love as that found in the donation party that called on Brother Cover's family recently.

Willis E. Ronk and his people at St. James, Maryland, had a most blessed time together in a thirteen day meeting. The immediate fruit of the meeting was five souls added to the church by baptism. Brother Ronk also has an important announcement for the pastors of the Maryland-Virginia conference which should receive the most careful and prayerful attention. Committees and directors are helpless unles sthey have the co-operation of the pastors of the districts which they serve.

A new corresponding secretary reports the progress of the Brethren at Clay City, Indiana. This is one of the newer and smaller churches of Indiana, but it has big and we believe holy ambitions and we most sincerely hope they may all be realized. They are earnestly seeking the goals set for them by our Four-Year Program committee. A parsonage has been recently purchased for the pastor which in itself is a good sign of permanency in the work of the church.

The work at Whittier, California, is also reported by a new lay correspondent of the church. Whittier has been blessed of the Lord during the past year. A healthy growth has resulted from intensive cultivation of the field and only recently seven more members were added to the church. The attendance at the midweek prayer service is remarkable. Not many of the larger and older churches can report as good prayer meeting attendance. An attendance of 125 at a country prayer meeting in addition to the one held in town is a most remarkable achievement. We pray the Lord may continue to bless the work at Whittier.

Brother George E. Cone, president of the Illiokkota district of Christian Endeavor presents in a very forceful manner the work programmed for the young people of that district. We are indeed glad to note that every department of work being carried on by the Brethren is being stirred up as we have not seen it in more than a quarter of a century's connection with the church. We believe this stirring up will send the church forward as never before.

Brother A. E. Thomas has found that the battles for the Lord in which he has been engaged as an evangelist this winter are often very real from a physical as well as a spiritual standpoint, and he has found the "going over the top" of snow drifts does not stir up religious enthusiasm as much as "over the top" from the trenches in France does for the armies of the Allies. But Brother Thomas is a brave soul and not easily discouraged and labors in the hope that better days will come. From the report we gather that he is now laboring at Middlebranch, Ohio.

We wish to call special attention this week to the contribution from the pen of H. L. Goughnour. This is a most forceful contribution and carries all the more weight because Brother Goughnour is not writing from theory but from actual experience. Many of the things he says we have thought but have never given public expression to our thoughts. One can not realize what great things might be done for the Brethren church, if only the most were made of the opportunities presented by the publishing interests of the church. Marvelous things have already been accomplished by the thirty-two churches that have accepted our plan to place the Evangelist on their annual budget. One good church increased its subscription list ONE THOUSAND per cent. The field was there, but lack of system had failed to gather the harvest that was only waiting for some one to thrust in the sickle in a systematic way. Our faith in the ultimate success of the plan is greater than ever.

The January report of the offerings for the support of the Kentucky work is a most encouraging one and we are sure the heart of Brother Carpenter is made glad as he realizes that it will be possible to meet all expenses of this work for a time at least. Brother Trent deserves credit for the masterly manner in which he conducted the campaign for the special Christmas offering for the work of the National Sunday School Association which includes Kentucky in its field of endeavor and good works.

A Call to Service

These are days when men are moved to listen to the call of the governments of the world to enter into the service of thier country. Though one may have deep convictions against Christians bearing arms in carnal warfare and may feel that entering their country's service and joining in an attempt to kill, even the enemies to one's country, would rob them of all hope of eternal salvation, yet one can not help being moved by the patriotic determination of the hundreds of thousands of young men who with a determination to "do or die" have renounced every other claim and have set about to heed their country's call to service. Such service requires physical courage of the highest type and in the minds of many, a man is all the more a man because he has heard the call.

But there is a call to service that requires a higher type of courage than the call to military service for in this call the courage required is moral rather than physical and Napoleon is credited with saying, "Even in war moral courage in comparison to physical courage is as three parts out of four."

When Christ passed the taxgatherer's booth in Galilee and said to the collector sitting in his place of business, "Follow me," it required an unusual amount of moral courage for Levi to accept the invitation which necessitated the renouncing and abandoning of a position that carried with it an income ,that was considered by many in that day as "easy money," and become a follower of a religious leader who had no home, no worldly possessions, nothing to offer but toil and sacrifice and hardship and persecution and perhaps in the end death, so far as this life was concerned, but a promise of that which would be of vastly greater worth in the world to come. From what we are able to learn about Levi he accepted all this with true faith in the divineness of his call and never regretted the worldly sacrifice he made to enter the service of his Lord.

A Modern Duplicate

In these modern days Jesus walks by the high school and the college and he says to young men and young women, "Follow me," but sad to relate a very large number of them are not as willing as Levi was to obey the Lord. They stop to ask a great many questions before making the decision. They want to know just where the Lord would have them work and what the nature of the work will be. They want to consider its bearing on their future station in the social world and to know whether the world will consider them on an equality with men and women in other walks of life; and then, in altogether too many instances they pause to consider whether the worldly remuneration will be equal to that which the business world or some secular profession will offer to men of their ability and training. We do not believe Levi considered any of these things to any extent for had he done so the Lord would surely have passed on and he would have missed the opportunity that knocked at his door.

It is true that the average servant of the church does not receive as much in the way of worldly remuneration as the man of equal ability does who devotes his time to money making, but the young man who is not willing to hear the call of his Lord unless he has the promise of remuneration equal to what the world has to offer him would never earn his salary if he should decide to accept the Lord's invitation to join him in service to mankind.

It is hardly to be supposed that William Carey, or David Livingstone, or Robert Moffat, or Brainerd, or any other great missionary ever considered what they would receive as an earthly compensation for their heeding the Lord's call to service. And it is hardly to be expected that such leaders of modern Christian movements as John R. Mott or Robert E. Speer ever stopped to inquire what they might expect in the way of earthly pay when they heard and accepted the Lord's call to enter his service.

Unless a young man is willing to accept less than the world offers him for his life-work he can find no place in the service of the Lord for the Lord wants servants who have imbibed some of the spirit of sacrifice which moved him to renounce all that he might become once for all the sacrifice for every sin.

The Three L's

Many years ago an adequate knowledge of what was called the three R's was considered all the education the average man, or more especially the average woman, needed. Of course that idea has been outgrown for many years and we now know there is no field of knowledge or no land of truth that can not be profitably explored by man and the discoveries made brought to practical uses in the life of man who is to subdue all the earth and to bring its forces to minister to the welfare of all mankind.

In his exploration of the many great and unknown lands of natural truth man has sometimes forgotten that "man shall not live by bread alone," and some of the spiritual laws which should be recognized in the control of mankind have been somewhat neglected. As in the educational world of a former century the three R's represented all that was commonly thought necessary, so in the spiritual world at the present time there is a great truth that may be designated under the caption, "The Three L's." This has to do with the great truth of the Lordship of Christ, or with him as Lord of life, law and liberty. In a very brief period of his ministry he taught these three principles of his truth. When Jesus called Levi to follow him and when he ordered the man in the synagogue to stand forth, each case was but an exercising of his authority over them, an expression of his Lordship over their lives, they could do nothing less than obey.

When Jesus spoke of the impossibility of fasting, in view of the joy of his presence with his disciples, he showed his lordship over the law that controlled human emotion and made plain that every situation was to be ruled according to this principle; and lastly, when Christ said, "The Sabbath was made for man," he gave expression to the deepest and truest idea of its observance, but with this principle he coupled truth, "the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath," thus warning the disciples not to abuse the liberty he had declared was theirs in the use of the Sabbath day.

Subscribers' Woes

Not many people have a better opportunity to study human nature than do editors and circulation managers of newspapers or any kind of a periodical that has a general circulation. There is not a newspaper or a magazine published that does not have some difficulties with subscribers at least occasionally. Sometimes the mails miscarry, sometimes the label gets torn off of a roll of papers and the whole roll is lost, sometimes in the mailing room of the publishers a slip is made and a paper goes to the wrong postoffice. These are only a few of the most common of the many things that may happen to cause a subscriber to fail to receive his paper. But when a paper fails to arrive on schedule time, with altogether too many subscribers, the first thing is to blame the publishers with carelessness. Every housewife knows that they must exercise the greatest of care every time they give a "big spread" to count the pieces of silverware, especially the souvenir teaspoons after the event to be sure that all are accounted for. Even so common a thing as a bag of clothes pins must be carefully looked after or the supply will naturally and in some unaccountable manner dwindle away. How then can a list of thousands of names be kept in proper order on a mailing list, even with the most modern system, without an occasional error being made? And one of the peculiar things about it is a great many people feel at once that they have been discriminated against or have been treated with personal neglect, when in fact the employes in the mailing department are constantly urged to exercise the greatest care in handling the mailing list. The errors that do occasionally occur in the mailing department are nothing in comparison to those made by subscribers constantly. Scarcely a week passes that we do not receive one or more letters, or rather envelopes, with a two dollar bill or a money order or a check enclosed, with not a line to say what it is for, and sometimes without even the sender's name on the outside of the envelope. We have become rather usd to that now and no longer have any great difficulty giving the proper credit.

New Subscriptions and Changing Address

Quite frequently we receive a new subscription with the request to begin sending the paper with the next number, and frquently a subscriber writes requesting a change of address, with the admonition to be sure and make the change at once. Of course either of these requests CAN be granted, but it upsets the mailing system of the office to do so. Only a few readers have any knowledge of the way the mailing lists of a paper are kept and they do not understand that they cannot be changed or altered on a moment's notice to suit the convenience of the subscribers. With some publications a new subscription or a request for change of address must be sent in a full month before it can be done. Our mailing list is revised every two weeks, unless some unlooked for occurrence takes place in the business which once in a great while necessitates a delay of the revision for one week more. So people who ask to have their address changed immediately should not become impatient if they fail to receive the paper for a week or two, for their request may have been received on the same day a revision has been made, but "the door is shut" and it will have to go over another two weeks. Of course extra numbers could be sent but that requires extra time from an already overworked force; besides wouldn't it be easier for a subscriber to write a card two weeks before the change is desired than to put the workers of the office to the extra trouble of sending back numbers or of upsetting the routine of the work in making a change out of the regular order?

Let us all work together and we are sure we will all enjoy the work and the publications all the better. And please remember that within the last two months the list of Evangelist subscriptions has been enlarged almost fifty per cent. and no doubt some mistakes have been made by those who sent in the lists as well as those who have made up our mailing list in the office, so just be patient and let us know when an error is discovered and we will be only too glad to correct it at the first opportunity.

The Prayer-Life of Chinese Christians

By Ding Li-Mei, Shanghai, China

Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry in China

In the history of the Christian church, beginning with her Lord Jesus Christ himself and continuing through his apostles, all Christians who have been filled with wisdom and good works have held prayer to be a sacred service of prime importance.

The gospel has now been preached in China for over a century, in her twenty-two provinces, as well as in distant territory like Mongolia and Tibet. Christian believers and inquiries number more than half a million. God has opened very wide the door for preaching the word and for winning men to Him. Western and Chinese Christians alike will unite in acknowledgeing that the chief explanation for this is to be found in the great volume of prayer for China's redemption which has gone up from Europe and America, as well as from China. The prayer-life of Chinese Christians has commanded my closest attention from my youth up. During the ten years and more which I devoted to preaching in my native province, and the eight years which have followed in which my work has called me to many other parts of China, my ears have heard and my eyes have seen many things in regard to prayer, a few of which I wish especially to bring to the attention of the readers of The Missionary Review of the World.

1. The first week in every year is a time when practically every church in China holds special meetings for prayer, somewhat after the manner of the churches of the West. In some places cottage prayer-meetings are held in rotation, and in others, bands of Christians go from village to village preaching. Blessed results have followed.

2. The prayerful observance of Christmas, Thanksgiving and other special days of prayer is growing from year to year, and much good has come from such observance.

3. In these days family prayers is the habit in too few Christian homes. There are many hindrances, yet we cannot fail to see that the absence of this habit has much to do with the spiritual weakness of many Christians.

4. In times of national stress, or when the churches have confronted difficult problems, circulars have been issued calling on all Christians to pray. Notable illustrations of this occurred when the republic was founded and later when a constitutional limitation of religious liberty was threatening.

5. Every Christian school, hospital or other institution places an emphasis on prayer by conducting a prayer service once or twice a day.

6. The custom is growing of holding a special retreat of one or more days immediately preceding the annual gatherings of the various denominational organizations, and the universal testimony is that such retreats bring untold benefits.

7. The hearty response given by the churches to the suggestions of the Special committee on the promotion of intercession of the China continuation committee evidences the important place which the Chinese Christians give to prayer.

8. Many Chinese Christians live constant and sincere lives of prayer. I want at least to mention two or three.

In Gimeh County, Shantung, there lives a very poor woman, Mrs. Liang by name, over seventy years of age. She cannot be called bright; she is unlettered, and has no eloquence of speech. But in her prayers she is exceedingly zealous and sincere, and they are mighty in their working, as all who know her acknowledge. When she entered the church she was the only Christian in her family or village. Now more than eighty in her family and over twenty others in her village are Christians. All of her own family but one or two are Christians. Not far from her home a church has recently been built, with schools in it for boys and girls. Another school for boys has been opened in the village. Although the prayers of many have entered into this fruitage, it is safe to say that Mrs. Liang's prayers occupy the chief place.

In the Methodist church in Peking there is another Christian woman, Miss Pan Yuan Ying, who is much given to prayer. Every morning she prays for at least 135 people by name. She has a weekly cycle of prayer which she follows day by day. In evangelistic work she has much power. Those who hear her preach, whether Christians or non-Christians, are greatly moved.

In Shanghai Miss Dora Yu has opened a place for Bible study and prayer, and formed a Bible class for women. For all the expenses of this work, for her own personal needs, and for her work outside Shanghai, whether for Bible teaching or evangelism, she looks to God in trustful prayer. She is truly one of the prayer-leaders of the Chinese church.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY

This brings me to my own personal testimony. From boyhood I have taken delight in conversing with my friends on prayer and Bible study. Even when in school I joined two or three of my most intimate schoolmates in secret meetings for prayer and the study of holy scripture. I also knew what it was to retire alone to pray for fellow-Christians in school and church, whose zeal had become chilled, or for other important objects. Many times was I conscious of the Lord's favor in answering my most fervent supplications throughout these early years. After finishing school I spent three years in theological studies, giving myself wholly to a search for Truth. During these years the number of fellow-pray-ers grew, until by 1899 my prayer list included 105 names, of which nine-tenths were students. The list has continued to grow, until now, in 1917, it numbers 2,347, and is divided into three classes.

The first class is composed of eighteen smaller groups, numbering from six to forty eight each, made up of those who have all promised to pray every day for all others in the same group. I keep a separate list of each group. The eighteen groups contain in all 342 names.

The second class has only the names of those who have made individual covenants with me to pray one for the other, and includes pastors, principals of schools, teachers, doctors, merchants, and military men; it contains the names of both men and women, of Chinese and foreigners, of children of seven or eight and youths in their teens, and also those who live in non-Christian families. We mutually remember one another and sympathize with one another. The strength of this bond exceeds that of any merely natural bond by a thousand times ten thousand. In this class I have 1,760 names.

The third class is made up of those whom I have voluntarily selected and especially delight in remembering before the Lord and who for the most part are carrying large responsibilities in some phase of other of the church's work in Asia, Europe or America, such as Dr. John R. Mott and Dr. Sherwood Eddy, of America, and Dr. F. B. Meyer and Dr. R. F. Horton, of England, a list of 245 names in all.

As I think back over twenty years of experience in intercessory prayer, the longer I practice it, the more its importance grows on me. I do not know all the benefits which others may have received through these prayers, nor does it matter that I do not. I cannot refrain from enumerating ten out of the uncounted blessings which I myself have experienced in the practice of this habit:

(1) I am so much with the Lord that He seems my closest friend.

(2) My spiritual life is refreshed like the sprouting grain with rain.

(3) Justice, peace and joy constantly fill my soul as the light fills the heavens and I get uncommon strength.

(4) When I study the Bible I seem to see heaven opened, and realize that I am having communion of heart with Christ Himself.

(5) When I talk about the gospel in private or in public I have an unshakable confidence that the hand of the Lord is supporting me.

(6) My love has been steadily expanded until I now am conscious of no man in the universe whom I cannot love.

(7) When I fall into sin, whether secret or open, whether great or small, I experience an immediate rebuke of conscience, which drives me at once to confession and repentance.

(9) In all my work for the Lord, although the results are not alike evident or immediate, I do not know of any effort that has been in vain.

(9) Intercessory prayer has greatly enlarged my circle of friends among God's co-workers, and through the Lord's kind care these friendships will never cease, but will continue to grow, thus far excelling the friendships of the world.

(10) And best of all, I am not the only one who is trying to perservere in intercession. Others in my own and in other Christian organization, both men and women, in church and school and ministry, have likewise been banded together in similar convenants of prayer these same twenty years. I am personally acquainted with not less than ten who have their individual lists for prayer besides the cycles prepared for the use of groups. They are unanimous in their testimonies to the blessings of this habit.

I know that the picture I have presented of the prayer-life of the Chinese Christian is not complete, but I earnestly hope that this brief statement of what I have seen, and hear, and experienced, may be of help to some who read this testimony.—Missionary Review.

The Stream That Got Lost

By Dennis H. Stovall

"Here it is! Here is the place to stop!" shouted Adele and Wallace in happy chorus. Their father promptly brought the big touring car to a halt under the hemlocks. Close by, a stream of ice-melted water chattered noisly. There was a huge snow bank not fifty yards away. The grass under the hemlocks was brightened with clumps of fragrant violets and wild verbenas.

For a hundred miles the Martin car had been following the Oregon highway—climbing and climbing up the winding road. It had brought the Martin family to this delightful spot near the summit of the Cascades, and into the heart of the Crater Lake region. All around lifted the tall peaks, white with everlasting snows. Nearer by were broad plateaus, covered with high grass and waving columbines.

"Yes, this is the place! Here is where we will camp!" Mr. Martin agreed, as he slid from behind the wheel. Already the boy and girl were out, skipping to and fro like a pair of wild fawns set free. They came running to help unload the camp stuff from the car. In a little while a tent was set up, folding cots were opened, and a convenient oil stove made ready for service. Wallace dragged up dry fuel for a campfire, and brought a supply of water from the stream. It was, indeed, a delightful camp, and the Martins were to remain a week or longer.

Wallace, in happy anticipation of the glad days that were to follow, paused in his work to look around again. He was struck with a desire to see more of this wonderful region The day was far spent. The high peaks cast a long shade across the green plateaus. Down from off the fields of everlasting snow blew the cooling breeze. Just below spread acres and acres of tall grass, speckled with crimson columbines, blue violets, and white forget-me-nots. Adele gathered an armload of the blooming beauties in a few moments. Months ago these flowers had withered and dried up down in the hot valley. Up here close under the tardy snows, spring had just arrived.

"Let's go on an exploring expedition!" Wallace called jubilantly, when he had helped his father get the camp in order.

"All right-o!" Adele agreed willingly, as she tossed the big load of flowers into her mother's lap.

"We'll follow this stream!" shouted the boy. "It ought to take us up near the rim of the lake—up where we can see the whole country anyhow!"

"You two be very careful!" cautioned their father, who was now busying himself in getting out his rod, reel and fishing-flies. "This is a mighty big country you know and you mustn't get far from the road or trail!"

"We'll keep right by this stream—and follow it back!" Wallace said. We can't get lost if we stick to the stream!"

"Very well," Mr. Martin replied. "But see that you don't lose it".

They scampered off then, shouting and yelling. Swarms of magpies, eager to make friends, fluttered in the hemlock boughs close overheard. They were audacious birds, daring to fly into the faces and even touch the arms and shoulders of the pair. This was great sport for Wallace; several times he all but had some of the boldest of the birds in his fingers.

When they left camp, the sun still shone warmly. And this warm sun, melting the snow, kept the stream rushing and chattering down the steep slope. It seemed queer to pick smiling violets that peeped up from under the tardy snows, and to see the succulent grass blades thrusting eagerly through the white mantle. A quarter-mile from camp the babbling stream led the exploring party into a narrow canyon, whose rugged walls of black lava rock lifted high on either side. It was cold in here, for the sunshine did not enter. Nor were there any flowers or grass. The two hoped to come out into a brighter, more open region beyond. Though the canyon widened, the mountain-side still lifted high above them, shading the sun. For a mile or more the boy and girl followed the little stream, entering a region more wild than any they had seen. They saw the pink tints of the lowering sun touching the top of the bluff high above them.

"Let's go up there!" Wallace said. "We would have a fine view from the summit—and we could easily drop back down to the stream!"

Adele shook her head. "We ought not to go so far away," she answered.

"We couldn't get lost!" the brother declared. "We would be safe, even though we came down to the stream farther up the canyon".

Adele did want to get out of the dark canyon—and she knew it would be gloriously bright up there on the crest of the bluff. She knew, also, that from such a height, they would have a magnificent view of all the surrounding peaks and ranges, as well as the distant valleys. So she followed her brother up the steep wall. They went slowly and carefully, looking back every little while. They could see the stream dashing over the boulders, even when they were half way up the bluff; and when they paused, they could hear its babbling. But they finally lost sight of it; nor could they hear its distant murmuring.

The view from the crest proved all, and even more, than they had expected. They stood a long while looking around them. Mountains, mountains, purple-hazed and pink-tinted, were piled endlessly. Away off in the distance, shimmering hazily in the heat of the August sun, spread the valley. It seemed good to be away from the heat and the dust—up here where it was so cool. Wallace led the way along the ridge for a distance. When the sun had dropped low in the west, painting the mountains in gorgeous colors of crimson and lavender, they realized it was getting late. Confidently, they struck down the canyon wall. It seemed more rugged, more rocky and steep than the way they had come. And when they reached the bottom, to their surprise and consternation, there was no babbing stream! Snow and slush-ice filled the narrow crevice on the canyon floor!

The astonished pair stood in mute silence, looking hopelessly around. Neither had the courage to speak the fear that had come upon them. This was the dreaful fear of being lost—lost in the great Cascade Mountains, with night coming on. Already, dusk was setting into the deep hollows. An ominous stillness filled the canyon, where before was the noisy chatter of a babbling stream.

"I can't understand it!" Wallace declared in a tone of perplexity. "I was certain we dropped back down into the same canyon. We were right up there—on the crest of that bluff!" He raised a pointing finger toward the high crest where the sunshine still lingered.

"I thought so, too," Adele agreed soberly. "But there was a stream in the canyon we left. And there is none in this one!"

"I know that!" Wallace returned dejectedly. "Let's go on down a distance, maybe we may find familiar landmarks."

They went on down for a half-mile. They left the snow, and entered a rock-floored, high-walled gulch. It seemed very much like the narrow canyon they were in before. Yet there was no babbling stream here. There appeared to be a shale-strewn crevice rough and irregular, in which a stream had been running. But it was dry now. And it was getting darker, darker, every moment!

"This is awful, Wallace—to be lost—lost!" Adele wailed in despair. She shivered with the cold, buttoning her coat more closely.

Her brother had seated himself on a boulder. His face was very sober, his eyes wide-open and he searched the cliff walls and the canyon floor. While he held his gaze on the bluff far above, an expression of increased fear and alarm came into his eyes. He saw something moving along the lava rock ledge. It moved slowly—a dark object of some sort As he looked, it took the form of a bear!

Adele caught the fear in his eyes, and she too, looked up to the ledge. An exclamation of terror came from her lips when she saw the bear. With her cry the animal halted; lifted itself, and peered down at them.

"Oh! Oh! What will we do?" she cried.

"Don't be frightened, Adele!" Wallace consoled. "It's a park bear—and it will not harm us as long as we let it alone!"

The two sat in silence, and the bear, after a long, curious gaze, resumed its lumbering gait, disappearing over the bluff.

Still there remained the dreadful realization of being lost. Wallace could not be fully convinced that this was not the canyon they had left. His keen scrutiny revealed to him a rock whose peculiar, hat-like shape he had noted on making the upward climb. From the rock he dropped his eyes to the canyon floor again. Darkness was settling swiftly, and only by stopping low could he see the ground plainly. He got dow on his knees when he saw something on the soft earth near the edge of the crevice. And by looking closer he saw what it was—saw it was a track—a footprint! Close by it were other footprints; prints they were of small shoes; then he knew!

"Here they are, Adele!" he shouted triumphantly. "Here are our own tracks! Here is where we crossed the stream when we climbed the bluff!"

Glad as she was to hear it, there still remained a feeling of uncertainty on the mind of Adele. "But where is the stream?" she wanted to know, as she stopped to look at the prints.

"It has lost itself!" Wallace told her.

"Lost itself?" she asked, not able to understand. "What do you mean?"

"Just this", he explained eagerly. "When we came up here it had been warm, and the warmth melted the upper snows, keeping the stream flowing. As soon as it got cool —which it did in a very short time—the snows quit melting, and the stream no longer flowed!"

"Of course! Of course!" the girl returned in a tone of happy understanding. "It is queer we did not think of it before. Really Wallace, I never would have thought of it. I was sure—dreadfully sure—we had come down into the wrong canyon!"

"But we are not lost—we are on our way back to camp!" Wallace declared as he started forward happily. They followed the dry bed of the stream through the dark gulch, soon coming out into the open vale where lingered the soft glow of sunset. At the lower border of the vale, under the gnarled hemlocks, squatted a little white tent, close by a motor car.

"There it is! There it is!" shouted Adele. "There is camp!" She struck straight across the broad field, her brother following her. Both came in on a run, panting like a pair of deer after a hard chase.

"Well! Well" their father exclaimed in surprise, as he looked up. "Your'e coming in from a different quarter I see. You must have left the stream—and got lost!"

"No, father," Wallace told him truthfully. "It was the stream that got lost."—Religious Telescope.

Christian Endeavor in Illiokota

In looking over the field of activity for the Y. P. S. C. E. for the Illiokota district again it appears to me that there is considerable to be done. If we of this district intend to reach the Christian Endeavor goal set in connection with the Four-Year Program it will mean that we shall have to get busy soon. So let us look over the field of work for a few moments.

To cover the whole field and come out A-number one, we shall have to do the following work: Organize at least three new young people's societies; four Junior and Intermediate societies. Then we are to get at least one hundred fifteen new Christian Endeavorers, thirty new church members (here is a place where some societies have placed little or no emphasis), three hundred forty-five peace advocates (we should have laid more stress here some few years ago); one hundred sixty Quiet Hour Comrades (the one phase of the work bringing us into close, quiet touch with God the fountain head of all spiritual blessings); one hundred Tenth Legioners (I feel this department to be one of the most vital and yet perhaps the most neglected of all the departments); one hundred ten dollars for missions (a blessed privilege offered us to give in the extension of God's work); ten Life Work recruits (here we are given the high and holy privilege of offering our life for the Master's work); and last forty Christian Endeavor experts (this work must be taken seriously if we are to be efficient Endeavorers) and the whole program must be taken seriously if Illiokota is to do her share in this work.

I have in my possession a list of the churches and groups in this district as well as the number and names of the Christian Endeavor societies of the district. I find by reference to it that we have eighteen churches and groups listed and only eight senior Christian Endeavor societies and two junior societies. From that we would conclude that the churches have ample room to meet all the goals by new organization.

I should like very much to be able to take the time and space to discuss fully each one of these goals but I can not at this time. One reason is that some of the topics or goals have been assigned to others and another is that time and space do not permit. I do wish to say that I feel that every member of the Brethren church in the district ought to feel the need of working to carry out the program. Further that the whole brotherhood is looking to us with wide open eyes expecting us to do our part and even more. "We can and we must. We must because we can."

Speaking of young people's societies. There are more than enough churches and groups in the district to organize three new societies every year for the next three years. I presume likely that some that are now partially organized could very profitably reorganize. Each society that is now organized should try, with all its powers, to come up to the standard of efficiency in all its branches.

Junior and Intermediate societies. So far as my record shows we only have two Junior societies reported and no Intermediate societies. Here is a field of activity which I presume, in many places, is ripe and ready for the harvest if only the laborers were in view. Four new societies in these two divisions of the work. That seems like a small number when the field is so large but remember that these are only minimum figures set as a least goal. We are urged to do as far as possible all the goals. We ought to have some one to take charge of this work in the district.

New Christian Endeavorers. I presume that it would easily be possible for the now organized and existing societies of the distrcit to take in the number of New Endeavorers called for if we would make an honest effort. We have made membership too easy in the past. That is one reason that we have not received more members. Young people want something to do and will have nothing to do with an organization which does not make it emphatic that they will have to do something. Shall we not give our young people something real hard to do and reach this goal before another year?

New Church Members. We are told that if our societies do not foster church membership they are not in good working order. Perhaps, if our societies do not lead young peoeple to unite with the church, we can lay it to lack of co-operation with the church through the Sunday school and pastor's aid committees. We have over three hundred members now and doubtless some of them are not yet members of the church. Let us get more of the present membership into the church and get more into the societies who do not belong to the church. This way we can increase our attendance, usefulness and ability to reach our goal.

We have said something about new members in the preceding paragraph so will just add here that the lookout committee should be co-operating with the membership committee and increasing the membership as far as possible. A warning is sometimes necessary to some societies. Do not try to increase indiscriminately for the mere sake of increase, but increase always because it will help you to be more useful.

Peace Advocates. The principal reason for peace advocates today is, to my mind, that they may keep before themselves and their associates the principles of peace as taught by the gospel and the principles which are at present being circulated among the nations. Peace is coming more and more to be talked these days. Thus the necessity that we keep informed along these lines. A band of young people meeting together with common ends in view may keep any subject before themselves and their associates better than if thinking individually. So it is with the band of peace advocates in the Endeavor society. Peace will come from this strife but we need to think and pray about it and to work unitedly for it.

Quiet Hour Comrades. I am wondering what better use one can make of a few minutes' time at the very beginning of the day than to use them for quiet study of God's word and prayer. Such study and prayer fortifies one against the trials and temptations of the day. It brings one into communion with God at the very beginning of the day and makes the work of the day seem more holy, more like work for and with God. Let us reach our goal here if nowhere else. But we need fail in none of them.

Tenth Legioners. In other words, tithers. How much more pleasant would be the work of the Christian Endeavor society if all members realized their responsibility here and met it. How many failures we now have because of this lack! It reaches into the church work too. All the finance of the Endeavor society, church and missions would be settled once for all if every Endeavorer and church member would become a tenth legioner. This could be proven conclusively to any one who is seeking the truth. Let us aim at a specific and high mark in numbers here. Our next goal will be made easier by the carrying out of this one.

Dollars for Missions. I know that in some societies of the brotherhood this has been a prized privilege. I mean to give money to missions. It should be in every society. Will we in Illiokota do our best? Will we pass the goal and repass it in the remainder of the program time limit? It is for each one of us to decide personally whether we will or not.

Others have been asked to write on the last two points so I shall not trespass.

Fellow workers of the Illiokota district, let us do our share and more in the time which yet remains to us.

GEO. E. CONE,
Pres. Illiokota C. E. Organization.
Udell, Iowa.

Challenging Charts

Within the past few weeks an attractive chart containing our Four-Year Challenge was sent to each society of the church. The chart presents, also the district and society apportionments of the general goals, and provides spaces to check up the society's yearly attainments.

The first thing of importance, therefore, is a careful checking up of your present standing. Determine and write in the spaces below "1917" the figures that will indicate your strength during that year. Let the year extend from April first to March thirty-first. If some of the spaces must be left blank, plan to recover your loss by March 31, 1918.

That means noteworthy advances in all our societies during the next two months. Why not? If we have wrought to any advantage during Christian Endeavor week, should there not appear ample evidence of our effectiveness? Count that week illy spent the following Sunday of which witnesses no new manifestations of increase and efficiency. Possessed with the vision of larger achievements, Mr. President, fire your committees with a like enthusiasm so that persistent endeavor on the part of all shall displace spasmodic effort on the part of the few. All at it and all the time at it until our goals are not only reached but exceeded. J. A. GARBER.

Note.—If no chart has been presented to your society, inquire if none has been received. In that event write us and one will be mailed to you immediately.

KENTUCKY MISSION NOTES

A Surprise With a Meaning

Not only a deep sense of appreciation but the real character of Miss Elizabeth Haddix, a Kentucky girl and now a teacher in Riverside Institute, is reflected in the following note which was handed to Superintendent Drushal, a few days ago:

"As an appreciation of the help Riverside has given me I hereby pledge myself to give my services as a teacher free of charge during this winter term of January, February and March, 1918."

(Signed.) ELIZABETH HADDIX.

Accompanying the note was the check of $25 just received by Miss Haddix for January salary. This means a gift of $75 by one who has been greatly helped in many ways by the many gifts through the years of those who have prayed and labored and given to our mountain mission work. Brother Drushal, who has labored so earnestly and so long with this people, sends us the note and the check and writes in part: "Now stay on your feet please while you read the enclosed note. I think it is fine, and for us, the best thing we have yet seen here."

Every real friend of our Kentucky mission work will certainly be grateful for having had a part and will say, "God helping me I will try to do more than ever before to send the gospel by means of church and school into the hills of Kentucky, and I will be more faithful in prayer for this work.".

It is safe to say that Sister Haddix appreciates also the great privilege she enjoyed of being a student at Ashland College for some time, and doubtless Riverside will be glad to share the honor. Such an act is not the result of a day's or a year's effort but rather the expression of a Christian character that has been builded slowly but surely for the Lord.

We are glad to thank Sister Haddix in this way, thus giving expression for a whole church. May the Lord bless her richly, and may many more of like noble character be discovered among the students of Riverside and among the members of the Brethren churches in Kentucky.

High Water

For the first time in the history of Riverside the tide has been of sufficient magnitude to fill part of the basement with water. The greatest damage done was in the loss of our footbridge which was washed away. The county suffers a great loss in the carrying away of the new iron bridge at Haddix. This bridge cost $12,000 and was constructed only last summer.

Students Turned Away

Brother Drushal writes: "Things are still going fine. We have had to turn students away from both dormitories. Some leave but more come to take their places."

White Gift Offering

Much needed relief has come to our treasury through the White Gift offering. We have just received from Brother Trent the balance of the one thousand dollars, the share of the White Gifts to be used for Kentucky missions. We congratulate the National Sunday School Association on the success of the Christmas offering. Their appeal for White Gifts has been met and more, the Sunday schools have gone over the top in fine shape. The Mission Board would thank every giver for the continued support of the mountain work. All of the regular pledges by Endeavor societies and other organizations and individuals should be met between now and the last of June. Thus the work of the Lord will go forward with "No debt in this work."

Testimony of Brother Akens

"I like the tone of things. If a war term is advisable then the 'morale' of the students of Riverside Institute is remarkable. This I say, after a year's absence. We have about 125 in attendance. The number of unsaved among them is on the mind of every teacher.

"Germs of good citizenship are being disseminated here every day by the teachers and workers of Riverside. Can I not see it? Contrasting my first year's work here with this one, the improved behavior, the respectful attitude and higher ideals of the individual student body give marked evidence that the sacrifices of some of God's children for home missions is bearing fruit in the mountains of Kentucky. And again we must not lose patience for a new generation must be born and old things pass away, that is, superstition and hatred."

News From the Field

Clay City, Indiana

The First Brethren church at Clay City, Indiana, is doing fine. In orded to save fuel, cottage prayer meetings are being held instead of trying to heat up the church. These have been very well attended.

At a recent business meeting the Four-Year Program was adopted. A committee was also appointed to take charge of the budget system of finance and to consider the placing of the Evangelist in every home under the same. Many of the goals have been reached already and the remainder will be reached.

Plans for a revival are being laid.

The church has purchased a parsonage at last and Brother Kinzie is now happily located across the corner from the church, this making his third removal since he has been here.

ROBERT GOSHORN, JR.,
Cor. Sec'y.

Whittier, California

The year just closed has been a great one in more than one way for the First Brethren church of Whittier. There has been a decided improvement in both spirituality and earnestness among our workers and the spiritual tone of the church body as a whole was never as good as now. Some 30 new members were added to the church this past year and January 20 seven more were baptized. Many more are counting the cost. Our Wednesday night prayer meetings are largely attended, 75 to 90 attending. Our membership numbers about 160 of which about 140 are resident, many of which are children. Brother Kimmell is teaching the book of Genesis following the prayer services on Wednesday evenings. Our Sunday school is on the increase and is as fully organized as its size warrants. New features are added as fast as they can be worked out. We hope to be one of the Front Line schools this year. We have three C. E. societies, the Seniors, Intermediates and Juniors. All are well attended and much interest is shown. We hope to reach the Standard of Efficiency and to do our part in reaching the Four-Year challenge.

Since the first of the year the church has taken up a mission a few miles in the country. Brother Kimmel is teaching the book of Revelation out there every Tuesday evening. The interest is fine and growing, 125 present last week. We notice an increase in our attendance at church services here as a result. At Christmas time we observed the White Gifts service, combined with a short program by some of our Sunday school. Best of all was the gift of self Seven accepted their Savior and were baptized that evening after the other services. Many gifts of service were given and the gift of substance was given in cash, over $85 being given; part of which was sent for Kentucky missions and the rest was turned over to our Deacons' fund to care for the needy among us. We feel that the Lord has wonderfully blessed us financially as well as spiritually the past year, as we were able to meet our expenses and offerings without a deficit to make up, for which we truly thank the Lord. We believe the Lord is blessing us so because our people are rightly dividing with the Lord. We have about 50 tithers at present and are working for more. Pray that the time may come when all people will divide aright. We have had a beautiful winter here. Are needing some rains; it has been dry. Crops have been good except hay, which will be short unless rains come soon. Some are irrigating for hay this year which is unusual. Living expenses here are very reasonable as compared with the east at present. We would be glad to welcome any of our Brethren among us at any time. May God bless his people. Pray for us. Rejoice in the Lord. The grace of the Lord be with you all.

JESSE A. SHAMBERGER, Correspondent.

Hagerstown, Maryland.

As we again come before the readers of our beloved Evangelist, it is with a spirit of rejoicing; rejoicing because amid the perilous times in which we live. The Lord has been pleased to bless us in various ways.

Our "White Gift" service was a splendid success. The presentation by the different classes was well planned and carefully executed. A splendid featture was the presentation by the cradle roll. A beautifully constructed cradle with a real baby in it was placed upon the platform; the superintendent of the department gave a report of the work and two little girls presented the gift in song. There was a large attendance, good music, and an offering amounting to $106. All classes responded nobly in offering and presentation. The noblest gift of all was two boys of the Sunday school giving themselves to Christ. The good people of the congregation during the Christmas season did not forget the pastor and his family. Upon a certain evening, in response to the door bell we were greeted by some of our parishoners. Soon others followed and before we could realize what it all meant. The pastor's home was filled with well wishing and well doing friends. They came not empty-handed but with well filled baskets which they left and very substantially filled the pastor's home with many good things to eat. But this was the preparation for a greater surprise. At the proper time Brother John C. Bentz called the gathered friends to order and in a few well chosen remarks presented the pastor and wife with an envelope which contained $100 in crisp new bills. He said it was a token of esteem and appreciation. Dear readers, we tried to say "thank you" but it was only a very feeble atempt in trying to express what we felt. After a very pleasant time together the parishioners returned home leaving the pastor and his family happy. How can we repay such kindness and esteem? We can not, but we pray the good Lord to make us more worthy in service.

Do you wonder that the Lord has blessed us in our meeting with such an expression of the Christian spirit? By the help of God and such a loyal people, we are confident of progress and we hope in the coming days to send great reports from this field. May God bless all his dear people.

A. B. COVER.

Sergeantsville—Calvary Charge

The splendid reports from different churches suggested the thought that a report from this field might be in order at this time. We are sorry that we can not write such glowing reports as some, but we are still on the job and ready to co-operate in all that is good for our beloved church and humanity in general. There are two or three happenings that might be of interest to the readers of the Evangelist.

We expected to close our work here September 1, 1917, but the brethren thought otherwise and gave us a unanimous call for another year. To show that they meant what they said they tacked another hundred dollars onto our salary and here we are.

The next event worthy of mention is our revival service which began November 8 and continued for three weeks. When we decided to have our meeting it was left for the pastor to decide whether he would hold it himself or secure help. After corresponding with some of the best men in our brotherhood and being turned down each time we concluded to hold forth ourselves and let the Lord do the work for us. So on the date mentioned we mobilized our forces and prepared to give battle to the hosts of evil. In our preparation we decided to depend largely upon the Holy Spirit through prayer and the attendant result showed this to be a wise move. Every evening 15 minutes before the services we began we gathered in the Sunday school annex for prayer and a blessed time we had waiting before the Lord. It just seemed as if the blessed Holy Spirit had right of way and went from heart to heart and bound us together in love and fellowship and inspired both pastor and people to put forth their best efforts for the advancement of his cause among men. It was a great inspiration to go into the pulpit from a meeting like this and we preached with greater freedom and power than ever before. The brethren were unanimous in saying we had good meetings. Three were baptized and added to the church and the membership strengthened in the Lord.

January 16 was a day long to be remembered. In the morning a man stopped at our gate and said he had some feed for us. We went to the barn with him and helped unload four bushels of ear corn, four bushels of oats, 2 bushels of shelled corn and one bushel of wheat. At present day prices this was like finding money. He also had a large roll of butter and a cake. Then in the evening about 50 people took possession of the parsonage and after a pleasant evening of love and fellowship presented us with a purse of $46.76, more butter, coffee, sugar, potatoes and other good things to eat. Since then we have received $2 in cash and two bags of grain, making the total amount of cash and grain about $70. To say we appreciated all this is putting it mildly. We are doubly so and shall try and show our appreciation by renewed activity for Jesus and the church. We might mention also that we received $15 in cash at Christmas time from these good people.

Just now the cold weather and snow have about tied up our work, but we hope to get things going soon and do what we can on the Four-Year Program.

The work at Calvary has not made the progress we would like to see, but we are still going forward. Weather conditions have interfered more this winter than ever before, stormy Sundays and drifted roads making it impossible for us to make the trip at times. But we still have the faithful band of workers who may be counted on to do all they can to advance the Lord's work. They had quite a part in the donation party, several of them being present and always ready to help in every good cause. These people are paying a part of the raise in salary mentioned elsewhere in this report.

At Christmas time the president of the County Sunday School Association suggested that instead of having the usual treat we give the money to the Armenian fund. On a vote of the school this was done and the money forwarded to that worthy cause.

We are planning to have a revival service at this point in the near future when a special effort will be made to strengthen the church and win precious souls for the Lord.

Our arrangements with the churches here permit us to hold a few meetings for other churches. We do not claim to be a great evangelist, but if some church wants a meeting in which the old-fashioned gospel is preached, Jesus Christ held up and the Holy Spirit magnified, we invite correspondence to that end. Some of our weaker churches might hear something to their advantage if they write to us.

MORTON L. SANDS.

St. James, Maryland

The third meeting for this charge was held at St. James during the month of January. Although the weather was severe and the meeting was ccontinued only thirteen days, much good was accomplished. Five were added to the church by baptism and the church was strengthened spiritually. To God we give the praise for his continued blessings.

W. E. RONK.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

It has been a good long time since you have had a word from us through the Evangelist. Others here have written, but we have been silent. There has been a reason for our silence. This has thus far been the most eventful year that we have ever experienced at Lost Creek. We have had to meet the great sadness caused by death taking one of the brightest flowers from our home. Then we had much sickness in our family besides this. Then also an excess of work made us more to do than we could do and write much if any. We are happy now to say that we have regained our health in the home, and thus getting in shape for doing more work than before. Then another unusual event has recently been the big tide in Troublesome. The many big snows had accumulated much of the white stuff in the hills, and the severe cold weather, at one time 16 degrees below zero, made much ice in the streams. When this broke up it went with an all night's rain that made Troublesome 18 inches higher than it had ever been known to be. It took our foot bridge out, filled three of our basements with water, and came quite close, altogether too close to be comfortable, going over the bottom entirely. All this, with the unusual conditions, caused by the terrible war, has made it indeed an eventful year thus far.

But while we have had to face misfortunes, there have been some good things on the other side of the page to cheer us at Riverside. One of these we give below. It does us great good, and we are so thankful, that what Riverside has done is appreciated by some at least. I believe that this appreciation is even more than we might think for, and that this most excellent, godly example is but one expression of it. It makes us feel more like laboring and sacrificing on in the work. The apprecition that I am speaking of here is that of the people locally. For the first time, this year one of Riverside's graduates is teaching in the Institute. She is doing excellent work, too. She was to be paid what a regular teacher received twenty-five dollars ($25) per month and board. A few days ago her January check was handed to her. Shortly after this she handed me the check with the following note attached:

"As an appreciation of the help that Riverside has given me I hereby pledge myself to give my service as a teacher free of charge during this January, February and March, 1918.

ELIZABETH HADDIX.

Some who read this will know the one who has made this extreme sacrifice, for we know that it is a real sacrifice for her. But her God will care for her as he does for those who depend on him. There are some other good things which we hope to report soon.

In the Trenches

Several real battles have been fought since our last report. The first was at Burlington, Indiana, with Brother Hoppes. This was our second visit to this field. We are glad to add to the recent report of the pastor, in saying that we won a splendid victory. It is a very interesting field and affords to us a worthy opportunity for good and the prospects in the future are very bright. We enjoyed the work here and certainly felt at home amongst them. May God bless them and their pastor is our prayer.

West Alexandra, Ohio was next on our program and with Brother Wimmer we entered into the fight with renewed zeal and vigor. This field presented a different battle. However we found a faithful, loyal people to assist us. The battle has been hard here for some time. In their many conflicts of daily warfare, many had fallen and the result was that we found a discouraged people. But we battled on. We turned on the enemy with the sword of the spirit. The enemy resisted us which made the fight more bitter. The opposition was in the terrible weather which we encountered and in the dead formality of many of the church members in this vicinity. The first Sunday after the first week a full house greeted us to hear the message on the "Second Coming of Christ and the World War". A message which we are finding the people everywhere in these days interested in.

Special mention should be made of the very excellent work of the chorus choir led by Miss Susie Snyder, one of Ashland College former students. Her solo work was indeed a great help to us.

The visible results as reported were five confessions. While here we paid a visit to Dayton, Ohio. We found Brother Bell still on the job and doing a splendid work, also we were privileged to be entertained at the home of brother W. C. Teeter and his good wife. These visits were much enjoyed. From this place we came to Allentown, Pennsylvania to spend the Christmas holidays with our family.

We are glad to note that the Allentown church though small in numbers, under the leadership of A. L. Delozier is doing fine work. We preached one sermon while here. We had a splendid service and good interest.

Our first meeting in the new year was with Professor Byers at New Enterprise, Pennsylvania. The work here is rather weak, not because of any indifference on the part of the pastor nor the people, but because there has gone forth from this place sons and daughters to other places all over the states. We began our meeting in very severe cold weather. The interest seemed to increase the first week, and the prospects were very favorable, but after going over the second Sunday and the first invitation had been extended and one confession was made the terrible blizzards and unusually severe weather which has so hampered the business of our nation came upon us and made the roads impassable so we decided to close our meeting and hold another one in the spring if possible. This was a bitter disappointment to us, as we believe that something could have been done. Professor Byers and his talented wife are doing splendid work both in the pulpit and in the new college at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania. At a great sacrifice these two people are doing all they can to be workmen that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth.

Our best wishes and prayers go with all these whom we have labored with in the past few months. Our next field is Middlebranch, Ohio. In closing we might mention that we preached January 27 at Tenth and Dauphin church Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and we had a very pleasant day with this people. It is very commendable to say of them that in spite of not having a regular pastor that the work is in good shape. We wish also to commend the kind hands and loving hearts that have entertained us during these journeys out somewhere in U. S. A. in the name of our King Jesus of Nazareth.

May the Lord richly bless all His saints everywhere. We ask your prayers.

A. E. THOMAS,
Evangelist.

To the Churches of Maryland and Virginia

I have just sent to the pastors of Maryland and Virginia blanks to show the standing of each congregation. Please fill out and return promptly. Some pastors have failed to make a report of any kind thus far. "Is that somebody you?" Come, now, let's unite in making this district one of the best in the brotherhood.

WILLIS E. RONK,

Ashland College Notes

January 27 to February 3 was a great week at Ashland College. Why? The notes will reveal the reason. Things were begun, things have happened, things are going to happen. In plain words we've had a student revival whose spirit and force can never be spent in the years to come. Messages, inspiring, searching, throbbing, impassioned and gospel-brimmed were, not "delivered" but "poured out" by the lips of Wm. Beachler. His talks spoken by tongue and lips were nevertheless the out-throbbings of his heart and as such in their sincerity, were convincing to the audience of students who gathered nightly to hear him. We venture to say that no such spiritual impetus has been granted the young men and women of Ashland College in a series of meetings as that granted them through Beachler's messages. Our big week began with a splendid C. E. Meeting led by Glenn King and Miss Edith Wood. Splendid testimonials and stirring music were embodied in the program, and an especially helpful time of prayer rounded it out. Such a meeting well prepared for one week of services. Mr. Beachler especially emphasized life-work decision and exhorted his hearers to find a task having God's sanction and "to stick." His subjects, which space will not permit me to elaborate upon follow: "Back to Bethel," "The Name Which Is Supreme," "A Great Man and His Choice of Life Work," "Debtors," "Daniel An Example for Students," "The Inheritance of a King," "A Great Christian Woman,,, "A Master and His Masterpiece."

An especially uplifting service was held in connection with the Theological Association meeting Thursday morning. At that time the ordination of N. V. Leatherman, '18, took place. Brother Leatherman has been pastor of the Rittman Brethren church since last June. Dr. Miller, Brother Beachler and brother J. A. Garber officiated at the ordination service. At its close a number of boys dedicated their lives anew to the Master's service.

Brother G. T. Ronk visited us over the week end and spoke at chapel services on "College Friendships." We liked Mr. Ronk and his message.

Misses Billman, Switzer, Marie Lichty and Smith, went to Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, to visit brothers and friends over the week end.

The basketball game Friday evening between Sophs-Seniors and Fresh-Juniors ended with the score in favor of the latter 29-11 was a hot and closely contested game.

The Seniors look more dignified if that is possible. It is rumored that they will shortly appear in full regalia—caps and gowns. They are planning some other worth while things also.

The Juniors are on the map also. Their annual committee is working to put out a fine number this year. Better get in on it for the number we are sure will be better than last year's "Pine Whispers".

The pines are not doing much whispering just now. The frigid winds are making them moan in their chilly clutches. To cross the campus is an advenutre—one which takes away your breath. But glowing cheeks and laughing eyes is all the harm resultant from King Winter's efforts.

Brethren pray for Ashland college, student body, faculty, and especially that the college of our church may be placed upon a sure basis. Adois until next notes appear.

grades and with all ages has an essential unity with which uniform lessons harmonize. We sit about a common table, and we eat the same food, though very likely in slightly different proportions, and the mouthfuls of the little folks are cut up very small. If a comparison with the secular schools must be made, our Sunday school study is somewhat like the English which runs through all grades of the public school and college, from the primer class to the most advanced classes in literature and rhetoric. But comparisons between two maters so unlike as secular and religious education do more harm than good. They have misled the Sunday school world grievously, and are fit objects of suspicion. They are possibly helpful only when the Bible is treated as mere worldly history, and its writers as ordinary authors like Milton or Dante or Emerson. They are not helpful but confusing when we seek to emphasize the fundamental purpose of the Sunday school, which is not to learn the history of the Jews, or to study the documentary history of the Pentateuch or the style of Paul's Epistles, but to build up souls in the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ, and to establish the Christian church upon that living foundation.

More Uniform Lessons are used each year than the preceding year. The increase, of course, is not so rapid as it would be if the Graded and Departmental Lessons were not in the field, but it is nevertheless a steady and substanital increase. This has been reflected in the constantly wider use of the "Notes," with which I happen to be connected, and it is testified by the reports of all denominations. A continually growing number of schools desire unification. A constantly increasing number of Sunday school teachers know by their experience that the Uniform Lessons are not unscientific, unpedagogical, contrary to child psychology or adult psychology. They see the Graded and Departmental Lessons breaking up the unity of schools, rendering impossible any workable system of substitute teachers, and destroying that invaluable aid, the teachers' meeting for the common study of the lesson. They see those lessons making it exceedingly difficult for parents to help their children in their lesson study, or establish any family Bible study whatever. They see pupils removing from a Sunday school in one town to a distant school, and quite at sea in the midst of a strange series of lessons. They note the dismay of commercial travelers and others whose work carries them from city to city and who find themselves at home only where the Uniform Lessons are taught. They see one denominational paper after the other giving up its department for commenting on the Sunday school lesson, finding it out of the question to comment on twenty different lessons a week. They see the treatment of the Sunday school lesson vanishing from the secular press, and that immense instrument for the diffusion of Bible truth thrown away. They see the users of Graded Lessons shut up to the same stereotyped text-books year after year,derived of the stimulus and light which the Uniform Lessons draw from endlessly varied and timely sources. Perceiving all this, more and more schools every year are following the Uniform Lesson plan, and many schools that use the Graded Lessons are looking toward the Improved Uniform lessons for relief.

I believe that the new Improved Uniform Lessons which came into use in January, 1918, will be received with joy and instant approval by the schools that are now using the Uniform Lessons, and that they will lead an ever-growing number of schools to follow the uniform plan. They will thus be Unified Schools, focusing the thought of parents, teachers, and pupils on the same great theme each Sunday, a part of the unified hosts of Sunday school workers over the world. The Improved Uniform lessons present the ideal combination of uniformity and grading, preserving the major advantages of both systems. They will keep the Sunday schools true to their noble past, and carry them on into the expanding future.

The Trial of Our Faith

It is but a reminder when I say these are critical days. No one is ignorant of the awful strain of these times upon the world. All nations and men are living at high tension just now. The god of war is working such havoc as the world has never before been called upon to endure. Never was the destruction of human life and property and the irrecoverable values of centuries carried on in such ruthless and wholesale fashion. I am incensed at the destruction of monuments of the genius of centuries. I am saddened at the awful waste of food and destruction of property in the face of the world's dire need. My heart is gripped in grief at the awful slaughter of human life necessitated by a world war brought on by the autocracy, inhumanity and satanic selfishness and greed of Germanic world-empire seekers. But there is a sadder misfortune than any of these that may befall the sons of God in the earth; it is the destruction of their faith. The loss of property is a hard blow, and the loss of life is much more severe and saddening, but if faith were gone I doubt if life would be worth the living. Such a calamity is not only a most likely probability, but in many places an actual fact. Faith is being so universally shattered by the awful carnage of hell let loose that it is no imaginary danger that we ourselves may lose faith.

We are in danger of losing faith in God. Men are asking, "Is God in his heavens?" "Why does he permit such a catastrophe?" "Why does he not stop this war?" Many hearts are asking such questions. Harrowing doubts are entering the minds of many. And it is not surprising that such should be the case so long as we continue to blame God for it all. It is not God's will but man's sin that has brought this awful destruction upon the world. And it is man's will pitted against God's that causes it to continue. God permits it because it is the result of man's violation of his established law—law intended for man's good. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Man has sown the seeds of militarism, of national jealousy and greed and is now reaping the harvest in a world war. It was not God's intention that man should sow tares when he established that law, but that he should sow good seed. Now, when man deliberately sets himself against God's desire and beneficent plans, as he has the power to do, and brings upon himself the awful harvest of his own sins, ought he to blame God for his terrible plight? God can not deny himself by altering his laws to suit man's fancy. The very fact that he is constant and unchangeable in his purposes and plans is reason why we should not lose faith in him. Let us believe that he still lives and rules and will finally over-rule in the affairs of men so as to bring good out of all this terrible evil.

We are in danger of losing faith in the church. It seems to be the popular thing these days to call in question the success of the church. Even ecclesiastics are frequently found courting popularity by discussing such questions as "What is the matter with the church?" And the mass of the people are coming to look upon the church as an institution that has almost run its course. In keeping with the spirit of the times I want to ask three questions and proceed to answer them briefly. (a) Is the church failing? (b) Is it vital to the welfare of the world? (c) Can the world get along just as well without the church in this time of stress? In regard to the first, if the church is divine in its origin and if it is still Christ's institution for saving the world, it cannot fail unless Christ himself should forsake it. And will he forsake his bride? Can he separate himself from his body? No! the question is almost idle! The church is the organized power of God in the world and can not fail so long as he is on his throne.

As to the second, Is the church vital to the world's welfare? Consider that all the great reform movements, national and community transformations, and individual regenerations have been brought about by the church and the divine power it exercises through its representatives. It has led civilization step by step into dark continents and caused ignorance, superstition and immorality to flee before its onward march. All progress has been made in the light of its truth. And the world has found it the only means of the soul's salvation. Surely it is vital.

The last question, Is the church essential in these times of stress? Or could the world get along without it just as easily? Evidently our government does not consider it a non-essential, otherwise it would not exempt the ministers from military service. For I take it that such exemption is not a mere act of courtesy done to the office of the ministry, but that the institution which the ministry directs and serves is so essential that the government can not get along without it. Besides, scarcely a week passes but an appeal comes from some official or semi-official agency for the cooperation of the church with the government's aims and plans. The churches are expected to preserve the moral equilibrium of the communities, help sustain public confidence and urge the people to submit graciously to the exigencies of war times. The government would feel itself quite helpless without the moral support of the church's strong right arm. But what do we think about it? Do we actually believe it essential? If we do, we should seek to make the church count for more now than at any previous time. We should throw ourselves into every church activity as never before. Patriotism demands our best efforts and forbids us slackening in our loyalty and activity. This is no time for closed church doors on the plea of helping to conserve fuel. The church that dismisses service "for patriotic reasons" has a mistaken idea of the demands of true patriotism in this hour of national trial. The church has a more vital obligation than that of conserving fuel. It is burdened with the care of the spiritual life of our nation, which is a matter of supreme concern just now. Never before was there such pressing necessity laid upon the church to keep open and zealously and aggressively active in the business of the King of kings. Better organize "Woodchopper's Unions," to keep the church fires burning if necessary; but at all odds, don't let those fires die out. We have a great work to do and our God and our country need us.

There is also the danger that we shall lose faith in our fellowmen. We are often tempted to declare as the Psalmist did in his haste that "all men are liars." But our more careful and Christian judgment advises patience and charity. Men are more inclined now than ever to accuse their fellow-men of being greedy and grasping and of making profit of patriotism. At no time have men been so ready to expose what seems to them to be falsehood or selfishness or hypocricy in the lives of others. This war spirit tends to make men suspect everybody until they prove themslves worthy of trust. Shall we partake of the spirit of this world? Paul admonishes us that love suffereth long and is kind, and even goes so far as to believe all things. But how can we believe the liars, thieves and hypocrites? We can believe in the good in every man, for, however small, it is there, if we have the spiritual ken to behold it. And our faith, if we have the grace to trust men, may become the star of hope to some wicked soul. Moreover, the Master says "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he

Civilization and War

The very atmosphere of the world is so pervaded with the war spirit that it seems impossible to think outside of war terms, and it matters not how resolutely one may have determined to do otherwise yet almost unconsciously and involuntarily one drifts into the popular or common channels of thought and speech.

For many years we have given much thought to the high state of civilization which the world has reached. Many years ago as we studied our old school geographies we were taught that in cercain portions of the world dwelt uncivilized races of people and that in some portions of the earth the half-civilized had their abode while Europe and America were almost entirely inhabited by races that had reached the highest state of civilization. We have been taught to consider the difference between savage warfare and civilized warfare, and nations and peoples that employ methods of warfare that are supposed to be common to the savage races are looked upon with great disfavor by their civilized neighbors.

It has been declared by some that no great world movement that tends toward the uplift of the human race has ever been brought about except through the process of war and thus war itself has come to be regarded as a sort of civilizing process. Whether we believe the facts of this statement are necessarily true or not we are forced to acknowledge there is just ground for the claim. But whether war makes for civilization or whether civilization tends to make war less frequent may not be satisfactorily determinded just now, and yet there are a few observations that may be made with profit.

What is called civilization should have a strong influence leading toward the abolishment of war though it might never entirely succeed, yet it matters not what civilization may or may not do in itself, one thing is sure as has been stated by Prof. T. J. Lawrence, and that is, "If civilization can not destroy war, war will destroy civilization." But we might add that the only civilization that can accomplish this great thing is Christian civilization.

Heaven Upon Earth

The other day we noticed an editorial item in a city daily with the heading, "Where Babies Never Die." One might have been led to believe the editor was about to make a few remarks upon heaven, for that is the place usually considered in connection with the thought of the abolishment of man's last enemy, death. But in the editorial under consideration no such a far away land was considered. Reference was only being made to New Zealand that has been subjejcted to so many radical methods of treatment for political, social and physical ills and which has responded so nobly to them all. It may be an overdrawn picture to speak of it as a heavenly place or as a land where babies never die, but the result of scientific and common sense treatment of babies both before and after their birth has so greatly reduced infant mortality in this country that in comparison with other lands where the mortality of infants is so great it may well be called the land where babies never die.

The good results in New Zealand have been brought about largely as the result of the efforts of Dr. F. Truby King who is now visiting in America on his way to England where he hopes to accomplish, in part at least, some of the things he has accomplished in his welfare work in New Zealand. It has long been known that our American legislative bodies have taken too much for granted in regard to the children born in America receiving proper and adequate attention. And while much legislation has been enacted looking toward the raising of better pigs, better chickens, better strawberries, etc., the raising of better babies has very largely been left to chance or to the working out of the ideas of the baby specialist without the aid of any special legislation. It has been demonstrated over and over again that infant mortality is largely influenced by the conditions under which the parents must live and labor, but only a very little effort has been made by our lawmakers to remedy the defects of the American system.

Things We Have Missed

So much of the time of the average person is usually given to the consideration of the personal calamities that have been their individual portion that they have never thought of the worse things that have missed them in life. This thought was suggested to the writer by a few brief headlines in the paper the other day which said: "London Papers Point to Transports that U-Boats Have Missed." There is a world of comfort in the thought that while the life of one may occasionally be struck by some type of U-Boat and the life endangered, if not destroyed, yet there are so many good things that come to one in life after all that one can almost forget that the submarine attack was ever made at all.

Of course the Americn people were startled, even shocked when the report of the sinking of the Tuscania was received, and many "wise ones" would shake their heads and say, "I told you so." But not many of us were really surprised after all, rather we have been surprised that such a catastrophe had not befallen our troops before this. It is no small task to transport nearly a half million men thousands of miles across the boundless deep that is infested with every kind of enemy and modern device which seeks the destruction of all who would sail its boundless domain. We repeat that we are surprised that such an accident or such a fate has not met other transport ships long before this, and it must be credited to the eternal vigilance of the American and English navies that such occurrences have hitherto been avoided. But let us not lament over the one ship that has gone down, sad as it is, but rather let us rejoice that so many have escaped the terrible submarine. It would be a good plan for many civilians to learn the song of the soldier boys, "Then pack up your troubles in your old kit bag, and smile, smile, smile," for no matter how many troubles have hit us in life we are safe in considering that we have been missed oftener than we have been hit.

Professors Not Always Right

We are perfectly willing to grant to the college professors of the country a superior academic knowledge and are willing to admit their mastery in all theory, but in practice and actual demonstration of their theories some of them are woefully deficient.

Just recently some wise professor of Harvard University delivered a lecture on "Higher Education for Women,' 'in which he proved to the entire satisfaction of himself and some of his hearers that college unfitted girls for home duties. One of the statements of the professor was, "Who ever heard of a college girl who really cooked!" The theory of the professor may be entirely true to form, but one hundred twenty seven girls in one college for women proved that it is not true to life. Last spring these girls signed pledges to can at least two quarts each of perishable food during their summer vacation. A short time ago their reports upon the pledges made last spring were turned in to the college authorities and a tabulation of results shows that these one hundred twenty seven girls had canned five thousand seven hundred eleven quarts of vegetables and had made one thousand two hundred forty nine glasses of jelly during the summer at home. These were not girls attending some agricultural college either, but students attending a college that is exclusively for women.

The Harvard professor referred to might not consider canning as cooking but if he ever assisted his wife in pitting a few bushels of cherries or in peeling a few bushels of peaches no doubt he found there was some work to it even before the cooking process was begun. Some kind of education does unfit girls for home making, but it is unfair to both the college and to the girls themselves to make the unqualified statement that COLLEGE unfits a girl for practical home duties. Of course their heads are sometimes as full of theories when they leave college as are the heads of their professors, but it does not take long for a college girl to learn the difference between a theory and a fact.

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Your Records

Before you read this, you will have sent in your report. The first of the permanent records will have been made if not tabulated. In a direction that has not yet appeared but which was aimed to appear a week earlier than it did, you were asked to get your report in before February 20. Regardless of other directions that you may have had by some one else, the ruling was that it should be in to the District Keyman by the 20 of February or you as a reporter will be counted delinquent on the first count. But this is yet in time to say to the District Keymen that they shall have reports in the mail for the Goal Directors named in the last issue, by March first. It depends on the postmark if your report shall be counted at par or delinquent. We hope that all have been busy on the task and that there shall be no delinquents. It is not a pleasure to be strict, but the thing must be done rightly or it will not get done at all.

An Interpretation; Very Important

Pastors and workers all over th ebrotherhood have received the clarion call of Goal Director Bauman for Foreign Missions. In it he asks for a heroic and mighty effort to collect 40 cents per member for Foreign Missions. For this, I do not condemn him, but I at once recognized the trouble that it might make the Committee and the injury that might come to the whole program if all our directors would likewise ask for the completion of the task of four years in one or two. It ought to go without saying that we could wish with Director Bauman that every church would reach the goal of 1920 in 1918. But it would be unfair to ask the churches that make an offering equal to 40 cents to obtain the star of record. Therefore, I at once addressed the Goal Directors asking them their opinion as to the interpretation we should make in lieu of the fact that we had made no schedule beforehand as ought to have been done had we worked out a systematic program of equality all the way through. In view of the fact that in 1916 the churches gave an average of 20 cents plus; in 1917, 25 cents plus, I asked the Directors if 30 cents plus this year would not be a fair estimate for the record. I now have enough answers to justify me in saying that a church that reaches an average of 30 cents each on reported membership will have reached a standard for this year, and shall be allotted a star, with the same rate of increase we shall in 1920, have a membership of 30,000 and at 40 cents our offering will be $12,000 instead of $10,000 as our goal sets forth. I do not like the position this places me in in reference to Foreign Missions, but I do feel that Brother Bauman will see the justice of it and I am sorry that I must publish this before his reply has reached me—but he is so far away!

Thawed Out?

Well, in Indiana, we can again see the ground! Looks mighty good, too, after the hardest winter for a generation. I hope that now all the churches will be busily planning to recoup their losses suffered by the stagnation of the weather. In 16 years of ministry, I have never seen the equal for bad Sundays and I have watched them pretty closely. But plan to make up the loss.

Twice As Many

In order to keep pace with our former record, we tried holding an extra prayer meeting for several weeks. It helped, you know. Now we are planning to have a Go to Church Campaign and end it with a rally for a week or two before Easter to try to align some of the people who have scarcely seen the church all winter. We are also using the conscription plan to hustle our Sunday school back to former records. To do this, we have assigned a goal of attendance for each class based on attendance and enrollment, for the next five weeks, every class will know at the end of each session, whether they have reached the goal they had set for them and whether they have done their "bit" and that is all any church needs to do to break records—get every member to break a record.

Everybody At It

If I had a thousand dollars and a year's time to work at this Program, you'd all get a letter from me, personally. If we did not have to make decisions very quickly, sometimes, we might work with a more united course of action; but as it is, we shall have to do the best we can, and cover differences with the mantle of charity. I am glad that the Committee has shown every disposition to do that, so far. The Directors have not been consulted as often as they ought to have been; the writer has been compelled too many times for his own pleasure to sit as judge as he has done with Brother Bauman's appeal; but if we all keep sweet and "do it as unto the Lord," we shall come out in 1920 with the crown of conquest on our brows.

Get 40 cents per member if you can for Foreign Missions if you can put put across every other demand of your church finances and the demands of all the other appeals of the Program. But be fair with all the goals and Goal Directors so that we shall not make our exit in 1920 lop sided. BAME.

Contributions

Christian Contributions to the Red Cross

BY V. M. REICHARD, M.D.

The American Red Cross Association found its inception at least, in spirit in the Christian Sanitary Commission of the late war between the states. Out of this grew by very gradual degrees under the kindly care and direction of Ciara Barton the American Red Cross as a component member of the International Red Cross Association. Its mission is the alleviation of distress and suffering of extraordinary character, as for instance, such caused by flood, famine, fire, earthquake, war or otherwise. My own first clear and keen acquaintance, as an onlooker, with the work of the Red Cross was in 1889 at the time of the so-called "Johnstown Flood." I have watched the development, and perhaps evolution, of the work, up till now where the general public is being asked to contribute millions of dollars and thousands of tons of dressings to alleviate in some degree the horrors of war and to try to reconstruct to some elementary extent the countries devastated and ruined by war.

A lifetime spent among suffering and pain and distress has not blunted my sympathies and I may not be an impartial judge, nor an unbiased advocate. I confess that suffering and pain appeal to me for relief. I have the keenest appreciation of James 2:15, 16.

Philanthropy may be un-Christian—it may be non-Christian, but as a matter of fact it is found only where the gospel of Jesus has gone. Shall a Christian contribute to organized philanthropy—or shall a Christian indulge in private philanthropy? Is it not best that the Christian keep aloof from all these things and "know only Christ and him crucified." Let's see. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . and thy neighbor as thyself." Then follows a concrete example in the story of four men: One needing somebody's physical assistance—two splendidly good religionists (their official position in the church compels us to consider them at least average good men) and then the man whose behavior has filled the earth with its fragrance for nearly two thousand years. He was the man who did just what the Red Cross is trying to do—found the man in distress, relieved his immediate necessities, paid for his care and then said, "Charge any additional cost to me and I will pay it."

And as a clincher to the whole controversy and as driving home the truth for all time, the Christ himself said, "Go thou and do likewise."

No man can be saved by his good works whether for the Red Cross nor by any local or private alms deeds. Let us be very clear on that. But I doubt the salvation of the man or woman who claims to be saved and yet is not given to almsdeeds! St. James makes this absolutely conclusive. The faith that does not overflow in works is dead! Mary. Dorcas. Why do their names carry with them the perfume of super-sanctification, if you will allow me. Because of what they said? "What she did shall be a memorial." "Coats and garments which she had made." To me the whole trend of the gospels and the epistles is that a Godly, saved Christian life should be redolent of "good works." Titus 2:14. Look up in any concordance the references to good works as the outcome of and fruit of a saved life. The Christ himself rested the proof of his divinity largely on the fruit of his daily life. Luke 7:18-23. John Baptist in prison seems to have become doubtful and wanted verbal assurance. All the assurance he had was the blind seeing, lame walking, lepers cleansed, deaf hearing, the dead raised and finally preaching to one class. To anyone familiar with the work of the Red Cross Association there is a wonderful parallelism. Bubonic plague studied and eradicated, leprosy being studied, typhus fever in Serbia studied and eradicated, men torn by shrapnel and shot, gassed and frozen in the trenches, maimed beyond all hope of repair or recovery in previous times—all these brought back to home and friends and usefulness through the agency of the Red Cross; and most blessed still given an outlook on life and its opportunities which nothing else in all the world could give them. Empey in his delightful little book "Over the Top," says the Red Cross nurse is to the soldier the embodiment of Faith, Hope and Charity.

To leave the abstract and come to the concrete. The U. S. alone will probably have one hundred and fifty thousand wounded men before this time next year. What does this mean to you? A neighbor of mine summed up a very general feeling when she said: "I do hope it won't affect any of us!" meaning her own individual family. There are now millions of wounded men being cared for and every wound an infected one. There are required for actual use eleven thousand tons of dressings a month and still the demand exceeds the supply! Do you know what eleven thousand tons represents? Allowing forty tons to the carload it means 275 car loads per month and that is not enough! But should Christians help in this work? Should they give money and should they help in the Red Cross work rooms? Do they not encourage war and the horrors of war when they give money or contribute work? What does the Christ say? Do you encourage pauperism when you feed the hungry and clothe the naked? Do you encourage the tramp when you lodge the stranger? Do you increase crime when you visit the prisoner?

"Then shall the King say . . . come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty and ye gave me to drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me. . . . And the King shall answer and say . . . Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as you have done it unto one of these my brethren, even the least, ye did it unto me." Matthew 25:31-46.

"But so many things are done in the name of the Red Cross of which we do not and can not and will not approve!" you say. There you have just the thing that every man or woman who has ever done personal work for God comes squarely up against. Hypocrisy, inconsistent Christians, people not living up to their profession, is it not true everywhere? Shall I leave the church because I know an office bearer in the church is an adulterer? Shall I turn my back on Christianity because there are professing Christians whose lives are blackened by falsehood and fraud and immorality? God forbid! I know he is true, and I know when here he went "about doing good." And by his help I want to try in some way to make my life in at least a slight degree like his! I want to feel that some poor boy, torn and mangled and maimed and suffering may have some respite from suffering and be sent back home to friends by something which by God's help I have been able to do for him. If it were my own child who was maimed this is what I should want, and what I want for my boy I want for every other boy, American, English, French, German or whatever, and this by God's help and God's blessing is what the Red Cross is trying to do.

Red Cross and Missions

All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do you even so unto them. Matt. 7:13.

Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons; freely ye received, freely give.

For I was hungry and ye did not give me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison and ye visited me not. . . . Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto me. Matt. 25:42-45.

So then, as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men. Galatians 6:10.

That ye may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding, to walk worthily of the Lord in all pleasing, bearing fruit in every good work. Col. 1:9, 10.

But to do good and to cummunicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Hebrews 13:16.

Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world. James 1:27.

But whoso hath this world's goods and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him? 1 John 3:17.

If a brother or sister be naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled, and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body, what doth it profit? James 2:15.

Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you. Matthew 28:19, 20.

These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matthew 23:23.

Religion Among the Soldier Boys

"Thank God for the draft! Its brought me back to religion."

This was the exclamation of a private in a middle western army camp who had been won back to Christianity since his enlistment. He had been a churchman twelve years before. When the draft came he was a backslider.

But one night he passed a devotional group sitting before the cozy open fire in the Y. M. C. A. building—and something that was said there awoke in his heart a new longing for the better things of life. He asked permission to become a member, and now he is teaching a Bible class.

Thousands of boys and young men in the new National Army are today affiliating with Christian organizations as a result of the religious work of the Army Y. M. C. A., co-operating with the churches. There are Bible classes in every company and in some instances organizations that promote religious or evangelical work among the soldiers.

Hundreds of business men from the nearby churches have given their time and energy to the formation and teaching of Bible classes among both soldiers and sailors, besides interviewing thousands of young men of their relation to God. By means of the interview system, as planned and conducted by the Y. M. C. A. secretaries and business men, the men in the new army are being given a new vision of their mission in life as well as a means of salvation or redemption.

"If I can spend 15 minutes once a week in a Y. M. C. A. barracks Bible class with Christian men I can live straight," said a private. The Y. M. C. A. workers feel that they have no higher duty in or out of camp than to help that young man to live clean.

At Camp Sherman a strong Bible class work has been conducted for the enlisted men under the direction of the Y. M. C. A. and with the co-operation of the State Sunday School Association. As many as 110 Bible classes have been organized with a total attendance of more than 7,000 men. These are taught by a corps of 40 or more business men whose places will be taken by the enlisted men themselves as soon as they have qualified as Bible teachers. It is hoped that the enlisted men who become teachers can continue their work with their fellows even after they go to France.

Hundreds of young men have joined with the churches through having first established their contact with a Y. M. C. A. Bible class. Other hundreds of young men in the army have been reached by some of the 700 business men who have carried on the personal interview work of the Y. M. C. A. It is estimated that more than 25,000 young men have been reached in this way by the hundreds of laymen who give much of their time to heart-to-heart talks with the lonesome or homesick boys in the barracks.

The work at Columbus baracks, which is a receiving barracks where hundreds of young men filter through daily, also has succeeded in touching the lives of men and giving them a right start. Discussion groups of 20 men each meet every Monday and the Sunday evening religious meetings held in the barracks Y.M.C.A. huts are popular with the men. The camp secretary and his assistants make constant use of the new testament, which they place in the hands of raw country boys away from home for the first time in their lives with a bit of friendly advice as to the comfort and solace to be found therein.

The W. C. T. U. of Columbus aids the Y. M. C. A. in its work in the barracks, conducting religious services for the men and also visiting inmates of the hospital and distributing pocket testaments or performing needful services.

International Poison

BY SIDNEY L. GULICK

The pernicious doctrine sedulously instilled for two generations into the rank and file of the German people, asserting the intrinsic superiority of their race, religion and Kultur and prophesying that they and their Kultur are to secure world domination by military prowess, has been the chief cause of the present world tragedy.

A similarly pernicious doctrine of "white race superiority" is being sedulously instilled into the heads of the American people. Its advocates talk continuously of "white race world supremacy," and the "inevitable conflict of the white and yellow races for world dominion." This propaganda is preparing us for another world tragedy. If this psychological poison is not overcome soon enough by the appropriation of anti-toxin, it is not difficult to foresee what the future has in store for the world.

The latest injection into the veins of the American people of this international poison, is a two column editorial in a recent edition of the New York American, from which the following quotations are taken. The editorial is no doubt reproduced in all the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States, which are more widely read by the rank and file of our people than any other papers in America.

"Americans * * must be deeply alarmed by the success of Japanese diplomacy and the situation created by that diplomacy.

"We do not know whether there is a danger of the Japanese joining with Germany which makes our govenrment so considerate of Japan, or whether our Government is merely unsuspecting of the very obvious designs of Japan. * * *

"It is a thousand times more dangerous to the United States to have west Siberia fall into the hands of Japan than to have it in the hands of the Bolsheviki, or even to have it fall under the influence of the Germans. * * *

"What is to protect the United States itself from the attack which the then great Oriental nation, embracing China, Japan, Korea and wesern Siberia, may launch upon us? * * *

"The war in Europe, hideous as it is, is merely a family quarrel compared to the terrible struggle that will some day be fought to a finish between the white and yellow races for the domination of the world. * * *

The only battles (of the past) which count are the battles which saved white races from subjugation by the yellow races, but the only thing of real importance today is the rescue of the white races from conditions which make their subjugation by the yellow races possible. * * *

"The great problem with which the white races have to deal is the inevitable and irresponsible (irrepressible?. conflict of the white races with the yellow races for the dominion of the world. *

"Is it not time that the white nations settled their quarrels among themselves and made preparation to meet their one danger, the menace to Christianity, to Occidental standards and ideals, to the white man's civilization, which the constantly growing power and aggression of the yellow races continually and increasingly threaten?"

Are the abonimable writings of Bernhardi, Trietschke and the whole cabal of Pan-Germanists any more damnable and fundamentally destructive than those quoted above? Wherein does the doctrine of "white race superiority" differ in arrogance from that of a "Teutonic superiority?" And is the brand of Christianity of which the last paragraph speaks a religion peculiar to the white race and its God particularly concerned in their victory over the world?

Shall Americans complacently let this doctrine run its course until it plunges the world into another ocean of blood?

The true antidote for this poison is a campaign of education promoting fair dealing, honest statements of facts and constructive legislation. We should remove the humiliating conditions we now impose upon Asiatics. By such measures America can win the lasting goodwill of Asiatics and make of the alleged "yellow peril" a golden opportunity for the practice of genuine Christianity.

standeth or falleth." Then we know that while God looketh upon the heart we can only look upon the outward appearance, and therefore may easily misjudge, so that men may not appear half so bad in God's sight as they do to our dull and beclouded eyes. And, further, we must have faith in our fellowmen if we would be used of God in winning them to a saving knowledge of his Son Jesus Christ. No man who is distrustful of his fellowmen will make a good soul-winner. The moment we lose faith in men, that moment we lose influence over them. And I doubt if we can lose faith in men without losing power with God.

True, these are days that try men's souls, but let us keep faith even though severely tried, knowing that the trying of our faith worketh patience. We must have faith, more faith, a living faith in God, man and the church. We can not lose faith in one without that loss affecting vitally our faith in the others. When we have lost faith in man we have thereby betrayed a lack of confidence in God's power and the success of his church. I pray that we may trust him more fully, that we may believe in his wisdom and have confidence in his guiding, keeping and transforming power in the world.

How an Australian Jewess Found the Messiah

Selected by H. B. Lehman

My father insisted on his children going regularly to the synagogue. One day, while yet a child, I said, "Father, I do not feel any better for hearing the rabbi. I do not understand what he says. Will you not please excuse me from going?" He answered, "No, I cannot have a heathen in my family. I cannot excuse you. You must go".

We women and girls sit at the back of the synagogue, while the men worshipped on the floor in front. We sometimes discussed irrelevant matters—our servants, our engagements, the love affairs of the different homes, sometimes higher things, we all the while wondering what the rabbi was saying. Sometimes the women talked so loud that he would cry, "Will you women please keep silence in the synagogue?" Later on, when I knew something of the discussion as to whether or not a women should be at liberty to speak in a church, I was never troubled, for I knew perfectly well that Paul was addressing a Jewish audience, and that the women there were much like these here—that they discussed a good many earthly subjects while he was preaching.

I remember a strange yearly ceremony in our home—the celebration of the Passover. Two large cups were filled with wine. One was taken by the head of the house, my father, who pronounced a blessing upon it. Then he handed the cup to all the others who drank of it, sitting around a table. He then brought forth the hidden cake, and gave a piece to each of us. The second cup of wine was "Elijah's Cup". This was placed before my father and then the door of the room in which we sat was opened by me as the youngest member of the family.

A solemn pause ensued. It is expected at this moment in the Jewish home that the coming of Elijah will announce the glad tidings that the Messiah is at hand. I was young and fearful, yet I was anxious hoping and longing that perchance he would come. Though I knew that for many years my people had been continually expecting his arrival and had been continually disappointed, yet I shall never forget the beating of my heart as I opened that door and stood waiting for Elijah to come in and say, "The Messiah is at hand!" Oh, happy you who believe that the Messiah has already come!

A very painful love affair led to deep depression and a serious illness.

Finally, when I was convalescent, I was sent to St. Kilda, Melbourne. I walked up and down the seashore, heart-broken, feeling that my loss was irreparable. One afternoon as I looked out into the blue ocean, I said in my heart:

"I do not want to live, I am not going to live; and to-night I shall end it all."

I went back to the hotel, and as I was climbing up the broad stairway, I sighed heavily. A young woman going down the stair heard the sigh, and said:

"Excuse me! You sighed deeply. Are you in trouble?"

I replied, "Well, yes. I was thinking that life is not worth living."

"Indeed,' 'said the young woman, "I think life is worth living."

I turned with a little bow, a look of unbelief on my face, and said, "Your secret, pray!"

The young woman replied, "My secret is that I have a Friend who comforts me in all my sorrows, and delivers me out of all my troubles. He is my companion through life".

"Will you introduce me to your friend?"

"With pleasure; I shall do so by means of a book. Will you read it?"

"Yes,, anything that will tell me of your friend who can heal one's sorrows."

"Then wait a minute, while I fetch it".

The young woman brought a New Testament and said:

"This is the book."

"What is it? A New Testament? I have never seen it before".

"Will you read it?"

"Most assuredly."

I took it to my room. I opened the Testament at the first chapter of Matthew, and read, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham". Something struck my heart, and I was almost afraid to proceed. But there was a fascination about the whole genealogy, and not one name did I miss, no, not one, of the long list that meant so much to me.

When further on in the same chapter my eye fell upon the verse, "And thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins," I asked myself, "Is this the one she meant? Is this the friend she spoke of, who comforts her in her sorrows?"

I was now much agitated, and for a moment I was staggered; for that was the name that was never allowed to pass Jewish lips lest they be degraded! But I read it, and it burned like fire into my heart.

And I came a little later to the wonderful Sermon on the Mount. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." I thought, "Why, nobody but a good man could evey say that!" "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted". My own heart was full of anxious care, and sorrow and disappointment and desolation and unrequited love, and I wanted to draw near to Him. And I said to myself, "Surely he is not the one whose name I was not allowed to utter, for he must have been good! Surely he is not the one for whom we are looking! If he is, how wonderful, and yet how terrible, that we rejected him." And then I went so far as to say, "God forgive me, but I half believe the story!" I read on to where he cleansed the leper, and gave new life and gladness and song to those who were in sorrow; to where he ate with publicans and sinners; and my heart was begining to love him. And when I saw him take the little children in his arms and bless them, I said, "I believe I love him".

I hurried on through the pages. I saw that I was letting my heart go out to him. Then I again asked God to forgive me. But the truth was riveting itself upon my mind. I could not get away from it, and I slowly and thoughtfully read on.

I came to where I found that a plot was being formed against him, and I said, "I will hate my people if they do any injustice to this man, for I love him." I went on still further, to where I witnessed his trial; and I was so indignant with Peter that I positively hated him.

When I reached the greatest tragedy of the world, the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, and heard the scoffing, and saw him nailed to the cross, saw the forehead of the one I had learned to love bleeding from the thorns that pricked it, I said, "They will never kill him, they cannot kill him. He will come down and defeat them yet!" I waited almost breathlessly with fear and yet with hope, and when he bowed his head and gave up the ghost, I closed my New Testament, and returned it to the young woman, saying, "I told you I was full of sorrow. You brought me this book and said that by means of it you would introduce me to some one who would relieve me. You are welcome to your book. Your Christ is a dead Christ, but when our Messiah comes, He will be a living Messiah".

The young woman said, "Read further." I read further—of the first Easter morning, of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, of his victory over the grave, of his speaking to Mary, and of his appearing to his disciples. Then I knelt beside my bed, with only my New Testament open, and raising my hands to heaven, said, "O God, I believe that Jesus is my Messiah!" And I arose from my knees a converted Jewess.

I went home, restored to health. I said, "Mother, I am back again." "Yes, and you are looking well." "Oh, mother, I am so happy!" "Are you engaged?" "Something better than that, mother. You will not misunderstand me, will you? I am sorry if I am going to hurt you, mother. I have found the Messiah!"

Mother said, "Do you mean to say that you are going to bring upon me a greater sorrow and disgrace than any other? Do you not know that I must renounce you? That I must refuse ever to see you? That I must curse you if you say that again?"

I said, "Mother, will you read this book?" She took it from my hand, but in a few hours she said, "Here is your book. I must never read it again. You must never again ask me to read it, for it frightens me. I was born into a proud Jewish home, and I must die as I was born. If you ever speak of this again, you will have to leave".

I was silent for six months. Then the time came for the celebration of the Cup Day of Melbourne, when people come from America and all parts of the world and the city runs wild.

My mother, sister and brother said, "Come with us this afternoon."

"No," I replied, "I cannot."

My brother rose from the table and said, "You have never been what you used to be since you read your cursed book about your cursed Christ".

I rose and replied, "The time has come when I must confess that he is the Messiah".

I had said all that was necessary. I was driven from home. As I was leaving, my mother fixed her eyes upon me and said:

"In the name of your fathers, I curse you!"

I stood alone on the sidewalk, with my trunks about me. I hailed a cab. Looking back to my home—mine no longer—I saw that the windows were closed, the blinds drawn, the doors shut. There were my mother, brother and sister and fortune. Then came the thought, "Suppose, after all, that he is not the Christ!" But instantly there was a new love in my heart, and a new light in my soul, and I answered the doubt with, "There is no supposing! He is the Messiah, he is the Christ!"

The cabman approached me and said:

"Where shall I drive you?"

I stood a moment and looked about me and then shrank back in awful dismay, saying, "I do not know."

"But," said the man, "I must take you somewhere."

I replied, "I have nowhere to go."

Suddenly there came to me, I know not how, a name, "Dr. Robinson." I was never able to recall that I had heard it before. I did not know who he was or where he was, but I said. "Drive me to Dr. Robinson's home".

"Certainly," said the cabman, and soon he stopped near a door bearing a brass plate, on which I read, "John Robinson, D. D." I was admitted, and there came to meet me a dear old Presbyterian minister.

I asked, "Is this Dr. Robinson?"

"Yes".

"I am a Jewess. I have accepted Jesus as my Messiah. I have been driven from home and cursed; I am alone and without money. I believe God has sent me to you. Will you help me?"

"Will I help you? Why, bless your dear heart, we are just needing a daughter in our home".

Then he called out, "My dear, come down." In a few minutes a beautiful little white-haired lady, his wife, entered the room. He repeated my story, and then added, "She wants to know if we will help her".

"Will we help you?" she said, putting her arm around me. "You have left one mother, but you have found another".

Then said I in my heart, "There is no supposing, He is the Messiah! Oh, He is the Messiah!"

Elinor Stafford Millar, when speaking about this young Jewess in Moody Church, Chicago, said:—

She crossed my path not so many years ago, when I was looking for some one to follow me in the position of superintendent of a Rescue Mission. As soon as I saw her, I said:

"It is you I want, and you have to come."

"What for?"

"To take charge of forty of the worst women that were ever inside or outside of jail; poor, wretched, outcast sisters of the night. Will you come?"

"I do not know how to do such work."

"Never mind, I know something about it. I have been labouring with them for years. I will teach you. Will you come?"

"Yes".

I afterward saw that delicate, refined, converted young Jewess as she paced up and down the room at night with a frenzied opium-eater, a drunken, outcast creature, who was raving and tearing her hair.

She said to me, "Lock me in with this woman all night."

I answered; "I am afraid to. I have to leave".

"Lock the door, or we shall not save her, and save her we must".

All night long this woman screamed and tore her hair. I am stating what is true when I say that she pulled it out by the roots. She cursed the Jewess and said, "I will kill you if you don't let me out. But you won't let me out, will you?"

"No, I will not".

And all night the Jewess paced up and down with the insane woman, repeating, "God loves you. Jesus is the Messiah. He is able to save you. He saved me. Won't you let him save you?"

As the morning broke, the poor, exhausted, wretched woman knelt at the bedside, with the Jewess beside her, and said, "Since you love me as you do, I believe in Jesus as the Messiah. I know he is able to save me". And deliverance and the opening of heaven came to this poor victim of sin—she was savingly converted to God. As those two went out of that room, there went with them another, and the form of the third was like unto the Son of God. He was Jesus, the Messiah of the Australian Jewess. Hallelujah!

Ministry is Poorest Paid Calling in U. S.

"The circuit riders of that day were not so very grand,
They took degrees at rolling logs and clearing up the land.
But when they rose to preach it seemed that you could smell
The fragrant flowers of heaven and the stifling smoke of hell."

Rev. Seth Reed, the "grand old man" of Detroit Conference, not long ago in an annual meeting of the conference told the story of the Methodist circuit rider of Michigan frontier days. With gun and Bible nestling side by side in saddlebag, he rode through almost trackless forests of the interior of the state, often the target of savage hunters. To the outermost pioneer families in their lonely cabin of logs, the circuit rider carried consolation of religion. He was associated with every great event in the lives of these lonely pioneers. He would ride for days to attend a wedding or a christening. He was not always polished in speech and manners. He could fight as well as exhort. The wilderness was his alma mater; the Bible, the discipline, Fletcher's checks and the writings of John Wesley constituted his biblical and theological library; he loved God, believed in a very devil, hated sin and loved sinners.

Dr. Reed told how his salary was raised to $90 a year. It was a very substantial increase. It made him feel quite opulent.

The day of the circuit rider and his "$90 a year opulence' 'is gone, but the financial condition of the average preacher is not much improved. He works as hard to make both ends meet and raise his family as did the circuit rider. It is still ture as Bob Ingersol once said that "the Methodist preacher can do more preaching on less money than any other variety."

It is still true that ministers' families are larger than the average laymen's families. They are expected to dress better than most people to clothe their families neatly. They must educate their families, contribute something to charities and missions, buy books and magazines; the period of preparation for the ministry is unusually long and arduous.

Yet the latest United States census report gives $663 as the average income of the ministers of the United States—$37 below the income upon which the average family can live "with any approach to decency."

Is it any wonder that not one in ten ministers can save up anything for old age?—Detroit News.

No Money Making Job

BY REV. M. S. RICE, D.D.

The ministry is no money making job. All this good and commendable effort to increase the average salaries of the preachers today I hope I will succeed, but they will not be men with lucrative salaries even then, and no preacher will ever make money off his salary. Just what the figures of that salary may be matters little. The job of the preacher is of a sort that it will keep him from ever having to worry personally over the homiletics of the Scripture about the camel and the needle's eye. The man who enters the pastorate, if he be of ordinary ability, may be sure he has accepted a task of sacrifice. I am not decrying this fact, I am simply stating it, so that I may also say that we can even afford to be poor in order to preserve the single aim of our high calling and say meaningfully to men everywhere, "I seek not yours but you." There is no virtue in poverty, but in a day when a whole world seems money mad, there is virtue in men honoring a calling that promises no cash reward. Up to this fact comes the church's appreciation in her pension system for the veterans of her ministry, and I believe the church will be jealous enough of her duty to make full proof of her appreciation.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

Thirty-two churches have now won a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll, the latest addition being Louisville, Ohio, and we rejoice with Brother Baer in this victory. Brother Baer received his appointment as District Goal Director after all other directors had been named; but given a little time he will get the conference lined up with any of the other districts. So far as the goal for the Evangelist is concerned in the number of churches on the Honor Roll, Southern California has three, Kanemorado six, Illiokota four, Indiana seven, Ohio six, Pennsylvania five and Virginia one. As compared to the number of churches in the district Southern California and Kanemorado are in the lead. But the leaven is working and we are optimistic as to the final outcome for the goal set for the Evangelist.

The call issued this week by Brother Wolford is one of the most important matters before the church at the present time. It is nothing to the credit of any of us that the funds for the Board of Benevolences are allowed to become exhausted. Every pastor and every church should heed this call at once.

The Ashland College notes this week reveal that since old "Boreas" has let up a little on his steady drive the student activities have taken on new enthusiasm and various stunts peculiar to college life may be chronicled most any time now. Given equal opportunities and the Ashland students will show about as much life as the students of any college.

Brother J. C. Beal gives our readers a very comprehensive and interesting report of the work in the Compton Avenue church of Los Angeles this week. Among the many good things that have come to this church during the last few months was increase of the strength of the church by seventeen confessions and reconsecrations. Brother Beal acted as his own evangelist in a short meeting and gave very satisfactory service. The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society are good working auxiliaries of this congregation.

There may be other pastors that do as much preaching in their regular work as Brother Platt of the Lathrop, California, charge does, but if there are we have no knowledge of it. But the field Brother Platt covers is too large for any one man and should be divided with another good worker. From the communication from the church correspondent we gather that Brother Platt is greatly beloved by the people with whom he labors so earnestly.

We have previously spoken of some of the difficulties of the field in Columbus which Brother Christiansen is cultivating, but from his letter which appears elsewhere in this issue we are led to believe he is nearing a harvest time. Prayer and work go hand in hand and Brother Christiansen is employing this dual force to reach the hearts of the people who so much need the gospel in Columbus. After having passed through all the experiences that have been her portion since the work in Columbus was started the mission can not hope to be full grown in a season.

Brother E. A. Myer, superintendent of the Tenth Legion department of the work of our young people makes a strong plea for the work of his department this week. No department of the work of the church will work by itself. All departments of the work must be directed and given force from both human and divine sources. If the young people's societies will listen to the teaching of Brother Myer he will bring his department up to the standard required by the national organization.

Professor J. A. Garber, National Christian Endeavor president directs the minds of the district officers of the greatness and importance of their work. Charts have been distributed for keeping record of the advancement made by the societies and it is urgent that these reports should be made as soon as possible and to make an attempt to have the reports really worth while. Brother Garber also reports the organization of new societies in Indiana. For our National Endeavor society to reach the standard of its goals a number of new societies must be organized in each district.

In a recent number of the Canton (O) Daily News, appeared the following item at the top of the first page, "Conservation of Coal at the First Brethren Church, Louisville, has resulted in the forming an organization among the male members of the church known as 'the Woodchoppers.' In an effort to keep the church fires burning, members of this organization made regular trips into the woods to obtain fuel. Several cords of wood have been chopped." An organization of this democratic character will result in good aside from that resulting from the saving of coal. Whatever brings the people together in a common cause results in mutual helpfulness.

That the work of Brother Oberholtzer at Fremont is being blessed and is acceptable to the people is evidenced by the pleasant surprise that was perpetrated upon him shortly before Christmas and likewise by the call the church has extended him to continue as pastor for a period of three years after the expiration of the time of his present engagement. A revival meeting is now in progress at Fremont. The Ohio conference will meet at Fremont in April though the exact date has not yet been determined upon by the executive committee.

Milledgeville, Illinois, has been handicapped in the work of the church and Sunday school as hundreds of other churches have during the present winter by the extreme cold and excessive snows, but they have not given up. Their revival meeting which was so sadly interfered with by the elements will be resumed again next fall with the same evangelist, F. G. Coleman, that was stormed and frozen out in January. Yet eight members were added to the church by baptism. A splendid Christmas service was held by the Sunday school and the pastor and his family were not forgotten by the membership at that time. It seems the churches are growing more considerate of the needs of their pastors as the years pass.

Sylvester Lowman sends us his first report from his work on the Pacific coast. Brother Lowman was fortunate indeed to be permitted to escape the rigors of the seasons those of us in the East had to endure the past winter, and we trust he will find his labors for the Lord profitable in souls as well as pleasant in earthly comforts.

One of the lay members from Roanoke, Virginia, reports that one thing that is ever kept before their people by their pastor, and that is that to fulfill all the functions of a Brethren church they must ever be mindful of the work cut out for them by the General Church in establishing the standards of the Four-Year Program. This is the Lord's work and it can not be emphasized too strongly.

We still have a few hundred copies of the Report of General Conference and the Brethren Annual and Church Year Book that should find sale among the churches to insure the Publishing House against loss in publishing this report. We have received many words of praise for the good qualities of this little booklet and we appreciate the commendation, but commendation does not pay bills. Cold cash is required to buy paper. Order one or more copies at twenty-five cents. It is a bargain.

Chosen of Him

It was a most blessed day, that day when Jesus went up into a mountain apart, and "calleth unto himself whom he would." How well we remember the days long gone by when schoolboys "chose up" for a game of ball. The leaders of the opposing sides were selected, the bat tossed into the air and caught by one of the leaders, then hand upon hand passed the length of the bat until the last grip was made that would permit the contestant to toss the bat back over his head and then he had FIRST choice. How honored the boy felt who was first chosen to have part in the contest of skill upon the old ball ground! Usually he felt just above his fellows and a touch of pride possessed his soul as he realized he was the most efficient assistant the leader could choose. Not a little envy and sometimes considerable bitterness was felt, by the boy who was not chosen, toward his playmates that were more fortunate or more skillful than he. Sometimes it was felt that favoritism rather than ability prompted the leader in making the choice.

There must have been a thrill of expectancy surging o'er the souls of the disciples of Jesus as they realized he was about to call from their number those whom he would have share his most intimate thoughts. It is true they did not realize what great responsibilities would be placed upon the shoulders of the chosen ones but they felt the honor, and, not knowing the sacrifice required, no doubt many of those who were left in the valley while Jesus and the few went up into the mountain felt that they could have made a better choice of Apostles than he did. Undoubtedly some of them felt they had never been given an opportunity to show the Master and the other disciples all the good things they could do, that they were discrimiated against and held back whenever they attempted anything for him. Such is human nature and we can excuse it for we are all human and most of us have experienced similar feelings. Yet we must admit that there is an honor attached in being "chosen of him." Sacrifice there may be and hardship a plenty, but who would not make sacrifice and who would not endure suffering and undergo hardship for his dear sake? Such are the feelings many of his followers have until they have been put to the actual test, but in discipleship, as in everything else, the "proof of the pudding is in the eating of it."

Only twelve men were called of the Lord to become his apostles during the days of his earthly ministry, but now we are ALL called, we are ALL chosen of him. Were Jesus to stand in our busy streets today we are sure he would lift up his eyes as of old and "behold the multitudes as sheep having no shepherd," and he would have compassion on them. After all these years the call is urgent that the ones who have learned to love the Lord, those who have tasted of the fullness of his grace should feel the urgent call to go out into the highways and the hedges and "constrain" the people to come to the feast prepared. We need not wait until we feel that we are numbered among the twelve before we begin our work for him. We are all chosen of him to be ambassadors to an alien people, those who do not know the Lord.

Beside Himself

What a common thing it is to hear an enthusiast spoken of as being beside himself, especially if that enthusiasm be along moral or religious lines. We have seen old men, gray haired men throw their hats up in the air and have heard them "yell" themselves hoarse at a political demonstration and no one thought anything about it. It was all right and proper, only a method of giving vent to one's intense political convictions, but should any of these men conduct themselves in a similar manner at a religious gathering or at a prayer meeting they would be considered "beside themselves." If the attendants at a Wednesday night prayer meeting made as much noise as the crowd at a political meeting the neighbors would likely lodge a complaint with the police and the meeting would stand a good chance of being broken up for disturbing the peace. We are not making a plea for a noisy prayer meeting, for we do not believe in that kind of prayer meetings. It has been reported that at a revival meeting in one of our neighboring towns the preacher called upon a dozen of his members to pray all at the same time and made the request that they should all pray LOUD. Such services may work UP a revival of feeling, of emotion, but they certainly do not bring DOWN a revival of deeply spiritual religion. But while some few people may bring shame upon the cause of Christ because of their unbridled emotion on the other hand there are a great many more who, for fear of being considered beside themselves, repress and smother all religious convictions and feelings to the great loss of the good they might othrwise do.

The religion of Jesus Christ is more or less radical and one can not become an earnest follower of him without taking some radical steps in one's life and there is danger of having it said, "he is beside himself," but one had better have it said of him that he is beside himself for Christ than to have it said at the end of time, "depart from me for I never knew you."

Story Telling and Preaching

Many an otherwise good sermon has been spoiled by the preacher's attempt to relate humorous stories, but on the other hand many a poor sermon has been made effective because the preacher has been able to tell a few good stories that make clear the points he otherwise was unable to develop either to his own satisfaction or that of his hearers.

There are those who would condemn all story telling in a sermon, while others regard all sermons as dull and uninteresting unless they are freely interspersed with stories of various sorts and kinds.

One of the gospel writers in speaking of Jesus says, "Without a parable spake he not unto them," and a parable is in reality nothing more than a story, and as Jesus surpassed all other teachers in his grasp of truth so he surpassed all other teachers or preachers in the art of story telling. The occasion of his telling of his stories and the subject matter of what he had to tell are worthy of note because of the real difference of his method from that of the modern so-called popular after-dinner speaker or the convention speaker or even a great many of the popular modern preachers.

Jesus' parables or stories always carried a most valuable and impressive lesson with them as they were used to make clear to the minds of his hearers the message he desired to convey. In this they were different from the stories of many popular preachers which are related in order to entertain or to amuse without thought of their teaching value or the lack of it. A story that has no bearing upon the subject at hand but that is interjected into the discourse for the sake of amusing the audience or in order to awaken a lagging attention is not of the type the Master used in his ministry. Some people are not able to relate a story in an interesting manner no matter how hard they try so it is worse than useless for them to attempt it, while others are natural born story tellers and can make the most common things of life appear to the audience with a halo of glory about them and leave impressions for eternal good. But after all story telling is largely an acquired art and the art grows by doing though the people must often suffer while the art is being acquired, but this gift which Jesus used so successfully in all his ministry is one worthy of painstaking effort on the part of one who would use it for his glory.

War and the Sunday School

One of the last institutions in America to be affected by the war might be thought to be the Sunday school. With the Sunday schools conducted as they had been until more recent years, chiefly for the sake of the children only, this might be true, but as the modern Sunday school has come to emphasize the work in the adult department more and more, especially in the adult men's department, it is not at all difficult to understand that all schools that have been active in these departments must have been greatly affected by the world's conflict.

Mr. A. T. Arnold, state secretary of the Ohio Sunday School Association, who recently has been busy making arrangements for the great state convention to be held at Springfield May 28-31, has declared, "The war has created problems in Sunday school management which only those in active charge of departments can realize, and the convention will be devoted largely to solving such problems." One might think that the religious life of a people and the religious activities embodied in their public worship could escape the baneful influence of war in foreign countries; but since America seems to be destined to play so important a part in the great conflict it is impossible that any one great and common interest of the country should remain untouched. And the very fact that the American Sunday schools are so largely affected by the influences developing out of the war is a testimony concerning the large place the Sunday school occupies in the life of the American people. We only hope the great Ohio Sunday school convention may be able to successfully solve some of the intricate problems the Sunday schools are compelled to face.

The Relation Between Seeing and Doing

What They Saw

Captain Allen Gardiner, an English naval officer, saw the hopeless condition of the natives of Tierra del Fuego, whom Darwin pronounced "lower than many animals and incapable of being civilized."

A party of tourists were "seeing China." One young girl was impressed with the need of Chinese girls for Christian schools and teachers.

A man of wealth was shown through an orphan home and saw the need and destitution of the children there.

Some girls in a southern city were taken to visit the negro quarters and saw that the cooks going out to work either locked their small children in a room alone or turned them out on the streets.

A girl, who went to the Blue Ridge mountains in North Carolina for her summer vacation, saw the ignorance and destitution of some of the children of the mountains.

When the Laymen's Missionary movement began its work, a party of sixty-six laymen went out to see for themselves the mission fields of the world.

What They Did

He determined to return to South America as a messenger of the Cross. There he gave his life in the effort to bring the gospel to those destitute people.

She let her friends return to America without her, and Frederica Mead stayed in China to teach in Ginling College, Nanking.

He wrote a check which provided a pair of shoes for the little bare feet of every orphan in the home.

These girls started a day nursery for negro children and secured funds to provide nurses, a kindergarten teacher for the younger children and industrial teachers for the older ones.

She wrote back home for Bibles and papers and spent her vacation teaching the children, who had never had any other chance to learn.

When they returned, their messages so stirred the first Laymen's Conventions that gifts still continue to come in to supply needs they saw in non-Christian lands.

Armenian Refugees at Port Said

The little congregation of Protestant Armenian refugees at Port Said were, before their terrible experience, inhabitants of six villages in Asia Minor and most of them belonged to the old Armenian or Gregorian church. Their religious ceremonies were recited in a dead language—old Armenian, not understood by the present generation. So these members of the "Illuminator's church," as they called it (after St. Gregory the "Illuminator"), were in dark ignorance of the gospel. About fifty years ago the efforts of American missionaries brought them the Evangelical movement, and introduced a Turkish translation of the scriptures. About eighty families from these six villages were converted, but it has been very difficult to maintain a Christian atmosphere among a people who have had no mental preparation for it; no back-ground with which to apprehend spiritual things. Since their arrival on Egyptian soil, Rev. Dikran Andressian, a native pastor has cared for the spiritual needs of a congregation of about seventy families. He writes that "The sowing has not been without its crops, the most prominent part of which is diffused in the hearts and lives of men and women—something which numerical statistics cannot comprise."

A Great Future for Egypt

Dr. Charles R. Watson, of Cairo, is well qqualified to speak of things as they are likely to be in Egypt. He says, "Comparing Egypt of two years ago with Egypt of 1917, certain marked changes are discernible. Then, business conditions were greatly depressed. Today Egypt seems to be prospering, Cairo especially so; there is great activity in many lines".

Dr. Watson's imagination has been captivated by the prospect for Egypt and the entire near East after the war, assuming, of course, that the pernicious influence of the Turk is to be broken. "Imagine," he says, "the Near East freed, including Turkey, Arabia, persia and Egypt, with a vast area of almost 3,000,000 square miles—more than twice that of India—with a population of almost 50,000,000, freed from the blighting influences which have limited its population, retarded its industrial development and degraded its moral and spiritual ideals. Imagine Egypt at the center, geographically, of this liberated world of the Near East. Think of the start it has by virtue of the political liberties and industrial development which the British occupation has secured for it in the past thirty-five years. Consider its strategic location along the highway of the nations, the Suez Canal. From Egypt may be exerted influences making for enlightment, for moral uplift, for spiritual regeneration, such as the New Day in the Near East demands."—The Christian Express.

The Basel Mission on the Gold Coast

There will doubtless be many missionary readjustments after the war. For example; the Basel Mission has been at work in the Gold Coast for seventy years. While it is a Swiss society, it has drawn the greater part of its financial support and a large number of its missionaries from South Germany. The work it has accomplished has won the highest praise from government officials and other impartial observers. A Christian community numbering 25,000 baptized persons has been built up and 8,330 pupils attend the schools.

The British government recognizes the value of the work and is anxious that everything possible should be done to save it from injury, but has concluded that it is necessary that all German influence be eliminated from the Mission. This means that a new society must be formed to take over the German work on the Gold Coast. An appeal has been made to the United Free Church of Scotland to co-operate in conserving the results already gained and the Foreign Mission Committee feel that the call is not one which can be set aside, in spite of the difficulties due to the claims of the war on the young manhood of the nation. A Christian community of 25,000 Africans cannot be left without provision for their spiritual and educational needs.

The only other large mission in the Gold Coast is that of the Wesleyan Methodist Society, which faces such great demands for expansion that they cannot accept further responsibility. The deputies of the United Free Church of Scotland who have studied the situation say: "The difficulties are great; they must be frankly recognized, but with the will to serve, they are not insuperable." They, therefore, plan to take up the work.

Training Evangelists for the Congo

"News comes from our African mission", says a writer in The Missionary Intelligencer, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, "that all the stations are delighted with the Bolenge school for evangelists, which has recently been started. This is the beginning of a strong school for the training of all our younger native evangelists in the work. It is believed by the mission that courses laid out in this school will be of great help to the young preachers coming on. The Congo people did not have any school until our missionaries went to them. They did not even have a written language, and our workers have had to start the educational service from the ground."

Church Union in South Africa

The Christian Express, published in Lovedale, South Africa, comments editorially as follows on church conditions in that part of the world:

"Historically the Independents and Presbyterians have been very closely associated. The Scotch Covenanters for the Presbyterians, Cromwell and his Ironsides and the Pilgrim Fathers for the Independents, these are a historical and spiritual ancestry of which no man and no church need be ashamed. The coming together of their descendants is a natural thing. We are glad to see that the South African Presbyterian assembly welcomed the proposal and has appointed a committee 'to consult and report'. It is an unhappy fact that a further union with the great Dutch Presbyterian church of this country has not yet even been suggested."

Tenth Legion Department

How many know what the Tenth Legion is? That's good. This article is for those who do not know.

The Tenth Legion is "an enrollment of Christians whose practice it is to give God for his work not less than one-tenth of their income".

Mr. W. L. Amerman originated the plan and named it from the famous "Tenth Legion" of Roman history.

The motto of the "Tenth Legion" is "render unto God the things that are God's."

There are no dues or taxes to be paid and membership is not limited to Christian Endeavorers. Any one that gives God the tithe may join.

Any time you wish you can withdraw from the Tenth Legion (but you will not want to).

The names of the members are not published but considered strictly confidential.

Each is to decide for himself what is the truth of his income and how to spend the money given to the Lord for his work.

Join by sending your name to one of the Tenth Legion superintendents. Join the Tenth- Legion: Because you receive ten tenths of your income from God and should certainly return not less than one-tenth for his work.

Because such systematic giving practiced by all would speedily cause the gospel to be preached in all the world. Because in this way we can fulfil our Lord's command to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

What will you do? E. A. MYER, Flora, Indiana.

Tithing

(Selected from the "Indiana Farmer's Guide" by A. E. Myer.)

The giving of tithes is one of the Lord's commands and should be practiced to a much greater extent than now prevails. We are admonished: "And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's. It is holy unto the Lord".

Thus, even though we do give our tithe, we are but following the teaching of Holy Writ, doing our duty by the Lord, but still not giving of our own. We are not actually giving when we lay aside a tenth of our store; we are only turning to God that which is his. To give of our own we must go a step further and give more than the stipulated tenth.

To those who have never practiced tithing, to those who have neglected this beautiful custom, feeling that it was impossible in the present state of inflated values, not only those pertaining to food, but to practically everything else, to those fearing to give the tithe which really belongs to God, least worse times overtake them, turn to Proverbs 3-9, and read: "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruit of thine increase." If still in doubt read the next verse: "So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses burst out with new wine".

Why then, if we are believeres of the Word, should we hesitate to give unto God that which is His own? Does not this verse give the assurance that by giving unto the Lord that which is his own, we will not suffer loss but shall, instead, be prospered until "our barns are filled with plenty?"

In our homes we have practiced tithing ever since the real meaning of the command was made clear to us. However, we do not confine our giving to the church. The Bible reminds us or the needs of the widows and orphans. We are told that "Whosoever giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." So we parcel out our tithes as we believe the Lord would have us do. First, we give to the church. This includes the minister, missions, etc. Secondly, we give to charitable institutions, and last, to whomsoever needs our aid, let it be saint or sinner.

When first we began tithing it seemed a very hard matter. The thought of those dimes and what they would buy would obtrude itself upon us. But we never wavered. We laid aside our tenth, as soon as we received a dollar. Now it seems the easiest thing in the world to retain 90 cents and drop 10 cents into the little savings bank kept sacred to that purpose. We do not wait until we have accumulated our whole year's income before dividing the dimes. Instead we lay away the tenth as fast as we earn and receive a dollar. By this means one scarcely misses the tenth. Never having found a single instance in the Bible which commands us to give to the church alone, we feel we are acting as the Lord would have us when we divide our tithes as above outlined.

For instance, near us is an orphans' home where almost one hundred little children are sheltered, clothed, and fed. We keep in touch with the needs of this home and whenever possible aid them by the purchase of clothing, shoes, etc. Last Christmas we bought new suits of underwear and stockings to the limit of our tithes and sent down to them. We had the comfort of knowing that six children were given good, warm underwear and two pairs of stockings each with part of our dimes—the Lord's dimes. And that part of our Christmas shopping gave us the greatest joy of all. Another time a widow came to us begging bread for herself and child. She was not a church member, made no profession of faith, but she was hungry. We aided her from the tithe box, feeling it was what Jesus would have done had he been here in the flesh. These are but two instances to show how we spent the Lord's money. Some may say we are wrong and that all should go to the church, but until we find in the Book explicit commands to give only to the church, we expect to go on as we have been going.

To those who have never returned to the Lord that which is His, I would say: Try it just one year and learn the meaning of true happiness. Hunt up some poor, unfortunate and with some of God's dimes. lighten the burden. But do it in God's name—not your own. If you have any of your 90 cents to spare, well and good, give that in your own name, but do not cheat God out of His tithes. You may say times are hard. I admit that. The chances are that they will be harder. But remember, and according to Holy Writ, you have no more right to it than I. Let us not rob God.

Indiana's New Societies

Our Four-Year Challenge calls for sixty five new societies. Ten of these were apportioned to Indiana and we are pleased to report the organization of two.

Muncie, Indiana

On November fourth a new Y. P. S. C. E. was organized at this place with eighteen charter members. The following officers were chosen: President, Ruth Kimmel; Vice President, Marie Kimmel; Secretary, Ellen Rogers; Treasurer, Floyd Paul; Corresponding Secretary, Hazel Garrett. A splendid interest is shown by all the workers and every one is enthusiastic about making this a "Superior" society.

Miss Kimmel, the president, writes: "We had a rousing Ashland College Night meeting with Mrs. Ora Paul as leader. Our Evangelist did not arrive in time to procure the college songs from it, but we happened to find one old copy of "Rah, Rah, Rah for Ashland." Although the people had never heard the song before, they sang it with a feeling that made one feel that they treasured her in their hearts as their own dear college."

Nappance Juniors

Recently Nappance organized a Junior Christian Endeavor with twenty charter members. Miss Freda Price was chosen superintendent with Miss Shirley Price as secretary-treasurer.

In reporting the organization Miss Price, the superintendent, who is a graduate of Ashland College, made this observation: "We are going to do everything to make this society a success, to lure the young people into serving their Master by doing their 'bit.' And we hope we will hear of other new Junior societies throughout the brotherhood."

We share this hope, too, and are glad to avail ourselves of the opportunity of welcoming these new societies into the fellowship of our National Union. They have launched their work in a most promising manner. May they enjoy a full measure of blessing in their service of Christ and the church. J. A. GARBER.

District Officers at Work

In last week's issue we called attention to the Challenging Charts. For the most part these were distributed through the district officers who approved the society apportionments for their respective district. It is gratifying to note the enthusiasm and optimism with which they promote their work.

George E. Cone, president in Illiokota, "Enclosed find the requested article for the Evangelist. Have enclosed the charts, and at present will do my best to organize societies in churches that have none at present."

The secretary in Kanemorado, Miss Faye Atwood, writes in similar tone: "Have the charts ready to mail, and believe we shall be able to organize some new societies. Have asked the various societies to report back to me so that I can get our district standing for 1917."

Our National Tenth Legion superintendent, E. A. Myer, who is also president of the Southern Indiana district, rarely disappoints. He wrote: "Those charts arrived in good shape, and have been mailed. They are fine and will be a great help in keeping a record of our yearly gains."

Pennsylvania president, A. L. DeLozier, was equally prompt in his response: "Sent out the charts the same evening of their arrival along with circular letter which Miss Bracken (district secretary) had composed and sent on for me to duplicate. Since then I have divided the societies among the three officers, and have asked the other two to join me in sending occasional letters relative to the various goals."

These unsolicited comments and suggestions are full of encouragement. Other disdrict officers may have been equally as active, but we have not heard from them as yet. We can only hope that the society officers will respond as promptly and enthusiastically. If they do we will not only attain but exceed the goals of our Four-Year Challenge. J. A. GARBER.

THE POOR LITTLE HOBARTS

By Hilda Richmond

"What do you think, Auntie!" cried three voices at once the first Sunday morning that the Bliss children were home from the country. "We know some children who never get to Sunday school."

"I think I could understand better if one talked at a time," said the young lady with a smile. "What is it, Bobby? You are the biggest."

"I said we know some children who never go to Sunday school—they never did go, Auntie."

"That is perfectly dreadful," said Auntie. "What is the reason they do not go?"

"There is no Sunday school near them," said Ruth. "Their father has to take them five miles to school every morning and go for them at night. They live way off in the big woods with no neighbors."

"It is the Hobart family, Helen," said Mrs. Bliss. "They have charge of the big tract of land Will is manager for. We lived in a shack near them for a week or two this summer. You see the Company must hire men to live in the forest to see that people do not steal the timber and molest the cattle that graze there. They are very nice people, though they are so far from school and church. Their children had a good time with ours this summer."

"Let's save them some of our papers, and send them," suggested Amy. "I know they would be glad for some pictures and stories."

"Let's," cried the others, but they soon forgot all about their kind resolution. Perhaps you know that boys and girls, particularly little boys and and girls, have many kind thoughts, but often they forget to carry them out.

So the Hobarts were forgotten until in the winter, when Mr. Bliss had to make a trip to the tract of land; and as the weather was very nice and the roads fine he took his wife and the three children with him in the big automobile. The three children bought candy and nuts and chewing gum and taffy for the Hobart children, but they never thought of tucking in the Sunday school papers they had once planned to send.

"Have to stay over Sunday!" cried three voices sadly, when the big storm raged and made traveling out of the question. "We'll miss Sunday school tomorrow!"

But it could not be helped. They were comfortable in the snug farmhouse while outside the wind howled. Amy cried herself to sleep at the thought of missing Sunday school for the first time in three years, and the boys were very sorry, but you know boys of seven and eight do not cry so easily as little girls at half past five.

"Come into the sittingroom," said Nellie Hobart promptly at nine o'clock next morning. "It's time to begin."

The children wondered what it was time to begin, but they went in soberly to see. Mrs. Hobart was at the piano and her family and Mr. and Mrs. Bliss were sitting with books in their hands. She played a tune the children knew at once, and soon they were singing merrily, for it was one they used in the Sunday school at home. Then Mr. Hobart read from the Bible and he asked Mr. Bliss to pray, and then they had more singing. The little Bliss children looked on with open eyes and mouths.

"Since we have some visitors we can have two classes," said Mr. Hobart. "Usually we have but one. But first we must take our offering."

The money was taken up in a little gasket and laid by for a real Sunday school miles away, and then they had the lesson and more singing. "And you have papers, too!" cried Bobby when the familiar little papers were brought out. "I like this nearly as well as our school."

"And we have entertainments, too, don't we, Mamma?" said Joe Hobart. "If you don't get to go home today we'll give an entertainment for you tonight."

So that night there was more singing and the children spoke pieces, and Hr. Hobart told them Bible stories and Mr. Bliss read from a book of Bible tales and Mrs. Bliss sang and played, so that every one was amazed when the clock struck nine.

"Come back again!" called the little Hobarts when the road was cleared and the big automobile started on its way. "We like to have you."

"We will be back soon," whispered Mr. Bliss to the children, "and we'll take them a magic lantern and some Bible pictures for their Sunday school. That is a little secret, so you must not tell it."

So the Bliss children are looking forward to getting back to the tiny Sunday school very soon with the big, splendid magic lantern and all the books and papers they have collected for the Hobart children. And what do you think? They never say "the poor little Hobart children" since they went out to see them that winter day and were snowed in for two whole days. Can you guess why?—S. S. Times.

Give and Live

When the tree stops growing sprouts it begins to die.

There are trees which do not begin to show signs of life unitl after all their neighbors are in full leaf. There they stand, still grey and apparently lifeless. One of these late-growing trees is the hickory. Looking at it when the season is late we are led to wonder if it be indeed alive.

Then slowly nature's great mystery is repeated, and away out at the tip of the branches something creamy white appears, and we know all is well with the old hickory. It is indeed alive and our hearts rejoice once more.

Cut a tree down and as long as sprouts spring up at the base we know there is still life.

Some streams have a way of diving deep under ground in certain places. Above is the fountain; down yonder it disappears out of sight. Has the spring failed? Go a little farther down stream and here we find the brook bubbling up out of the earth and laughing its way on to the sea.

Give and live! As long as we have something the world wants and give it freely, our hearts are alive. The day we stop giving we begin to lose our place.

What is it that makes some men hard and cold and bitter? Ah, you know what is the matter. They do not give anything of themselves to those about them. They have made up their minds that they will creep away all by themselves, enjoy what has been given them all alone and let others care for themselves. It is the hour of death when they make that decision.

You have heard of the lakes that have no outlet. From different sides streams come rushing in. The waters those creeks and rivers bring are pure and clear and sweet, but when they take their plunge into the lake they never are pure and clear and sweet again. Water that is never given back to the world is spoiled and worthless. If it does not run it becomes dead water.

If you want to live, give. Give the best there is in you. Give hope, give good cheer, give the love God has given you, in good measure and unstinted hand.

Never was a truer word spoken than this —Give and live.—Kind Words.

News From the Field

To Pastors of Brethren Churches.

Whereas conference has set aside the second Sunday in June a day for offerings for the superannuated ministers the board finds itself without funds to meet its demands until that collection is taken. It is therefore necessary that you ask your churches to respond to the needs of this board now. Some of you have provided for this contribution in your budget. Will you ask your treasurer to remit. Others of you are requested to take a special offering. If you send an offering there will be no acknowledgement unless you request it. This is done to save postage and stationary. Since the increase in postage this amounts to considerable. The return of your check will be your receipt unless you request acknowledgement. Let there be a quick response.

The first thing here of special interest as we approached the Christmas season was a program given by the church choir on the morning of December 23. It was a beautiful and very appropriate musical program, a Christmas service in song and story. A similar program was given last year, and they prove to be deservedly popular and highly appreciated.

Last year the Sunday school here used the "White Gifts" service for the first time. So well did it commend itself that it was used again this year with better results and increased satisfaction. A total of $65 was received in money, together with other gifts of substance and pledges for service. The material gifts went to the National C. E. Association, the National S. S. Association, and the work in Africa.

At the close of the Christmas ,service something not on the regular program was presented. A table groaning under its load of edible things piled high upon it was brought in, and, on behalf of the church and Sunday school, our superintendent presented the "shower" to the pastor and family as one of their "White Gifts." It was a splendid manifestation of their kindness and goodwill, which the pastor and his wife highly appreciated and for which they were truly grateful.

For many years there were no special services of any kind in this church marking the beginning of the New Year. After some agitation, the matter was taken up some weeks before the close of the old year, and it was decided to have a Watch Night Meeting on New Year's eve. A very interesting and delightful program was arranged. The meeting was well attended and all present were not only well entertained but were edified and profited; and it was the unanimous opinion of those privileged to enjoy the evening that there should be another meeting next year.

Begining the first of the year, the Brethren Evangelist was sent into the homes of the membership of this congregation, and thus another goal was more than reached. We are glad to be in the list of churches sending the paper into every home, and believe much good will result from such an arrangement.

The first Sunday in January marked the beginning of our evangelistic campaign. Evangelist F. G. Coleman arrived here that morning in the midst of the worst snowstorm of the winter up to that time, but it was only the beginning of our worst weather. Every day was a zero day, and roads piled full of snow made it impossible for country people to get out. We made no progress the first week, but started in on the second only to find new and greater difficulties. Besides the most severe winter weather, a scarcity of fuel began to be felt. And with no relief in sight at the end of the second week the meetings closed.

The visible results were five confessions and one reconsecration. The following Sunday we had three more accessions, making a total of eight new members by baptism since our last report. Brother Coleman worked heroically in the face of many discouragements. It was my first opportunity to labor with him in an evangelistic campaign and I found him a good yoke-fellow. It has already been decided that he shall come back to Milledgeville for another campaign next September, when it is hoped that both the weather and the fuel situations will be more favorable.

January 26 will be remembered by Milledgeville people as the first time in the history of the town that electricity was available for lights in the homes. The church had the parsonage wired and the fixtures installed all ready for the "juice", so we were among the first to get it when it came to town, and since that time we have enjoyed the change from the old way.

MILES J. SNYDER.

Compton Avenue, Los Angeles.

Progress in our work has been made since our last report. A number of things indicate this and also give expression to the spirit of unity that prevails in our work.

Some weeks ago the members of the congregation, with some of their friends, took possession of the home of the pastor and spending a social hour together they left behind gifts that bespoke their love and interest. I scarcely need say that this act of kindness was appreciated, not alone because of the monetary value of the gifts, which was considerable, but because it manifests the bond of love which binds together pastor and people.

All the auxiliaries of the church are in splendid condition. The Dorcas Society is doing commendable work. They are a help not only in a financial way but by their ministrations they are constantly making friends for our work.

The C. E. societies are furnishing an opportunity for the development of the powers of our people. Leaders are being trained who will be of value to our own work as well as the work of the church at large in the years before us. Since the last report an intermediate society has been organized. This meets a long-felt need. It will now be possible to reach and enlist the services of young people who heretofore could not be reached. The young people are manifesting an interest that means definite success for the future. We now have a senior, an intermediate and a junior society.

One of the important factors in our work is the Sunday school. Under the leadership of Brother Neher and an efficient corps of officers and teachers the school is constantly gaining in numbers and power. At our Rally Day some weeks ago, we set the mark for attendance at 250. Some thought this mark too high but with a faith that knows no obstacles the task was undertaken and the goal was more than reached. The school is constantly reaching out into new families and a great deal of our success is due to this agency.

Since the last report a short meeting was led by the pastor. It was planned to have Brother Bell lead in this campaign but when it was impossible for him to come to the coast the task fell to the pastor. The meeting followed the Sunday campaign. We were so far from the tabernacle that the only results we achieved from the Sunday meetings was the deepening of the consecration of our own membership. At the close of the union campaign it was deemed wise to make an effort in our part of the city. The meetings were continued for a little more than two weeks and the visible results were eleven confessions and reconsecrations. During this meeting people were reached for whom we have been working and praying for months. In this number are those who are to be definitely led, I believe into a definite work for the Master and the church is likely to hear from these young people in the years to come. Before the meeting two estimable women were baptized and received into our membership. On the Sunday evening following the special meeting four more made the decision. This makes a total of seventeen confessions and reconsecrations since the last report. This is the second meeting held by the pastor in nine months and to him who is able to convict men of sin all the praise is given.

On New Year's day an all-day meeting was held. An innovation was tried in that the men of the church entertained the ladies. The men had charge of every detail of the dinner. The dinner was fine and all had a good time. A business meeting was held following dinner at which time plans were formulated for the prosecution of the work. The indebtedness on the church property was provided for and this hinderance to our work was removed. The pastor received an unanimous call for another year beginning April first. The beautiful spirit manifested and the definite work accomplished mean a step forward in our work.

We hope, as a church, to meet our part or the Four-Year Program. This will be taken in a more definite way from this time. Some conditions have made it impossible to give this part of our work the attention it should have had. Some of the requirements have been met and we hope to reach all the goals before the end of the four year period.

I could not close this communication without in this public way expressing my appreciation for the kindness of the people at Compton Avenue, the many friends in the surrounding Californian churches, and the many all over the brotherhood who have given us their sympathy and prayers and love in these dark days through which we are passing. I hope to soon be able to acknowledge the letters of sympathy. Human sympathy and love mean much but I I am glad there is one who understands and to whom we may go when the way is dark and the clouds overshadow. To him and all these friends I give the sincere thanks of myself and the children.

The work of the King is moving steadily forward here. We have one main goal kept constantly before us, and that is to "go over the top" with our part of the Four-Year Program. We have been favored with visits from Brothers Jennings and Rowsey since last report. Brother Jennings delivered a wonderful sermon on "Heaven" and Rowsey gave a talk to our C. E. society on the "Quiet Hour,' 'which was helpful to all.

Ashland College Night was properly observed by a special program. Mrs. F. L. Brumbaugh was leader and the members took part freely. The pastor's message for the evening was in keeping with the program and on the theme, "The Divine Call to Service." An offering was taken for Ashland and one "Life Work Recruit" was secured. We solicit the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of our work in this field.

News from the Lathrop, Calif., Church

The Lathrop Brethren held their regular quarterly business meeting on January 9th It was well attended, and good reports were brought in by the different committees appointed at the previous meeting. Also our pastor gave a splendid report of his work, which was highly appreciated.

Brother Platt is at present preaching four times each Sunday—at Ripon at 9:30 A. M.,; Manteca 11; West Colony in the afternoon and Lathrop in the evening. Needless to say, he is an exceedingly busy man, attending to two prayer meetings a week, besides calling on the members of the four places, ever giving out good cheer and counsel to every one with whom he speaks. Indeed we do count it a blessing and a wonderful privilege to have a man like Brother Platt in our midst. We are praying that it may be possible to get another man on the field to relieve him of a portion of the work before very long. Iathrop called Brother Platt again, which makes the 6th year.

We had communion service in the evening after our business meeting, which was well attended. A good spiritual time was enjoyed with many blessings. There were a number of Brethren from Manteca present.

Ripon also enjoyed a love feast on Saturday, January 26th.

The Lathrop Y. P. S. C. E. is doing good work, having taken in young boys and girls now to the extent that it looks like an intermediate society. This being almost a necessity. Our prayers are that several preachers might be the outgrowth from these intermediates, a number of whom are baptized, and are trying every day to learn more of God's will, and to be like him.

Our Sunday school is well attended, 64 being present last Sunday. The attendance at prayer meeting is also good, with more interest manifest in missions than usual. We are studying about South America one evening in each month, and we are praying earnestly for Brother Yoder and Brother Gribble and their work.

Our boys who are gone from us in the draft have proven to be real soldiers of God, refusing to bear arms even though every pressure was put upon them. A gun was put right into the hands of one young brother who refused to tighten his fingers about it to hold it in his grasp. They write that they prefer to die at peace with their God rather than do anything contrary to his will. To which we all say Amen, Amen.

We pray that the next time we write we may report another pastor on the field and that souls have been won to Jesus by their united efforts.

Ashland College Notes

The fuel situation has been relieved for a time and the extra curriculum activities of the college have been resumed. Both Philo and Hesperian societies met Friday night and good programs were rendered. Philo had an evening of parliamentary drill. The Hesperian girls' quartet was the feature of the latter society's program. Miss Ruth Teeter is now president and Harvey Becknell is vice president of the Philomathean organization. Miss Josie Wogoman serves as president and Miss Dora Zimmerman as vice president of Hesperian. Both societies are planning many good things for the spring weeks.

The students of the vocal, piano and expression departments gave a splendid recital in the library Friday, February 8. Much talent was displayed. Much praise is due Miss Martin, head of the voice department, Miss Lichty, of piano and Miss Kanauer, of expression departments. These recitals are always well attended and appreciated.

The Freshman class is up in arms. They have challenged the entire school to basketball, tug-of-war, tennis, baseball and anything athletic. We upper class folks admire their "nerve" but seriously doubt their judgment. However the head men claim we can prove the soundness of the same by engaging them in the things they have named. This "band of hopefuls" is always up and doing. Last Saturday night they had a distinctively Freshman social, and a good time they had we can be sure of that.

Basketball game and—defeat. But we fought 'em all the way. At the third quarter it was 15-15, but they nosed us out by two baskets and a foul. However Mansfield knew they played at Ashland! On account of lack of heat our boys did not have sufficient practice. Gnagey and Starn did splendid work in the game.

Our chapel services led by Dr. Furry are moments of benefit to all the students. Dr. Furry has been giving us "good stuff," as the boys express it. The services are well attended.

Miss Irene Brumbaugh on account of illness, has again been removed to the Samaritan Hospital. The sympathy of the school goes out to her. Mr. Brumbaugh came up from Dayton to see his daughter Sunday.

With the spring months college spirit is revived in a more lively form. From now on be prepared to hear of inter-class games, debates and other matches.

The Purple and Gold is off the press for this month. Better get a copy. Address N. V. Leatherman, Business Manager, of P. & G.

Will write at more length another week. Perhaps one column next week might be labeled "Freshman Doings," if they make good their challenge. F. M. L.

Columbus News.

God's loving kindness has surely been with us here in Columbus the last few months. Without his mercies we could not have succeeded in the work. The pastor is glad to relate that the members are taking firmer hold than before. The attendance is better in each department. In fact the Columbus church is being resurrected to new life in Him. Our Sunday school is increasing in numbers and interest. Christian Endeavor is becoming one of our great resources from which we draw our evening congregation. One of the greatest problems here was to get our members to Sunday school and church in the morning. We prayed, we pleaded, we urged, and we taught the duties from pulpit and to the individual. All these took like oil on ice, and caused some restless nights in prayer to know how to have influence over these members. Theories and schemes of all kinds were tried but all seemed in vain. The undersigned had persuaded and interviewed the teachers that they may try to keep the children from 8 years and on for church. This however worked as previously. While some walked out others ran to get away from church services. The pastor's mind was set on "conquer or die" in the attempt. The question rose what was left to be done. Then it was decided for and by the pastor to pray more earnestly, to work more intensely for we were on the right track and God was bound to hear. Four sermons on prayer were delivered. These and other sermons were taken home with our people and began to work like yeast in flour, and the writer confesses that his congregation is becoming more and more fervent workers for the cause of Christ. The merged services which did not take in the few first months, works fine now, and 80 per cent. at our Sunday school remains for church.

The noblest helpers we had during our struggle were Brother and Sister Horne. I confess there were never better aids given the pastor than these afforded me. May God richly bless both.

I must also refer to one more although he and family are not members yet this family works more faithfully than most of our members. The family referred to is Mr. J. Bowers. I am sure both pastor and people enjoy their faithful helps, and may God help us to appreciate their loyalty and bless us together.

February 2nd we had the pleasure of having with us Brother McBride, of Dayton, O., who showed unto us one hundred beautiful stereoptican views of Africa and its people. These pictures and connecting talks were intensely interesting and our congregation was much pleased to have seen the views and to hear Brother McBride explain about Brother and Sister J. Gribble as well as their African mission life. The members here expressed their appreciation and will be glad to welcome Brother McBride at any time on a visit like this. The pastor and people have given sincere prayers for the upbuilding of a great stronghold here.

Yours in Christian love,
S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

Los Angeles, California

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I thought possibly you might be wondering where we have gotten to by this time. Some months ago we heard the call of the Southern California Mission board to come to Southern California, so the last of November we sold out my contracting business and household goods and packed our trunks and set our faces toward the setting sun, and after four days and nights we woke up on November 30, in Los Angeles, California. Brother Reagan was there to meet us and took us out to one of our good brother's home and we started out to see what could be done. We like the country and there is room for plenty more of our good Brethren here on the coast; and one thing I can assure you that you will not have any of that 30 below zero weather here, for we have sunshine and flowers the year round. But if you come you will find the fighting good. Our work on the coast is not so old as it is back east, but by God's help and many loyal workers here our churches are "going over the top." We now have five good churches in Southern California. Some splendid properties, especially at Long Beach is one of the most modern and complete Brethren churches I have yet been into. Now I know some of my Dayton, Ohio, brethren will want to pull my hair, but you can not get to me. I am safe, 2,700 miles away from you. But go to it old Dayton, we love you and still expect big things from you. Whittier California, has a very beautiful church and a good working body of believers. Then we have the Compton Avenue church in Los Angeles and our work at Lordsburg, with a good, live bunch there. I am very much taken with our work here for we can push things all the year round with no bad winters. I am filling brother F. J. Reagan's place here at the First church of Los Angeles until Brother Reagan finishes his school back east and returns here May first, then I will take the field for the mission board to try to start some new work and if the Lord will lead us on, we may be able to report another new church in the Four-Year Program some day. We were very sorry to leave our new church at Camden, Ohio, and did it with many regrets, and hope some day to visit them again if the Lord tarries awhile yet. There are some splendid fields here for the Brethren, but it takes hard hammering and teaching the word. But this will win any where if we persist in it. If the rest of the churches over the brotherhood will do as good for the Evangelist our church paper will take a great leap ahead. Come on Brethren churches all over the nation if you have not placed the church paper in your budget yet, plan for it next year. I believe every one of our churches should do this. Three out of our five churches adopted this plan this year and we are hoping that every one of them will be in on this next year. Count on Southern California for large things, for our people have a mind to work, though it is hard working here among all these isms. I never saw so many in my life, but Southern California churches are standing on the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible and we are winning in his name.

If this misses the waste basket I thank you. I am sorry to take so much of your valuable space, but I will not come often.

S. LOWMAN.

Fremont, Ohio.

We are happy to report advancement in the work of the Lord at this place. On February 3 one new member was received on statement, or by relation, as we usually say. Christian Endeavor Week was observed by our young people with three mid-week services and the beginning and concluding Sunday evening services. Each was well attended and very helpful. The last, Ashland College night, seemed to be the most interesting of all. The program suggested by the Life Work Department was carried out very successfully. A commendable offering and one new life work recruit for the ministry was realized. This makes the second such recruit from this church within the past year. We have probably more than reached our goal in the Four-Year Program in this regard, but we will not cease our endeavors.

Miss Mae Smith, of Ashland, was with us recently in the interest of the work of our women and girls, relative to the carrying out of the Four-Year Program. Her visit was appreciated and her counsels were very helpful.

The White Gift service of the Sunday school was a grand and delightful success, resulting in a splendid offering and many pledges of service.

One evening, shortly before Christmas, our choir rehersal at the church was disturbed by the assemblage of a large number of members and neighbors, who brought with them a large quanty of food supplies and a sum of money as a donation to the pastor and family, in token of appreciation and good will. The choir rehersal came to a sudden halt and the deacon came to the pulpit and very gracefully explained the interruption and presented the gifts of the people.

A program of special songs, recitations and suitable entertainment was given, which was followed by refreshments and a social hour in the basement room. It was a most complete and delightful surprise. To all our dear brethren and neighbors and to God we are truly grateful.

At our business meeting on New Year's day, by a unanimous vote of the church, the pastor was extended a call to continue his pastoral labors with this church for another term of three years after the close of the present pastoral term, which will end October 1, 1918, with an increase in salary beginning at once. This was another surprise. coming so long before the expiration of the present pastoral term. Feeling that the voice of the church was surely the voice of God, and that our work in this place is not yet done, we accepted the call, subject, however, to the will of God as yet to be revealed.

We are now planning to begin our winter evangelistic campaign Febuary 10. We will be joined in our effort February 19 by Brother Arthur E. Hoppes, of Burlington, Ind. We are hoping for a great victory. Brethren, pray for us.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER,

Marriages

MISHLER-PEARSON.—At the home of the undersigned in Dallas Center, Iowa, on December 31, 1918, Mr. Clifford Mishler and Miss Nellie M. Pearson, were united in marriage. The groom is a member of the Brethren church. We wish these young people heaven's blessing as they undertake the battle of life together. Ceremony by

R. F. PORTE.

PHEBUS-BRUNNER.—Harry Thomas Phebus and Margaret Schultz Brunner, November 10, 1917, both of Frederick, Maryland.

McCLANATHAN-KUHN. — David H. McClanathan and Cora E. Kuhn, November 28, 1917, both of Greencastle, Penn'a. The bride is a member of the Hagerstown church.

Our Dead

BEACH.—Catharine Miller Beach died January 26, 1918. Sister Beach was a Christian from girlhood and a faithful member of the New Enterprise congregation where she will be sadly missed.

She is survived by her husband, brother James Beach, and a number of children. Her cheering voice and unselfish service will be missed here far more than in her congregation. Funeral was held in the New Enterprise Brethren church by the writer assisted by Elder David T. Detwiler, of the Church of the Brethren.

EDWARD BYERS.

LICHTY.—John R. Lichty, of Idaho Falls, Idaho, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Bertha Eisenbise, at Kingsley, Iowa, Saturday, January 12, 1918, of Brights Disease. His wife and brother-in-law, F. P. Beachy, of Carleton, Nebr., were with him when he passed away. Frank D. Lichty, of Idaho Falls, an only son, arrived a day after death. His body was taken to his home in Idaho for burial.

John R. Lichty was born August 5, 1847, and was aged 70 years, 5 months and 7 days. He was a son of Daniel and Rachael (Miller) Lichty and born at the old Lichty homestead in Summit township, near Summit Mills, in Somerset county, Pa. After one year in the west he returned to his former home in Pennsylvania and was united in marriage in December, 1869, with Harriet Beachy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Beachy, of Elk Lick township. They began life together on the Lichty home farm and the following year bought and located on the Peter Miller farm, a mile south of Meyersdale, Pa. But Mr. Lichty was thinking of the west and its opportunities and in 1882 he sold his Pennsylvania farm and emigrated with his family to Davenport, Thayer county, Nebraska.

Mr. and Mrs. Lichty moved to Idaho Falls, Idaho, seven years ago.

Mr. Lichty was one of the founders of the Meyersdale, Pa., Brethren church ,as also an organizer of the Carleton Brethren church. He was always enthusiastic in church, moral and religious activties and did not forget to support his church well financially, although isolated therefrom.

Mr. Lichty is survived by his wife and five children.—Carleton Leader, January 24, 1918.

HARRISON.—Mrs. Elizabeth Strayer Harrison, wife of David Harrison, of Waterloo, Iowa, peacefully departed into the life eternal on December 27, 1917, at the age of 76 years, 8 months and 4 days.

A daughter of John and Martha Benshoff Strayer, pioneers in that region, she was born near Johnstown, Pennsylvania; married when not quite 20 years of age to David Harrison, they moved in 1865 to Black Hawk county, Iowa, where they engaged in farming until several years ago when they retired to Waterloo.

The oldest daughter among ten vigirous children, she is survived by eight of them. Her aged husband survives her, as do also four daughters and one son. One son and a daughter, preceded her into the future life. Seventeen grandchildren and two great-grandchildren honor her memory.

Her father was a deacon in the Church of the Brethren. She united with this church early in life, but later transferred her membership to the Brethren church. All of her brothers, sisters and children have remained loyal to the Brethren faith. The relationship is a tower of strength to the Waterloo congregation, of which the bereaved husband, also, is a highly respected member of long standing.

Sister Harrison was a true mother in Israel, a good woman, an inspiration to her loved ones and friends. The funeral service was held in the First Brethren church of Waterloo, Sunday afternoon, December 30, conducted by her pastor,

H. L. GOUGHNOUR.

HAHN.—Brother William Hahn, of Sunyside, Maryland, passed away January 17, 1918, aged 78 years, 5 months and 27 days. Funeral service was held at the Gardner Union church by C. E. Glenn. He was a member of the Brethren church for many years. Thirteen children, 47 grandchildren and 19 great-grandchildren survive him.

C. E. GLENN.

COBAUGH.—Mrs. Susan Berkey Cobaugh, widow of Elder Louis Cobaugh, departed this life January ninth, in her 85th year. She was a resident of Johnstown for more than fifty years. She was a charter member of the First Brethren church, Somerset street, and remained loyal and faithful to the end. She was a sincere and devout Christian and possessed a beautiful personality. To know her was to love her. She had a host of friends who loved her and enjoyed visits in her home as long as she was able to see her friends. For many years she sheltered the ministers of the church who came to Johnstown. Hers was the prophets' home. I never entered the home but that she insisted on having worship. It was a real joy to pray with her.

She leaves a brother, Peter Berkey, of Muncie, Indiana, a son, Paul J. Cobaugh, of Allentown, Pa., and a daughter, Miss Sarah Cobaugh, of Johnstown, Pa. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor.

J. FREMONT WATSON.

SHIERY.—On January 26, 1918, sister Lucretia E. Shiery passed from the scenes of earth to be with her Savior. Mrs. Shiery has been a loyal member of the Brethren church since her girlhood and was at church te Sunday before er death. During the 66 years that God permitted her to spend upon this earth she endeavored to do her part in the home, church and community. Her husband preceded her to the eternal world 14 years ago. She leaves seven children and sixteen grandchildren. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor. R. F. PORTE.

MOATS.—R. Landry Moats departed this life July 17, 1917. He suffered intensely being afflicted with cancer of the stomach. He died at the home of his brother, Jessie J. Moats, Hagerstown. His remains were laid to rest in the Manor Cemetery.

TITLOW.—John Arthur Titlow, infant son died October 27, 1917. This little life was but of few weeks' duration, yet in that time called forth the parental love and then was taken to the heavenly home. Sister Titlow is a member of the St. James church.

DERR.—Seward Derr for six months and nineteen days brightened the home of the mother, Elizabeth Good Derr and the grandparents, brother and sister George Good. This little one was suddenly called to a higher home. The father is away serving his country.

BRUNNER.—Frances Marion Brunner, a member of the Hagerstown church who lived at Frederick, Md., died January 22. She was a woman beloved by all who knew her; a kind neighbor, a good mother and a loyal church member. She attended the communion services last spring and called her pastor to anoint her with oil about three weeks before her death. She leaves a husband and two married daughters to mourn her departure.

LAUGHLIN.—Dr. J. Royer Laughlin died December 14, 1917, at Hallendale, Florida. The doctor's health had been failing for some time before his death. With his family he went to Florida in October. After being there for a short while he seemed to improve but a turn for the worse took place and all that loving hands and medical skill could do, did not stay the disease to which he succumbed. He had been superintendent of the Sunday school for about eight years. He was an efficient leader and brought the school to a Front Line place. He was also chairman of the Board of Trustees and presided at the regular business meetings. He took a keen interest in all church work to the very last. He was loyal to his church and pastor. As a citizen he was widely known and respected. He took an active part in all problems of vital interest to the uplifting of the community. As a professional man, he was skillful and had a lagre practice. It is said that he would never refuse a call anywhere and perhaps it was due to unselfish service that the disease was contracted. He leaves to mourn his early departure a wife and two boys aged six and two, father, mother, brothers and sisters. May Almighty God who knows all and who alone can heal the brokenhearted, pour upon the bereaved his abundant grace. Amen.

Peru, Indiana

Four members were added to the church on Chirstmas Sunday, one by letter and three by baptism. The winter's work has been hindered as in many places by the extreme weather, and here also by the shortage of fuel and unlighted streets. However our people have done well and the outlook is good. A union tabernacle meeting is to begin in Peru on March 17 and we ask the prayers of the many friends and supporters of our work to join with the members of the church in special intercession, to the end that showers of blessing may come to "The Little Brown Church."

Recently a traveler among us said that in all parts of the country he had heard "The Little Brown Church" sung about and talked about, but that he never knew where it was until he chanced to find it in Peru.

For several weeks we are having union Sunday evening services with the Evangelical church, alternating the place, and we are finding the services helpful. All the churches of Peru are having union prayer meetings. We are glad to report that the church is aiming at doing her best to help reach the goals of the Four-Year Program.

LIFE-WORK

Long before the leaders of the young people's work of the Christian church ever thought about instituting such a department in the Christian Endeavor society as the Life-Work Department it was recognized that some definite work should be done by each individual belonging to the family of man.

When Joseph's brethren were driven by famine into Egypt and were presented by their distinguished brother to Pharaoh the king's first question was, "What is your occupation?" From this we would conclude that the king never entertained the thought that a man could go through life without an occupation, and we feel justified in saying that no man has a right to go through his allotted days doing nothing.

In the days of Pharaoh and the brethren of Joseph life was of such simple form there was not a very wide range of occupations from which men might choose and the life-work problem very likely gave them very little trouble, but in these modern days with new fields of work opening almost every day it is an altogether different matter. And yet, while it may cause one to hesitate longer than formerly before deciding upon the career they shall follow or make for themselves, the opportunities for one to make the very best of one's talents or abilities are so much greater than in former years that the young people should thank God they have been born in this twentieth century.

As the professions or callings in life are so widely diversified so are the endowments of the people equally diversified. All men have not been made according to the same mold. It was never intended that all should follow the same occupation in life, and anyone who thinks simply because someone else has done something he can do the same thing is the personification of egotism.

One of the very first principles to consider in the choice of a life-work is that of ability. Be what nature has given you the ability to be and your life is bound to be a success, be anything else and the chances are ten to one that your whole life will be a disappointment, if not a failure. Do you not remember the words of the English man of letters of a former century who said,

> "While still a child, and yet unknown to fame,
> I lisped in numbers for the numbers came."

For this man to have given his life to anything else than that of a writer would have disappointed himself and impoverished the literature of the world. There is such a great variety of needful things to be done in these modern days that one need not think one's life must be narrowed down to a choice between two or three of the old and well established professions. This is a great industrial age of the world in which we are living and yet many young people seem to think there is nothing worth while left for them unless they are able to break into some of the over-crowded professions. Then to some it seems to be a little more genteel to be able to open an office and to be counted as one of the professional class of the world.

Acting upon this principle thousands of young men have attempted to prepare themselves for law or medicine when they were no more fitted by nature for such a profession than they were for becoming an aviator. Someone who has investigated the matter and has gathered statistics upon the subject declares that of the men who have been admitted to the bar in America only thirty-five per cent. are practicing law, and of men who have completed medical courses only thirty per cent. are practicing physicians. This would indicate that many of these men discovered after having determined upon their life-work that they had made a mistake and they were wise enough to try to remedy that mistake.

To insist upon following an occupation for which one is not fitted by nature is almost certain failure. The writer knows a number of men who completed a course in law but later went into some other line of business, and he has also known a number of such men who have taken up the Christian ministry and have made a success of it. Unless we are mistaken, Charles G. Finney was a lawyer before he became the great evangelist that made him known to the Christian world and of the present generation of successful preachers of the gospel may be mentioned the eminent Charles E. Jefferson, of New York, who was a lawyer before he became a preacher. The writer has also had personal acquaintance with men who had prepared themselves for the practice of medicine and then later taken up the work of the ministry for their life-work, and we have all known men who have made preparation for the ministry who afterward discovered they had made a mistake in their first choice of a life-calling and in order to keep their lives from being complete failures they have gone into law, medicine, business or have become industrial workers of some nature.

I know some zealous churchmen count it a disgrace to the cause of Christianity for a man who has taken up the work of the ministry to lay it down for what is called a secular profession. But we have been convinced for some time that that is the only honorable thing for some men to do, for they have learned that they were mistaken in interpreting the call that came to them in their youth and that their work as a minister is not fruitful and that it never will be. We hold that it is a mistake to tell our young people that God and the Holy Spirit can take any young man and make a successful minister out of him. Maybe it CAN be done, but we do not believe it is according to God's plan to do it that way, and when a man learns that it was the over-persuasion of his sincere but greatly deluded friends that caused him to determine upon the ministry as a life-work rather than the call of God and then he decides to become what God fitted him for even if he must give up what he should never have taken up he should not be censured, rather he should have our sympathy that he had thus been misled and has not been able to make of his life all that might have been possible. For the man who abandons the work of the ministry because of a larger remuneration the world has to offer him we have nothing but condemnation, but we do want to make a plea for the man who discovers he had made a mistake and has the courage to acknowledge it. Pastors are urged to help their young people to decide their life-work, but too often that is taken to mean that they must urge all their young people to become ministers or missionaries. That is a mistake for all of us know men who have given from four to eight years to the preparation for the ministry only to discover they had never been MADE for that work and often they feel bitter toward the church that can find no place for their labors.

The church does need more ministers and there should be many recruits secured annually, but we should be exceedingly careful and seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit before we urge any young man or young woman to give years of the best days of life to the preparation for a work they may later be compelled to abandon. But what the church today needs more than ministers and missionaries is men and women who have consecrated themselves to work for God and humanity while they are following any one of the multitudes of useful occupations in life.

EDITOR.

From the Editor's View-Point

Straining Out Gnats and Swallowing Camels

It has been stated by some that it is the duty of the American people to criticize the methods employed to win the war for democracy by those who are in charge of American affairs when it can be pointed out that inefficient men are in charge, or that inefficient methods are employed. These are great conservation days through which we are passing and the training we all are supposed to receive will be for our general good, but after all is said and done and the war is over and peace declared we feel certain it can be easily pointed out that we had been only playing at conservation.

The backbone of the winter is broken and there will not likely be the same shortage of fuel that we passed through during the months of December and January, but we are too slow or too blind to see that the method adopted to conserve fuel was a very unsatisfactory method after all. Practically every newspaper of any standing in the country has had its columns open to suggestions from its readers who have felt the inconsistent policy of our conservation directors. The church papers and the political and social reformers have been emphasizing for months the weakness of a system that provides for the closing of churches, schools and places of legitimate business, places an embargo on much freight that the business of the country really demands to have moved, that coal may be conserved and congested shipping be relieved, when at the same time it has been pointed out over and over again that the brewereies have had all the coal they wanted to use and that while commission men could not get refrigerator cars to carry the potato crop from the farming communities to our great cities the breweries have had all the cars they have wanted to ship their beer to any section of the country.

But it is not only the religious or reform zealot that has offered these objections. Only the other day a German in Cleveland, Ohio, who said he had been a beer drinker and saloon keeper for more than ten years called attention to the fact that 600,000 tons of coal are used every year in the state of Ohio alone in the manufacture of beer. To close up a few rooms in a private dwelling and have the whole family sit around the kitchen stove to save fuel while the breweries are belching forth from their tall smokestacks the blackness that pollutes the air as the products of their vats pollute the lives of those who consume them is indeed straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel. It is time to lay the axe at the root of the matter.

An Awakened Conscience

Conscience is not always a safe guide in life, for conscience can be trained and developed until it becomes exceedingly sensitive or it may be neglected and smothered until it gives no response whatever; and what some can do without disturbing their conscience in the least will cause others to feel compunctions of guilt which they can not overcome until an honest effort has been made to make right the thing that is wrong in their conduct. When Zaccheus received a visit from Jesus his awakened conscience would not give him peace until he had made right any wrong he had committed even to the extent of restoring four-fold to those from whom he had wrongfully taken anything. It has often been demonstrated during a great Billy Sunday campaign that many men have so had their consciences stirred that old grocery bills and butcher bills that business men had given up all hope of ever collecting have been paid. These men felt they could do nothing less and be Christians.

However, we are often amazed at the seeming lack of conscience on the part of many respectable citizens and some of them good church members at that. But they will occasionally have a stirring up of conscience that causes them to attempt to do the right thing. During the past few months when a coal famine stared many cities and towns in the face a goodly number of people took the law into their own hands and helped themselves to coal from any car that might be found on any railroad siding. At Tiffin, Ohio, fifty or more citizens "confiscated" coal in this manner when they could not buy. Evidence was secured against many of them and they were forced to settle for the coal thus secured, but one man feeling he had done no wrong went to jail rather than pay for what he had a right to take for the protection of his famliy. But the point we wish to make is found in the conduct of one man whose act was not discovered, but whose conscience condemned the act committed under dire necessity and he mailed twenty-five cents to the railroad company stating that he was a Christian and felt he must make settlement for the coal he took to ease his conscience. There may be some process of law whereby the officials of a city may confiscate a car load of coal when the city is threatened with death from freezing, but private citizens must not undertake to be a law unto themselves. We sincerely hope the coal situation will be so in hand before another winter comes on that no American, Christian or not Christian, may feel driven to help himself to a wheelbarrow load of coal from a car on the siding to keep his family from freezing.

The Kentucky Way

A great many sarcastic remarks have been made about old Kentucky. She has been praised for her thoroughbred horses and her handsome women, but she has been blamed for many of her "colonels" whose greatest accomplishment seemed to be to get drunk like gentlemen as well as for her great number of mountain "moonshiners." But Kentucky has seen a great light and a state which thinks as much of itself, even as Ohio does, can go to school to Kentucky. Not only was Kentucky one of the first states to ratify the prohibition amendment to the federal constitution by the action of her legislature, but not willing to wait until thirty-five other states have taken similar action, the Kentucky legislature has passed a a state wide prohibition bill, submitting the question to the people in 1919 which it is hoped will bring about prohibition some time before the federal amendment can be put into operation. This bill was first passed by the Kentucky senate and then passed by the lower house by a seven to one vote. But poor old Ohio, such dilatory tactics as legislators have usually employed in the past do not offer the encouragement the righteous people of the state would wish. And even now, when it is pretty generally conceded that the Ohio legislautre, when it gets to it, may ratify the federal amendment, the wets of Cincinnati are planning how they may fool the people once more and slip in an amendment to the Ohio constitution that will refer the action of a future legislature back to the people when they hope to undo any good the legislature may do. Sometimes we feel sorry for our native state. But still we can not imagine the voters of Ohio will be so negligent of a patriotic duty that they will allow the brewery interests of Cincinnati to longer control the destiny of so great a state. One thing is needed to make Ohio safe for prohibition and that thing may be made possible only by the united action of the temperance people, and that is that every dry vote in the state be gotten to the polls at the next election.

Like Father, Like Son

There is no law that compels a son to take up the work his father lays down or to follow his father's occupation, but there is a law that inclines him to do so. Many of the families prominent in the business and professional world are descendants of a vigorous scion of the common people who made a place for himself in the world and his children have walked in his footsteps. There are families that become distinguished in business in this manner as the Rothschilds, the Goulds, the Vanderbilts, the Morgans, the Rockefellers and numerous others. The same principle has held in the religious world and the church has had its Cottons, its Mathers, its Beechers, its Spurgeons, its Dixons and many others. But just now the military world is seeing the operation of this law with Hindenburg and his four sons, and in America with the four generations of Grants, and just now old B. F. Wade is still fighting America's battles in the person of his two sons, three grandsons and a son-in-law all officers in the American army. There is something in heredity.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

"As You Like It"

I am congratulating myself that the Page is being made to suit or I would have more helpers. I have offered the page to the goal directors publicly and privately and they all seem to think I have a monopoly on it. If they think it is so easy, they may be delegated to do it a month at a time some of these hot months and then they shall see. As it is, I can just compliment the editor all I desire that he is making the page so excellently that they do not care to spoil it. Congratulations, editor.

Is It Fair?

But do you think it altogether fair that one member of the committee should be compelled to do all the writing? I do not. Come ,boys of the committee, and let us have some of the good gray matter product you have stored up for a time like this.

California Heard From Again

Glad to have this District Organization. I had thought that all districts had reported, but this letter came today to awaken me to the fact that our northwest was on the map, even though they had not drawn the lines sooner. Northwest, note your leaders! Leaders, look into the task at hand and be busy with your special task Here is the personnel:

District Director of Four-Year Program, J. Wesley Platt, Manteca, California.

District Goal Directors

Spiritual Advancement, Goals 1, 2 and 3,—Roger Darling, Turlock, California.
Church Extension, Goals 4, 5 and 10—C. H. Ashman, Sunnyside, Washington.
Recruiting and Endowment, Goals 6 and 8—Mrs. Lois Shank, Jenny Lind, California.
Financial Methods, Goal 7—R. Paul Miller, Spokane, Washington.
Extension of Publications, Goal 9—Mrs. Etta Wilson, Turlock, Cal.
Foreign Missionary Extension, Goal 11—J. Milo Wolfe, Lathrop, California.
Benevolences and Statistics, Goal 12—Mrs. Effie Gibson, Turlock, California.
Sunday School Promotion, Goal 13—W. A. Ryhiner, Lathrop, Cal.
S. S. C. E. Promotion, Goal 14—Mary Ronk Schmiedt, Manetca, California.
Christian Endeavor Promotion, Goal 16—Ira Clinton Shank, Jenny Lind, California.
Conference Promotion, Goal 16—Susie G. Reyner, Lathrop, Calif.

As to Interpretation

My experience in filling out the blank that came to me from the committee to be returned by February 20 taught me that there were some problems that had to be solved and some interpretations that had to be made if we were to get any uniformity of action till 1920. It was no easy task to answer the questions—some of them —as problems suggested themselves and solutions that could be different and still be right. Therefore, I am going to make this a personal letter to the directors and any others that care to write to me about them so that I may correctly judge these questions:

(1) Does Goal 1 ask for 25% increase this year or each year till 1920?

(2) Does Goal 2 ask for 75% present at each communion or at all communions during the year?

(3) What % shall Goal 4 require in 1918? Shall it be divided or not?

(4) Should not a mere increase in the number of Evangelist subscriptions merit a star in 1918?

(5) Should not 30 cents merit a star for Goal 11 in 1918?

(6) How can a church reach Front Line standing in 1918 unless there is some special interpretation of Goal 16?

Now, there may be other questions that suggested themselves when you filled out the blanks and on these I shall be glad to have your constructive thought. Of course it would be easy to say hard and harsh things about the whole procedure; I see a lot of chances to "rip and tear" about it all but that will not help. We want good and fair suggestions as to how we can best work out this program symmetrically and successfully and inspirationally. If we can not do that, we shall have failed altogether. National and district goal directors are both asked hereby to give me at the earliest convenience, short, clear and concise answers to the questions asked above so that I may interpret for the next set of blanks these problems that need an explanation.

I Said "Symmetrically"

Symmetrical development of the church is what will happen if we work out this program rightly. It is aimed to bring all the organizations to a certain standard by the year 1920. Of course, if all can be reached this year, then we have made the Program too small. If it can be done next year, it is. If some are finished this year and some not at all, then we shall be growing lopsided. None of these results are wanted. "All together and each for the other" is a mighty good motto for this program. Symmetrically is God's way. "Your whole spirit and soul and body, be presented wholly," is the apostle's prayer. That is the way we want to get this program done, I think. If we find one part of it waning, then we may well work the harder for the progress of that one. If one goes too far over, then there will be nothing to aspire to the rest of the Program period and it may be at the expense of some of the others.

Now Then, Do It

You will soon see that a good deal of this might have been done by private correspondence, but that would not have let you all into the bigness and complexity of this Program work. Any one has a right to offere me suggestions as to the problems herein suggested. Indeed I should welcome them but the goal directors should answer me right off. BAME.

Present Status of Church Extension Program

As the first six months of the conference year draw to a close we can record some progress. The first district to present an adequate survey was Maryland-Virginia. While some of the pastors failed to respond, enough information was gleaned to present a fairly adequate report. Keep your eye upon Maryland-Virginia. The history of our country shows that when that section takes a notion to move, it leads. We wouldn't be surprised in this case if they make a brilliant showing.

To Every Brethren Pastor

Some district directors complain that they can get no response from many pastors. Some mighty prominent men have not answered a word after all these months. Dear Brother, if you have nothing to report will you not at least state the fact, that our files may be complete? Are you taking these plans to spread abroad the Brethren church seriously? You have asked this department to further the launching of 40 new churches. Where? You must be our eyes as we have neither the money nor time to investigate personally. Besides, all must help. This is no one man job. The information we gather will be put at the disposal of every district board as well as the general board. Must we spend an entire year in a survey of two hundred churches that ought to be completed in a week? Rouse up, brethren; we have done all that planning can do. Bring us the grist. May the Spirit lead us all.

Yours for the coming Kingdom,

G. T. RONK, Extension Director.

Man the Crown of Creation

BY E. E. JACOBS

TEXT: What is man that thou art mindful of him or the son of man that thou visitest him. . . . Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels. Thou hast made him to have dominion over the works of thy hands. Psalm 8.

There have been two general attitudes which have been held in regard to man and his place in the scheme of creation and of his destiny. There is that view first, which holds that man is vile, inherently wicked, full of sin and generally unworthy. This view makes much of the original sin, pride comes in for its full share of condemnation, and the child is considered as guilty of sin even from the time of its birth, forgetting that wholly justifiable fact that the child is born of parents over whose life it had not the slighest control; forgetting that no one could possibly be morally responsible for the sin of another and that no one is to be condemned for the inheritances which he brings into the world and that he is responsible only for the use made of these inheritances.

The second view holds that not only is man the crown of creation, but so superior is he that he has no need of God at all and that he can lift himself to a higher life and light, so to say, by pulling on his own boot straps. It has in it something of the superhuman idea which has been the worship of the German universities for some years and is a doctrine of stupendous conceit.

As over against these two, I want to set another which I believe is the more nearly justifiable one, for either of the other two views held to exclusion has ever led men into folly. The former view, that man is wholly bad, debases life, takes the courage out of one and casts the gloom of the orinetal religions over life and leaves a nation as inert as India, China, Turkey and Arabia are today. No great art, or invention, or music can come from such a viewpoint. It makes a man grovel where he ought to stand upright and invites one to look upon life as unholy and to be escaped as soon as possible. And the path of history as marked out by such religions is smeared with blood. In them, human pain, suffering and sacrifice are held as the highest achievements of life and religion.

But the second view offers little that is better. It holds that might makes right, that the strongest wins and that they may trample on all the sacred things of God and man if only they succeed. In it, favored people or favored strata of society must be put always in positions of advantage, let the riff-raff do the best it may. But not so in the mind of Christ. The glory of the Christian religion is, that it puts in hope where there was despair ,it bids man to stand upright on his feet and, in the words of scripture, have dominion over the works of the divine hand. It makes men the crown of creation, but it does not exalt him above God. It clearly recognizes that man is prone to sin but it does not put him past redemption nor does it yet insist that all his time, or all his energy be spent in doing penance. It recognizes the two natures in man, yet it everywhere insists that the spiritual way may and ought to be Made supreme. A higher tribute was never paid to the frail body of man than when St. Paul said, "Know you not that ye are the temples of God" and that these bodies must not be defiled. One is not asked to throw down his prayer rug many times a day and pray with the face set towards some Mecca and then rise to a life of lust and sin, but it does insist that one be in the spirit of prayer always; that one be so surcharged with the Holy Spirit that he may pray anywhere. In it, there is no need of any ecclesiastical hierarchy to stand between man's naked soul and his God and Creator. We have come to Mt. Zion and to Jesus, who can be touched with our infirmities.

Now in the words of the text, man has been bidden to have dominion over the works of nature, but there is one thing over which he has as yet failed to exercise anything like control, and that is himself. And so in the light of the foregoing, I want to make a few simple statements of man, viewed mostly, only as one of the many life forms found upon this planet. In other words, I want to view him in the light of biology and anthropology, rather than of religion.

First. No matter whether you believe in special creation or in evolution, in either scheme, man is not only last but highest of all created things. He is the last term in a series which it has taken thousands of years to complete. The Bible account is, come let us make man. This after the worlds had been made and the evolution account is much the same. In my class in Biology, I always say, when we find an organ or function incomplete, "let us wait until we come to human physiology and then we are likely to find them more nearly perfect." We classify man last in our taxonomy, not only because he came last but because he is highest. All animal forms before him were but the scaffolding, he is the building, and the scaffolding, some of it only, still stands. But he gives it meaning and use. All Biologists agree that every plant, insect and beast came to this planet before the advent of man. But this is not as important as the second point.

Second. No matter whether you believe in special creation or evolution, it still is true that out of one blood hath God created all the races of mankind and this legend was cut in stone on the frieze of the ethnology building at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, as being the best expression of an authenticated fact. This being the dictum of both science and religion it ought to give us pause. It means, does it not, that it is a piece of colossal conceit for any race or set of men to set themselves up as the ones over which the great Father of us all is bound to have an especial care? God straff England? God only straff the wrongdoer! There is no race in the world today, or has there ever been, which is divinely appointed to rule and reign and the rest be in subjection. This attitude is both vicious and false, both from the standpoint of science and of the Bible. And I can not conceive of the Jewish nation as being more than the best channel through which after all, all the nations of the world should be blest. We are all made of common clay from the king down to the humblest bushman or bushwoman of Africa and both show their very close relation with lower animal forms. And the true elite of the world today, are, in the words of Giddings, those who have wrought best for the welfare of the race and only those. It is high time, in my judgment, to check this spirit which a great modern scholar has called the anti-Christ of today, namely, the ideal of the super-man, or the development of one race or one favored strata in society to the utter exclusion of the rest of us. All the warring races of Europe today and all of the white Americans, have had a common origin in western Europe within very recent times. I agree with Boaz that much of the talk of superior races is utter nonsense, and if it is not, we ought to remember the Bible injunction that the strong should bear the burden of the weak. If that is not Christianity,then nothing is! If there are any such creations today as superior races, they certainly have a duty toward the less strong. Of one blood hath God created all the races of the earth and a human soul is valuable in his sight, we must believe, no matter into what race it happens to be born.

Third. In all his history, man has been his own worst enemy. The pessimistic Huxley long ago said that if the race did not give promise of something better than we yet have seen, we could not help but welcome some friendly comet which would brush out its existence. Man must be saved from himself. He has killed more of his own race than all the wild beasts of all time. He has been the arch murderer of his own race. He is without exception, the most blood-thirsty of all animal life. Most animals are content to fight when driven into a corner by hunger or what not, but man goes about ten times worse than a roaring lion seeking whom he may kill for there has been no important race of all history which has not waged war for its own sake. Wars are as old as man and even tens of thousands of years before written history begins, we find evidence of man's blood-lust. The first evidence we find in the earthworks of ancient man both on the Continent and England, is not his art, not his literature, to be sure, but his weapons and weapons mean that he took life. No other race of life forms could possibly have survived if it had been so prodigal with its own members. It has been man's delight through all the ages not only to kill, but to enslave, to bind and to oppress his fellows.

Note some of the wastages of human life today. In India during the decade of 1900-10 there died of starvation ,which could have been in large part prevented, more than were killed in all the battles of the world. (Russell.) Hobson estimates that every three years more are killed by alcohol than were killed outright in battle since written history began. It costs more for England to police India than it would to feed it, and yet they starve there by thousands and over half of the natives are always hungry. Industrial accidents in America amount to half a million a year. Nor is this all. Humanity has always been prodigal with her elite. Sages, seers and prophets have been martyred by thousands,—and martyrs are the world's greatest gifts. Brune was burned at the stake in Rome less than 300 years ago for teaching what everw schoolboy now knows. The last man was executed for witchery in England within the memory of men now sitting before me, and almost as much may be said of America! Just a few days ago a transport went down with over 2,000 of America's finest manhood on board. Aye, compare this, if you will, with the words of Christ, that it were better that a millstone be hanged about the neck than that one of these little ones should perish!

Man is man's worst enemy and the only one worth considering today. Swamps, pestilence and wild beasts are as vapor and nothing as compared to man's inhumanity to man. I want to register my firm conviction, from the standpoint of a biologist, that man in all history has lived a perverted and wholly unnatural life. His hands are red with the blood of the ages and it is about time for him to quit. I hope I have not overdrawn the picture, but I want to bring you face to face, if I may, for a moment with the utter senselessness of this wasting of human life. It has been centuries since St. Paul fought with wild beasts, but ever since his day, we have had a fight with the wild beast that is in man! What this would have been if we could have had more of the "love of others" of Drummond or of "the mutual aid" of Prince Kropotkin, or of the unselfish love of the Christ, no mind can imagine. To the biologist, this waste of a life form at the hands of its own kind, is nothing less than appalling.

Fourth. Man's destiny under God, is absolutely in his own hands. No one else will right the wrongs of life but man. If we want to fight to extinction we may. If we want to join hands, the strong with the weak and bless the world, we may. If we want to conquer and subdue the world,—a task which still awaits our hands—we may. Astronomers assure us that the present system is stable for at least many millions of years yet. The end of the world, so far as natural causes are concerned, is very, very remote. There is plenty of time for the race to throw off its superstition, its poverty, its disease, its sin, blood lust and war and rise to walk in a newness of life. It still has time to wash the blood smears from the pages of its history. There is no comet coming our way to brush us aside. The race, viewed in the light of other life forms, is still young. We are not so far removed from the cave man. It has not traveled half its way, doubtless. According to what seems a just estimate, if the age of the earth from the very earliest traces found in the Archaen down to the present, be compared to a day of twenty-four hours, the time since Christ has been about two and one-half seconds. Forces are at our finger tips for race improvement. The conditions are here. The last revelation has been made through Christ. There will be no better future form of religion than the Christian. The very Son of God was made flesh and blood and dwelt among us. What more can we ask or expect? Why not close up the gaps, join hands, cease the fight, and let humanity spend its glorious energy for the betterment of the earth and make Jesus Christ King of this world! Why not? God hasten that happy day.

Fifth. Every human life is worth while. Some time ago a young man in my class in astronomy asked a very pertinent question. We had been discussing star streams, streams of stars which flow through the sky like a mighty river and yet they have not appeared to change their position within the past five thousand years, so remote are they. We discussed star clouds, clouds of light so far away as to be only dimly seen, perhaps universes so remote as not to be plainly visible. We spoke of star clusters, great clusters with a common center marching and counter marching. And then we spoke of the countless millions of men who have lived upon this earth. Then this young man said, "Well, anyone who thinks that he is of any great importance amidst all this must be a mountain of conceit." I replied that he was both right and wrong for in such a plan, no one can hope to accomplish much. And yet without the human soul, all this would be meaningless and useless. The little nursery rhyme here expresses the truth:

> Great, wide, wonderful world
> With the wonderful water around you curled,
> I am more than you, though I am such a dot,
> I can love and think, and the world can not.

The old idea everything was made especially for man's delight is doubtless wrong, but yet if they do not serve him, they are useless. Man is to have dominion. The whole Bible account is to this end. May God hasten the day when he may be willing to exercise dominion over the works of the divine hand—and over himself.

Dishonest Preachers

BY GEO. A. COPP

Some time past I met a man on the train who asked me if I knew a certain preacher who had recently moved into our valley and not far from our vicinity. I told him I did and he remarked that the fellow was dishonest as he would not pay him for a casket furnished for his own child some time past, and he had now moved away and he never expected to get his pay. I let this case go by as an unusual one, but recently I met another party who had furnished a preacher some goods and he had written him a number of times about the matter without getting a reply. Then more recently I had some personal experience with a big fellow preacher from the Pacific coast who laid his trap for me with a number of others after preaching some fine sermons as a "stand" in with the people. All these are preachers of other churches and not of the "whole Bible" kind, but I am not through yet; and perhaps it would not be best to tell all I know and I shall not, but have this to say at least, that I have in mind several "whole Bible" preachers who have not paid their debts and I feel certain they never will.

The Evangelist for years has been supported by contributions principally by the ministry and all the productions have been addressed to the laity. I think a good shot now and then for the preacher is good and it should awaken his drowsy and may be repentant soul. Just how a preacher can go into the pulpit and tell others to do right and he himself a base hypocrite is a puzzle that God himself only can solve.

Paul said it is possible for he himself to preach to others and then be a castaway. The scriptures emphatically declare that we should owe no man but to love him and this is as much of a commandment as anything recorded in the New Testament. I would far rather take my chances going to heaven not having washed the saints' feet than to owe a man and not pay him.

"Thou shalt not steal," is one of the ten commandments and he who obtains money or goods under the pretense of paying for them is a defaulter and a thief and ought to be jailed here and certainly will be in eternity.

A Call to Duty

This call is issued to bring to your attention the ANNUAL EASTER OFFERING FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS IN THE BRETHREN CHURCH.

By the time this is read all pastors and churches should have their annual letter from the secretary, brother L. S. Bauman.

Let there be a clear understanding by every reader of the Evangelist. From this day forward until your OFFERING is taken and SENT IN let every reader become an active and earnest worker for the largest offering ever made by the BRETHREN CHURCH for Foreign Missions.

WHY SHOULD NOT GOAL 11 BE REACHED THIS YEAR?

Let it be remembered that a considerable number of churches in the past have more than passed the standard necessary to reach this goal.

THE DATE.—Easter Sunday, March 31, 1918.

THE PURPOSE.—To receive for the spread of the gospel the largest offering ever made by the Brethren church.

FROM WHOM.—Every church in the brotherhood ought to have a share in this offering. The Foreign Board plans this year to follow up the Easter offering by an effort to enlist the support of all churches not responding at the first call. Pastors, please save this extra labor and expense. Take your offering. Besides we should like to enlist every auxiliary society of the church. Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor societies, Sisters' societies and Aid societies, Organized Bible classes,—ALL OUGHT TO HAVE A SHARE IN THIS THE GREATEST WORK COMMITTED TO THE CHURCH. ALL ISOLATED MEMBERS should at once send in their offering.

HOW TO BE USED.—The money received from this offering will be used in supporting the faithful and self-sacrificing workers of the Brethren church in the foreign fields. Please note that the cost of administration is less than 1%. YOUR MONEY GOES DIRECTLY TO THE PLACE INDICATED AND FOR THE PURPOSE YOU MAY SUGGEST.

The missionaries we support and the fields in which they labor are as follows:

South America.—Our workers in this field are the following: Elder and Mrs. C. F. Yoder who have just returned to their work after a brief furlough in the homeland. Elder and Mrs. E. C. Atkinson and Elder and Mrs. W. H. Bock. Besides these there are some native helpers employed. These workers are under definite contract with the Board and are guaranteed stipulated salaries. It should be added here that Brother Yoder supports himself at the present though should his position fail him he would be protected by the Board.

Africa.—The workers who have gone to Africa are Elder James Gribble and Dr. Gribble, his wife, and the Misses Estella Myers and Mae Snyder. The African workers are sent forth on the "faith basis." While no definite amounts are stated we ask the brethren and sisters everywhere to remember this work by their gifts.

EXTENSION OF WORK.—We repeat here the statement made in the years past that the Foreign Board is anxious to extend the work by sending out new workers into the needy fields we occupy. The board will do this as rapidly as the gifts of the people we serve make it possible by their support. There are now TWO OUTSTANDING FACTS that ought to make the Brethren church do the biggest thing in missions ever undertaken. These are, first, a list, in my possession of almost TWENTY persons who have expressed their willingness to be sent to one or the other of these fields. And second, the world-wide CRISIS that confronts foreign mission endeavor. A church committed to the program of Jesus dare not fail in such a crisis.

It is the confident hope of the Foreign Mission Board of the church that you will not fail in this duty, I should say, in accepting this great opportunity to serve.

When nations will spend their last resource and spare neither men or money to win a world-war, what should not the church of Christ spend to win a share in the coming kingdom that can not be shaken?

FOR THE BOARD, J. Allen Miller, Pres.

ARMENIA

BY HENRY MORGENTHAU

Former Ambassador to Turkey

Few nations have suffered as much as Armenia. So terrible and continuous have been the atrocities to which it has fallen victim that the very name Armenia has, to most of us, become synonymous with martyrdom. Its sufferings during the present catastrophe have been greater than any known in the history of the world. None of the fearful horrors perpetrated in the various zones of the war can compare with the tragic lot of the Armenians.

Though deprived of their political independence, the Armenians have never been assimilated by their conquerors, the Turks. They have tenaciously clung to their racial traditions, religion, language and ideals. Their early history—embracing periods contemporaneous with the ancient Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes and Parthians, is still a source of pride to them, and their religion—Christianity—is and has been the great moral force sustaining and inspiring them against the attacks of the many hordes that have emerged from Central Asia and passed through their territory on their way to Europe.

The final and worst measure used against the Armenian was the wholesale deportation of the entire population from their homes and their exile to the desert, with all the accompanying horrors of the way. No means were provided for their transportation or nourishment. The victims, which included educated men and women of standing had to walk on foot, exposed to the attacks of bands of criminals especially organized for that purpose. Homes were literally uprooted; families were captured; men killed, women and girls violated daily on the way or taken to harems. Children were thrown into the rivers or sold to strangers by their mothers to save them from starvation. The facts contained in the reports received at the embassy from absolutely trustworthy eye witnesses surpass the most beastly and diabolical cruelties ever before perpetrated or imagined in the history of the world. The Turkish authorities had stopped all communication between the provinces and the capital in the naive belief that they could consummate this crime of the ages before the outside world could hear of it. But the information filtered through the consuls, missionaries, foreign travelers and even Turks. We soon learned that orders had been issued to the governors of the provinces to send into exile the entire Armenian population in their jurisdiction, irrespective of age and sex. The local officers, with a few exceptions, carried out literally these instructions. All the ablebodied men had either been drafted into the army or disarmed, The remaining people, old men, women and children, were subjected to the most cruel and outrageous treatment.

In Mamuret-ul-Aziz the people were subjected for two months to almost unbelievable torture, the families of the better class were dealt with most severely. Feet, hands and chests were nailed to a piece of wood; nails of fingers and toes were torn; beards and eyebrows pulled out; feet hammered with nails, as they do with horses; others were hung with their feet up and heads down over closets. Oh, how one would wish that all these facts were not true. In order that people outside might not hear the screams of agony of the poor victims, men stood around the prison wherein these atrocities were committed, with drums and whistles.

On July first, the first 2,000 were dispatched from Harpoot. They were soldiers, and it was rumored that they would build roads. People became frightened. Whereupon the Vali called the German missionary Mr. ——— and begged him to quiet the people; he was so very sorry that they all had such fears, etc., etc. They had hardly been away for a day, when they were all killed in a mountain pass. They were bound together and when the Kurds and soldiers started to shoot at them, some managed to escape in the dark. The next day another 2,000 was sent in the direction of Diarbekir. Among those deported were several of our orphans (boys) who had been working for the government all the year round. Even the wives of the Kurds came with their knives and murdered the Armenians. Some of the latter succeeded in fleeing. When the government heard that some of the Armenians managed to escape, they left those who were to be deported, without food for two days, in order that they would be too weak to flee.

All the high Catholic Armenians, together with their Archbishop, were murdered.

Up to now there still remained a number of tradesmen whom the government needed and therefore had not deported; now these too were ordered to leave and were murdered.

As this massacre of the Armenians, judged both by the numbers involved and the methods used, was the greatest single horror ever perpetrated in the history of humanity, the questions will often be asked, how many Armenians were actually murdered or died of starvation or exposure? How many were driven into a miserable exile? Following the important collection of documents made by Viscount Bryce is a careful summary of the facts. The total Armenian population in the Turkish Empire in 1912 is here placed at between 1,600,000 and 2,000,000. Of these 182,000 escaped into the Russian Caucasus and 4,200 into Egypt. One hundred and fifty thousand still remain in Constantinople. To this figure must be added the relatively small number of survivors who escaped death and are now living in hiding or are scattered in distant provinces. We must conclude that a million Armenians were hurried out of their homes in the peaceful villages and populous towns in Asia Minor. The murdered number from 600,000 to 800,000. The remainder, in pitiful want of the barest necessities of life, hold out their hands to the Christian fellowship of America.

A Call to Arms

BY VERNON L. FRYE

The militant note needs to be sounded in religion. Toleration and compromise are the sirens that have been luring the ship to the rocks. The church is facing the most tremendous crisis in her history. Materialism threatens to crush out spirituality. Ease and indulgence are stifling the rugged Christian virtues.

Not in combats but in comforts skepticism has had its birth. The days of the church's persecution were the days of her greatest triumphs. Her soldiers are now in deadly danger; not from bullets on the battlefield but from asphyxiation in the bed chamber.

The great need is to get men to come out of their hiding and to commit themselves. Obliterate the lines of demarcation between the church and the world and the church must perish. The church needs men of convictions, not of mere opinions. Red blooded men, vigorous workers; not anaemic, apathetic idlers. Spiritual athletes, not jelly fish.

The issue is clearly drawn. Christ has done it. "He that is not with me is against me." If your religion is false give it up, but if it is true promote and propagate it. If Christ has power to forgive sins and grant eternal life it is the greatest fact of the centuries. Everything else is secondary. A true soldier must show his colors. Put on the uniform. Line up and fight.

The campaign must be both destructive and constructive: destructive of evil, personal, political; and constructive of regeneration and righteousness. There is no place in the Christian ranks for laggards, for trimmers, for sychophants, for flatterers or mere dress parade cadets. Lives must be gripped by the gravity of the issue of eternal life or death. The church was intended to be a recruiting station, not simply a reception parlor; a hive, not a hospital; a place to save sinners not to coddle saints. Every member ought to be a minister, every recruit a recruiter.

Clear the camp of parasites, of triflers and traitors. Be good, be brave, be true. Today I must go to my work for tomorrow I must go to my reward. Soon settleth down the night upon our earthly activities and after that dawns the eternal morning. In that day may you be able to say: "I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

the killing of thousands of German young men whose greatest crime is a blind subservience to the state in which they have been schooled from childhood, men who believe that God made these young men, and that Christ died for them, are not to be pilloried if they come to the acceptance of this method only after long mental and spiritual travail. But with few exceptions to this decision they have come as the only alternative in sight to the spread of tyranny and cruelty throughout the world.

"With certain points in Mr. Odell's article we are in hearty agreement. His emphasis on the need of simplifying the message of the Christian religion, on doing away with useless ecclesiasticism and competitive denominationalism, and on getting down to reality is admirable.

"We wish, as he wishes, that we had more prophets among us, more men of courage, insight, and leadership capable not only of summoning the nation to arms, but of keeping alive, while the mighty physical conflict goes on, the great enduring spiritual ideals of Jesus Christ. But let us not ignore or berate the prophets who to the best of their ability are declaring the counsel of God unto this generation, and who are as eager as their critic to interpret aright this world-calamity and to turn it to spiritual account."

The Sunday School

Kinship Expressed on Jesus' Birthday

Jesus said when on earth that "The poor ye have with you always." This year the heart of the Christian world has been especially moved by the needs of the Syrian and Armenian Relief Fund. When the Executive Committee of the World's Sunday School Association met last October they unanimously voted to cooperate in the effort being made by the Sunday schools of America to raise, if possible, $1,000,000 for the Relief Fund by special gifts at the Christmas season. The Sunday school constituency abroad is mainly among those who, though rich in the growing knowledge of their Savior, are poor in worldly goods. Word was sent to all the field secretaries asking that they assist as far as local conditions would permit. In some of the countries special plans were already under way. China has suffered much from floods, Field Secretary Rev. E. G. Tewksbury stated, and the Sunday schools in that country had been asked to give for the dire needs of these flood sufferers. Early in January a cable came from Mr. Horace E. Coleman, Field Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association for Japan naming the figure, $200, which meant that the Sunday schools in Japan, though the word came late and though plans had been laid to give to other special objects, had contributed that, for them, very large amount. Similar encouraging reports have already come from Rev. Geo. P. Howard, Field Secretary for South America. In this connection it should be remembered that many of the schools giving to this Relief Fund never made a benevolent contribution before.

The report from the Sunday schools of Egypt is especially interesting. The cable from the Sunday school secretary in Moslem lands, Rev. Stephen V. Trowbridge, named the Christmas gift of $2,000. The schools are few and the members are far from rich but they are so close to the people who have suffered that the giving was generous indeed. It was suggested that Sunday, January 6, be the day for obtaining the gifts as that was the Sunday preceding the Coptic and Egyptian Evangelical Christmas. Notices were sent to the various schools and publicity was given in the mission press, the American Mission Weekly. Egyptian children give in milliemes, half milliemes and quarter milliemes. One milliemes equals half a cent. Last year the Christmas gift at the boys' school of the Church Missionary Society in Old Cairo amounted to P. T. 170 ($6.80) and contained more than 1,000 coins.

Mr. Trowbridge writes a most suggestive paragraph when he tells about certain gifts: "The Orthodox Copts of the village of Ghanaim have sent us L. E. 6.50 ($32.50). I did not have the name of the priest of this church on my address list, but the people heard about our offering through their friends in another village. The village of Ghanaim is very small. They speak of their gift as a very small amount, but in reality it means a great deal for those simple country folk. Another village named Aghana has made a joint offering combining the gifts of the Orthodox church and the Evangelical church. The omdeh (mayor) of the village wrote a very earnest letter conveying the greetings of both congregations and saying that he and his townsmen wished to be associated with the Sunday school movement in this work of kindness for the suffering children of Turkey. He closes his letter with a prayer that through the New Year we might enjoy the peace and presence of the Lord Jesus. I can scarcely express how much such an action means. For the past generation and more there has been intense bitterness both in cities and villages between the Orthodox Coptic church and the Evangelical or Protestant. An Egyptian friend of mine, when I mentioned this incident of the mayor's sending a joint offering from the two congregations, said he had never yet heard of such a thing in this country."

Already Mr. Trowbridge has been especially active in relief work at Port Said, where a large group of refugees have been cared for. He has been asked to give personal attention to similar work in Palestine since the British occupation of that land and may be there at this time.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

These are busy days in the Publishing House in an effort to get all Sunday school supplies for the next quarter out on time. But it is doubtful if conditions were ever more unfavorable. In the first place the mails are exceedingly uncertain. The experience of practically all publishing houses is the same and that is that the mails can not be depended upon at this time. Sunday schools report that their supplies have not reached them in time for use on the proper Sunday when they had been sent out in plenty of time under ordinary conditions. Freight conditions are even worse. For weeks we have had our order placed for cover paper for our quarterlies and it has been shipped, but where it is no one seems to know. We may be compelled to make our quarterlies without covers this quarter, but be patient with us and we will do the best we can.

The year 1917 was a fruitful year for the First Brethren church of Dayton as the report from the corresponding secretary reveals. One hundred and thirty three members were added to the church during the year and in addition to this the pastor was given the opportunity to go to the assistance of other churches in evangelistic meetings and his labors were abundantly blessed. The annual message of Brother Bell as given to his members appears in part with the report of the secretary and shows the achievements of the various auxiliaries of the Dayton church.

A. P. Reed makes a splendid report from the First Brethren church of Los Angeles, California. This church appreciating the helpfulness of thorough preparation of leaders very wisely granted a four months' leave of absence to their pastor that he might complete a course of instruction that had been interrupted at another time. Sylvester Lowman is giving very acceptable service as supply pastor during Brother Reagan's absence. Brother Reed also sends a report of the work of the young people of Los Angeles which appears on the Christian Endeavor page of this number of the Evangelist.

I. D. Bowman recently conducted a short evangelistic meeting in the Third Brethren church of Philadelphia, which resulted in eight confessions, all adults. As Brother Bowman states not much is known of this church by the general brotherhood as reports from the work are seldom given. We would like to impress upon all the churches the necessity of letting what light they have shine for the encouragement of other churches that may at times feel just a little discouraged. Brother Bowman reports the work of the Whole Gospel Mission in Philadelphia as being in a normal and healthy condition with prospects for some substantial additions when their revival is held in the spring.

N. W. Jenings has been engaged for the past few weeks in a battle for the Lord against the elements of the world of nature as well as against the elements of satanic darkness at Sidney, Indiana, but the Lord gave him the victory because the battle was foungt in the name of the Lord. Though the meeting was short and the extreme weather conditions interfered, yet nineteen souls made the good confession, seventeen of the number already have been or soon will be received into the Brethren church. Brother Jennings is now engaged in a meeting at Roann, Indiana.

G. W. Rench is of the kind to be sure of his ground before he speaks, thus he has not been in a hurry to make a report from his new field of work in South Bend, Indiana. But his report this week shows he is getting a grasp of the situation and that his labors will soon begin to tell for the cause in a very practical way. In fact his efforts have already borne good fruit as the recent burning of the mortgage on the church indicates. A number of members have also been added to the church.

Because of the maliciously false reports that have been circulated over the brotherhood concerning Charles H. Ashman of Sunnyside, Washington, we are sure his many friends will be glad to read his letter in this week's Evangelist. His report shows that he not only has his liberty, but that he is using it to build up the Lord's work at Sunnyside. The report shows the work in a very healthy and promising condition. The members of the church at Sunnyside recently surprised the pastor and family and made them feel the appreciation which they have for them and their work. We have also received a copy of a Sunnyside paper containing a full report of a masterful address given by former editor S. J. Harrison at a patriotic meeting recently held in one of the Sunnyside churches.

The brief clipping from a Washington, D. C., paper as it appears on another page was written by Brother Lyon. The thought expressed may not prove very popular among the people but it is based upon a mighty truth and the query of Brother Lyon will be difficult to get around.

H. M. Oberholtzer as Quiet Hour superintendent of the C. E. Union makes a most earnest appeal to the young people this week to become comrades of the Quiet Hour and to thus secure the blessings they will otherwise miss.

The earnest appeal from H. F. E. O'Neill in behalf of the superannuated ministers of the church reached us just a little too late for last week's paper for which it was intended. But acting upon the principle that most churches need to be frequently reminded of such duties we give it place this week even if a similar plea did come from H. H. Wolford last week. This is an obligation the churches of the present should feel.

The Ashland College notes are brief this week, but they are to the point which is the important thing after all, and they will serve the purpose of keeping the churches in touch with the student life of the college.

J. H. Swihart, one of the pioneer Brethren, and his wife have been graciously remembered by friends during the severe winter months for which they wish to express their gratitude through the columns of the Evangelist.

Brother Drushal makes a splendid report of the doings at Riverside Institute. There have been twenty-four confessions among the students since the opening of school last fall. At one week's prayer meeting service recently fourteen confessions were made. Brother Cook has come over from Krypton and has been helping Brother Drushal in some special meetings which will be reported later.

The College thermometer has made its appearance once again. Like the proverbial groundhog it was compelled to hibernate for a spell until the weather made it possible for the canvass to continue. Brother Beachler is hard at work again and we may expect regular reports from now on.

George A. Copp gives our readers a few thoughts to consider seriously in his brief communication this week; but we think there is not as much of that spirit manifested among our brethren as Brother Copp's contribution would indicate. We know what he says is true in some cases, but we trust such cases are extremely rare.

Around the Editor's Table

Shall Denominationalism Live?

For many years there has been a systematic effort made in the United States to break down denominationalism, so-called, by having all other denominations of the churches accept the teachings and doctrines of one great denomination, though it does not care to be considered as a denomination, but no very marked progress has been made. Denominational lines have been partially obliterated and a closer fellowship and greater co-operation have been established between the churches and they are working more in harmony to secure ends that are for the common good; but when it comes to the thought of giving up the principles upon which the various churches are founded the willing ones are scarce indeed.

We are told that we shall face "an entirely new world" when the war is over and that the "death knell" of denominationalism has already been sounded. We may go one step farther and say we are facing a new world right now, and while this new world has given to the churches a larger freedom in denominational interchange and sympathy it has by no means destroyed denominational conviction as has been clearly expressed by the Baptist Standard (Chicago), which says:

> "We have not been greatly impressed with the assumption which has found frequent expression of late that the impending religious changes sound the death-knell of denominationalism. The boys coming back from the front we are told, where they have seen life stripped to its barest reality, will be impatient of many of the ecclesiastical distinctions by which heretofore we have set great store. It is evident that many religious leaders sincerely believe we are fast approaching the time when sectarianism will give way to a larger and more vital expression of Christianity.
> "That the war has furnished a new opportunity for the widest expression of essential Christianity is not open to question. The close association in relief work of many kinds, on and off the field of battle, on the part of official representatives of different religious faiths can not fail to bring about a more intimate sympathy with, if not a greater knowledge of, divergent communions. Stories are told, for example, of Jewish rabbis holding a crucifix before dying Catholics and of Roman priests performing religious services for Protestants under similar circumstances. Not long ago in these columns we quoted the statement of an Episcopalian chaplain to the effect that the longer he was on the battle-field, the less he thought of the Church of England and the more he thought of Christianity. Many othed illustrations of similar tendencies might be adduced.
> "Admitting all of these facts and rejoicing in them, we nevertheless do not see that they point in the direction of non-denominationalism. Clarifying and refining as will be the experiences in France for our American soldiers, there is no more reason to believe that they will return from the front with any greater tendencies toward ecclesiastical reform than were possessed by that noble army of boys in blue who returned fifty years ago from a conflict which, while on nothing like the scale of magnitude of the present war, was for the individual quite as revolutionary an experience as that through which our boys are now passing."

Temperamental Differences

We have long been convinced that many of the differences between the denominations and the isms of the Christian church are temperamental. While the great fundamental principles upon which the church is founded may be held in common by all people yet there are so many minor elements included in the system that people of different temperaments must be influenced or swayed more or less by some of these and the principles that make the strongest appeal to their peculiar temperament will become distinctive features of the religion that grips them. A close study of the people who make up the rank and file of the denominations will reveal somewhat this temperamental difference. Recognizing this principle the Baptist Standard says further:

> "We do not therefore expect to see, after peace is declared, a sign hung on the door of every denominational shop—'For Sale.' There will be occasional readjustments, just as there always have been, but for a long time to come each denomination will be doing business at its old stand. It is altogether possible, and even probable, that new denonimations will come into being. There will be the coming together of some of the smaller sects in our great denominational families. But aside from these minor changes we do not look for realinement.
> "Back of all this discussion lies the easy assumption that all our denominational differences are trivial, at least relatively so. Most of us would be willing to admit that some of the peculiar tenets of other denominations than our own are of this character, fewer would concede that our own distinctive views are thus unimportant. We count ourselves so naive and old-fashioned as to be among that class who still believe that Baptists have distinctive principles. It is not alone for this reason that we look for the perpetuation of denominational lines, whatever may be the special changes after the war. Because denomonational differences are temperamental as well as theological, they will not be easily erased."

Foresight or Hindsight

After a thing has once taken place it is easy to say, "Anyone with common sense might have known that this would have happened;" but it is difficult to convince the public that the critic had any better advance knowledge or was any wiser than the common run of folks before the great event under discussion took place.

The church has always been criticized by the world and has grown used to it, but it is sometimes discovered that the church's worst critics are men from her own ranks. Sometimes these criticisms are deserved, but a man must be sure of his ground before he rises as some great seer who has a revelation to make to his fellow ministers whose eyes have been blinded to the significant events of the world that should have influenced his preaching.

The church has long been tolerant of criticism and it has borne patiently the criticisms of the centuries, but just now it is beginning to "hit back" at some of the critics from its own ranks.

One of the critics that has drawn upon his head the condemnation of some of the leading religious editors of the country is Rev. Joseph H. Odell, who strikes at the ministers of the country in a recent magazine article and declares the ministers of this country lacked insight into the menace of the war-policy of Germany and that they also lacked courage to denounce it seasonably and strongly. We can hardly see the justice of the latter criticism if the former one be true. Mr. Odell insists that the effect of the teaching of Germany's theologians and philosophers upon the German character ought to have been foreseen, and the American ministry is sharply criticized for not speaking out more loudly against the many atrocities committed by Germany as the war progressed.

The Congregationalist and Advance (Boston), has resented the assertions of Mr. Odell and has replied:

> "Because they have not rushed into print, it does not follow that multitudes of ministers from the moment Germany lifted the mailed fist have not denounced in public and private the rape of Belgium and the invasion of France. Some of them have not paused to write magazine articles but have joined the army or navy and are preparing themselves to do their duty with gun and cannon.
> "As Germany has gone on to alienate the public opinion of the world through the sinking of the Lusitania, through instigating the Armenian massacre, and similar deeds of shame on land and sea, the ministers of this country, as a rule, have not been one whit behind the laymen of their congregations in holding up to opprobrium such flagrant violation of the laws of God and man. And when at last the United States was forced into the struggle it was the ministers not only of the great city churches, but of many a little church at the crossroads, who pointed out in sermon and address the justice of the cause to which we have committed ourselves, the great fundamental principles of liberty and humanity that were jeopardized by German ambition and intrigue.
> "The ministers dedicated the flags, prepared the rolls of honor, heartened the enlisted and drafted men, put their shoulders to the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives. The fact that these drives have registered such wonderful success is due to the lining up of the churches and ministers behind them, just as the very existence of the Y. M. C. A and the Red Cross is due to the Christian church and the Christian ministry, which nourished them, started them on their beneficent way, and stand ever in the background to serve them as occasion demands."

What War Means

It is not difficult for men to become indignant over wrongs committed and to speak hot words in righteous indignation, but it is a little more difficult for some men, even ministers, who would walk closely in the footsteps of Jesus to reconcile modern warfare with the principles and purposes of his teaching. The Congregationalist journal says further:

> "If war meant the immediate apprehension and execution of the leaders of the military party in Germany that would be one thing, but because war seems to call for

A Student Conference in War Time

Christian leaders in America are convinced that war time—when men and women are making extreme sacrifices to secure future liberty and justice—is not the time to curtail our efforts to give the Gospel of Christ to the world. The time when all foundations are being shaken is not the time to give up strengthening the foundation on which all truth and liberty rest. The time when men and women are sacrificing energy, money and life itself to establish peace on earth is not the time to call a halt on devoting all that we have to promote peace between men and God. Greater tasks than ever are before the present generation and these make earnest, united effort more than ever necessary.

It was for these reasons that the Student Volunteer Movement called a conference of selected student leaders to meet at Northfield, Massachusetts, January third to sixth, in place of the usual quadrennial convention. In response, some 800 students, professors and other leaders came together, from 36 states and from every province of Canada, to consider the present world situation and to face the responsibilities thrust upon the Christian forces in colleges and universities to help extend the Kingdom of Christ among all nations. Under Dr. John R. Mott's presiding genius, the program was particularly effective and the students were unusually responsive.

Dr. Mott's opening address called attention effectively to the fact that we are living in a shaken world. "The pillars of civilization, on which we prided ourselves at the time of the Kansas City convention, are broken. Education has proven insufficient, for the most highly educated nation in the world has become the most dangerous. The world struggling beneath an almost intolerable load of debt, physical suffering disease and moral failure. . . Europe and the West must now be moulded anew. While the world is responsive and teachable is the time to strike the hardest blow that Christian forces have ever struck to shape the world's life according to the unchallenged principles of Christ—changeless amid all the change that has been sweeping through the world."

One of the most picturesque and impressive sessions of the conference was on the closing evening, when sixteen students from foreign lands presented, in short, stirring talks in most creditable English, the needs of their countries for help from their Christian brethren in North America. These students came from Syria, Armenia, Liberia, the Philippines, Japan, China, Argentina, Salvador, Brazil, Bolivia,, Uruguay, Porto Rico, Ceylon and India.

Other speakers, including Robert E. Speer and Robert P. Wilder, who helped to found the Student Volunteer Movement; Dr. Jas. L. Barton and Bishop McDowell, emphasized the great responsibility resting upon our colleges in view of this world situation. A deep impression was made that hundreds of students would go from this conference back to their colleges, ready to lead their student comrades into undertaking a task which can not be discharged by simply gathering funds for foreign missions, or even by sending some of their number as foreign missionaries. As one of the speakers expressed it, "we must evangelize the unevangelized portions of life itself. Christian principles must be given wider application within the college communities themselves. Only a task great enough and hard enough to challenge all the resourcefulness and energy of the students of North America should be set before them.

This conviction led to the drafting of the following program, which was enthusiastically adopted:

1. To enlist 200,000 different students in study aand discussion of Christian principles based on: (1) The life and teachings of Jesus Christ; (2) the need of these principles in the world today; (3) the need of these principles in North America today.
2. A call for decision on the part of students to live these principles, at whatever cost, on the campus in the nation and in the world.
3. A sufficient number of qualified men and women to evangelize the world in this generation.
4. At least one half million dollars during the academic year, 1918-1919, for the evangelization of the world, and sufficient funds to meet our obligations to the War Work.

The student leaders expect close co-operation between the colleges and the churches in carrying out these proposals. The funds raised are to be expended through the regular denominational agencies to which the colleges are related; through interdenominational agencies, such as union colleges on foreign fields, and through the work of Student Christian Associations abroad.

The conference powerfully brought home the fact that, even in the midst of war, missions are of unprecedented importance and that the call for missionary expansion now, even while the nations are under the weightiest of burdens, must be answered at all costs. It is for young men and young women to register their decisions for life work. Young men may be obliged to postpone special preparation and entry into the work of evangelizing the world because of obligations to their country in its time of need; but the determination of a great life purpose will make all the richer their experience in national service. It will make their influence larger among their fellows, and amid the restlessness and confusion of the days of readjustment following the close of the war, they will have a clearer goal toward which they can immediately direct their steps. The spirit engendered and manifested at Northfield may be expected to produce a powerful effect throughout the United States and Canada by extending the spirit of devotion, sacrifice and loyalty to Christ, with a readiness to serve men of all nations and to lead them into the Kingdom of God. —Missionary Review.

The Quiet Hour

The Christian Endeavor topics for March 3 and 10 afford splendid opportunity for the consideration of the benefits and importance of the Quiet Hour. The Quiet Hour is vitally related to both topics. I would suggest that the Quiet Hour superintendent, if you have one, should lead the meeting for March 3, and that the advantages of the Quiet Hour be especially stressed and new comrades enrolled. In urging the observance of the Quiet Hour, we are emphasizing the "Duty and Privilege of Prayer." Prayer is more important than anything else and is more neglected. Private prayer is the most important and most beneficial prayer of all. Every truly great man or woman this world has ever known has been one who has given much time to private prayer. We can not emphasize the importance of private prayer too much.

Then, on March 10, let the Quiet Hour superintendent, or some one have opportunity to call attention to the advantage of the observance of the Quiet Hour in helping a young person to make the most of himself. We can not attain unto the highest ideals of life without God's help. We must humbly seek his guidance and strength. God's purpose in our lives must be diligently sought and carefully followed. Hence the need of personal communion with him. Again let new comrades be enrolled. Report all enrollments promptly to the writer. Remember we want 2,500 comrades of the Quiet Hour till 1920. Send in your reports that we may know how we are progressing and when we reach the goal. I suggest that a Quiet Hour superintendent be appointed in each society who will diligently care for this matter. H. M. OBERHOLTZER,

Supt. Quiet Hour Brethren C. E. Union.

Young People's C. E. Society, First Brethren Church, Los Angeles, California

This church maintains three societies, (1) a Junior society. (2) a Young Peoples' society, (3) a Senior society. All three are active and doing good work. The last two named have been for a number of months doing a good deal of mission work by being responsible for an evening once a month, each of them, at one of the several rescue missions down in the heart of the city. Some members of the Young Peoples' society in connection with Brother Reagan and Brother Lowman have done well as leaders for the young Juniors who so much need the guidance of more mature judgment.

The Young Peoples' society had a very interesting and worth-while meeting on January 27. The lesson was Romans 12:1-13. Subject, "Our Gifts." Each one of the thirteen verses was given to a member with the request that it be used as a text for a sermonette. They responded to the call of the leader and were of a high order, some of the best ones will be sent to the editor for use in the Evangelist. One of these contributions which was put up in rhyme by its author, Wm. G. Keller, is included in this report herewith and is entitled, "Our Gifts to the Lord."

OUR GIFTS TO THE LORD

Do we ever think when we make our "Gifts to the Lord,"
That he knows just what we can afford?
Some make their gifts with big dollars bright,
But ofttimes ther's more good in the widow's mite.
He only asks what we easily can give,
But with it he watches how we live.
If our money we love to hoard,
We can not be giving much to the Lord.
Give not on one day only but give on seven,
And see if he won't open the windows of Heaven,
And pour out such a blessing you can't contain,
And you'll find your giving is not in vain.
Give all you can and do not fret,
The more you give the more you get.
One thing in church some people hate,
And that is to see the collection plate;
But they from their purse a dime will spare,
And think they are doing more than their share.
They think not of the blessings they receive each day,
But to that dime these words will say,
"To asunder part gives us inward pain,
But still joined in heart we hope to meet again."
Giving our money is the least we can do;
He wants us to live for him through and through.
If our lives are to count for him as a whole,
We should give him body, spirit and soul.
For what we give is his and not ours,
He wants the control and whole of our powers.
He wants our lives to be shining bright,
But remember we do nothing out of his sight.
Just read what is asked by the Apostle Paul;
He says, present your bodies, spirit and all.
In Heaven there's a book which will record,
Every gift that we make to the Lord.
There are many ways this giving may be done,
Every time you a sinner for Christ have won,
Or help some missionary on his way,
Help some poor widow her rent to pay,
You'll be rewarded beyond the river,
The Lord always loves a cheerful giver.
Don't think I'm telling others what to do,
For this means me as well as you.
All these are acceptable in his sight,
He knows when we do them if our heart is right.
Let us think of the Gift that Heaven did give,
Christ died for us that we might live.
Now let us all work with one accord,
And don't forget "Our Gifts to the Lord."

Some few months ago this society decided they needed a new piano for their own use. A committee was selected who got busy at once and secured a very good second hand instrument for a small amount. The result of several years' work shows that we have a good supply of musical instruments as aids in our church, two small organs and two upright pianos. We are also fortunate in having several sisters who can play well.

News From the Field

Philadelphia Notes

I closed a three weeks' meeting at the Third Brethren church, A and Tioga streets, Phiadelphia, about ten days ago. The last week of the meeting we had very bad weather. I gave two weeks' sermons on prophecy with an evangelistic appeal at the close. I found that we had almost twice the number in attendance while lecturing on the prophecies. The people are anxious to hear of the last things of the Bible.

I preached at my home church each Sunday morning and attended our own Sunday school. They put out a good committee of personal workers and therefore excused me from this part of the work so that I could do some visiting in the Whole Gospel Mission.

Brother Braker, the pastor, could not be present much of the time as he was busy in the printing plant where I think he is foreman. But he is a spiritual man and gives all the time he can free of charge to these good people. This mission at the present time is the most thriving of the three Brethren churches in Philadelphia.

Nearly all the Sunday schools have fallen off here in the city, but this one is an exception; it has kept on climbing till it has gotten ahead of ours and is shoving the First Brethren church hard. Its prayermeeting is the best of the three churches I am told.

The meeting was well attended. Some nights the church was almost filled, which is extra good for the city here. We had eight adult confessions. Several others are very near the Lord. None have yet been baptized as the pastor will attend to that. A number of the members say they were spiritually benefited and are nearer the Lord than ever before. This was not a large ingathering but a good meeting considering all the circumstances. Unless this church shall have some unexpected reverse it seems to be destined to become one of the strongest churches here in the east.

For some reason (and what it is I do not know) it never has been kept properly before our brotherhood. Many hardly know that there is a third Brethren church in Philadelphia. But it is here and mighty lively and wide awake and void of worldliness and worldly methods, for which we thank God.

The Whole Gospel Mission is in a normal and rather healthy condition with prospects of a few good additions. Our C. E. has taken on new life and is increasing in numbers. At the present time it is helping the Sunday morning church attendance and the midweek prayer meeting. We are gradually organizing all the departments of our church so as to be able to hook up better to the Four-Year Program. It will require considerable time to make all the adjustments.

We are getting ready to begin our revival April 7 and we think will be able to secure a number of additions. I will write more about our work in the near future. Pray for us.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN.

Sunnyside, Washington

We send this report in order that false reports may be silenced. Within the last week several inquiries from different parts of the brotherhood have come to us relative to a false report that we have been arrested and sentenced to Federal prison because of certain utterances. The report is a lie from beginning to end. Conditions here in the west are different than in the east. Our church is new and unpopular. There has been a spirit of strong jealousy against her here from her organization. Nearly all the churches improve every opportunity to oppose her. We have lined up for Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and other lines of work. Not a word of opposition to our government has been uttered. But because our men have availed themselves of their constitutional rights of exemption on the grounds of religious conviction, a storm of protest has raged against the church. Because we would not unite with every old thing that came along, we have been slandered, and of course, the preacher bears the blunt of it all. If charges could have been preferred, they would have been, for many times religious spies from other congregations were present to entrap us. But we gave them place, no, not for a moment.

The church is prospering. Her Sunday school attendance was larger during January than for any month for two years. The church audiences were the largest within the community. Her finances were very good. The special features of the month are worthy of mention. Ashland College night was observed with an offering of $32.50. Do we get the pennant? We are ready for you also, Beachler, any time! A new, neat up-to-date garage was built to house the preacher's "Henry." New choir chairs have been secured, and then on February 12, they surprised the preacher with a crowded parsonage in honor of his 32 birthday. A gift of a $25 overcoat was presented and many expressions of good will were given.

Right now we are most busy with two campaigns. We are canvassing the church for the Evangelist. Then we are conducting a short series of services at Euclid, ten miles distant, prospective to opening up a new work. It is too early to forecast results in either campaign.

This report is written as we enjoy as much physical libtty as ever and we believe greater spiritual liberty than at any previous time. Pray for us as we do for you all.

CHAS. H. ASHMAN.

"Late But Not Too Late"

To Every Pastor of the Brethren Church, and to the Churches Without Pastors, Attention:

At the General Conference last year the time set for the taking of the offering for the superannuated ministers of our beloved brotherhood was FEBRUUARY, 1918. The time being changed from June as heretofore. The month is almost past and I am afraid some of you have forgotten all about this "Most Important Work."

Now Brethren, for your own sakes as well as for the sake of the brethren who have given their lives to the promotion of this branch of the faith for which we all claim we would die, let us prove that we would die for it by "living for it," and helping those who are depending upon this fund for a sustenance (and the Lord and YOU know it is far too small at best) by doing not your bit but your very best for this fund in your own congregation, and where there is no pastor won't some one interested take the lead in this work and see that an offering be taken.

Of course there are churches where this contribution is included in your budget system or taken out of your regular missionary or benevolent offerings from the duplex system, and in these cases let me urge you if this has not already been attended to, to do it at once and send it to Brother H. H. Wolford or the writer.

To those in the Pennsylvania district will you please send your offering to the writer direct so I will be able to make a complete report to the state at their conference, as I am the special representative for that fund in Pennsylvania.

An honest confession is good for the soul, and I herewith offer my confession for not calling attention to this fund earlier, but my reason (or excuse which ever you choose to call it) is as some of you know I have been away from my regular position in Pittsburgh, and have given four months of my time to work among the boys at Camp Lee. And knowing this I am sure all of you are patriotic enough to forgive me for my seeming neglect, and show that you have forgiven me by doing at once what both you and I may have neglected, and what I am pleading with you now to do if you have not already done it.

Thanking you in advance for this favor to (not me) those of our brethren who look forward to this fund as their "Pay Car," and hoping to hear from you in the way of a proportionate offering to the way the Lord has prospered you, I am sincerely,

H. F. E. O'NEILL.

P. R. R. Y. M. C. A., 43rd St., Pittsburgh.

First Brethren Church, Los Angeles, Calif.

Too long a time has elapsed since we have written of the Lord's work here.

Last fall, at the request of our pastor, Brother Reagan, he was granted a four months' leave of absence to attend the Xenia Theological Seminary and compleate a certain line of work broken off a couple years ago by the illness of Sister Reagan. Brother Sylvester Lowman, of Dayton, O., was secured to act as supply-pastor during this four months, and after doing team work with Brother Reagan during December he took entire charge of the church Janauary first on which day Brother Reagan started east.

The annual business meeting and election of officers was held the evening of New Year's Day. The meeting was harmonious and satisfactory. The interest and attendance were fine and all present seemed to look forward to a successful year of work.

Brother Lowman put forth some new ideas in regard to managing the finances of the church this year and these were adopted and so far I believe the results are good.

Some of the older men retired from official positions and younger men were elected. The new officers are active and trustworthy and no doubt will produce results.

Brother Lowman's earnestness, his faithfulness and his evangelistic spirit have won many friends.

There is a commendable enthusiasm in attendance and interest in the Sunday school under the lead of superintendent Earl Hedrick and a fine body of officers and teachers, although there is large room for growth and improvement. An attendance contest is on at present between the males and females, or between the "Reds" and the "Blues."

January 24 an enjoyable and profitable communion service was held, there being 85 at the tables. The service was conducted by Brother Lowman assisted by Brother Kimmell from Whittier and others. Several visitors, whose presence was an inspiration to us all, were present from the Whittier congregation and from Compton Avenue church Los Angeles.

One of our young men, Harry Toler, who has felt the call of the Master to preach the Word, was given a formal call to the ministry by the church at the annual meeting and he is now trying to fit himself for efficient work as "sower of the Word." What a spneldid thing it would be if he could be in Ashland College for a time for very thorough preparation.

Yours in the Master's name,

A. P. REED.

Doings at Dayton

Inasmuch as we are always interested to learn what our Brethren are doing and how the work of the Master is succeeding, we will give some items from the First Brethren at Dayton, Ohio. Our experiences have been unusual since the new year set in on account of the extreme weather and fuel situation, but we are now getting back toward normal conditions and are making some plans for great things in the progress of our work. This will be fully reported later, but we will mention in passing that a city-wide group revival campaign is being launched for March, and in our west side group the services will be held in our church and brother Francis J. Reagan, of Los Angeles, will be the evangelist. For the present purpose as the best and most reliable statement of the Dayton work, I append the Annual Message of our pastor, W. S. Bell, which follows:

"To the Members of the First Brethren Church, of Dayton, Ohio.

The year 1917 is now history and in future years it will be remembered as contributing to the large and growing work of the Dayton church. In the midst of earth's confusion, the unsettling of our home and social life; in the call of the nation for our sons and brothers in the world's titanic war of all times. It has been difficult for us to adjust ourselves to the great events, and find our equilibrium. These conditions have made our work more burdensome and difficult than in former years. This has not affected us alone, but religious work throughout the world. The year through which we have just passed, has brought to us joy and sadness, some defeats and failures, but out of it all, victory.

This year above all others since my labor with you has brought us the greatest harvest of souls. Last February the biggest meeting held during the year in the denomination was conducted in our church by Evangelist Jennings, with a total of 125 confessions: Of this number, 90 united with our church. Through the channels of our regular church services there were 43 additional names added, making a grand total of 133 new members added to the church. Not only this, but through your unselfishness the pastor conducted four other revivals in Goshen, Nappanee, Berne and Camden, which resulted in 195 confessions for Christ. If we should sum up the total of our work for the year it would show that 363 people were led to acknowledge Christ as Lord.

We should not leave out of our record, the great work established by our Brother Lowman in Camden in organizing and planting a new church which is full of promise and with proper care will be a strong church in a few years. The Dayton church in a special sense is the parent of the Camden work. We have now reached one of the Four Year Goals of our denomination, which is Number 4.

The Dayton church is now the largest church numerically in the denomination with a book membership of 900. At this time I desire to call your attention to the church membership that you may be apprised of some facts that should be considered. The book membership is somewhat misleading, as it does not represent the active, working membership. There are 50 non-resident members, 110 living in the rural districts, who can only attend occasionally, and at least 125 delinquents. Taking these into consideration, with the remainder of our membership scattered to all parts of the city, will help you to realize that our dependent and working force is much smaller than the total book membership might lead you to believe.

In my pastoral work I have endeavored during the year to visit the entire membership and for the first time, by the aid of the machine which you so kindly made possible for me, to have reached our members living in the rural districts. I have endeavored to be with our members in sickness and need. No call has come to me to which I have not responded. One of the difficult things in my pastoral work and which will account if any have not been visited, is the continued change of the address of members who move and do not give me their change of address. I know of some who have made as many as two or three changes during the year. No one can appreciate the difficulties of looking after a large, scattered membership as we have, except by actual experience.

The Dayton church has been honored in having those who during the year have placed themselves upon the altar of service in giving their lives to the work of the gospel. Brother Sylvester Lowman and his wife are now in California engaged in the ministry, Dr. Florence Gribble and Mae Snider are leaving for darkest Africa, Sister Minnie Deeter who went to Lost Creek and is now preparing to go later to Africa. This is evidence of their being spiritual life in our midst. Again I call your attention to the Four-Year Program of our denomination in which we can more than claim the Four Year Goal of Number six.

During the year we have held two communion services which have been largely attended, have observed all the special days of our denomination, have contributed to the different departments of our denominational work and have taken active part in all the general activities of the church. While we would have taken pleasure in giving more largely to our general work, our building debt has been the handicap, but with it we have contributed $700 to home and foreign missions and some of these days when relieved of the present financial handicap, I predict that the Dayton church will lead all others in the support of our mission work. We stand loyal to our denomination, her institutions, missions and work.

It is not necessary for me to remind you that one of the great problems of the church is financial. This beautiful edifice in which we are gathered is an honor to the denomination. No matter what our criticisms may be, it has provided for us a most desirable place to worship and has been ours to enjoy while paying for. There was a time when we felt the load was too heavy to carry, but each year finds the weight becoming less. It has been our privilege and joy again this year to reduce the debt between three and four thousand dollars. As I stated last year the financial problem has been solved and is now reduced to a program and in a few more years the debt will be completely paid off. Every year there is a big reduction in interest and the hard part of the way is past. No one needs to fear as to the future and none will be asked to do only the part they should and this part of the work in the future will be made easy, in all doing their part. The general expense has been fully met through the general contributions by envelope and collections, and all bills have been met and are paid. When the total amount of all moneys received by the church are added it will be found that this has been a banner year financially and that the church has raised very near $9,000. I appeal to every member of the church to contribute regularly through the envelope system to the support of our work.

In calling your attention to the church auxiliaries, that which stands always first in the church work, is the Sunday school. The report of our esteemed superintendent, G. W. Brumbaugh, tells us of the achievements accomplished and we greatly appreciate his service, his assistants' and teachers.' Several things happened during the year to interfere with the carrying on of our work. One of the largest, if not the largest and most active classes of the church, The Home Builders, was deprived of the services and leadership of their capable teacher, Sister Wenger, who was called to the bedside of her mother during a lingering illness. The head of the Primary Department, Sister Flo Fogarty, was taken ill early in the summer, and has been unable to direct this important branch of the Sunday school.

Our superintendent's hands and heart have been filled with care and sorrow during the summer months in the illness and death of his wife. The absence of these leaders has been keenly felt. In considering all things we have done well. We should, can and will do better. Some of our classes are doing splendid work and I can not refrain from complimenting brother Orion E. Bowman in his work with his young men, and sister Nannie Teeter with the young women, also a passing complimentary word for the sacrifice and work of the Home Builders' class that presented $100 on Christmas Sunday to the Church building Fund. These are not all, as Dr. Long is continually on the job with the Golden Rule class as well as others that could be named. The Sunday school, however, is capable of doing a larger and more aggressive work and this should be launched at the earliest. The S. S. C. E. have been faithful in doing their part during the year and the report brought to us this evening by the president, Nannie Teeter, is very commendable. The work of this society could be made larger and easier if the women of the church would not leave the responsibility on a few, but enlist and give their assistance to the work. I make a special appeal to the women of the church who are not members to join the society. With the capable leadership you have and competent officers, you should rally to their support.

The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha show activity, interest and service. These young women meet once a month for a special hour, devotion and business. The president, Sarah Griffith, has proved herself a capable leader.

The Christian Endeavor work is divided into three departments, Senior, Intermediate and Junior. The president of the Senior society is Roy Patterson and is all we could ask for a president. The society has held weekly meetings during the year and is furnishing good programs and doing excellent work. The Intermediate society, which during the summer months united with the Senior, has called a new leader in Bonnie Ewing Ashton, who is well liked and doing good work. If I am not mistaken the Intermediates are pushing the Seniors hard on attendance and interest. The dividing of the intermediates from the Seniors is a wise move and much larger results are being accomplished. The Juniors have an excellent leader in Margaret Van Scoyk and should be better attended. I trust that the Sunday school teachers and parents will urge the children of the Junior age to attend these Sunday afternoon meetings.

While the Brotherhood of Alexander Mack has been a de facto organization, yet it has been active in bringing to the men the opportunity of fellowship gatherings. It will be well for you to consider this evening the advisability of making this a permanent organization.

In conclusion I want to thank the members of the church for their loyalty and support given during the last year. We have labored together in unity and peace without a discordant note. I express my appreciation to all the officers and workers of the church for their services. I feel especially indebted to Elder W. C. Teeter for his unselfish service and assistance in my pastoral work. He has shown the pastor every courtesy, has the work of the church on his heart and ever ready to respond cheerfully to the many calls made upon him. I express special appreciation to Brother McBride for the church calendar which he has given to the church for the past year, which we all appreciate and could not afford to be without. He has kindly consented to furnish the same the coming year if the back page is occupied in paid advertisements as the expense of publication is too heavy for him to bear alone.

Today we stand on the threshold of the new year and the history of 1918 for the First Brethren church of Dayton is in the membership of the body: it will be what we make it. May we take strength and courage from what has been accomplished and go on to greater things.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Your pastor,
W. S. BELL."

It gives us great pleasure to submit the above statement of our pastor, which speaks for our labors at Dayton, and we expect to tell of some further efficient doings in our next. May the Lord prosper the work among our Brethren everywhere is our prayer.

WM. C. TEETER,
Publicity Agent.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

The religious side of the work, or that which is strictly religious, has kept up well through the year. Generally there has been quite a boom on in eastern Kentucky over coal, but it has not struck Lost Creek, as there has been no coal mined here. We have no givers who make anything like a regular salary as an income. Yet the matter of offerings has increased this year somewhat, enough to make us on the field feel much encouraged over the matter.

There have been 24 confessions to date, and there will still be more before the year is out. There were ten confessions and baptisms during the fall term, and at our last prayer meeting service last week there were fourteen confessions. These have all been scholars in the school, many of them coming from some little distance to Riverside. It was the school that especially enabled us to reach them.

At our Christmas service this year, we had a combined giving and receiving service. But the receiving was limited to the little children. No one was allowed to put anything on the tree for larger people, but instead they were urged to give. We had a little tree for the little ones, and our Christmas offering for Y. M. C. A Bibles for soldiers and sailors was $20.03. At the same time we made a drive for the Red Cross and in about a week raised about $38 for that. We raised this as we do all offerings, only by straight giving. We do not believe in suppers, dances as Sister Detwiler reported one place having done etc., to raise money for the Lord's work. God went straight to the heart of the matter and gave his best, his Son and we ought to be willing to do likewise, without resorting to the things of the world to raise it. At the same time we also raised $100 for a laundry canner and store room building. This with what Miss Ida Shank has sent for this building will about enable us to erect what we need so much here. Then also the Sunday church offerings have increased somewhat, reaching over five dollars a Sunday a few times. The Sunday school had promised to give Bibles to all who would not miss a Sunday at Sunday school for a year. There were fourteen who made the good record and for whom Bibles were purchased. For these Bibles and the Testaments for the soldiers the Sunday school paid $23.86. This with the church offerings on hand, makes considerably over $200 that we have raised here in the last two or three months. This is far above any former record here. We trust we have only made a beginning.

We have also inaugurated a new move here in the form of a local standing Advisory Committee. The purpose of this committee is to get their assistance in planning ways and means by which the people here can be induced to help Riverside more, and also to bring the people through this committee more vitally into touch with the real life of Riverside. The work thus far of this committee has been very reassuring that it will be very helpful to Riverside's future.

The school this year has been even more than we had hoped for. So many of our boys have gone to the army that we feared that it might deplete our school attendance somewhat. Only one other county in the U. S. has equalled Breathitt county in the percentage of volunteers for the army, and that was some county in Vermont. But enrollment and attendance have been good, and for the winter term we have had to turn quite a few away for lack of boarding room at the dormitories. We have about sixty boarders for the winter term of school.

We sometimes hear rumblings of some who seem to be somewhat discontented with what the school is costing the church. But it seems to me that when we see what it has meant, and will mean in the salvation of souls, and when we remember that it was the school that enabled us to reach them, and too when we see how anxious these young people are for an education, as seen in the following incidents, then we would rather be thankful that we have had an opportunity to help such young people. One girl walked fifteen miles, carrying a suitcase to get to a train to ride six miles that she might get to Riverside. The first thing she said when getting here was, "I am so glad to be back to Riverside." Two others one a young lady and a boy, walked six miles through a twelve inch snow over a big hill or mountain, breaking the path at that to get to a train to get to Riverside. It is needless to say that when they got here, a change of foot wear was very much needed, the tramp through the snow earlier in the day thoroughly wetting what they had on. When I learned of these things, and they are not isolated cases, I felt thankful that the good Lord permitted me to work among such young people. How many young women elsewhere in our country in this day would have braved so much to get to a Christian school as these did? It also reflects how much the school is appreciated and needed.

We are now in our week's meeting with Brother Cook preaching excellent sermons. This will be reported later. Besides the special work above mentioned, we have also sent khaki-bound testaments to all the boys now in the army who have ever been at Riverside. We have now sent out 27 of them and have a few more yet to send. In My next letter, I will tell you how the boys appreciate these, by quoting some of their expressions of appreciation which I believe you will be interested in reading. We ask that we may continue to be held up to the throne of grace that we may abide in his will more fully and do only that which pleaseth him.

Beginning at South Bend

Leaving Johnstown with three fine presents from the membership to Mrs. Rench and myself, we turned our faces toward home once more, and in due time settled in the work here. We shall always cherish in our memories the kindly considerations of our former pastorate, and I am glad to say that our lot has fallen among a mighty fine class of people. I am more than delighted with the work so far. Among the things of interest since beginning the work is the graduation of a class of eleven in Teacher Training. With appropriate exercises each one received his diploma from the superintendent of the Bible school, Francis Scriver. This was December 15.

Then the last Sunday of the year 1917 brought also the last of the church debt on our property. The S. S. C. E. had labored faithfully and long to bring this to pass, and with their faithful membership, the entire congregation joined heartily in singing while the mortgage went up in smoke. Thus the new year was ushered upon us free of debt.

The next event was our evangelistic meeting. After a fine start (so the folks said) of one week, the severe winter storm struck us, and many others have already reported the rest. In all of my ministry I have never had my work so much hindered. We have had several additions to the church notwithstanding the hindrances.

On last Sunday, February 17, we unfurled a beautiful silk "service flag" in honor of 17 of our number who have followed the colors to the front. Two little girls, one of whom has a brother "over there," and the other, two brothers who are ready to cross, drew the cords which unloosed the fastenings and the flag, in silence as marked as the silence of death, slowly rolled in position. The secretary of the church called the "Roll of Honor," and with some selections of most appropriate music the flag was formally dedicated. The pastor spoke on "Following the Flag." He pointed out how that good cheer would come to the boys in the trenches by following them and the flag, with our letters of encouragement, with our comfort kits, with our active participation in Red Cross work, with our subscriptions to Y. M. C. A. work and the purchase of Thrift Stamps to the extent of our ability. It is my opinion that we must not only "Keep the Home Fires Burning," but we shall have to change the slogan, "Have you done your bit?" to "Have you done your best?" I am sure that the best we can do for our boys is none too good.

Travel Notes

Our second campaign in the new year was launched at Sidney, Indiana. January 31, brother H. D. Miller, the church secretary, wrote me before coming that the meeting was announced, but the problem would be to get the people to venture over the snow drifts. But the people came, the faithful ones of course came first, they were congratulated by the evangelist and urged to stand by us in the fight and help to get others to God's house to hear the gospel message of salvation; this they did. They came, they worked and prayed until we had a house filled with attentive listeners.

The principal, teachers, boys and girls of the high school stood with us all through the meeting; this we appreciated in no small degree. Brother L. A. Myers, the pastor, had been snow bound failing to get to his people at Sidney for three weeks, and when the meeting started he was unable to get to us because of sickness in his home. Finally he managed to come for a short time. Only those who do evangelistic work know the loss of a good pastor's help in a revival meeting. Brother Myers is well liked at Sidney and this means that he will do a splendid work.

Brother Albert Ronk was the leader in song for us which was a great help to us. The choir was faithful, working with Brother Ronk each evening. Brother Ronk is not only a talented speaker as an evangelist, but a splendid singer, and ought to be giving all his time to the good work of the Lord. At this time he is somewhat tied up in business, but expects to be free soon. Any church needing an evangelist to preach or sing would do well to get Brother Ronk. Brother Myers being absent from the meeting the most of the time asked me to report it. The meeting at Sidney was short, a little over two weeks. A number of the brethren said it was in full blaze when we had to close. Nineteen made the good confession of Jesus before many witnesses. Three fathers, three mothers, fine influential people, with several young men and young women and others came into the church. The writer received fifteen into the church before leaving; two others are yet to be received and two go to the Christian church. For these blessings we give our coming King the glory.

We shared a fine hospitality in many homes, but we had our headquarters in the home of Dr. J. L. Warvel, and it was an ideal home in which to abide in every way. The doctor gave me medicine which I took for a very severe cold and which helped me and such as I had I divided with him. May God bless not only his home but all the others in which we entered.

The freewill offering was fine for Sidney. They did their part. I am indebted to Brother Ancil Sellars who brought me to Roann in his auto. Here we are in another fight. Brethren, please pray for us.

An Expression of Gratitude

We were recently happily surprised to receive some highly appreciated favors from some of our dear brethren with whom we often joined in sweet fellowship and worship many years ago, who, it seems remembered our decrepit condition; the terribly cold winter, the scarcity of fuel and the outrageous cost of living, and voluntarily favored us with something better than words, to whom we wish by this means to express our most heartfelt thanks. Thank you, brethren.

The favors to which we refer were rendered thus: First, sister Jane Fishtorn, of Bunker Hill, Indiana, sold a hundred or more brooms for us, making no charge for her service. Next, sister Viola Martin, of Galveston, Indiana, sent us five dollars as a New Year's present. Thirdly, here comes a letter from that open hearted brother, John Parr, of Berne, Indiana, with a ten dollar check enclosed.

Then here comes a long letter from that great-hearted Rev. W. F. Johnson, pastor of the Bethel church, at Berne, Indiana, full of expressions of sympathy for us old folks in our fast declining years, and after speaking of the integrity of the brethren at Bethel, he closes his letter with a check for sixteen dollars, saying, now this is a free will gift to you and wife, and signs the letter thus: W. F., Lena, Dora and all the Johnsons and Parrs, Ludys, Nashs, Sipes, Smitlys and all the Brethren at Bethel.

Now brethren, you may be sure that your favors are most highly apperciated, not however for the intrinsic value alone of those gifts, but also for the Christian principles thereby manifested. God bless you, brethren.

Ashland College Notes

The Senior party was the big event of the week. Being a Senior the correspondent very naturally thinks so. The affair was held at the home of Dr. R. R. Teeter, whose daughters Lucile and Pauline are members of Class '18. During the evening many mirth provoking pantomimes portraying typical phases of college life and portending many futures glowing and otherwise were enacted. At the tag end of the evening a dainty luncheon was served. Then to wind up the evening we sat around Teeter's large fireplace, the lights were turned low and in this haunting environment we sang, "Ashland's the College for Me," "Old College Home," and "Ashland U." It is to occasions of this sort that the "old grad" looks back. Young hearts dream forward, but old hearts dream back and to them Ashland really is the "Old College Home."

Ashland can now boast of two glee clubs. The boys are going to make the girls step some. With a membership of twenty splendid voices under Miss Martin's direction we expect things from "the fellows." Fred Vanator is president and Harvey Becknell is vice president of the organization. Of course the club hasn't scraped any calsimine off the ceiling as yet in hitting high and low notes but they'll get somewhere by and by—by and by.

Lester King and his program committee are surely giving us good stuff in our C. E. meetings. Last Sunday evening Prof. J. A. Garber led and it was surely worth while. We are looking forward to the coming Sunday evenings for the various classes are scheduled to lead in turn. It is needless to say that the College C. E. is an organization which builds up the spiritual life of our school.

Soph-Seniors and Freshman-Juniors meet in mortal combat tonight (Friday) on the basketball floor. Results will be let out later. Of course you know how the writer leans.

Tonight—we eat—honest pie and ice cream. The same is the gift of Miss Mae Minnich former student and teacher. Hats off to Miss Minnich, for the boys and girls say if they had her here—well! Thanks from the "bunch."

Professor Grubb was in Ashland today. He looks fit in his uniform. Ashland lost one of its most efficient teachers in Professor Grubb. He has enlisted in the signal service of the U. S. His classes are in charge of Florence Pancoast, laboratory assistant and Dr. Jacobs who is also his successor as registrar and owner of the "Book and Candy" store.

By the way Joe Gingrich, our tow headed store man, is lately being dubbed the "candy kid." His store is doing famously and we'd miss Joe and his familiar "the world's running over with joy" were he to suddenly leave us, which he won't for there's no danger of his being translated.

The Senior Class is shortly to produce their play, "At the End of the Rainbow." The parts have not been assigned as yet but rehearsals will commence soon. The play is a college comedy in three acts and the amateur thespians will have ample opportunity to display real talent with the lines given them.

Everybody is being photoed these days. The Annual requires a heap of pictures.

More news next week. Watch for the notes.

The following clipping is from the Washington Evening Star:

Plant Tobacco Lands to Wheat

To the Editor of The Star:

Being a minister of the gospel, the Book from which I preach requires me to stir up the minds of the people by way of remembrance. In these days of enforced conservation, when we have meatless, wheatless, heatless days, etc., it seems a pity for the labor of thousands of hands and the produce of a million acres to be steadily "going up in smoke."

From reliable authority we have it that more than a million acres of America's land is being used to grow tobacco.

If there be any question as to whether or not tobacco is harmful, the decision is that it may do some good; but it certainly does much harm, and is in many cases a curse.

I realize that I am striking a sensitive spot, but with a possible (and probable) food famine not very far ahead of us, why not let these million or more acres be given over to that which is positively needed for the maintenance of life. This would mean millions of bushels of wheat to feed the hungry of our own land and our allied armies as well.

This will "hurt" a great many people, but doesn't it seem that a measure of this kind should be adopted temporarily, at least, as a war measure and as a further patriotic conservation, if nothing else?

And neither Mr. Hoover, nor Billy Sunday has ever mentioned this.

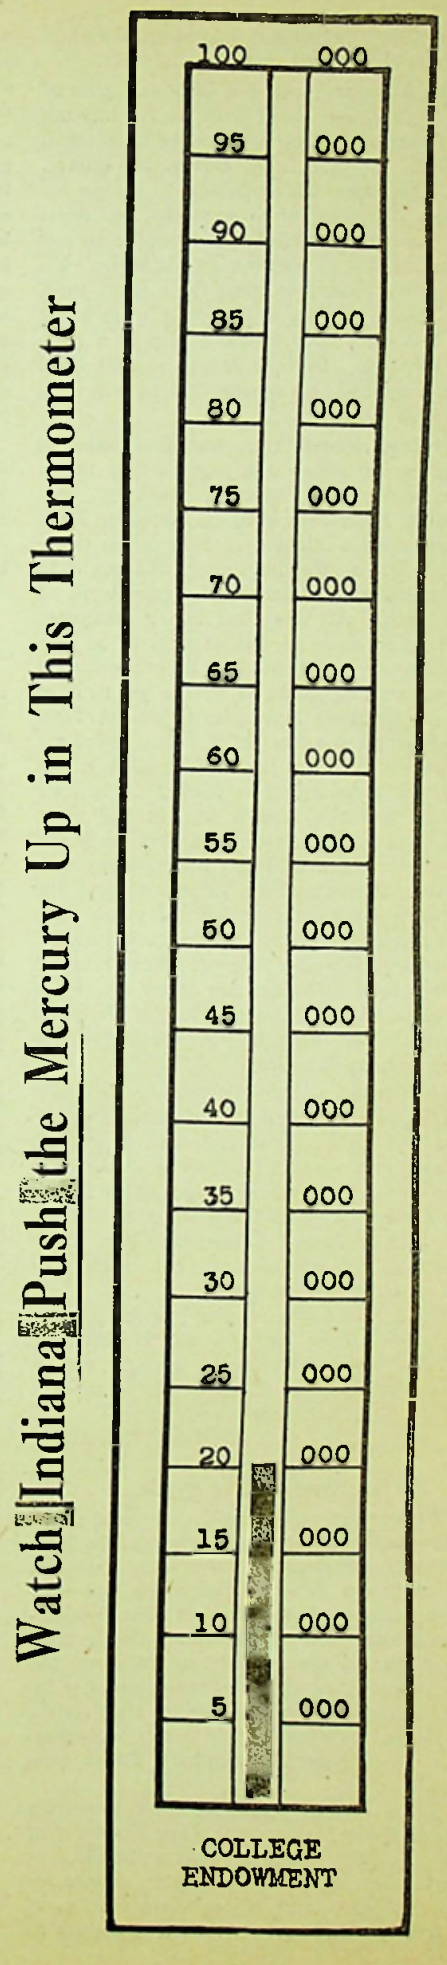
CAMPAIGN NOTES

At last the thaw has come and the wheels have begun to move slowly. A number of people have commented to me on the absence of the thermometer from the Evangelist for such a long time. No one regrets this long silence more than I, for it means that the severe winter has put the campaign at least seven weeks behind schedule. But I am glad to know that our people are watching the thermometer. It means that there is a real interest at least among many of our people in the campaign to endow Ashland College. We trust that that interest may continue to widen and deepen as the campaign progresses.

Beginning on Sunday, February 17, we worked among the congregation at New Paris for almost a week. We found this congregation without a pastor. And our work is always more difficult under those circumstances.. And this leads me to suggest again in this connection that I can not say how much I am indebted to our local pastors for their co-operation when I work in their congregations. I simply must have this co-operation if the results for permanent endowment will be what we want them to be. Our canvass at New Paris will reach about the $350 mark when the results are all in. We had hoped to do better at New Paris than this; and yet, all things considered, we regard the week as very profitably spent. In fairness to this congregation I think I ought to say that as long ago as 1911 there lived in this congregation a brother who believed sufficiently in Ashland College to invest $1,000. And I may also hint that unless I am badly mistaken other reports will come later from New Paris of substantial gifts to the college. While I was with this people I tried to be as useful to them as I could. One night I baptized five candidates who had come forward in a union meeting held in New Paris recently. Next week I hope to return one night to conduct a communion service. I am glad to say that one night during the New Paris canvass Brother McInturff and Herman Roscoe and others from Goshen came down to give us a little lift. Naturally I had both of those brethren up on the platform making speeches in the interest of endowment. They can both talk endowment allright and I wish I could take them along with me as I go from place to place. What they said helped, too. I have said that New Paris is without a pastor. However, there has been preaching here at regular intervals all winter. And brother John Smoker, who is superintendent of the Sunday school has been pushing and pulling hard to keep the fires burning. I hope he and the rest of the membership will bravely hold the fort until a pastor is secured to take charge of the work. New Paris, like any other pastorless church needs a shepherd and leader.



In closing I want to mention two things which have been on my mind considerably of late. First, for some reason our people are slow to realize that Ashland College is a distinctly denominational interest. Not one person in the Brethren church owns a single brick in the college buildings any more than any other person owns it. It is our college. And therefore every last member of the brotherhood sustains a personal responsibility toward Ashland College. Moreover every last person in the brotherhood who is able to give anything at all whether little or much ought to take some part in creating this endowment. Nor should anyone feel when he is giving that he is giving to me, or to Dr. Miller or Dr. Furry, or to the Board of Trustees. No, by no means! Ashland College stands for the promotion of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. And when we give to the college we ought to feel that we are giving to God. If this is not true then let us drop the whole business at once. And yet I meet people occasionally who seem to give with the feeling that they are not giving to God but that they are giving to men. The whole notion is wrong.

The other thing I mention is this. Not enough of our older people are looking squarely at this annuity idea. In almost every congregation in our brotherhood we have old people who have no heirs, but they do have money. And in many instances they will never touch the principle—their interest from their money keeps them. Now then, why do not more of our people who belong to that class inquire into this annuity idea? Ashland College stands ready to guarantee to our people that she will pay a reasonable rate of interest during the life of an individual, with the understanding that at death the money shall belong to the college. Other colleges are getting millions of dollars that way. Why are our people of wealth afraid of this? We need to wake up. The time has come when the Brethren church shall have to think, not in terms of pennies, but in terms of thousands of dollars with reference to Ashland College. If Ashland College is to be an institution so equipped as to give us just ground for pride we shall have to make a big investment of money. Why not face that fact right now? Why not wake up and get busy right now?

Brethren Evangelist

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1918 NUMBER 9

THE EASTER CALL

The Easter message is the greatest ever announced to man. No good news is comparable to the best good news of the Resurrection morning. It is the best good news ever given because it is the Message of Life. The one blessing above all others that the readers of the Evangelist share, or may share, is that they have heard the Easter Message. "Jesus is risen indeed!" Go, tell it.

AFRICA AND OTHER LANDS COMPARED

I have just room enough to say that much about the wondrous, the surpassing fullness of the Christian Faith and Life. The coming Easter should be by all reason and by every consideration that appeals to Brethren the best we have ever experienced. Let me give three reasons why this is true.

First. The world is held in the grip of a terrible war. Our own nation is involved. Yet the theater of war is far removed from our own land. If fight we must, and we must, we ought never cease being thankful to God that our land is spared the sight of the grim and awful horrors of war at our very doors.

Second. If ever a genuine Christian faith had a meaning in life it has now. And if ever we were willing to help spread the knowledge of the gospel it should be now. The world situation ought to make the BRETHREN FAITH more precious today than ever before. If this be so then the opportunity to herald the Easter Message by means of our Easter gifts ought to make this the best Easter we ever shared.

Third. The last reason I wish to thus briefly suggest is found in the remainder of this contribution. But in brief it is that the call for help is the greatest that has ever come to us as a people. Never before did the command of Jesus carry with it so great responsibility as now for us as a people.

The Call: This is a continental call! It comes in world terms. You must at least this once think BIG if you think at all. This contribution begins and ends with the Easter appeal to tell the good news to all men. Here is AFRICA the Dark Continent calling to the Brethren of North America for light. And here is South America the Continent of Opportunity calling for help to us.

This is neither the time nor the place to set forth in detail the appalling needs of these continents. Remember the two facts about South America, namely, 1. There are seventy millions of souls in South America and not one in a thousand has been touched by a Protestant gospel. 2. Unless these untouched thousands are brought under the sway of a pure gospel they will fast be engulfed in the hopeless torrent of unbelief. Remember the two facts about Africa, namely, 1. There are a hundred million blacks and some millions of others without the gospel; and 2, unless these are speedily won for Christianity, Islam will win them.

I have just said you MUST THINK IN BIG TERMS. We are under orders of a great Prince of Life. Vast continents, dark and yet opportune, call to us for help. Unevangelized millions look for light and life. Eternal life, continents, millions of undying souls of men. Think of it! And this is the call that comes to the Brethren church at the coming Easter. We must make our Foreign Mission Offering larger than ever before. We must because we can.

The Workers: For the benefit of the many new readers of the Evangelist we will here again indicate the workers of the church in these two foreign fields. There are now at work in South America the following: Elder C. F. Yoder and wife; Elder E. G .Atkinson and wife, and Elder W. H. Bock and wife. In these workers we have worthy representatives of the church in a great and promising center of activity in Argentina. Brother Yoder will again be at work in Rio Cuarto where they will live. Brother Atkinsons live at Cabrera and are establishing a work there. Upon the arrival of Brother Yoders doubtless Brother and Sister Bock will open up a new work. Brethren pray for these faithful and sacrificing workers. Our African missionaries are Elder James Gribble and his wife, Dr. Florence Gribble, and Sisters Estella Myers and Mae Snyder. These people have landed in Africa and are doubtless now on their way to a field as yet untouched by any missionary endeavor. Pray for these heralds of the gospel.

A word more should be said here that all may clearly understand the need of the Board. The South American workers are guaranteed fixed salaries. Brother Yoder holds a position in the State College at Rio Cuarto, Argentina, and is self-supporting so long as he retains this post. The workers in Africa have ventured for the Lord. They have gone forth in full faith in the Lord that he will supply all their need. The Board is the home representative of these workers and holds itself responsible to supply their needs as the offerings of the church provide for them.

The Offering: Our obligations can thus be seen to be greater by far than ever before. The salaries and support of the workers we have sent forth, the native workers, the incidental expenses connected with each station, and the sending forth of others that are now ready to go, call for an increased offering. The Foreign Mission Board looks with confidence to the pastors and churches to support the work committed to it by the church.

Environment and Crime

While it is very generally known that criminal instincts are largely a matter of inheritance and that their transmission from generation to generation has resulted in long lines of criminals springing from one common ancestry, it must yet be admitted that circumstances have much to do with the active outbreaking of these criminal instincts.

While the keeping of a "pig in the parlor" for a few generations will have no appreciable influence upon the character and habits of the pig and its nature will always remain the nature of a pig, we are not willing to admit that man is so unsusceptible to the influence of proper environment. Sometimes a criminal is discovered who has such perverted notions of the real nature of crime that no environment could possibly change his ideas or his criminal instincts as in the case of a young man recently apprehended for holding up the cashier of a place of business and who declared that crime was with him an occupation just as anything else was an occupation for any other man and that he had no regrets for his criminal life, that his only regret was that he had been caught and that his determination was to "get" the fellow who "squealed" on him when he again got his freedom from imprisonment. The principles upon which such a life and career are based are that the whole world conduct is based upon the idea that "He shall take who has the power, and he shall keep who can." Such an unsocial nature would hardly be influenced by any environment, but there are many others with their criminal instincts less fully developed that may be influenced to better living by being given better chances to live.

The head lines of an item in a recent city paper declare, "Crime Wave Recedes." The item states that there have been fewer burglaries, hold ups and robberies during the time covered by the last week than in previous weeks. This reduction of crime wave follows the reduction of the severity of the rigorous winter that gripped our country for a period of more than two months. This would indicate that men are sometimes made desperate by conditions which are largely beyond their control. But while it may be impossible for any social system to control or modify weather conditions, it is not impossible for a social system to be so developed that men and women may be prepared to meet and withstand the discomforts brought on by the extreme cold of any winter. A system that would insure greater comfort in the way of housing and greater opportunities for all to secure through honest efforts the common necessities of life and that would insure adequate relief to those who are handicapped, no matter from what source, and unable to successfully compete with the average man or woman in their struggle for existence would most certainly go a long way toward reducing the actual number of crimes committed. In a measure it would be laying the ax at ONE of the roots of the matter though it might not destroy the tree whose fruit is principally crime.

Whatsoever Thy Hand Findeth to Do

It is coming to be more and more required that a man or woman to secure profitable employment bust be able to do at least one thing more than passably well, they must be able to do it exceedingly well, that is in order to secure a position of advantage they must be able to excel others who would do the same task. A great furore was stirred up a number of years ago when our government at Washington decided that federal appointments should no longer be made solely upon the principle of reward for political service and that all applicants for appointment in certain departments should be required to pass competitive examinations and that those making the highest grades in the tests would be given first place in the line of appointments. As this system has grown and spread through the different departments of the federal government and down through the various state governments and also through many municipal systems, a great cry of despair has gone up from the crowd of political "hangers on" who have been used to feeding at the public crib for so many years that it really frightens them to think of being compelled to earn an honest living by personal effort.

To secure efficiency in service for the public these competitive or civil service tests have been made to include many lines of work that ordinarily have been considered free from any such rigid requirements. In one recent announcement the need of the government for workers along certain lines was included bookkeepers, typists, firemen and carpenters. Applicants for any one of these positions must pass a civil service examination, but we presume that which would find the most objectors is the one which includes carpenters. Yet it shows that in the mechanical trades the public is demanding skill and that men who claim to be able to perform certain lines of work shall be able to demonstrate their ability to make good their claims. There would be less trouble between what we are pleased to call "capital and labor" if labor always sought to give "honest service for honest pay."

A Strange Mixture of Patriotism

A real patriot is not one who salutes the flag of his native country and shouts lustily when a troop of soldiers of his native land march by, but does nothing else to show his loyalty. A patriot is not only a patriot in time of war but he is also a patriot in time of peace. The laws which govern the people of any country demand patriotic obedience at ALL times, not simply when the country chances to be fighting an enemy, and men who violate the laws of the country are enemies to that country whether they are alien enemies or native enemies. In fact we are inclined to the belief that a native of any country who violates his country's laws is more guilty of an unpatriotic act than is an alien violator of the law.

No war has been conducted in modern times that has not resulted in making a certain type of business men of the country immensely rich. Always a part of this wealth is accumulated legitimately, but on the other hand a very large portion, if not the most of the great fortunes made during a war, is accumulated through operations in direct violation of law. We presume that never before in the history of any country has "profiteering" been frowned upon so universally as at the present time in our own country and yet there are men who call themselves patriotic Americans who are taking every advantage, legal or illegal, that they possibly can of every situation that will make them a dollar whether it concerns the government or only their fellow citizens. Even men who hold places of trust in the army organization itself have been found to be in collusion with those who would defraud their government. The frauds recently unearthed in the manufacture of soldiers' uniforms and the scandal of the ship yard building at "Hog Island" have only been a reptition of what has always been when unscrupulous men get an opportunity to bleed either the government or their fellow men. And yet these men call themselves patriots. They will contribute liberally to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and to the fund for relief among the refugees, but all the time they are seeking to capitalize the suffering of others and to make profit in an enlarged measure out of the actual need of other millions of people.

One may condemn the millionaire ship contractor or the clothing manufacturer for unpatriotically endeavoring to "hold up" his government, but in principle they are no worse than the private citizen who in times of stress hoards away a one hundred pound sack of sugar or a few barrels of flour or holds back the products of the farm and field for exorbitant prices when the people are clamoring for food.

Another strange mixture of patriotism has been found in our city jails where men who have been imprisoned for burglary, highway robbery or murder object to being compelled to associate with alien enemies who may be imprisoned in the same jail. In one city where one hundred and twenty alien enemies are imprisoned the American prisoners have voiced their protest to the jailer, and they have forbidden the singing of any German songs by any of their fellow prisoners, but have organized quartets to sing patriotic American songs to show their loyalty to the country whose laws they have violated and for which violation they are deprived of their liberty. A strange mixture indeed!

FOREIGN MISSIONARY EXTENSION: GOAL 11

"Over the Top"

"We are going over the top!" is the reply of pastors representing 66 congregations who have thus far reported to me their intentions as to the coming Easter Offering for foreign missions. "Over the top" means not less than 40 cents per member for their congregations as the annual offering for foreign missions. Two others report, "We will do the best we can." One other thought his congregation would not make the ripple, and two others made no reply to the question. Pastor, have you returned to me the post card I sent you asking for information? If you have not, please do so at once. If you don't do it, you are going to make me take money out of the missionary treasury for postage to write you again. We are not going to count "slackers" on this job until we have given you another warning! See?

The Smallness of It!

By the way, have you really stopped to think of what our church is really doing for this greatest work God has given the church to do? Let us figure. Our statistician reported at the last Conference that our church has a membership of 24,679 members. Our Foreign Missionary Society's Treasurer reported gifts for the work of foreign missions to the amount of $5,866.25. Do yon know what that means? It means that we gave less than 24 cents per capita for foreign missions from August 1916 to August, 1917. It means that on the average, members of the Brethren church are giving less than one-half cent (one-half of a cent, mind you) in a whole week, or less than 1-14 of a cent a day, for the work of preaching the news of salvation to the unevangelized nations of the earth. Say! If I believed that the church is to bring in the millennium by "leavening" the nations of the earth with the gospel—well!—then I would be a pessimist for sure! Now then, we are going to ask this year for a better evidence of our interest in this work by asking for four-fifths of a cent a week from every member of the church, or 40 cents each for the year. Of course, that will mean that some will have to still give largely to make up for those who are so dead, or so ignorant of the plans and purposes of God that they can say, "I do not believe in foreign missions;" or "We have heathen enough at home;" etc., etc.

30 or 40 cents for 1917-1918

It seems that at least 2 pastors have the idea that we should only ask for 30 cents per member this year; then increase it to 35 cents per capita next year; and, finally, to 40 cents per capita in 1920. I do not know whether this "leaven" is working in any other minds or not. I do not believe even these two pastors will think so after they understand. But, as Financial Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, as well as a member of the "Four-Year Program Committee" I wish to say frankly that my understanding has been and is, that no church shall be considered as having reached "Goal 11" in any year until its annual offering for missions shall have reached the sum of 40 cents per capita. If the goal for foreign missions is to be limited to 30 cents per member this year by any action of those back of this Four-Year Program, then so far as the Foreign Missionary Society is concerned, the Program is a hindrance rather than a help. You can not figure on the basis of an increase of 5 cents per member over the offering of last year. REMEMBER, THAT WE HAVE PRACTICALLY DOUBLED OUR MISSIONARY FORCES BY TAKING OVER THE AFRICAN WORK AT THE LAST CONFERENCE. And this year, all given to either work will pass through our treasury, and count toward the Goal. It is absolutely necessary that our offerings for foreign missions given between September 1, 1917 and September 1, 1918 shall reach very close to our goal of $10,000. And no congregation will have borne its proportion of the burden that falls below the mark—40 cents per capita.. And I for one, stand utterly opposed to any program that shall give a star to any church whose members fail to give so much as four-fiifths of one copper cent in a whole week for foreign missions—unalterably opposed. If they get a star in their crown for doing less than that, it will not be by unanimous consent of the Committee. Moreover I believe 90% of the pastors themselves will agree with me. I should hope they will, any way, when once they understand the situation. We are contemplating sending another man and wife, as we should, as an addition to the Gribble party. Doubtless another missionary will be added this year to the South American forces. The work must go forward. I have always believed that $10,000 for foreign missions was away below the mark we should set for 1920; but I was content to leave it at that. I shall not be content, however, if that is made an excuse for giving less in 1918 or 1919. "The night is coming when no man can work." "The Master's business requireth haste." God help us to reach every one of the sixteen goals NOW, in 1918, if possible.

Once Again——

some have written me, asking whether money given for the Gribbles when they were in the field, and to Brother Yoder when he was in the field, counts on this goal. Yes, if the money was given between September 1, 1917 and September 1, 1918, it will count—provided it passes through the treasury of the Brethren Foreign Missionary Society. Brother Gribble and Brother Yoder turned over their offerings received since September 1, 1917 to us, and therefore they count. See the January issue of "The Brethren Missionary for their reports. We are keeping a careful record of all receipts. We expect to notify each pastor as soon as his congregation has "gone over the top." Now, then, all together, "GO!!"

Missions and World Peace

BY C. F. YODER

If there is one thing for which the world prays at this time more than any other I suppose it is peace. From the crater of battle, from the wards of the hospitals, from the lonely firesides where father or brother or both are missing, from the starving and the bleeding millions from the whole agonizing world goes up the prayer for peace.

Why does not God answer it? Does he not hear? Can he not heed? So it must have seemed to the suffering Israelites in Egypt, but in due time God said to Moses: "I have seen the affliction of my people and have heard their cry and have sent thee to deliver them." So now he also hears and sees and has sent deliverance. I do not mean the United States with its wealth and power, although that has its place in the providence of God.

War is but the thunder and lightning of the storm; the causes of it lie among the unseen forces, heat, electricity and gravitation, that is to say hate, selfishness and competition. And peace, permanent peace, can only come when the moral atmosphere of the world is cleared in such a way that storm conditions may not again arise. Only the power of God can do that. And "I am not ashamed of the gospel for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

The peace of the wrold is thus intimately bound up with the question of missions and the work of evangelizing the world is the one work that will bring the day of universal and permanent peace. Why?

1. Because God rules and his word declares that wars are determined until the end of the age and that end shall not come until the gospel of the kingdom has been preached to all nations as a witness unto them. Matt. 24:14. The one essential preliminary then, to the end of this age of war and the beginning of the age of peace is the evangelization of the world.

What does that mean to you when deciding among the many calls for help?

2. Because the evangelization of the world is the only solution for its problems. The nations are seeking political freedom which is worth nothing so long as they are in bondage to sin. The Jews boasted that they were not in bondage but Jesus said, "If the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." John 8:36. Suppose the Kaiser be dethroned, if Christ be not enthroned another Kaiser will arise. Suppose all the savage tribes should be subdued; unless they be subdued by Christ they will remain in their sins a menace to the world as much as before. Suppose the commerce of the world be guarded by a treaty of peace; unless it be guarded by the Prince of Peace the new treaty will be as much a scrap of paper as the old. There is not one problem before the nations that can be permanently settled without the evangelization of the world.

What does that mean for you when doing your bit for the peace of the world?

3. Because the evangelization of the world is the only means of meeting its needs. Jesus saw these needs as clearly as any one and he sympathized as deeply, but to meet them he said, "Pray." Pray for what? "That the Lord of the harvest may send forth laborers into his harvest." Matt. 9:37, 38. Suppose the wealth of the world be distributed and all poverty abolished; if selfishness be not also abolished poverty will return as the unclean spirit to its house. Suppose hospitals be multiplied until none need suffer from lack of attention; death will enter all of them until the gospel be preached and the end come and the last great enemy be destroyed (1 Cor. 15:26). The world has sought to drown its sorrow in the deadly cup, the seductive drugs and the debasing dance, but these are only the siren's song which beguiles them on to death. Christ and Christ alone can comfort the sin-sick, death- stricken world.

What then will you do to give the message to those who will die without it unless you use the money God has given you in the way he has commanded? Matt. 28:19.

4. Because the evangelization of the world is the only means of ridding it of evil. While evil remains the dove of peace must be on the wing. Suppose we kill all the evil men—of the enemy—that we can and so make peace; will not other evil men bring on another war? But there is a slaying that is to take place that shall avail. When the seer of Patmos saw the angel fly with the everlasting gospel to preach the other angel prepared to sound the message, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen." (Rev. 14:6, 7.) When the Lord slays it is by the sword that proceededth out of his mouth—the sword of the spirit which is the word of God. The Lord is coming but he tarries until Ps. 110:1 be fulfilled. The tares must be rooted out at the end of the age and the end awaits the fulfilment of the program of the church. Acts 15:14-17. What will you do to hasten the fulfilment of this program?

5. Because the evangelization of the world is essential to world unity. There is to be a world kingdom but it will not be that of the Kaiser. In the dispensation of the fulness of times he will gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth. Eph. 1:10. That gathering together is not a federation of the present world order but the formation of a new order through the gospel of Christ. The golden image will be smitten in its feet by the stone cut out without hands and the kingdom of God will then fill the whole earth. "And the nations of them that are saved (not the unsaved) shall walk in the light of it." Rev. 21:24. The hope of the world lies not in the democracy of the Allies but in the imperialism of Christ. The war must be won, yes, for they that take the sword must perish by the sword," but the world must also be won—by the army of missionaries with the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. It is the only path to peace. Have you enlisted? Are you loyal? How many of the liberty bonds of the kingdom will you take in this Easter drive?

Preparation for the Ministry

BY A BRETHREN SISTER

I heartily endorse Brother Miller's article in Evangelist of January 2, "The Making of a Brethren Preacher."

We all know that the Christian ministry exists by divine appointment and we read of the qualifications of the ministry, but I fear we do not always "test" the man who is entering upon the work of the ministry as we should.

He comes to us with what he thinks is a call to preach Christ, when it often may be a call to pick coal or to plow corn and he proves a failure to others, not to himself of course.

I surely agree that he should be tested as to his faith and knowledge of God's word; and especially should the Brethren church who believe in the Whole Gospel be very careful, not only in testing those who come into the ministry, but should very carefully test ministers coming from other churches or denominations, as to their knowledge of God's Word. They should needs bring with them credentials from their conference showing that they were ministers in that church and not only exhorters.

Also they should have certificates or diplomas of graduation from some Bible school or college, for I think it is possible that men who were only exhorters, and whose names never appeared on a record in a ministerial conference, have come to the Brethren church as ministers.

Therefore the Brethren church should be sure that such a one can show credentials from his former church before receiving him into the church as a minister.

Such mistakes may have been made and may be the reason for having quack preachers, who can tell stories much easier than preach God's Word.

True, we can not expect them to give what they have not got, but the Brethren church ought not have a man in the ministry who has not the Word of God laid up in his heart, and who has not some degree of scholarship.

I do not believe that God calls a man to preach his gospel without giving him a talent, then a desire and opportunity to educate himself, so that he may righly divide his word; and yet there are men holding down pulpits with not even a high school education, whose congregations must listen to them spiel off something with nothing in it. Now if a medical man would do so, no one would enter his office, much less take his medicine; in fact, the medical staff would not allow him to even make a pill. Oh, you say, doctors must know how to make people well in body; true—but how about their diseased souls? God surely wants them healed and no quack preacher can break God's precious word to a sin sick people and lead them to repentance.

I'm so glad for the statement "Men of fitness alone are called." This, then is my point, that a man in the pulpit, who can not well study God's Word, who is not "apt to teach," who is not able (because of lack of knowledge and education) to rightly divide God's word, who is jealous of other's knowledge, surely is not called of God, he simply wanted a job and preaching looked big to him so he mistook plow corn for preach Christ.

Yes, now is the time the church needs a trained, efficient and educated ministry. Now is the time when all quack preachers should step down and plow corn, or take years of educational study and training in our own Ashland College.

I believe God will hold the man responsible for many souls who tries to proclaim his word when he is unfit, unqualified; and yet some such like to be called Reverend or Doctor while having no degree of scholarship. Surely this must please the devil.

Oh, that more men who are called might prepare for a more efficient ministry, a ministry that would lead this old sin sick world out of darkness into spiritual light. Young men, your privilege and possibilities lie in Ashland College. If you are called to be a Brethren minister, patronize the Brethren College for your education; there you will get as good and I trust better than anywhere else. Would that all of our young men and women could have access to our own college and prepare themselves for the different church work awaiting to be done.

May God speed the day when Brethren parents will see the need of sending their children to their own college. May God bless the ministry of the Brethren church.

Prayer and the War

BY ONE DEEPLY CONCERNED

Why do not we as American people have a prayer administration? We have food administration, fuel administration. Why not prayer also?

Who can help us but God? We do not pray enough as a people, much less at a time when our nation and our boys are in such peril.

We should not pray for our boys to come back home safe and keep saying to ourselves and those around us, "I don't expect to ever see him again." Where is our faith. We need faith more at the present time than ever before.

Are we praying for freedom and Christianity for all nations, and all people of all nations? Would you be surprised to read in the paper tomorrow that your prayer had been answered?

Where is our faith?

A great many people believe this war is between the Christ and anti-Christ people of this world. Remember, if God be for us who can be against us? Rom. 8:31. Also remember, every knee shall bow to him.

We have wheatless and meatless days, why can not we have a prayer day. Is not help from above as necessary as food? We know it is.

This should be our prayer and the prayer of every American at all times during this war.

"God save our splendid men
Send them safe home again—
God save our men;
Make them victorious,
Faithful and chivalrous;
They are so dear to us—
God save our men.

Our father's God, to thee
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing;
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light,
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King!

The Soldier Boys "Hit the Trail"

The soldier boy is religious, he studies the Bible closely and he is interested in his own spiritual welfare and that of his fellows.

These facts are pointed out by secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. in a report just issued on the religious work of the Red Triangle among the 300,000 enlisted soldiers and sailors of the central military department. In support of the statements, figures are given to show that a total of 41,732 men at Camp Sherman attended 202 religious or evangelistic services during January and that 6,836 others were enrolled in 199 Bible classes conducted under Y. M. C. A. auspices.

Asssited by religious workers and chaplains in the camps and soldiers from the ranks, the Y. M. C. A. secretaries have recently completed an evangelistic "drive" in which thousands of soldiers were induced to interest themselves more deeply in their own spiritual happiness and welfare and to take what are known as "forward step decisions." This move is now being followed up by the promotion of a still wider "Comrades-in-Service' 'organization, containing groups of soldiers who are banded together "to promote the worship and service of God, to cultivate clean speech, clean thoughts and clean living and to promote their own religious life."

It is considered a noteworthy fact that thousands of soldiers ask to be given Pocket Testaments. The Y. M. C. A. it is announced has just ordered another 500,000 Pocket Testaments for use in this country so that every soldier who desires a copy of the gospels may have one. The new order brings the number of Bibles printed for free distributin by the Y. M. C. A. alone to 1,700,000

Religion has been made attractive in the camps because of the patriotic appeal which it has, says the report. Thousands upon thousands of enlisted men in the central department have been drawn to evangelistic and other religious services and meetings who never attended church. An inspection of any of the big cantonments shows that the soldier now regards religion as a necessary part of his daily life. General Pershing likewise regards it as vital in his recent dequest for more army chaplains with the troops in France:

"You're pretty regular at Sunday morning meetings," said a Y. M. C. A. secretary to a private recently in one of the big cantonments.

"Say, why not?" answered the soldier. "I never heard such good preaching in my life before."

Sunday evenings are given up to a more informal service in charge of some secretary. There is a lot of hearty singing. A man in khaki sits at the piano, another leads the singing, another offers a prayer and then there comes a short talk. That talk is often a masterpiece; it has "punch" in it, and it invariably declares that the one thing a good soldier needs in that great fight for purity and truth is Jesus Christ.

One may frequently see men standing in line, like patrons of a popular movie before the ticket window, waiting their turn for a quiet word with one of the secretaries. Out comes a fountain pen and down goes his name. "Say, have you got a pocket testament. Well, then, take this one. Here, put your name in it. No, it does not cost anything except five minutes a day reading in it." The record of that card goes to that man's home and to the nearest representative of the church that he prefers, and if he moves to another camp, the card follows him.

In many huts every evening at 9 o'clock the whistle blows and the men, knowing what that means, quiet down and crowd around the fireplace. On the mantle are some pictures that suggest home, and before the glowing fireplace stands a big husky uniformed secretary. It is family prayers; a few verses, prayer from a soldier, then a hearty "good night, everybody."

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

Studying Mark

BY SAMUEL KIEHL

I was very favorably impressed with Sister Detwiler's "Suggestions for Studying Mark," by paragraph, in Evangelist Number 2 current issue. Any scholar who will adopt that plan (in detail) and continue doing so from the first paragraph in chapter one to the last in chapter sixteen, will surely find "the pearl of great price."

By faithfully and prayerfully pursuing such a course of scriptnre study, all the straw and chaff which might otherwise be brought in, will be eliminated and the pure wheat only will be garnered in the heart for future life and strength in the service of "him who loved us and gave himself for us."

By being so richly rewarded in the study of Mark, the burning desire for pursuing the same course in Matthew, Luke and John, etc., can best be given in the language of the Psalmist; "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Psalm 42:1.

May the word of Christ dwell in us richly in all wisdom. (Collossians 3:16.)

The Pacifist and the War

Who is the pacifist? There are many kinds, especially if we count all who oppose war. There are Socialists and Anarchists, who oppose war for political and philosophical reasons. Then there is a body of Pro-Germans, who oppose war because they are not willing to leave the country, and help their beloved Kaiser, and they do not want any opposition to him. Then there are many people who for years have read and thought about peace and arbitration, and their honest convictions and sentiments favor peace, even at the price of humiliation. Then there is the religious man, who is convinced that war is murder, and the taking of life is wrong, and for religious reasons is opposed to war in any form. These people believe there are better, truer, holier ways of settling disputes than war,—that war is not justifiable at all, even in defense of rights, dignity and honor.

We are in a great world war. What, now must be the attitude of a religious pacifist toward this war? This question is real, and it has concerned many good people who would rather die than deny their peace principles which, they believe, are absolutely Christian, and yet they are told they are, in spite of themselves, helping the war. It takes very little thought to see that we are all "helping the war," whether we like it or not. He who raises wheat, buys a postage stamp, a railroad ticket, pays his taxes, saves wheat does his duty, is helping the country, and is thus helping the war. If one should refuse to help his country, then he would, in spite of himself, be helping the enemy. In either case, we are helping the war, on one side or the other. Our deeds are not neutral neither can they be neutral. "He that is not with me is against me," is as true here as in religion. Whether I do anything, or whether I do nothing, either my country is strengthened or hindered, and thus I become a factor in the balance of power. What then, shall a pacifist do?

(1) He can control his motives. While one's deeds inevitably help or hinder the country, one can so live that he does not purposely do things that destroy life, but be a factor in the things that sustain life. To raise wheat and corn is to sustain life, and to conserve food is for the purpose of saving and not taking life. Jesus prayed not that the disciples would be taken out of the world, but that they would be kept from the evil (John 17). As long as we are in the world, we are related to the world, but we can consciously and purposely, abstain from wrong.

(2) The Christian pacifist deplores the fact that the world is at war, that nations have chosen this method to settle differences, and yet he can realize this fact: Nations declare war, and the individuals must do the fighting. He can do all in his power to save individuals from needless suffering, from needless temptations and sin. Religion deals with the individual, and through him with society. The Christian has an opportunity, and an obligation to do more than ever to save a foolish world,—a sick, suffering, lost world, whose lot is so deplorable through its folly. Hence the call to every true Christian to aid in the work of the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. These movements are the only avenues that enable us to help millions of the men, women and children who are in greatest need.

(3) There is untold suffering among the Armenians, Poles, and Belgians caused by the war, but not caused by the suffering ones, that has a double claim upon the pacifist. Just because the pacifist detests war on religious grounds, that religion demands of him whole-hearted sacrifice in life and money to relieve suffering on the part of these unfortunates. Their homelessness, hunger, anguish, orphaned condition, cry unto heaven for help and mercy. He who shows no mercy and charity to these, has no right to claim anything on religious grounds, for he has no religion worth anything.

(4) The Christian pacifist can pray that good may come out of this conflict. I do not believe that my boys should fight with each other, but if they are so foolish as to fight, I can still hope and pray that good may come out of it, rather than evil. It is not the true way of life, but while I recognize that fighting is the wrong way of life, there is nothing to hinder my praying that this foolish experience may make them want the true way of life. The pacifist is opposed to war as a method, to war as a theory of life. But there is no reason why he can not pray that even the wrath of men may bring them to the place where they will glorify God. The Christian pacifist can only pray: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." For the Christian does not know that any definite human program is right; he does know that God's will is right, and that his kingdom of love and justice and mercy is right. He can not take sides. He can only pray that the good and true and beautiful shall be achieved.

(5) The pacifist should read war news, and not selfishly harden his heart with the spirit of indifference. He must sympathize with suffering humanity, and keep his heart tender by suffering with those who suffer. He must sacrifice daily, else this becomes hypocrisy. He can not turn his back and leave the world to its foolishness and destruction. He must know its need ,love humanity, enter into the closest sympathy with bleeding humanity, but always with the Christian motive to save. He can not hate, or rejoice in calamities. He must pray for all men,—for the enemy as well as the allies,—and fully enter into the sufferings of his Lord. He must bear on his heart the suffering, sinful world and not grow indifferent.

(6) The pacifist must do more. He must lay plans for a new world. He must educate men and women as missionaries, with the true Christian message, to go forth after the war and give to the world a fit democracy. The pacifist should have a larger program of work, and spend every moment in getting ready for peace. There can be no durable peace that is not founded on Jesus Christ. The bigness of this crisis shows the need of a big program for constructive work in Christian education and evangelization.

The pacifists must give their sons and daughters more freely for the work of missions, than others have given theirs for the trenches. Let the pacifist now stand forth and carry out this program or hence, forever hold his peace.—D .W. K., in the Gospel Messenger.

The Sunday School

Announcement for Second Quarter, 1918

That the Improved International Uniform Lessons introduced at the beginning of the year 1918 have not been disappointing is evident from the reports that have gone out from the schools using these lessons. The expectations of the committee back of this movement for a better system of uniform lessons have been more than realized and the prospect for their use in yet larger measure is decidedly optimistic.

The special topics selected for the different groups and grades, the Bible material furnished, and the adaptation of this material to the needs of the ages for which it is prepared have produced results which easily justify the faith of the promoters of these lessons. It its not too much to say that the Improved Uniform Lessons are the finest offering ever made to the Sunday school world. The increased output of literature by the different denominations is evidence of this fact.

Note that in these lessons the general Bible passage and theme are the basis for appropriate topics and scripture selections for each of the four groups, or class divisions, and for the Primary and Junior groups each a separate Memory Verse.

FOR THE DIFFERENT GROUPS

For the Primary Pupils (Ages 6 to 8 years)

The little children of Primary age are provided with a separate lesson topic adapted to their age, based on and selected from the long Bible passage for the whole school; a memory verse all their own, and selected Scripture references—in response to the study requirements of the children of Primary age.

For the Junior Pupils (Ages 9 to 11 or 12)

The Junior boys and girls are a problem worthy all the effort of any earnest, consecrated teacher. They need a careful, definite influence to guide them to a proper estimate of the things that are worth while to the attainment of a useful life. The topic assigned to this group in every instance recognizes the necessity of making an appeal to the Junior mind. Their topic, memory verse, and Bible material are selected with the purpose of giving the teacher an opportunity impossible under the former system.

For the Intermediate-Senior Pupils (Ages 12 or 13 to 17)

Intermediate-Senior pupils have problems different from those of pupils of other ages; their experiences are different; their viewpoints and their interpretations of things and events are different; their thought-life is different. The Intermediate-Senior Lesson topic and Bible material give the teacher opportunity to lead them into realizing in their lives the highest and holiest ambitions conceived in their imaginative minds during this period of mental development and expanson.

For Young People and Adults (Ages 18 and over)

Young People and Adults have entered upon the larger activities of life, with different study requirements. The Improved Lessons furnish them with special and appropriate lesson topic and Scripture studies, which are, like the others, based on the main Bible passage for the whole school.

FOR TEACHERS OF ALL GRADES

The pastor, the superintendent, other officers of the school, and EVERY teacher will find THE BRETHREN TEACHER for 1918 unique. You are never at a loss to know WHERE to look for what you want, no matter in what grade you are teaching. Order a copy for every teacher and officer in your school, including one for the pastor.

THE ANGELUS

Is your school a subscriber to The ANGELUS? We ought to add from 500 to 1,000 to our subscription list and if schools not now using this paper will give us their order it will increase our circulation by at least 1,500 or 2,000. Remember THE ANGELUS prints only what is SAFE for young people to read. See to it that your order for supplies includes a generous one for THE ANGELUS.

The new serial story begins with the first week in March and you should not miss a single chapter of this splendidly written story.

PRIMARY BIBLE STORIES

Have you seen this beautiful and specially prepared LESSON HELP for the children? You can not help but like it, and what is more and better, the children like it and want it. The lesson passage is printed in larger type, the lesson story and other material is printed in large twelve point type and attractively adapted to the needs of children—pictures and interesting little stories and verses accompany the lesson story. In every way you will find PRIMARY BIBLE STORIES made just right. Let your children in the Primary Department and their teacher have a chance with it.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SECOND QUARTER

For the Teacher

The BRETHREN TEACHER,—containing departments for teachers of all grades from the Primary up,—Junior, Intermediate, Young People and Adults.

For Young People and Adults

For Intermediate Pupils

The Illustrated Intermediate Quarterly. (This publcation is prepared especially for pupils ages 12 or 13 to 17. Has a special department for younger Intermediates.)

For Junior Pupils

The Illustrated Junior Quarterly. (Prepared especially for boys and girls ages 9 to 11 or 12. Better than ever.)

For Primary Pupils

Primary Bible Stories. (A four-page, illustrated paper for children 6 to 8. Contains the lesson passage, lesson pictures, outline pictures for coloring, hand work, little messages for little messengers, etc.)

Weekly Paper

The Angelus. A paper for young people, but equally enjoyed by older people. See description elsewhere.

Sunday School Activities Impress Japanese Baron

Quite recently the Bushwick Avenue Methodist Episcopal Sunday school of Brooklyn, of which Mr. Frank L. Brown is superintendent, had as a visitor, a distinguished Japanese, Baron Megata, Chairman of the Japanese Finance Commisssion which lately visited America, and a member of the House of Peers. The various departments of the school were decorated with the national colors. In the Junior Department, as the Baron entered, 400 young people arose and saluted the flag in a thrilling way. It was the first time the Baron had heard the salute and he asked for a copy of it. Later it was repeated by the Senior Department in the opening exercises. The reading of Lincoln's Gettysburg address by that department deeply impressed him and he asked for a copy of the program. The Superintendent read letters from some of nearly 100 boys of the Senior Department who had enlisted. A large tin box was shown as one of over 100 given to the school by one of the members to be filled with goodies and sent to the boys of the school in the various camps with a letter from the superintendent and special greetings from the department. The whole thing so gripped the visitor who was for the first time attending a Christian Sunday school that he cabled his impressions the next day through the Japaneses Associated Press to Japan, and the news spread throughout the Empire. The fact that the Sunday schools of America, with 20,000,000 members stood so strongly by the government in a spirit of loyalty, gave the Sunday school a new rating in the mind of the Baron and helped the Sunday school as an institution to have a higher rating in Japan through his message to his native country.

Many Christian Japanese pass through New York City. While there they are apt to pay a visit to the World's Sunday School Association in the Metropolitan Tower. This Association has been directing the organized Sunday school life in Japan for eleven years and maintains a Sunday school field secretary, H. E. Coleman, in Tokyo, and also a Japanese secretary, Rev. H. Kawasumi. At the office of the World's Association there is a guest book which visitors of note are invited to sign. Last month it so happened that four who signed in succession were Japanese. Two of them were a part of the deuptation from the Y. M. C. A. and Mr. K. Yamamoto, treasurer of the Japanese Sunday School Association. Another was Mr. Yoze Nomura, a leading merchant of Yokohama and counselor of the Sunday school party that visited Japan from the United States in 1913. The fourth was Mr. Michio Kozaki, a student in Columbia University and son of one of the most successmul Japanese pastors in Tokyo. Then just three lines further down that same page are the names of two other students, Mr. Taku Matsumoto, Kagoshima, a student in the University of Pensylvania, and Mr. Seishu Kawashiri,, Nagasaki, and now in Drew Theological Seminary. With these two students was their beloved missionary pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. F. N. Scott, on furlough from Nagasaki.

The World's Sunday School Association at Buffalo

From June 20-26 the quadrennial convention of the International Sunday School Association will be held at Buffalo. At that time the the World's Sunday School Association, which is vitally related to the International Association, will have a special exhibit in one of the large rooms in the great convention building on Elmwood Avenue. Information pertaining to Sunday school progress and method in many lands will be shown and steriopticon lectures will be given which will vividly present the work that the World's Association is accomplishing. The program on Sunday evening will be a presentation of the work of the World's Association in all lands and on Saturday night there will be another of the famous reunions of delegates who have attended any of the conventions of the World's Association. This will be held at the Statler Hotel.

REVIEW OF

The Ohio Conference meets at Fremont, April 16, 17, 18. Program next week.

NOTICE TO ALL CONTRIBUTORS. The increased circulation of the Evangelist makes it impossible to longer get the paper in the mails on the day formerly designated as mailing day unless we go to press with the paper earlier in the week. So, beginning with this number we close our columns to contributions on Saturday morning. Hereafter any report from a church or departmental secretary or campaign director to be published in the next week's Evangelist must reach us not later than Saturday morning. Special Delivery letters received on Sunday morning will be too late. For the sake of the many subscribers of the paper who want their Evangelist to reach them on a regular day the DOOR WILL BE SHUT. Again we say TAKE NOTICE.

We are glad to be able to add the name of the First Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania to our Evangelist Honor Roll this week. More lengthy comment has been made upon this addition in another column, but we wish to state here that the way the pastors are taking hold of this proposition is very encouraging.

Martin Shively, secretary of the Brethren National Ministerial Association, makes a very important announcement in another column this week. The pastors who are among those delinquent in this matter should make all haste to meet the requirements of the Association. This association has proved a mighty help in time of distress in the experience of many a Brethren minister's family and all its members should guard its record with jealous care.

E. M. Riddle is making an earnest effort to keep the work of the Brethren church at Linwood, Maryland, up to a high standard of efficiency and accomplishment, and we gather from his report that he is very largely succeeding. The work among the young people is especially encouraging with its three departments active in all good things. Brother Riddle has had the experience that has been common to all church workers east of the Rocky Mountains this past winter, but in spite of the great handicap has pressed on toward victory. The congregation at Linwood very generously remembered their pastor and family at Christmas time.

A letter from Brother Atkinson, one of our missionaries in South America, tells us of the green fields and the growing corn of that country in the month of January which seems strange to us who have just passed through such a rigorous winter. But it is not of the future harvest of the grain fields that Brother Atkinson writes so much as the future harvest of souls that it seems possible to gather from the Lord's harvest fields. During the last six months twelve young men and women have accepted Christ as a personal Savior in the work of the mission in Cabrera and the future outlook is good.

Freeman Ankrum has found a field where all the energies of youth may be brought into use in his new charge at Garwin, Iowa. Those familiar with the situation know this is a strictly rural congregation, but that it is a community center and a mighty factor in the life of the whole neighborhood, and the members of this church are endeavoring to carry their share of the load of the Four-Year Program and are especially interested in the missionary work of the church.

J. F. Watson has waited six months since entering upon the work as pastor of the Somerset Street Brethren church, Johnstown, before making a report. While we are always anxious to have good reports from the churches given more frequently than once in six months, yet it is not a bad fault to wait until one is sure he understands the things he writes about before he makes a report from a new field. One of the most commendable features of Brother Watson's report is the good word he expresses of his predecessor. This always speaks well for the future of a new pastor. It is needless to say the work under the leadership of Brother Watson is going forward as it has gone forward for many years, and Johnstown has already taken great strides toward the accomplishment of the Four-Year Program of the church.

Few pastors are able to make any more interesting reports of the work of their congregations than is Brother Shively of Masontown, Pennsylvania. Of course Brother Shively has an exceptionally good people to work with, but it has always been characteristic of his work to be able to make good reporth whether he has labored in the east or upon the Pacific coast. We seriously doubt if there is another Sunday school in the entire Brethren church that will equal the Masontown Sunday school in its per member offerings for the year. And this Sunday school gives for others as well as for self. Brother Shively has received a unanimous call to remain as pastor at Masontown for another year.

I. D. Bowman is still busy at the old stand where he has preached the gospel for sixteen years, namely the Whole Gospel Mission, Phildelphia. Just recently he baptized a brother for whom the church had labored and prayed for fifteen years. "Ye shall reap, if ye faint not." Brother Bowman is anticipating a good revival meeting when E. L. Miller of Uniontown comes to help in April. Miller and Bowman should make a team that would be mighty hard for Satan to resist.

The financial report from Brother Bowman shows that the offering for the General Missionary Board is slowly mounting toward the goal set for the year, but a goodly number of "missing churches" will have to be heard from yet if the full amount is to be secured before the meeting of the Winona Conference.

All things considred, one of the most successful revival meetings of the season was that at Middlbranch, Ohio, during three weeks in February conducted by Evangelist Thomas and the pastor, Edwin Boardman, Jr. Almost fifty men ,women and children made the good confession. Most of the number have already been baptized and received into the church. A few of the number will unite with other churches. Many heads of families are among the number received into the church. This should prove of lasting benefit to the Middlebranch church which was really in need of a stirring revival. Splendid people live in and around Middlebranch, and the Brethren church being the only one in the village owes the community practical and helpful service.

The Ashland College Notes reveal the fact that the students are just now putting forth their best endeavors to make up for time lost because of the scarcity of fuel in the winter and their athletic and literary endeavors are participated in with unusual zeal and animation.

A committee from the Flora, Indiana church has asked us to announce that their pastor will sever his partoral relations with them on October first and that other pastors who may be contemplating a change of location by that time are requested to write to G. S. Leslie, Flora, Indiana. Brother Lytle, who has served this church so successfully for a goodly number of years has an announcement in this issue of the Evangelist that should interest all the isolated members of the Flora church to whom the Brethren Evangelist is being sent by the budget system as a part of the definite plans and work of the church.

Order a Brethren Annual and Report of the last Winona Conference, if you have not already done so. They are twenty-five cents each, post paid. We still have a few hundred on hand that should be distributed among the churches.

Another Victory

Every time a Brethren church is added to the Evangelist Honor Roll it means another victory for a worthy cause, for it means another church has "gone over the top" in an effort to reach a goal in the great Four-Year Program of the church. It means that another pastor has realized that one of the best and surest ways to help his church along toward the achievement of all the goals from the deepening of the spiritual life of the membership on through the list to the full attendance at the Winona Conference in 1920 is to get the whole membership acquainted with the work of the whole church, through all its departments by means of the Brethren Evangelist. The Evangelist is the one publication of the church that represents the church's every interest more than any other paper and in its columns are to be found news and reports that are not to be had in any other.

Some time ago we had a letter from a brother who said he wanted the Evangelist if it represented the work of the entire brotherhood and gave out the news from all the churches even down to the last congregation. Such a statement might be interpreted to mean that the news and reports from some congregations are withheld from the brotherhood by denying them place in the columns of the paper; but this is not the case as we welcome the news and reports from the little church in the mountains or out upon the prairies just as much as from the big church in the city and we recognize that when all conditions and circumstances are considered the victories of the small church often stand on a par with those of the large church. But the victory of which we write at this time is a victory won by one of the oldest and largest churches in the whole brotherhood, namely, Johnstown, Pennsylvania. This was a brilliant victory because of the way the work was accomplished. Johnstown wanted on the Evangelist Honor Roll and decided to win the place, not by the quicketst method, that of simply paying for the paper for every active Brethren family belonging to the church from the church budget, but by the slower, yet in this case, equally effective method of an every member canvass. A business man who knows how to conduct his own business and who knows how to apply the principles of the business world to the business of the King was placed at the head of this matter, and Harry Bole, aided by thirty helpers who composed the team for the canvass, led the First Brethren church to victory by sending in to the Publishing House a list of ONE HUNDRED FORTY EIGHT subscriptions for the Evangelist, which the pastor states is more than 100% of the active families of the church. We feel sorry for Brother Goughnour and Waterloo that they must yield first place in the number of subscriptions from one congregation, but we are sure Brother Goughnour will rejoice that his toga must go to his native city, if it must go at all, and he will be one of the first of the Brethren to say: "Good for you! Go to it, Brethren."

But now we have the assurance that one of the smallest of the Brethren churches will win a place on the Honor Roll very shortly and we hope we are big enough to give it just as royal welcome as we have any of the larger churches. It is the PRINCIPLE of the thing and the VICTORY itself we honor.

Giving or Investing: Who Owns Ashland College?

From the report sent in to the Evangelist last week by our Endowment Campaign Secretary, Brother Beachler, we gather that some of our brethren are laboring under a misapprehension of their relation to Ashland College and also their relation to this endowment campaign.

First of all let it be known that there is not a PRIVATELY OWNED square foot of soil on the college campus nor, as Brother Beachler says, a brick in the building. Even the mortar that binds the bricks together is property of the poorest widow in the Brethren church in a legal sense just as much as it is the property of any man who may have thousands of dollars invested in it. It is one thing held in common by the entire church just as surely as anything was held in common by the first disciples of Christ in Jerusalem during the Pentecostal period of the church. Consequently no one who contributes to this endowment fund is helping to pay for something that belongs to some one else.

It has been the privilege of the writer to solicit mony for the building of churches on several occasions in the past and in his plans for the carrying on of such a canvass he long ago came to this conclusion, that it is not giving away of any money but simply the investing of it when a member of a church contributes any sum to a church or to any fund that is held in common by the church. So we have said to the people whom we have solicited, "Now please remember we are not asking you to give anything AWAY, we are only asking you to invest it in this cause we are representing and so long as you remain a member of this church the property secured by your investment will remain yours just as much as the money is yours before the investment is made. The church is yours as much as anybody's and so you are not giving one cent AWAY." I believe this to be a true statement of the case, and in the light of this view of it any brother who wishes to invest FIVE dollars or FIVE THOUSAND dollars in this endowment for Ashland College should feel that the money is his after the investment has been made just as surely as it was before he made the investment. Only at his death does he lose his property rights in the college and even then these rights remain in the persons of the membership of the Brethren church and the investment he made in his lifetime will continue to earn dividends for the Lord's work after the investor has gone to the home prepared for him in the heavens.

To what more glorious use can any one of our brethren with means put a goodly amount of the money which a liberal God has seen fit to bestow upon him and over which he has been made steward for a lifetime. In such a manner it may be said of some of our brethren: "They do rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Working for God! What a wonderful privilege! Especially is it a privilege to know that the hard labor by which one has accumulated some of this world's goods in a lifetime may be rewarded even after one has laid down this life, after mortality has been clothed with immortality, may be rewarded with the good that may come to young lives blessed and the church built up through the influence of Ashland College which has been made possible because some of God's children have invested for him.

When Progressives are Conservative

It would be almost too much to expect the Four-Year Program of the church to receive the unanimous support of the membership of the church. A great many people have always lived out the principle: "Make haste slowly," and any effort to speed them up will meet with passive resistance if it is not directly opposed.

It is natural for us to criticize those who do not agree with us and as we criticize those of our number who do not become enthusiastic over our great Program so they criticize us for losing our heads over what they consider impractical dreaming. In all these things it behooves us to deal gently and patiently with those who have not yet caught the vision, and to pray that they may be led into the greater light.

One of our younger pastors who is a "bunch of nervous activity" writes us that he finds his efforts as one of the district goal directors greatly hindered by the lack of co-operation on the part of a few congregations that cling to the extreme ideas of congregationalism. Congregationalism is in itself all right, but ultra-congregationalism which forbids co-operation lest some of its individuality of action be abridged will not get a church very far along in accomplishing a modern definite program, for co-operation is the word that is almost synonymous-with success in these days. Our brother writes further that this lack of co-operation comes largely from those churches that may be dominated by a few of the older members of the inactive ministry whose conservative ideas block the wheels of progress as outlined in our definite program. The mind of youth changes easily and sometimes too frequently while the mind of age is more slow to take up new methods, sometimes too slow, but as we have already stated we must learn to deal gently and patiently with our older brethren. While they may not take up with these new things so readily when they do accept them as being practical they will become most powerful allies of the workers in the great cause of the Four-Year Program.

Last of the Old, First of the New

This is Saturday morning and we are just finishing the writing for this page while it is not yet daylight, and as we pause in the operation of the typewriter for a moment we can hear the clear song of Robin redbreast. It is the first we have heard of him this year and it is a warning that old things are passing away and that all things are becoming new. An exceedingly hard winter is becoming a thing of the past and we hope a summer of prosperity and goodness is coming. Old things must die that new life may begin and we sincerely pray that, as the old order of the world dies and the things of the flesh that are only vile decay, the birth of the new order may bring peace and joy and righteousness to the earth and to the family of man. This same principle holds true in the world of thought and as time works its changes in our minds and we realize that many of our old positions must be abandoned let us pray that the new thoughts and the new positions that become ours may be better and higher thoughts and positions than the ones we have given up for the sake of the advancement of the kingdom.

TRAGIC STORIES WITHOUT END

By Wm. T. Ellis

(Mr. William T. Ellis and Mr. Charles T. Beury, of Philadelphia, have just returned from the Russian Caucasus and Western Persia, where they went at their own charges to investigate and report upon the work of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief among the hundreds of thousands of homeless refugees in this area. The following is but a part of the report of Mr. Ellis as printed in the Sunday School Times.—Editor.)

The plan of orphan relief is simple. It is the rule of the Armenian Committee in Erivan to give no money to men or women, except the latter be seriously ill; work it does provide for a few adults by its wonderful industrial establishment. For one child out of a family if orphans, it provides a stipend of six roubles monthly, increased at the time of our visit to ten roubles, owing to the depreciation of the rouble, which is now worth less than ten cents.

Armenian Child

Each case is investigated by men trained in the mission schools of the American Board, some having been ministers or professors back in Armenia. This relief work, I found, will stand the acid test of the Associated Charities or of the Rockefeller Foundation; for there is system in it all, down to the minutest detail. Nobody need fear that Armenian relief funds are either wasted or given to the undeserving.

It was a motley crowd that awaited us in the village churchyard, and such a collection of rags as no professional stage manager ever devised. Of illness, especially of sore eyes, there was much. The men in their sheepskin vests and turbans and full-flowing trousers that once had been bright colored, stood to one side, or else helped the Armenian Committee workers, a deputation of them having put the plight of the villages as a whole up to Mr. Yarrow. Crops had failed, work was unobtainable, prices had risen and roubles had gone down. He could only express sympathy and commend them to God.

Then we sat down to hear "stories." There was no prearrangement about this. We simply took the boys and girls in line for relief, and then a few of the most needy women. In Erivan I was early overcome by the stupendous fact that I did not have to look for stories; literally every one of these Armenian survivors has a story, a tale of tragedy, any one of which would be worth a column if told to an American newspaper by the original narrator. Mr. Beury and I made notes until we were numb with the awfulness and immensity of it all. May I transcribe mere suggestions of a few of the narratives we heard, hot from the lips of the actors themselves?

This old man, bent nearly double, is ninety years of age. His crippled condition is due to his having been shot in the back at his home near Van. Seven members of his family were killed, but his wife escaped, only to die here.

Out of a household of thirty-seven, this little girl of thirteen years, and six others, escaped alive, only one of the survivors being a man, who is not now in the village.

Here is an interesting family of five children, boy twins of twelve, with two younger brothers and one sister. Their father was killed at Sassoun. For an entire year these little ones lived in the mountains, subsisting on berries and roots.

How trivial besides theirs seems the nursery tale of the "Babes in the Wood"! When Russia captured the city of Mush they en- and so made their way, within the Russian lines to this distant spot.

Of a family of seven, one old woman and a young boy alone escaped, wounded, and lived for seve nmonths whit friendly Kurds —for some Kurds and Turks did protect Christians in the days of the great tribulation.

This youngster of fourteen put forth a badly scarred hand. He had been shot by the Kurds. After seeing his father and mother killed he had been carried from Van to Bitlis, a prisoner; but cleverly escaped to the Armenian Volunteers. He finds that two of his brothers and two of his sisters also have been saved. Yes, there are marvelous tales of reunions, as well as of separations, to be heard here.

A little woman of eight years from Bitlis draws near, holding the hand of a pathetic babe, who had been orphaned by the Kurds. The narrator is the only member left of a family of eight. Her father was killed by the Turks, and her mother dies in bitter captivity. Her older sister, too, was carried off by the Moslems. Now the brave lassie is trying to care for the wee cousin, who is her only living kin.

At first glance the next in line is noticeable chiefly for the twenty-seven patches which a hasty calculation reveals above the whic ha hasty calculation reveals above the waist line. Thus do we look upon the outward aspect of life, knowing naught of the deeps beneath. For this woman, who, like all others, is past tears, saw her husband carried off, and her four children killed before her eyes, despite her frantic efforts to save them by flinging herself upon their bodies. She herself was stripped naked, made a slave, and kept in hunger and hardship amid the Kurds. The Russians rescued her.

Out of a total of fifty persons in the next household—and in the East, be it remembered, the patriarchal system of three generations dwelling beneath the same roof obtains to this day—there were four survivors this boy of eight, his sister of five, his aunt and his cousin. The little children were witnesses to the foul murder of their parents.

As if in competition of misery the tale that followed, told by four Bitlis women, was of a household of thirty-eight, out of which eleven survived, all the men having been killed. Nakedness, chains, blows and worse had befallen these four women during three months among the Kurdish mountaineers, part of whose booty they had been. Russian troops freed them.

This woman from Mush saw a sight that would sear memory. For three days from a place of concealment, she watched the killing of the city's Armenian men. Then before her eyes the surviving women and children were herded into houses, kerosene poured upon them, and the torch applied.

If only her child could live!

Enough: If the reader wants any more stories of horror, let him go to any of the hundreds of Caucasus villages that hold Armenian survivors.

Crowds followed us to our carriage in the hope that something would be done to alleviate conditions at once. The cry was for work, work, work. Women even took hold of our arms and hands and clothes in entreaty.

Close to my side had been a woman of perhaps thirty years with a little girl four or five. She had been dignified and quiet, but resolutely importunate. When she saw that our carriage was really leaving, with nothing done for her child, a panic look came into her face, and her great dark eyes were flooded with tears, which streamed over her cheeks. She did not cry out, nor wail or scream, like most Oriental women: but she was after life for her little girl. So she picked up the child and tried to thrust her upon me. I was compelled to make personal provision for its needs.

Then I was stormed by others, but in vain; as we drove away, into a peace-imparting view of Ararat, it was not of the crowd I was thinking, but of the quiet, strong mother with the wonderful eyes, and of the little girl whom I had refused to accept as a gift. There are thousands such.

It is doubtful if ever there has been a great heart that has not known great troubles. Strong lives, like strong buildings, are reared upon deep foundations, and grief and struggle dig down to the underlying rock of faith and courage, before real grandeur and success arise.—Episcopal Recorder.

ELIZABETH AGED NINE

(A Juvenile Classic)

Out of the way in a corner
Of our dear old attic room,
Where bunches of herbs from the hillside
Shake ever a faint perfume,
An oaken chest is standing,
With hasp and padlock and key,
Strong as the hands that made it
On the other side of the sea.

When the winter days are dreary,
And we're out of heart with life,
Of its crowding cares are weary,
And sick of its restless strife,
We take a lesson in patience
From the attic corner dim,
Where the chest holds fast its treasure,
A warder dark and grim.

Robes of an antique fashion—
Linen and lace and silk—
That time has tinted with saffron,
Though once thew were white as milk;
Wonderful baby garments,
Broidered with loving care
By fingers that felt the pleasure
As they wrought the ruffles rare.

A sword with the red rust on it,
That flashed in the battle-tide,
When from Lexington to Concord
Sorely men's hearts were tried;
A plumed chapeau and a buckle,
And many a relic fine;
And all by itself the sampler,
Framed in by berry and vine.

Faded the square of canvas,
Dim is the silken thread;
But I think of the white hands dimpled,
And a childish, sunny head;
And here in cross and tent stitch,
In a wreath of berry and vine,
She worked it a hundred years ago,
"Elizabeth, aged nine."

In and out in the sunshine
The little needle flashed,
And out and in on the rainy day
When the sullen drops down splashed,
As close she sat by her mother—
The little Puritan maid—
And did her piece on the sampler
Each morn before she played.

You are safe in the crystal heavens,
"Elizabeth, aged nine,"
But before you went you had troubles
Sharper than any of mine.
The golden-brown hair with sorrow
Grew white as drifted snow,
And your tears fell here, slow-staining
This very plumed chateau.

When you put it away, its wearer
Would need it never more,
By a sword-thrust learning the secrēts
God keeps on yonder shore.
But you wore your grief like glory;
Not yours to yield supine,
Who wrought in your patient childhood,
"Elizabeth, aged nine."

Out of the way in a corner,
With hasp and padlock and key,
Stands the oaken chest of my fathers,
That came from over the sea.
The hillside herbs above it
Shed odors faint and fine,
And here on its lid is a garland
To "Elizabeth, aged nine."

For love is of the immortal,
And patience is sublime,
And trouble's a thing of every day,
That toucheth every time;
And childhood sweet and sunny,
Or womanly truth and grace,
In the dusk of the way, light torches,
And cheer earth's lowliest place.

Careless Kitty Caramel

Pretty little yellow Kitty Caramel was careless. Even her best friends could not deny it. She did not mean any harm; but she thought of so many interesting things to do, and just the very minute that she thought of any such thing she did it! That's the way she often fell into trouble.

Her mother, Tabitha Catchmequick, gave her a great deal of good advice. Tabitha Catchmequick was very wise. She had had experience, and she knew.

"Always look before you leap, my child," she said rather anxiously.

"Yes'm," politely responded Kitty Caramel.

But when she saw a butterfly alight on the piazza railing she leaped without looking beyond the railing. Over she went, and struck with a dreadful thump on the brick walk. It seemed to her she could never get her breath again.

"I'll be careful next time!" she gasped.

But the next time it was something different.

"Always chew your food well, my daughter," said Tabitha Catchmequick, oh, very earnestly.

"Yes'm," obediently answered Kitty Caramel.

But when she had a fine big bite of sweet potato in her mouth, and saw Puggy, the dog, coming, she did not stop to chew it at all. "He'll get it!" she said to herself; and she swalloyed it whole—or tried to. It stuck, and the poor kitkin choked until her little Mistress Dorothy's big brother Tom held her up by her tail and shook her until he "unchoked her," as Dorothy called the process. There may be better ways to unchoke a kitten, but that was the only way that big brother Tom knew. It was most unpleasant.

"I'll be careful next time!" she gurgled.

But the next time it was something still different—oh, very, very different. It happened in this way:

One morning, big brother Tom came rushing in from the post office and shouted that he must catch the next train or something awful would happen to his business.

"Pack my suit case while I telephone, will you, sister?" he called to Dorothy. "You know what to put in. I'll be gone over night."

So Dorothy very proudly and carefully packed her big brother's suit case. Kitty Caramel, also, was greatly interested, and seemed to want to help. Dorothy had just put in the last thing—Tom's buff bathrobe, —and had gone for a pink for his buttonhole, when he came flying up the stairs.

"All ready, sister?" he called.

"All ready!" answered Dorothy.

Tom clapped down the lid, strapped it, gave Dorothy a kiss, and one-tenth of a second to put the pink in his buttonhole, and was off. He barely caught the train, in the station at the head of the street. As he dropped into a seat the train moved out.

"Close shave!" he puffed.

"Meow!"

What was that—and where?

"Meowwww!!!" Then a faint scratching inside the suitcase!

In half a minute or less, Tom had it open. Out popped a very big-eyed Kitty Caramel, and lighten on Tom's hat. From there she jumped again, coming down neatly in the lap of a big, burly drummer, then slipping and scratching him. Her next leap took her to a stout lady's bonnet, and when she went, the bonnet went with her, away under the seats!

Poor big brother Tom! With such a red face, he followed, and finally he caught her. Her little heart was going pit-a-pat, as if it were trying, itself to get out; but finally Tom got her nerves partly settled, and she cuddled close to him on the seat.

The stout lady brought out a bottle of cream from her lunch box, and the big burly drummer offered the top of his silver drinking cup for a saucer. By the time Tom's station was reached, she was a perfectly calm kitten. From the station he telephoned to Dorothy, so she would not worry.

At the hotel where he stayed that night, the cook liked kittens. She took the best care of the small stowaway, and in the morning put up a nice luncheon for her to eat on the way home.

But how glad she was to be home again!

"Folks are extremely nice, mother," said she, in telling Tabitha Catchmequick all about it, "but I do not wish to take another journey, ever! I like home best. After this I am going to be a Very Careful Kitten."

"I am pleased to hear you say that, my daughter—very pleased!" purred Tabitha Catchmequick.

"Yes," went on Kitty Caramel, "when I was struggling to get out of that dreadful fuzzy bathrobe, which is just the color of me, I thought, 'Oh, how often my mother has told me never to go where I was not invited!'"

"I am sure you never will again, my dear," purred Tabitha Catchmequick.—Minnie Leona Upton, in Christian Register.

Mission Study

Five weeks till Easter Sunday at which time we lift our Foreign Mission offering of $10,000. Recently our people have been responding far better than in former years, but we are not yet doing what we should for missions.

Education will do much toward creating the proper sympathy for this great work. We have had Mission Study classes in past years. Doubtless many all over the brotherhood have studied "South American Neighbors," by Stunz; "Daybreak in the Dark Continent," by Naylor, and other helpful books. But the best education of all has been the meeting of our missionaries from South America and Africa during the past year.

Now as a cable reaches us to the effect that Yoders have arrived safely in the Argentine, and a letter appears in the Evangelist from Miss Myers enroute to Africa, we are enthused and determined as never before. At last we can consistently teach Matt. 28:19, "Go ye.... plus.... baptize."

But we must "keep the home fires burning." If our interest in mission is to continue, we must keep read up. Not a year should pass without some form of mission study, be it South America, Africa, the South (Kentucky being our field), and may I even have the audacity to add: The Immigrant.

Easter is too near to start and complete a course by that time, but why does our course have to be finished by Easter? So if you have not started a course in your society this year, kindly do so at once. The Missionary Committee in your society should recognize its duty in this respect and "get busy" at once.

To guide you in your selection, I am appending here the names of a few suggestive texts, one of which you may choose:

A Tenth-Legion Argument

A very interesting Tenth-Legion program, prepared by Miss Bertha Harding, Tenth Legion superintendent of the Indiana union, contains the following, which could be well used in any society that desired to emphasize and advocate the practice of tithing:

Our Lord's Teaching about Money, as summed up in 2 Cor. 8th and 9th chapters. (Outline suggested by Dr. Scofield.)

(a) Christian giving is voluntary, and a test of sincerity and love. (2 Cor. 8: 8-12; 9:1, 2,, 5, 7.)

(b) The privilege is universal, belonging, according to ability, to rich and poor. (2 Cor. 8:1-3, 12-15.)

(c) Giving is to be proportioned to income. (2 Cor. 8:12-14. The Old Testament proportion was the tithe.

(d) The rewards of Christian giving are: joy (2 Cor. 9:2); increased ability to give (2 Cor. 9:7-11); God and the gospel glorified (2 Cor. 9:13, 14).

Three Illustrations. (To be told simply and earnestly.)

1. "Rich but a Slave." (Mark 10:17-22.) Notice the words, "There CAME one RUNNING and KNEELED to him, and ASKED HIM." How many of us also have done all that? "And WENT AWAY." Are we, too, going away from him, keeping God's gold? Because we can not stay if we do not render to him what is his.
2. By Comparison. "She GAVE her ALL." (Mark 12:41-44.) "God estimates money gifts not by what we GIVE, but by what we KEEP—not by the amount of our contributions, but by their COST in self-denial." And Jesus still sits invisibly over against the treasury and beholds how the people cast "his riches" into the chest.
3. "More than Enough." (Exod. 36:3-7.) Once upon a time there was more than enough, "so the people were restrained from bringing"! Think what would happen if God's people gave to his work NOW in that way.

A Citizenship Program

The Quincy, Ill., union recently presented a unique program at one of the monthly meetings. It was entitled "A Legacy of $50,000," and was based on the supposition that such a legacy had been left to the union and was to be divided among the various societies for civic improvement. The society that presented the best argument received $20,000, the second award was $10,000,, and the remainder was divided equally among the other societies. The topics discussed were Law Enforcement, Juvenile Protection, Better Housing Conditions, Public Playgrounds, Improved Sanitary Conditions, and Banishment of the Cigarette. It was one of the most successful meetings of the union ever held.

News From the Field

Middlebranch, Ohio

"The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." This word of the Psalmist voices the thought of our heart today, for during the past three weeks we have seen the mighty power of God manifested to the saving of souls. When brother A. E. Thomas came with us on February 3 we believed that a dozen souls would be the extent of our ingathering, but not so Thomas. He had visions of 50 confessions. We hoped he was a prophet, but that was all we dared hope it seemed.

The opening sermon was on the morning of Sunday, February 3, and from that time until Monday night, February 25 things happened. Anyone who knows Thomas knows that he is filled with perpetual motion. Almost thought we'd have to get a new pulpit carpet after the services. The fine thing about him though, is that he gets results and if lots of "pep" and motion bring results, why "pep" and motio nare my choice. From the very start Brother Thomas apapealed strongly to the men of Middlebranch. They liked his friendly smile and his ability to meet them on their own ground from which vantage point he sought to lift them to higher planes of thought and conduct. This is the reason so many of them responded to the call of the Master when it was put to them.

What about the women do I hear you say? They nobly supported the meeting in every way. Several of them suspended many of their household duties and saw to it that the evangelist was taken to the various homes in the community. They presented a solid front against wrong and strove to get men and women to decide for the right and truth. Among them were some workers that "needeth not to be ashamed." Yes, the women did their part.

Then, too, we must mention the fact that the people of the community nobly supported every meeting. The weather was not always ideal during the three weeks. There were muddy roads sometimes, and stormy nights, but the people came consistently and gave Brother Thomas a good hearing. And he was worthy of a good hearing. His sermons were charged with truth, illuminated by splendid and telling illustrations, and delivered with a fine oratorical and dramatic effect. His use of great hymns at the close of some of his sermons was very effective and helped to press home the truth with peculiar power. He preached great sermons in Middlebranch, their greatness being in the fact that only two meetings went by after he began inviting souls to their Savior, in which someone didn't come out. It was glorious.

I know by this time you want to know the visible results of the meeting. They are three: (1) Forty-eight souls made the great confession; thirty-seven of whom have been baptized and received into the church. The other eleven comprise children whose parents would not permit them to be baptized, two who will unite with the United Brethren church and two others who reconfessed their allegiance to Jesus. Of the thirty-seven, twenty-one are heads of families or are above 21 years of age or more. The other sixteen were boys and girls between the ages of ten and nineteen. (2) The membership of the church was aroused to a new sense of its responsibility and given a new vision of church life and work as it ought to be. (3) The people of the community were brought to the place where they understand the Brethren plea better and take a more charitable view towards us.

The meeting gave us a new start and we feel better able to go forward and fill our part of the Four-Year Program. Pray for us in our added cares and responsibilities.

EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.

To the Members of the Ministerial Association

It will be remembered by most of you at least, that a few years ago, when the number of our members made it possible, and addition was made to the rules governing us, under the operation of which, any fourth death claim, arising during the conference year, should be paid out of the funds accumulating from the three earlier assessments. This announcement is to inform you that such call has been made, the death of brother L. C. Webb, having been its occasion. The claim has been paid, and no assessment is called in consequence.

Thirteen of our members are still in arrears for a total of 27 assessments. Are you among that number?

MARTIN SHIVELY, Sec.-Treas.

Cabrera, F. C. C. A., Argentina, S. A.

The Lord has blessed us continually, even to the end of the year. At Christmas the children of the Sunday school gave an excellent program, the young people's choir assisting with special songs. For the fiesta a fund of forty pesos was raised by the congregation. Each of the children received a bag of candy and cookies, a tin horn, a ball, or a pencil box was thrown in for good measure. There were enough sweets for the grown people, too. We had a tree. One chacareror who has his heart in the right place promised us a pine tree, if I would call for it. Early Christmas morning I was on the way, and found by the numerous deep water holes in the road, that the green alfalfa and corn fields had received their gift during the night.

The new year will undoubtedly yield a rich harvest of souls for Christ and the church. The Sunday school is going ahead nicely, with the aid of four teachers; the preaching service is better attended, and a goodly number of our young people are actively interested in the open air meetings, conducted Sunday evenings near the railroad station.

Our greatest need, after the prayers of the faithful, is a larger location. The four classes of the school can hardly form and recite in the present hall without confusing one another. Since June, 12 young men and women have accepted Christ by faith. Three have come to our home for further instruction in the Bible.

To all the Brethren in the homeland who make our work possible, we wish to express our sincere gratitude. All the credit is yours. Throughout this year of mutual toil and victory, may God grant to each of us a greater faith in his promise: "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

EDWARD G. ATKINSON.

Garwin, Iowa

We have not been waiting until we have accomplished something here before reporting. We have had so much cold weather that we have spent the time in firing the stoves.

We were glad that we were able to go over the top in the Thanksgiving offering; this I am informed was the largest mission offering ever raised here. Plans were made for the Christmas exercise. A large crowd was present for the well rendered exercises The Sunday school voted to go treatless and send the money to those in need. An offering was taken and the money sent direct to Brother Cook to use where he deemed it most necessary. As should have been mentioned previously, Brother Yoder stopped with us the third of December and gave an inspiring message to an interested audience. An offering was taken for the work that evening.

From Christmas until February we have been obliged to experience Sundays so bad that at times we were compelled to dismiss services altogether. A scant fuel supply also added to the inconvenience. The weather was so bad during the winter that when we were able to have services many people could not attend. Sickness also added its burden. Being strictly a rural congregation bad weather means small crowds.

New Year's day we gathered at the church and there spent the day. The many good things brought were spread on the tables in the basement. Needless to say, full justice was done by all.

Our attendance for services on the good days has been good. But as the uncertainty of services were upon us during the severe weather we were not able to do as much toward the set Brethren Goal as we would like, we are planning to do more toward that when the weather opens.

Two barrels of clothing are now ready to be sent to Kentucky, one to Lost Creek and one to Krypton. We are also planning for a special Easter program. A bell has been located and we expect to soon have its peals ringing out the invitation to worship. We are also preparing for an evangelistic meeting this fall. We desire the interest of the brotherhood in the work here.

FREEMAN ANKRUM.

First Brethren Church, Somerset Street, Johnstown, Pennsylvania

In the midst of these trying times, when the people's minds and energies are divided among so many things, it is a source of real joy to make progress in the work of the church. To me it seems almost providential that our Four-Year Program was launched when a great world war was in progress. The church must lose herself in the accomplishment of great tasks in order to save her life. That we have a great program to accomplish, which will tax our resources and demand the uniting of our energies will prove the "savor of life unto life" for us.

This is my initial report of work being done on this pastorate. We are praying, planning, working for the reaching of the various goals of the Four-Year Program. We are in to win, not merely for the sake and glory of winning, but that we may make progress in the Lord's work. The official body of the Johnstown church is back of this Program to a man, and with a determination to make good in every "Goal" set before us.

We started where we thought it necessary to start, with an effort to deepen the spiritual life of the church. Machinery to run smoothly must have power, and so we 'tarried t obe endued with power.' Our first effort was in the mid-week service. A program was outlined for three months. In planning the program we kept in mind the following things: Increased attendance, variety, development of new workers, new people taking part, and the putting of every organization of the church to work in accomplishing our purpose. We tried a new 'tarried to be endued with power.' Our first Night." This we worked four nights during the three-month period. A Good Fellowship Committee was appointed for each night and they were expected to furnish refreshments and some entertainment to throw the people together in a social way. This committee took charge at the close of prayer meeting for one hour. The result was all that could be expected. Smallest attendance 50, largest attendance 252, averag eattendance 130. We are now engaged in cottage prayer meetings in preparation for our coming evangelistic effort, which will begin March the tenth.

New interest is being manifested in the Y. P. S. C. E. A new corps of officers was elected and by faithful work they have succeeded in interesting many more people in the society. Something different each Sunday night, and something good, too, has resulted in increased interest. The attendance will average close to one hundred.

The Sunday school has suffered greatly because of industrial conditions. It was necessary to do something to stimulate attendance. An increase campaign was launched with the result that our attendanco is steadily on the increase. Our goal is an average attendance of 500 each Sunday. We are not so sure that we are going to reach this goal, but we are sure that we will make an honest effort. Our courage is stimulated because of the men who head this increase campaign; they go at their work with a determination to win and we are sure to make progress.

Increased interest is evident along other lines. The Sunday school auditorium is being recarpeted by the various classes at an expense of close to two hundred dollars. The Helping Hand Bible class is putting in about two hundred dollars worth of improvements in their class room. When their work is completed they will have one of the most modern class rooms in the city. The Sunda yschool is sure to meet every re-Sunday school is sure to meet every re-Brother Trent.

Recently a campaign was put on to place the Brethren Evangelist in every home. This campaign was under the leadership of brother Harry Bole. He gathered about him thirty husky men, men loyal and true to every interest of the church, explained to them his plans and started them out to canvass for subscriptions. There could be but one result, SUCCESS. The evening set to tabulate results was spent around a table filled with good things to eat (the men know how to eat, too), after doing justice to what was spread before us the reports were made by the various teams. The result was we went "over the top." The team making the best record was to be given a beautiful Bible by Brother Bole. Team number — won the Bible, and in turn presented the same to brother Blair Goughnour, who has for years served as agent for the Evangelist. This was an expression of appreciation for faithful work done by Brother Goughnour. The total number of Evangelists coming into Somerset Street church will be 148. This was a victory which made all concerned feel good.

On coming to Johnstown we found the work of the church in good shape. Brother Rench had wrought well in the years of his ministry here. He was loved by his own people. His ministerial brethren of the city spoke in words of highest praise and esteem of him. We are findinig it easy to build upon the splendid foundation he laid. Many prayers are going up from Johnstown for his success in his new field. Let us press on to victory.

J. F. WATSON.

Linwood, Maryland

The pastor had to call "time out" for a few days on account of a minor accident, so will try to use a little of the time preparing a few thoughts for our friends from this section of our Lord's vineyard.

We have passed through the most severe winter in the history of the church at this place. Consequently those people who usually motor to church had to rely upon old "Dobbin and the sleigh." However we are proud of our winter attendance and the continued interest in the great work of the kingdom through the different organizations of the church.

Last Sunday we completed a series of seven sermons based upon the sayings of our Lord from the cross. Our people showed a good interest in this series and we believe our efforts have borne fruit.

To inform you of our Christian Endeavor work, Junior, Intermediate and Senior, let me quote the exact words of our director for C. E. promotion in this district after our report had been sent in. He said, "You are to be congratulated upon your Endeavor work. Your successes can not be duplicated in the district."

Our "Ashland College Night" has been postponed until March. At present our Endeavorers are preparing an Easter Cantata.

Lastly, we have enjoyed reading that our fellow ministers have been so well cared for so we want to add a word that is similar. Throughout the summer we were constantly made to rejoice because of the bountiful gifts received. Toward fall this spirit of service became contagious and all caught it in one evening, so early in December our friends took possession long enough to make us glad again by bringing baskets, boxes, and sacks full of eatables and other useful articles. Those who could not be present that night have come since.

At Christmas time we were remembered by a number of friends here and elsewhere with individual gifts in the form of cash. We are wonderfully thankful for this continuous spirit of giving which we believe comes out of hearts of love and appreciation.

Flora, Indiana

Notice to Every Member of the First Brethren Church, at Flora, Indiana

The church is trying to keep in touch with you and also keep you in touch with the progress and work of the church not only at Flora, but in the entire brotherhood. We then would like for you to show some appreciation of our united effort since you are receiving the Evangelist. Be present as often as possible, give your gifts through the church, (by sending if non-resident to Lee Myer, Flora, Ind., our financial secretary.) The church has not withdrawn its prayers and interest from you, why then should any become indifferent and forgetful of the church. Any correspondence should be sent to Russell Humberd, Flora, Indiana as he is corresponding secretary.

We have undertaken to do our part in accomplishing in the Four-Year Program. You will become acquainted through the Evangelist with the various interesting demands made upon each individual. As members remember we have a new home, its cost has all been taken care of, but its progress and future depend upon the attitude of every member toward the things that, as Brethren, we say "are dear to us."

Therefore, if we are counting on the Lord, —I am just wondering how much he can count on us,—that is, if the church is worth anything to us, how much we are worth to the church?

May we be caused to have a vision and stop using the church to "camouflage."

May we be true and loyal, praying and laboring in behalf of the sin sick and lost.

The Flora church has been used as a channel for many a blessing, and will be used more, we pray as the days go by. On Sunday, February 17, the first candidate was baptized, after making a public confession of his Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in the new baptistry. The candidate was an old brother 82½ years old. Brother, does this tell us anything? I believe it ought to cause us to look all around us, and sow the Word.

May the Brethren everywhere remember us as we labor in Christ's name.

W. T. LYTLE.

Whole Gospel Mission

We are beginning to push our work again here in the city. We have been greatly hindered, largely on account of weather conditions, but praise God we are having some nice weather now.

Our Christian Endeavor has taken on new life. We are increasing in numbers and interest.

Our Sunday school is about holding its own. Most of schools here are falling off during war times.

Church services are increasing in attendance and spiritual power.

We baptized a splendid man from Jenkintown last night. Through his influence his wife united with us from the Methodist church fifteen years ago and has been a faithful member ever since. It took fifteen years of prayers and personal effort to land him. One of those good moral men but merely put off salvation. Thank God, he came at last. We have others who are near the kingdom.

We are now busily getting ready for our revival which will begin April 7. Brother Ed. Miller, one of my boys who has outgrown his spiritual father will hold our meeting will prove a great and lasting good brotherhood for this meeting. On account of financial stress we have conducted our own meetings here for several years.

Having preached here for sixteen years and hard pressed with other duties besides pastoral, it was a hard task for me. But now once again I can give my time wholly for three weeks to visitation and assisting the evangelist in whatever he may see fit.

I am sure, no preventing providence, this meeting will prove a great an dlasting good to the Whole Gospel Mission. As to the number of additions we can not even anticipate, but that will not by any means be the greatest good that will be accomplished.

As the whole brotherhood has had part in the building up of this work, we ask the special prayers of the entire church for this coming meeting.

We are praying and working for a deepening of the spiritual life of every member. And thank God, we are beginning to see answers to our prayers.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN.

Ashland College Notes

As the writer crossed the campus a few moments ago he espied the auburn (red) haired Joe Gingrich. "Whither away, Joe?" and the answer came back, "To Denison to show 'em Ashland College is on the map." Joe and Lester King are the college Y. M. delegates to the conference for presidents and vice presidents at Denison University. They were recently elected to these offices by the student vote. The Y. M. should "step" some under their leadership. The recent meeting of which Mr. Kershaw of Ashland spoke on "Counting One," was favorably received and commented upon. Mr. Kershaw emphasized the necessity of counting as a useful unit in life.

The popular song on the campus this afternoon is: "Tonight's the Night." Reason, Ohio and Pennsylvania play off the final basketball game. Each has won a game so far. The Ohio contingent vow they are out to win and Pennsylvania's hopefuls say they'll be there to see them do it. A rousing game is promised. Ohio's lineup will probably be, Gnagey and Nieschwitz, forwards; W. Leckrone, Center and Starn and H. Leckrone, Guards, while Penn's arrangement will be, Detch and Dannebaum, Forwards, Lambert, Center and Boardman and Horlacker, Guards. Scores announced next week. Following the game the Sophs-Seniors, vs. Freshman-Junior game is scheduled. These teams are also tied in games. So Ashland students are promised some exciting athletics.

I might here make mention of the week's chapel services. Two were especially interesting. Wednesday the Juniors had charge of the period and presented their proposition for the Annual which they are publishing. Every member of the Brethren church interested in Ashland College and its work should secure a copy of the Annual. It is not yet off the press but indications are that it will surpass "Pine Whispers," last year's annual. The other chapel service was conducted by the Seniors, who wore their caps and gowns for the first time. After a processional a large service flag in honor of the boys who were in school but who are now at the front or in training was presented to the College. Dr. Furry responded with his usual graceful and well worded acceptance. Then, too, I would not omit mention of the service conducted by Dr. Furry. Our president has a large outlook upon the world and out of the storehouse of his experience and the thought of a keen and brilliant mind he brings us his message day after day. I wonder if students and Brethren at large appreciate the untiring, self-sacrificing efforts of Dr. Furry to mold and shape young life into its noblest semblance. Truly his is a noble ministry.

A "bean" social was held in the hall last Saturday evening. We helped to clean beans for the dorm kitchen and then enjoyed ourselves afterward. It resembled an old-fashioned corn husking, though of course in this case beans were the commodity. It is needless to say that Ashland students enter into pleasures as earnestly as they do other pursuits and the evening was a pronounced success.

C. E. last Sunday evening was led by Isabel Wilcox and Cora Aksland. Special music was a feature. Miss Pauline Teeter's 'cello solo was well received. Miss Margaret Banghart's reading deserves special mention.

A quartet composed of Philomathean boys —Boardman, Owen, Vanator and Becknell— is quite popular about the school. Recently they have had a number of engagements away from the school. Middlebranch will hear them very shortly. These boys have been practicing hard of late and their work shows it. We are pleased to hear them and proud of them as representatives of our college.

Society activities have increased. Good programs are rendered each Friday evening. After a cessation of such activity owing to fuel conditions, we welcome the return to them again.

The Seniors begin rehearsals soon on their class play, "At the End of the Rainbow." The cast will be announced next week.

P. & G. will soon be off the press again. Get a number.

Read the notes weekly. Work up an enthusiasm for your college, our college. Boost Beachler's campaign for "Ashland, the best in the land." F. M. L.

Masontown, Pennsylvania

The last report from this congregation was dated soon after the close of the splendid revival, held during the months of October and November, in which we were led by brother A. T. Ronk. No backward step has been taken since then, though we were not a little handicapped by the unusually severe winter weather, which interfered with the attendance at all services. However, we are still at our posts as we have been all the time.

The first event of unusual importance, following my last report, was the holding of our annual business meeting. All reports showed encouraging progress and the thing which was of exceptional interest to the pastor was the fact that he received the congregation to continue his service as its leader for another, which will be a fifth year. To make the call more emphatic, a substantial increase to the salary was offered. The pastor accepted both the call and the added inducement, considering them as an expression of God's approval upon the work which he has been trying to do. The four years of service which are nearing their close, have been busy and pleasant ones. So we are facing the future with confidence in the hope of still larger things for the kingdom in the interests of which all has been undertaken.

The Christmas season witnessed another of the best entertainments given by the children of the Sunday school, whcih it has been my lot to see or hear. The Misses Griffith and Quinet, under whose training and direction it was given, are keeping both pastor and congregation, under constant obligation for their splendid leadership with the boys and girls. Their faithful loyalty could not be exceeded. One of the features in that entertainment which was not on the program, was the calling of the pastor and his wife to the platform, whereupon Brother Long, who was master of ceremonies, made a nice little speech, so full of complimentary things that there was danger of turning one's head, and then presented each with a miniature suit case, suggesting that since we were about to leave for a short visit to our sons, who reside in Dayton, our friends thought the suit cases might prove useful. True, they might have been employed to hold a few kerchiefs, but the almost $50 which they contained, made them very valuable indeed, not only for the sake of their intrinsic worth, but because they were a very tangible expression of love, which is after all, more precious than gold. This was only another of such acts of kindness which places us under permanent obligation to the kind hearts who performed it.

Our Sunday school continues to do excellent work. Brother Joe Kratz who is its new leader is showing himself a leader indeed. The school continues to be a source of pleasurable surprise to the pastor in its spirit of giving. During the last year, with an average attendance of 124, the total offerings were $602. And all of this without an yspur being applied. It is equally enthusiastic in its paying the cash ou tof its treasury. Even the little folks have caught the spirit and asked that instead of the usual treat being given to them at Christmas time, the sum of $25 should be sent for the relief of Armenia. Another $10 was voted out last Sunday to be sent to the same cause. One of my good workers asked me recently if I did not think that the splendid success which has been visited upon the church here, is due, in a measure at least, to the spirit of giving which has been so prominent in it. I had not thought of it in that way, but I believe that it is true.

The men of the Sunday school participated in their annual banquet on the evening of February 14 and 50 of them sat down to a feast of material things set by the ladies of the school and then enjoyed a feast of spiritual things, when the Rev. Dr. Goodnight, of the Uiontown Christian church, addressed us upon the necessity of a spiritual program. The address was an unusually fine opening for the series of sermons which is being preached by the pastor upon the subject of our own Four-Year Program. Our Father has been good to us, and we are glad in him. MARTIN SHIVELY.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

I came from New Paris to Warsaw. The Warsaw church was the first church visited in the Indiana campaign. The campaign had to have a start and the Warsaw church said she would start it at $1,000, and we went on to Milford and other points in the state. Now then, we have come back to Warsaw and we have made our canvass here. And I am glad to say Warsaw church has not only made good her promise, but she has made more than good. When the last word is spoken at Warsaw, the $1,100 mark will have been reached. It was a pleasant week's work. Brother Clarence Kolb, the pastor, entered heartily into the canvass with me and gave me fine co-operation. And in the cordial Kolb home I found refreshing rest after each hard day's work. I have only words of praise for the uniformly kind, courteous hearing that was accorded me as I made my appeal from home to home in the interest of permanent endowment. Ashland College has many warm friends in the Warsaw church. And Warsaw by the way, is the home of Brother Fred Vanator and wife, also Miss Emma Banghart, all of whom are capable, deserving students of Ashland College. Our next report will come from the Dutchtown congregation. After that I shall go to Berne.

The severe winter has in no sense detracted from Indiana's interest in the endowment campaign. Indiana has fully resolved that she will set an example for the rest of the brotherhood in this endowment campaign which is worthy of her good standing in the denomination, and each church visited makes it more and more apparent that she will carry out he rresolve. It will not be long until the $20,000 mark has been reached in Indiana. And I shall not be at all surprised that Indiana goes $25,000. This will be a grand triumph and it will speak volumes for the loyalty of Indiana Brethren. Nor is there any doubt in my own mind that the entire brotherhood stands as ready as Indiana to endow Ashland College now and to endow it right. I believe the Brethren church at large has made up its mind to this thing and that it will surely be done.

As we are near the close of the campaign in Indiana, the brotherhood is perhaps naturally wondering into what field the work will be carried next. At this time I cannot say definitely. At first it was rather decided among us that from Indiana we would go to Illiokota and Kanemorado. However, that point is at present under consideration. And I may at least say that there is a real possibility that we shall go to Pennsylvania next. This will be announced very soon in our Campaign Notes.

Brethren's Home of Ohio

An Incorporation with over $9,000 in Assets

PURPOSE. To purchase a site and build a home for the aged and infirm of our beloved church, and an orphanage for our children.

POLICY. To increase the assets on hand fifty per cent. before beginning.

PLAN. To select a good site in a Brethren locality and build on the Cottage Plan. In this way some can build and occupy their own cottages, and upon their death the property to belong to the Home.

NEED. Gifts of money, property, endowments and bequests to increase the assets in accordance with the policy of the Board.

Information cheerfully given.

Greatness in a Church

Judging from what one sees and hears, he might conclude that it was a question of bigness. But bigness is not necessarily greatness. Russia is big; France is great. Chicago University is big; Ashland College is great. Jess Williard is big, but Woodrow Wilson will go down in history as great. The plain, well-kept church by the turn in the road may not be big, but it can be great. If it can not be both, by all means let it be great.

If there be greatness in a church, you will find as one of the elements of that condition a great soul. For a church has a soul. It is not that vague, indefinite something that can be bandied and kicked around like a foot ball, ignored or supported according to one's mood. It is a living, throbbing organism made up of regenerated men and women. God breathed into it the breath of life, even the Holy Spirit, and it became a living soul. There is no church apart from its members. It is a divine organism created for the purpose of worship, co-operation and service. It has both a character and a reputation. How is your church known in the community? Is it a spiritual church or a worldly church? Is it a generous church or is it a selfish church? Is it a peaceable or a quarrelsome church? Does it stand for the fundamentals of the Gospel or does it stand for nothing. Some churches are immune from spinal meningitis for they lack the thing that would take the disease. A church may have wealth, material equipment, and "the leading men" as members, yet without character in the community. If so, it is an empty pretence, a mere corpse ready for burial.

If there be greatness in a church, it will be inspired by a great vision. "Where there is no vision, the people perish," said the wise man. That is the trouble with poor, old China. She is still without dreams to break her slumber. Japan has been seeing things, and she has become the Queen of the Orient.

The greatest indictment ever brought against a church was this: "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." May God save us from the paralysis of being at ease in Zion! Our "Four-Year Program" is worthy of the best that is within us. With the time almost half gone, how much remains to be done! There will be scores of our churches this year without a revival meeting. Some can not have a meeting unless helped. Others are self-satisfied, without a vision, and are dying of sheer inertia. Others have no higher ambition than to pay their bills and hold a protracted meeting once a year. They forget that the best way to exalt our special doctrines is to become leaders in their respective communities. A new, modern church building would add greater prestige to the things for which we stand than years of plodding "until times get better." Nothing is so sad as "having eyes, yet see not." Some churches, lacking the faculty of discernment, are waiting for their future. Others, like the Flora, Indiana church make their future. Brethren people must get a commanding influence in their communities just like other religious bodies, by doing things worth while. What others have done we can do. And in this world of competition, do or die is the law.

If a church would be great, the vision must vitalize in a great program. The trouble is churches do not plan. They have no objective for next year, and the year following. If they move at all, they move in a circle. Moving thus it is hard to get anywhere. The merchant sets his goal, the insurance company charts its proposed work, the lodges put on their "drives," the public school schedules its courses for all grades, but many churches are content to "mark time." Thus time passes, five or ten precious years and no noticeable advance has been made. Our "Four-Year Program" will help many a congregation to plan carefully, at the beginning of each year, the things it shall try to bring to pass for that year. Such a program, arranged in love and consecrated by prayer will provoke many to better endeavors.

A few years ago, when the new pastor of a Wesley M. E. Church arrived on his field, he found it depleted in membership and financial resources. It had once been one of the most prominent churches in that denomination. It is now a down-town church, made up of clerks and artisans. The story goes that some time after he became pastor, four men and their wives at a dinner party, after bringing the results of their study together, decided that "bringing the tithes into the storehouse" meant paying one-tenth of their week's income into the church treasury. Beginning the next Sunday, they put one-tenth into the collection plate. Others signed a pledge to do the same, until, at the end of sixteen months, one hundred and eight had enrolled to do the same. Only sixty had thus tithed for the year, and yet these "paid to current expenses and benevolences nearly twice as much as all the other four hundred and forty members." Their apportionments for all benevolences were all met for the first time in their history, and their missionary budget was reached without a struggle. At the same time they report "the most spiritual year in the recent history of the church with an ingathering of one hundred and twenty-four new members.' This at a time when "times were never so hard," and scores were out of employment. What others have done we can do. Do not Brethren love their church as much as Methodists do theirs? If not, why not? So much for a great program.

In a great church, there must be a great response. And here we are at last touching things vital. A great response! Yes, without that, the best laid plans will come to naught. Our programs will succeed or fail just in proportion to the response. All coaching fails when the players fail to respond. There is a law of human nature, inwrought in every fiber, and verified by all history, that whatever does not find expression dies. Our highest ambitions will soon fade into nothingness, unless they are given expression. Love, if left alone, struggling in the heart without expression, will die. Many a teacher with a vision of a great Sunday school class, has seen that vision fade away, because there was no effort to make that vision real. Many a church has just missed a great victory, because an advance in the price of brick was deemed sufficient to "put off" the building until a more opportune time. But the vision of the beautiful building began fading, until the power of expression was gone. While dreaming our dreams and planning our plans, like Paul of old, we must be "not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." In the work of God, nothing is so distressing at the close of life's little day, as to feel, "It might have been."

Can, Must Shall

How often we have heard it said of some specific good that is being considered, "We can do it, therefore it is our duty to do it." This is one of the arguments put forward by those who would urge greater activity upon the part of the Christian people who sometimes grow negligent of duty and fail to see great opportunities that are only waiting some one to grasp them and thus to achieve some great good in the world.

If ability carries with it obligation so that one's responsibility is measured only by this ability., and if one is to be regarded a slacker unless he does what he has the ability to do, then it is important that more thought be given to one's abilities. It is well known that personal enthusiasm in the work of the world or of the church is not always commensurate with the ability of those who possess the latter. Quite frequently failure is the result of an undertaking, not because those who have undertaken the work are lacking in ability, but because they are lacking in enthusiasm, and what is needed to achieve success is not more ability but more enthusiasm that is born of the conviction that because of the possess of ability there is a duty that dare not be neglected. Therefore we believe it is correct and proper to say if any good thing needing to be done, "Because we can we must." But this principle has been carried out still further by some who have given serious thought to the matter of the duty of a nation in its relation to other nations, and with the ability and the recognized duty is coupled also the conviction of successful achievement. In speaking of the relation of America to the outcome of the great world war President Wilson said: "We must win and therefore we shall win." There is a spirit of optimism in that declaration that is worthy of consideration by all men in their relation to any great purpose in life. If we can we must, and if we must we shall. That spirit and feeling of confidence is a mighty factor in winning in any conflict.

The International Mind

A number of years ago a newspaper correspondent came into prominence because of the fearlessness of his utterances as he learned of the inside operation of many of the corrupt political and business transactions of some of the big corporations of the world and for a time the people of America had a great deal of confidence in this journalist, Lincoln Steffens; but as time passed on the devotion of this man to one cause—namely that of raking through the muck of the world seemed to carry him so far beyond what many term "sane and sound" thinking that it is doubtful if he is held in as high esteem by the average American today as he was fifteen years ago. The minds of the people can be led just about so far in most any direction, but there comes a time when, like the pendulum of a clock, the extremity has been reached and then the backward movement begins.

One who has traveled in many lands and who has become acquainted with men of many nations should learn something of the minds of the nations, and yet it depends very largely whether one has become intimate with the thought of REPRESENTATIVE men of the nations. This is the function of a journalist who attempts to interpret the national mind and it becomes more and more his business to know representative men if he would interpret the international mind.

But when Mr. Steffens says of the mind of the noted Jewish revolutionist of Russia—Trotzky, that his mind is the international mind some of us are inclined to question Mr. Steffens' judgment. It yet remains to be demonstrated that Trotzky has a mind of his own, let alone regarding it as an international mind. There is a strong feeling among many of the world's people that the mind that controls Trotzky is the mind of the Kaiser and instead of it being an international mind it is only an echo of a Prussian mind. This may not be satisfactorily determined just yet, but as the old saying goes, "It will all come out in the wash." Then the nature of the Trotzky mind will be determined.

Where Ignorance Is Bliss

Perhaps according to the old adage it is better that people under some circumstances should remain in ignorance of the real condition of their lives and of the nature of the work in which they are enagged. It is hardly to be supposed that pwople would do some of the things they do if they fully understood the influence and the effect of their lives and their conduct upon the general life of the world.

Culture may be one of the greatest blessings that can come to man and in its relation to the happiness of the human family it is to be promoted and encouraged in every way, but the kultur that leaves a people in entire ignorance of their own self conceit and bigotry can result in nothing less than destruction in the course of years for the laws of nature are such that a reaction against such unnatural principles is bound to come in time.

One of Germany's dukes is reported to have said: "We Germans do not hate. Hate is foreign to our nature." But practically every act of the German military forces from the first crossing of the Belgian line down to the latest air attack upon defenseless women and children has given the lie to the claim of the honorable duke. The conduct of the war on the part of the Prussian forces has been one prolonged expression of hatred from the beginning until now and we have no grounds upon which to base an opinion that this hatred will grow any less intense as the Kaiser's forces shall gradually be driven from their position which is embodied in the idea that because of the claim that German kulture has made them a race of super-men and at last to acknowledge there are rights of the weak that the strong are under obligation to respect.

Perhaps Ex-Ambassador Gerard has given a truer interpretation to the German mind in his statement: "Americans must understand that the Germans will stop at nothing to win the war, and that the only thing they respect is force.

Lest We Forget

A great many devices have been resorted to enable one to forget the things that have caused unpleasantness and unhappiness in the world. One o f the foremost excuses put up by the devotee to strong drink is that it enables one to forget, at least for a time, the troubles of life and that it enables a pauper to feel like a king. Of course nothing is said about the power it has to reduce a king from his position of affluence to that of a pauper of the street.

On the other hand a great many systems have been developed that have for their purpose the training of the memory so that men will not be forgetful, from the ancient method of tying a string around the finger of a child to the acquiring of the principles of some one of the many more modern "memory systems."

In regard to the relation of the present and the future to the past and to the sacrifices our forefathers made by which our prosperous present and our glorious future is assured many organizations have been effected and are maintained to help us to not forget what we owe to those who have lived and served before us.

A man of some note has said: "It will be one of the first peace tasks of the Turkish Government to find ways and means of making the Armenians forget the sufferings of the war."

If any real good is to come of this war through the final victory of the allies we would sooner say the second peace task of the allies will be to see that no Turkish Government remains to ever again curse the Christian world with its blood-thirsty persecutions, of course we all understand the first peace task will be to so securely bind the hands of Prussianism that the world will be passably safe for at least a hundred years from any further danger from this hydra-headed monster which poses as the most advanced form of government in all the world.

Booze-Soaked Bodies Poor Ground for Soul-Culture

Clarence Darrow, the "labor-lawyer" who defended the McNamara brothers, the California dynamiters, a few years ago, threw a bluff into a labor meeting the other day, where he spoke under the auspices of the local bartenders' union against the prohibition movement.

"Has drink ever done you any harm?" he asked his audience, and he waited a moment for a reply.

"It killed my brother!" volunteered a voice in the pit.

"It killed my brother, too!" said another man a little farther back.

Darrow was flabbergasted! He didn't know the real sentiments of his audience.. He probably supposed that he was talking to a bartenders' crowd.

Your Account

The Good Book says, "Every man shall give an account of himself;" The Program Committee says every church shall do so. Before the full time had elapsed, I had a report from two of the Districts. Which ones did you guess would be first? California and Kannemorado? Well, then you are a good guesser for that is the exact order in which they came. They are but partial reports and at the time this is written, there is still a day before they must be in with the full report to get full credit as a District. I look for that report to come in each case; for why should it be possible for some pastors to be on time and not others? Why should some churches get on the wagon in time for the trip and not all?

"All Together and Each for the Other"

Remember the motto I have stolen for our slogan. Just to show you how it works. I'll "let you in" so that there shall be no betrayal and yet, be a help to the work of the District and finally to the cause at large. The report from one of the reported Districts, appears thus, according to my figures: Goals gained, 40%; Goals in progress of attainment, 30%; Goals lost, 30%; while if the other church that did not report would have been an average church the record would read, Goals gained, 50%; in progress, 25%; lost 25%. In short, the one church that did not report—and its record will doubtless be at least an average one—spoiled the District record to the tune 10% gains; 5% progress and 5% losses. That is too much to pay, unless unavoidably hindered, and I can not see how that word can be read into many reports. So, my dear fellow-pastor, if you want a good District record, be on time; be exact; be fraternal. The congregations that are trying to be prompt will have to suffer with the ones that are not; the pastors who are trying to get across the goal should stir a bit, among the ones that snore too loud, and sleep too long.

Good Reports

These two reports look good to me; they show that there is but one church on both that does not have several goals gained. Of course, no church can gain all the goals until the year has closed and the Conference membership has been counted. Really, Goal 16 can not be reached until 1920, though I note that some pastors have counted that Goal already attained. I think the Committee will either rule that we have but 15 Goals till 1920 or that Goal 16 will be given a sliding scale so that it can be reached year by year. That will come when I have heard again from the Committee on the question of interpretation asked last week.

Optimism

The good fact is, that we have nothing but optimism about the work we have started to do, from any one save a single individual. He'll get over it, I hope. "We can if we will and we will" seems to permeate everybody, everywhere. I am very glad that so far, I have had no note of obstinacy from any one. I am sure, brother pastors. we have never had such a good chance to prove our unity and fraternity as we now have.

"In All Things Charity

If some one does say it wrong—or rather the way we would not why "bawl it out" as the man of the street would say. If some one does not do it my way, who can prove that "my way" is the only way? They that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and if you are so sure you know how it ought to be done, just do some things that will prove to the world that you are not in the right niche. The world will soon see that your talents are utilized. So will the church. But you can't get "big" by neglecting the above motto.

A Nice Letter

I get a good many nice letters and some that are not so nice. I'll just pass on what a good man of our church wrote me this week so that you will know that some folks appreciate a situation. No, I'm not looking for sympathy; I neither need it nor ask for it. But this letter, coming after one that was so blue that I had to rub my eyes to see if it was not dark, sounded good to me. Here is some of it: "You have been putting a lot of fine work on that proposition [Four-Year Program] and I know you have had no small amount of discouragement; I shall be sorry if you shall have to slack up on it. This is really the first attempt in the life of the church to marshal it toward something. * * * * * There is a woeful inclination among us" each for himself and let the old world go on." Is he right? He has a good right to know and if he is, my motto, "Each for the Other" is wrong. That would be a woeful attitude for Christian folks. Let it not. Each for himself is not Scriptural nor Christlike. I do not care to think that he is right and hope that the progress of this Program work will prove that he is wrong.

"Failed"

* * * * * * * failed or our district would be perfect so reads one report. How does it look, pastor. If you read this page, you know who you are. Isn't it too bad that you failed? Just suppose that you did send it a few days later, see what trouble you have made. Your good District Keyman will have to spend his time and money to get that report to me. Then, I'll have to hunt out your District Sheet extra and get you put on and with it, make a note that you failed to get in on time and for the next three years, we shall have to be refering to your failure, and even that will not end it with yourself. Besides, you have put the "Kibosk" on your otherwise prompt District. Won't you repent and not do it again? But this is fine: "We expect this District to have reached every Goal in another Year."

Wait! Wait!

Like a postman running to prevent the hanging of an innocent man, a post-card came from one of the District Keymen referred to above saying, "Won't you kindly put the report from.....on the report I sent in?" "Kindly?" I say I shall kindly and gladly. That changes the "figgers" in the case a good deal for one District and before a year, you shall know which of my many co-workers are busy at the job helping to make our church get into the stride suited to her youth and vigor.

Brother "Ed" Says

Goal Director Miller has struck a good gait and he has some fine things to say from which I cull this: "I have this report from Whitted (Kanemorado) If you will note, Goal 7 has been attained by all churches but one and truly it is the Keynote on several Goals. A word of praise is in order for this District: (So say I) for their promptness. Pennsylvania has given me satisfaction, so far; The majority have adopted the budget system and the rest are working." So, hats off to "Brother Ed" for it will not surprise me if he is the first to finish. The reports in my hand now, show more than a good start. Churches, get into the Budget plan and then, see how well it has solved your financial problem. We're getting somewhere, I feel sure. More anon.

coming to believe that it has. It isn't safe to recklessly throw into a crowd of workingmen a challenge which may so easily be answered. For they are coming to know the facts. And the facts are always against the liquor business.

It is bad enough for booze to kill the body of your brother—it is a worse thing for booze to kill his soul.

But what about a man who carries a dead soul in a living body? This is what happens to many a man who has become booze-soaked.

For drink destroys a man's soul before it kills his body—and usually he doesn't know what's happening to him. That's the sad part of it.

We are realizing more and more that soul-culture and the things that grow out of the use of booze cannot occupy the same body at the same time—in the end one will drive the other out—and usually booze comes out ahead in the struggle.

Suffering With Jesus

BY FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE, M.D.

"He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied." Isa. 53:11. "To win for the Lamb that was slain the reward of His sufferings." is the Moravian battle-cry, and with the love thus inspired they gladly suffered tribulation and obtained the victory. "For unto us it is given in the behalf of Christ not only to believe on him but also to suffer for his sake." What then? Romans 8:18 has the answer, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward."

To win souls for Jesus Christ on the darkest mission fields of the world is the purpose and hope with which your little band of missionaries have gone to Africa.

That souls thus won to him may win for him a hundred fold among their own black skinned brethren must be likewise our purpose and your prayer. Among the converts in the heart of Africa Mission at Nala in the Belgian Congo, there was baptized on Oct. 27, 1915 a black boy named Sambo. "Through his life and example in less than a year over 100 had been baptized." He has lately been called home, and Mr. Studd says;—"Like Samson, in his death, he has slain more than in his life, for through his death many are impressed."

Your party of missionaries to Africa is small, very small, what then? Pray! For more missionaries, and for a rapid raising up of native workers let your prayers ascend to God! "He must see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied!

An African chief went to Charles E. Hurlburt and said,

"Do you see that beautiful green hill running gently up to a point with tall shade trees and rich grass growing on it?" Well, I will give you that hill for a missionary." "I have no missionary for you yet," was the sad response.

"Do you see that other hill? It is higher and greener? Its soil is more fertile. You could build houses on it, and it would be a healthy place to live. It is really the best hill I own. I will give you that hill if you will send a missionary to tell me and my people the good words of God."

"It is not a question of hills, it is a question of missionaries," was the increasingly sorrowful reply. "Come into my hut," said the old chief, and look at this leopard skin. It is the skin of the biggest leopard my men ever killed. You may have that leopard skin for a missionary."

"It is not a question of leopard skins, it is a question of missionaries." was the repeated rejoinder.

Another chief also came to him. He was very old, his back was bent with age. Lame, he hobbled into the missionary headquarters, one day and said he had limped along for eighty miles to ask for a missionary.

When told he must wait before a missionary could be sent to his village, he said, "I will be dead first." In July of 1917, a missionary started for that man's village, but he was dead even before the missionary started, as he said he would be.

Old chief Akengan went to Poko in the Belgian Congo. He wanted a missionary, but for him as yet there is none.

And if the need is so great in districts already entered for Jesus Christ, how inexpressible must be the dearth, and how unutterable the darkness, in our own dear Ubangi-Shari, where as yet no ray of light has ever penetrated, and no healing message ever gone.

Ubangi-Shari is calling. There is need to speed the gospel message. Missionaries! Prepare! Forward! March!

And yet our ranks are incomplete, and shall be until largely filled with our native Christian workers. For them pray! First for their conversion, secondly for their consecration, and resultant multiplication. Thus shall we, the suffering and serving sent ones of Jesus Christ, find ourselves added unto and multiplied, in spite of every endeavor of Satan, entering into our midst, to subtract and divide.

Thus shall he in Ubangi-Shari "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," and we too shall be able to shout victoriously theMoravian battle cry, "To win for the Lamb that was slain the reward of His sufferings."

The Cross Robbed of Its Power

BY SANFORD F. ESSIG

The year 33 A. D. marks the greatest event ever recorded by the hand of man; the greatest event because it bridged the abyss between fallen man and eternal life and made possible the impossible. That day when the centurian's lance pierced the side of the wounded Savior and Calvary's brow was bathed in the atoning blood which flows down the centuries as a stream of pure water for the cleansing of fallen man, that was the greatest of all days. That day marked a new era, a new age for man and law became grace for him who washes in that stream and goes forth to walk in newness of life. The cross is man's only hope, it is the glory of the saints and all things which appear great in the eyes of man fall down before it as worthless and vain. What can cause more pain and anguish on the part of God's true children than to see this cross trampled under foot and robbed of its power which is the condition at the present time.

We are forced to see, whether we believe or not that the Church is losing power and that there is a reason for it. This loss of power is only a demonstration of cause and effect and continues to prove the infallibility of God's word. The lukewarmness and blindness of this Laodicean period of the church is appaling; neither hot nor cold, satisfied that all is well, having need of nothing, and "knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Surely there is a need for eye-salve that God's children may see the prevailing conditions about them and wake from their slumber. There are many who look with disgust and contempt upon such words as these; they are not at all pleasing to them as they explode many a fond hope and dream, but they are God's facts and are true whether we believe or not. Truly, the cross of Christ has been made of none effect, robbed of its power to quicken and transform these mortal bodies of ours. There is evidence of this on every hand and I am persuaded that our present day churches are literally teeming with unconverted, unregenerate hearts; good, conscientious people but unchanged hearts and carnal minds. On every hand we see Christian men and women being unconsciously used of the devil while they feel that they are doing God's service. Many of them are well educated, yes learned people for they are most efficient in the hands of him who has been in the business of deceiving ever since the creation.

One thing which is today robbing the Cross of its power is twentieth century philosophy and worldly learning. Fom time immemorial, wisdom and learning has held a high place in the mind of man. The desire to know and to understand is a part of man's nature and the devil makes use of this natural tendency with effects that are disastrous. God says in the words of Paul. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ." For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the godhead bodily; and ye are complete in Him, Who is the head of all principality and power." Also in Jude he says, "For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the Grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." In this age as never before, Satan has camouflaged and hidden himself in our institutions of learning and is there doing his most deadly work. And these "certain men" of whom God has forwarned us have crept into the very church and are wolves in sheep's clothing. The religion that comes from our modern and recognized institutions of learning is either broken or so terribly bent as to be almost beyond recognition as the word of God. In fact, very little of it is God's word, most of it being man's philosophy and vain deceit. The Greeks were the most learned, most highly educated race that has ever existed but we see that to them Christ crucified was foolishness just as it is today to those of their class. "A heinous butchery" they all admit, but atonement to them spells foolishness and iodicy. They do not know that the wisodm of this world is foolishness to God, they do not realize that they are the fools. They need to become fools that they may become wise for He says, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent." The wisdom of this world and the wisdom which God imparts are diametrically opposite; to hitch the two seems all but impossible. God reminds of this when he says through Paul "that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." We who are real followers of him are considered ignoramuses by the world; we are God's fools' but by so being we may have the wisdom that the world cannot afford. And brethren, God's wisdom is expensive; you, will not need to go to the orient to get it, for it is a free gift and may be had in the secret of His presence. There is certainly a necessity for a genuine house-cleaning in many of the denominational colleges and religious seminaries for few are they who come out uncontaminated, having the faith once delivered unto the saints. You know, God's wisdom isn't the popular kind, hence its scarcity; it is something repugnant to the world's taste, altogether to coarse and unrefined for her majesty. The modern and popular sermons of today have very little in them concerning the cross as man's only hope. For the unconverted sinner that is the most important thing between the lids of the Bible. Instead they are composed of bursts of eloquence, great swelling words; they are clouds without water, much like bubbles when they burst—very little left. Some days ago in my reading I came across an address by one of these world wise men who professes Christianity. A few lines of the article run thus: "Christian Science doctrinally is possible only because people have not trained minds. Russelism could not flourish if all Christian people had a liberal education." Isn't that a ridiculous statement? but this is just a sample from these world-wise, but God-ignorant men of out time. If his reasoning is correct; if all that is necessary to set men on the right track and to keep them there is Education, then there is something wrong with the Word. If education is the solution, then I wonder why those learned Greeks considered Christianity foolishness. Also why are so many of our learned men, philosophers and scientists—infidels, agnostics, pantheists, etc?. Why has not their education brought them to a knowledge of the truth? The secret is this; it takes something different from a liberal education to cause man to see his lost position and to realize that nothing but the blood of Jesus can atone for his sins which are legion. What the church needs is not a better educated clergy i. e. educated in the things of this world but she needs more of God's wisdom; she needs to purge herself from her carnal-mindedness and world mimicry. She needs to turn back to her first love, to have the zeal and fire of the early church, and then and not before then will you witness results that are desirable.

Another way in which the Church has weakened the power of the cross and has incapacitated herself for real service is by taking world methods rather than God's to arrive at the end desired. And there is such a variety of opionin as to what the Church's mission is. Few are they who seem to know, yet it is very simple. You will find it summed up in two verses of scripture, Matt. 28:19, 20. One great mistake that the church in general has made is in uniting herself with the world's good, moral people and going into the whitewashing business. She has forgotten her high calling and has taken the slogan, "The world a better place in which to live." So she joins hands with the conscientious, ambitious people of this world and they proceed to whitewash this old sincursed world which only the blood of the lamb can cleanse. And, on the face of it all it looks as though she were doing an honorable work and it appears that they are succeeding fairly well BUT, on the inside sin is as black as ever. The words of Christ describe it well,"—whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanness." But someone is saying that we must join in social and political reform work to get the sinner to the place where we can reach him. But must we? Must we take the man out of the ditch and give him a course in etiquette before we can preach Christ to him with effect? No indeed.

Which is the most difficult task, to cleanse the vessel that has been whitewashed, had its filth covered or the one whose filth is laid bare? You know which, and it is the same way with the unconverted soul; the moral sinner is hardest to reach and that without exception. He looks on the outside and sees no difference between himself and the Christian; he is satisfied with his morals but his heart has not been changed a jot or a tittle by his reformation. The cross becomes of none effect and falls on deaf ears on him whose morals are as filthy rags in the sight of God. So we see that reform has hardened the sinners heart instead of softening it and making it more receptive to the gospel. The Church is making her own task of saving-difficult.

The Church is also at fault for modernizing the Word to meet the demands of the day just to reach the masses. Plans for holding the crowd, making services attractive, friendly rivalry in the form of contests to keep up the interest is on the wind from the four corners of the earth. Too many people must be coddled; the real word is too strenuous for them. Here is the trouble; the masses do not wish to pay the price of salvation. Many of Christ's followers when they heard the requirements for an apostle walked with him no more. People are the same now as then. Their consciences will not permit them to "cut loose" from God and their love for the world which is so dear to them keeps them from coming out and taking a real stand for him. The Church must stand rigidand not bend to the whims of the world. This she has not done and as a result we have, —lukewarmness and the church filled with wood, hay and stubble more than with real Christians.

And you know God's attitude toward such present conditions. The words are: "—because thou art lukewarm, neither hot nor cold, I will spue thee out of my mouth." This isn't a very pleasant thought for the church of the Laodicean type but it is God's word and will come to pass just as sure as the sun will rise tomorrow morning.

If we are wholly on the Lord's side the world will have us. If we practice that which we profess the world doesn't have much for us. The majority of Christians seem to be on very good terms with the world: no signs of hatred. Why should they not be; for what has the world to hate in them? Nothing. Don't oppose the devil and he's your best friend. If your religion meets the hearty approval of the World; if you can be unequally yoked together with it; if the world loves and admires you, put it down that there is something wrong with your Christianity. You are on the wrong road. True aposles of Christ can only expect the world's ridicule for that is all that is promised us in this life,—suffering at the hands of the world. The true church always has been and always will be a suffering minority. Let us patiently endure and labor till the return of our Lord which we feel is not far distant. The very thought of this should keep the Christian on the tip-toe of expectancy. Surely we can endure all things as a good soldier of Jesus Christ while we wait his glorious coming.

"And Serve the Cause of Freedom"

BY BISHOP WM. A. QUAYLE

This motto, I, in common with other Americans, read on some of the cards put out by the government, urging some of its measures. The motto is fine. I now purpose making an application of it.

The present war is a war in behalf of a lasting peace and a decent peace. It is a war to put a stop to the brutalities and bestialities which have made the name of the German a stench surpassing the name of the Turk. This is a grievous statement. I wish it were not true. Its horror is that it is all truth. No pen can portray the systematic horror of thievery, arson, adultery, debauchery, orgies of brutality, and sheer delight in doing deeds which would make hell blush.

The United States is forced into a war against the tolerated existence of such sins, against decency, womanhood, childhood, manhood, citizenship, common safety and morality. It is a great, just war, and must be fought to a finish of those things against which we battle.

The American people is called on by the government to make every type of sacrifice. Taxes at every turn, gifts of money in such amounts as stagger the imagination, gifts of sons, curtailments in every department of life, and belongings. We are put on a diet in the name of the safety of the world. It is a great exploit. I do not criticise it. I laud it.

But what I do do is to demand in the name of Christian people that these demands upon them be logical and coherent. Let the government not forget that we are in a moral struggle. This is not an economic struggle. This is a humanitarian struggle. It is a struggle not only for human rights, but for a chance for humanity to be decent. We must not let pro-German voices throw dust in our eyes. We are not concerned in Germany's future economic welfare. Indeed, Germany ought to have no future economic opportunity unless she repents in ashes and blood of her systematic atrocities, violations of international, human, and divine laws, and binds herself to behave decently henceforth, and since her word is worthless (a paper scrap) as all her proceedings have shown, she must be made to give hostage to civilization for the performance of her bond. Germany has no honor to give ther word any validity. This is a battle for Christian decency to have peaceful ascendency, and sovereignty. To end without that were to play the idiot. Christianity is the voice that is speaking in this war against the Central Shamelessness. Therefore, the Government of the United States does well to consider the Christian conscience and the Christian demand. Not what do the American German beer makers want, but what do the un-German American Christians want, is what the administration is bound to consider.

We have the "wheatless day" and the "meatless day," but where is the "whiskyless day" and the "beerless day?" We shall save food more by the elimination of this moral menace than by all the hurrah and printing and hiring multitudinous employes with the consequent enormous expense of administration of the food administration.

We are told that food is to win the war, we are told that there is a shortage of food to feed the Allied armies, we are told that unless we can save fats, sugars, meats, wheat, rye, the war will be jeopardized or lost. I believe all this is so. Doesn't the Government believe this is so? You say, "it says so." True. But does it act so? If the danger is so imminent, why not save food—65,000,000 bushels of it—by one stroke of the pen? It is in the President's hand to do so. Let him write that document and sign it, which would be the most important document to which he has ever attached his name. Do away with beer, that is the gigantic business of the hour in the interest of food conservation. If the world food supply is menaced, and the world food imperiled, why not "Serve the cause of freedom" by doing the thing that would meet the moral approval of the world? Save enough breadstuffs at a single stroke to go well on toward breading the world armies day by day?

I notice the food administration feels the pressure of the Christian attitude, and subtracts 30 per cent foodstuffs from beer. And in its statement gives assent apparently to the estimate of Professor Fisher of Yale, that the foodstuff used in the making of beer would supply a daily ration of about 7,000,000 loaves of bread. Multiply that by 365, and you have a perfectly alarming product—namely, 2, 500,000,000 loaves in a year! I am not authority for these figures but take the estimate of Professor Fisher, which by the newspaper report the food administration cited. Is it sanely thinkable that in a world crisis for civilization, virtue, and chance for women to remain chaste and men to remain decent, the government can hesitate a millionth part of a second as to what its duty is? I profess the thing is incongruous and even grotesque. If we are in this pickle for food, why does the government act that way? That is what, we have a right to demand here. The food administration and all the government administration are free to make use of the churches. We are glad this is so, but may mildly insist that it is likewise binding on the government to consider the conscience of the churches and the religious enlightenment of the churches.

Is the need for food what the Government avers? If so, why does not the Government save as it asks all citizens to save? Why not a beerless war, and why not a wineless war, and why not a whiskeyless war? If some one should say, "We have a whiskyless country," the reply is that it is not accurate truth. We are not allowing whisky to be made, but the distillers have three year's whisky on hand, and may well ease up on making when the supply is adequate. We have enough whisky on hand to keep us drunk for a three-year period. We may still be whisky-full. A few days ago the food administration gave out its information about a 30 per cent cut in foodstuff used in beer. We should save, it suggested, 2, 500,000 loaves of bread a day by this cut of 30 percent. Are they playing with us? Do they think we have never studied percentage? If 30 per cent will do so well why not make it 100 per cent? That is the logic of the per cent, and anything less is camouflage. Christian America demands it. Pro-German beer makers demand that 100 per cent foodstuffs be used and Christian Americans not pro-Germans demand that 100 per cent foodstuffs now used in making beer be made into bread, and that not any per cent be drunk. Which voice will the government heed?

But the food administration is doling out this 30 per cent reduction in beer gives a dose of supposedly ethical advice. It said (as condoning the tolerance of beer and its immense consumption of bread in the making of it, to say nothing of the consumption of sugar) that beer did not make people drunk to the extent that whisky did, and that inasmuch as there was an abundance of whisky on hand to drink for years to come, the temperate thing was to continue the making of beer. In the interest of greater temperance, let us be intemperate and importunate in drinking food that should be eaten. Have we forgotten the motto, "And Serve the Cause of Freedom?"

To this whimsical statement of the food administration I rejoin it is (1) illogical, (2) unpatriotic, (3) insagacious, (4) inethical, (5) unworthy of the government in a world peril hour.

1. It is illogical in that it were better to drink beer than whisky. The real logic is, drink neither. Who said either had to stay? If we can save nearly 2,000,000,000 loaves of bread in a year for the soldiers by eliminating beer, we may very morally eliminate the use of whisky, which only makes us boozy and drunk. The logic of the food administration's attitude would be total abstinence during the war.

2. It is insagacious. It does not tend to stabilize the opinion of the Americans in the accuracy of the thinking and acting of the governmental authorities. The common people of us are not so unsophisticated that we cannot see a loaf of bread and a stein of beer, and know that a stein of beer drunk, the drinker is made worse, and a loaf of bread made is a solider fed.

The Government will do well to cogitate a while on the braininess of the average American citizen.

3. It is unethical. It serves to cloud the issue. It offers us a temperance view of an intemperance action. Beer is not temperance and it eats food. The cause of temperance is not served by drinking beer. I would not agree that beer is less harmful than whisky. Whisky kills sooner; beer lets people live longer, but stupefies their mental and moral powers. Beer has made Germany the horrid moral apathy it is, until no indecency of procedure causes a blush. Beer stupefies the moral faculties to such a degree as to scare the world. The ethical attitude is no beer, no wine, no whisky.

4. It is unpatriotic. If our soldier boys are to be fed, ammunition carried safely in ships to the battle front, so that they do not die on the battlefield with no accoutrement of food and care, then the Government should speak bravely out and say: "In the name of our men and women and safety of America, and the whole earth, and for the perpetuatio of the decencies which the truthless Hun is set to defy and to des and to abolish, food must not be wasted in making good brea into bad beer, and there must be no drunkenness among wor! or soldier while the war lasts." That would be patriotism of a com. manding order, and would evoke patriotism of a commanding order.

We are all busy trying to stand behind the Government. Let the Government stand behind us. When I once wrote to an official touching this business I was told (evidently my letter not having been perused carefully) that prohibition was not a matter now before us. I had not mentioned prohibition. I had talked of food conservation. Here I talk of food conservation, man conservation, freedom conservation.

At this minute of writing, the President of the United States has the power given him by Congress to stop food being used in making beer. Christian America demands he stop it!

I do not care who does this business, President or Congress. But we want somebody to do it. Will the President and Congress weigh its own motto and do the things that will Serve the Cause of Freedom?"

The Greatest Question of the Age

BY THE REV. CHAS. STELZLE

Christianity is not dependent upon the infallibility of the Church nor of the Bible. The Church and the Bible are simply a means to an end, and not an end in themselves. Their purpose is the revelation of God in Jesus Christ.

Therefore, the chief question that men are called upon to answer is not, What do you think of this doctrine, or that church, or that system of theology, but "What think ye of Christ?" Gladstone once said that this is the greatest question of the age.

You might be asked, "What do you think of Plato, of Socrates, or Shakespeare?" and you could dismiss the matter with an off-hand reply. But this question asked of Christ passes into the most practical and the most personal of questions, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus?" The question becomes insistent. Men cannot get away from it. It will follow them to the ends of the earth. They may become angry because of its presence, but does not this prove that it is no ordinary question? To dismiss it by saying that Jesus was simply a great reformer will not satisfy. To say that he was only a good man, or that he was a great teacher, but simply one of many teachers, brings the consciousness that one is only dodging the ussie,

It is frequently stated that Christ came to establish an Ideal Republic or that he sought to inaugurate a Utopian Democracy. Neither statement is true. His own words indicate that it was his purpose to establish an Absolute Monarchy, a Kingdom, of which He should be the Head. This Kingdom is to embrace all those who will acknowledge His Kingship.

Therefore, when some social reformer select from among the words of Jesus a few catch-words, which have to do only with certain social affairs, rejecting everything else that meets with their disapproval, especially that which applies to their personal lives, and then claim to be the only bona-fide followers of Jesus Christ, they are leaving out of their consideration altogether some of the most important parts of Christ's plan for the complete emancipation of mankind.

"What think ye of Christ?" Workingmen cannot afford to evade Him. He is too often quoted by them. He is too great a factor in their lives. More and more will this be true.

The Greatest Miracle of the Ages

One of the greatest miracles of all ages is the salvation of the soul. There is, however, one greater, and that is the one that makes this a possibility and a glorious reality, the miracle of the Incarnation, crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The evangelization of the individual, of the people in cities, towns and rural districts and of the world at large, is a tremendous task, and this task is laid upon the churches of Jesus Christ. There is a sense in which the church of Christ as an organization is to perpetuate the work which Christ inaugurated while here on earth. The church possesses the ability and has the means by which to accomplish it. It has been estimated that this work could be accomplished in twenty-five years if she would measure up to her ability, to her opportunities and responsibilities, properly utilize her means and multiplied resources. If the latent forces in the church could be stirred and utilized what wonderful achievements could be realized in the near future for the salvation of the world. "The harvest is ripe" and the sickle should be thrust in a vigorous fashion and the ripened grain gathered for Christ and the church.

God in his All-wise providence furnishes the opportunities for the church to accomplish this great task. Doors inviting and effectual are open everywhere. It requires aggressiveness, boldness and mighty faith in God to meet the enemy of religion and all manner of falseisms fairly and squarely. She must seek the lost, in the highways and in the hedges—everywhere, and then bring them to Christ. They must be found and saved. The ability and the opportunity of the church implies her tremendous responsibility. "Awake, awake, O Zion, put on thy strength, put on thy beautiful garments." The Christian church must be aroused throughout the world, and rise in the strength of Christ to conquer the world of mankind for Christ. She needs and must have Pentecostal power, Pentecostal fire, Pentecostal efficiency and Pentecostal courage.—Selected.

A Plea for the Jews

Ye who are thankful to God for his love,
Knowing all blessings come down from above,
For the gift of his Son, and his own precious Word,
For the Spirit revealing Christ Jesus the Lord,
Do you sufficiently feel in your heart
Grateful to Israel for the great part
They have played in bringing these blessings to you?
For their salvation, what do you do?

Ye who in prayer to your God oft are found,
Praying his work upon earth may abound,
Praying with strong intercession each day,
That all whom you love may know Jesus the Way.
Do you remember God's people the Jews?
Praying that they may receive the good news,
That they may believe in Christ Jesus the Lord,—
Their promised Messiah—and trust in his word?

Ye who give largely to spread the good news,
Do you say earnestly, "First to the Jews"?
"First let the children be filled," is his will,
What are you doing, that will to fulfil?
"They prosper who love thee" still holds good and true,
May such a rich blessing then come upon you.
May Israel be led the dear Savior to own,
And put their whole trust in his merits alone!

—M. A. Edwards.

Pensions for the Clergy

The laymen of the Methodist Episcopal church are conducting a vigorous campaign to raise a fund to pension its aged, infirm and indigent clergy and the needy widows and orphans of deceased clergymen. It deserves to be successful and, no doubt, will be.

It is a worthy and practical movement entirely in keeping with the general movement for social justice that is uplifting the American people. It is a part of a movement which nearly every Protestant denomination is carrying on. To turn a faithful minister adrift in his old age or because of his physical infirmities, and dole him out a bare existence as "charity," is a reflection on Christianity and church organizations.

On the whole the salary of ministers of the gospel is a disgrace. Their zeal to labor in the vineyard of the Lord is burning, and their faith in a divinity that shapes our destinies is strong, or they wouldn't remain in the ministry. The country over, the average salary of ministers is less than $600 a year.

The ethics of their calling prevent them from engaging in many "side lines" which are properly pursued by other professional men who need to piece out their income. The proprieties of their calling demand that they dress themselves and their families respectably and enable their household to keep up a presentable appearance. They must contribute to charitable work, within and without their church. They must keep up with the intellectual progress of the world, which requires expenditures for literature of various kinds. They must be a pastor to their congregation, a counsellor to their community, and a leader in public movements for public uplift. All this requires expenditures beyond the routine of household affairs.

It is only just that men who bear the heat and burden of the day in unremitting and poorly compensated work for the betterment of mankind should not be left to battle with penury in their declining years. The men who preside at the most sacred of human rites, and who bring consolation in the darkest of human hours, are deserving of better things as they travel down the slope of years. Their evening of life should not be clouded nor fretted by physical privations due to financial embarrassments.

Their parishioners and communities owe them deliverance from this dread. Their parishioners and communities owe it to themselves and their sense of self-respect to guarantee this deliverance by creating and sustaining a pension fund for retired clergymen and their dependents.—The New Orleans Item.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

After a somewhat prolonged silence Brother Lyon has come to us once again with a bit of news from Washington. It is easy to understand how he can be kept busy in an attempt to answer all the demands made upon him by his local congregation and then to be called upon so frequently by parents from all over the brotherhood who would have him look after their boys who have been called into the service of Uncle Sam. Brother Lyon has only praise for Secretary Baker for the fine spirit in which he receives the intercessions of those who appeal to him for relief from bearing arms because of religious convictions.

We are sure the entire brotherhood will rejoice with brother E. H. Smith because of the splendid work he has been able to do for the Master in Kittanning, Pennsylvania. Twenty members have been added to the church by baptism and others are awaiting the sacred rite, and the work has hardly been started in that city. Brother Smith is surely an earnest pastor.

Brother Trent's additional report of the offerings received from the "White Gifts Service" of Christmas time shows that while a few schools have been slow in reporting they at least made reports worth while. Another report like this one will bring the offering up to $2500.00 or more. The American people are only beginning to learn how to give. This may be one of the blessings that is to come from the terrible war.

Since the Berlin, Pennsylvania charge has been without a pastor nothing has been heard from that place, and since Brother Alvin Byers has not been actively engaged in the ministry for some time not much has been heard from him, but we are glad to have a report from both this week. Answering a call from Berlin Brother and Sister Byers began a meeting there in January and in spite of the very cold weather and the serious illness of Sister Byers a most splendid meeting was held with eighteen confessions. We are glad for both Brother Byers and for the Berlin church for this splendid meeting.

It has been so long since any thing had been heard from E. M. Cobb that some of us had begun to wonder what had become of him any way; but we need no longer remain in suspense as his letter in this week's paper makes it known that he is very much alive on the Pacific coast. For six months he has been very busy with his lectures on the Holy Land. It is of peculiar interest to the American people to learn of the Holy Land since the country has come under the influence of the British armies.

The Altoona, Pennsylvania church does not need to wait for a revival meeting to have something of interest happen, but just now thay are in the midst of a revival meeting under the direction of G. T. Ronk which the pastor pronounces a "great" revival. According to the theories of many people who have observed great revivals in the past, the present world crisis should bring to the American people one of the greatest revivals in a century, and we feel sure Brother Benshoff will do his part to bring it to pass.

Last week we published a report of the revival meeting at Middlebranch as given by the pastor, but this week we publish a report of the same meeting as given by one of the sisters in the church. Often such a report is of special interest because of the different view point taken by the different writers. We are glad to have this report from Sister DeWick.

Our readers will have to excuse the spirit of exhilaration manifested by the writer of Ashland College notes this week as he was one of the players on the winning team in the interstate game of basket ball which he reports this week. But any one who reads Brother Lambert's notes will readily observe that their are activities about the College other than that of basket ball. Sometimes these constitute some of the knotty problems that must be handled by the House Council as explained by the writer of the notes. Great preparations are being made for the giving of the senior class play by the Ashland student members of that class.

We have no apologies to make for publishing the great temperance address recently given by Bishop Quayle. In the first place Bishop Quayle is one of the master minds of America and when he speaks upon any subjects it is worth while to listen, but when he has so good a theme as that of nationwide probition there is no excuse for not listening to what he has to say. He preaches sound doctrine and we would commend it to our readers.

Since the Gribble party has arrived safely in Africa our readers will be glad for the letter from Dr. Florence N. Gribble. Her report of the work done in Africa and of how insignificant that work is when compared to Africa's great need should set our people to thinking before they make their Easter offering for foreign missions." Brethren think on these things.

The program for the Ohio State Conference appears this week. A few slight changes may be made in the program before the meeting of the conference but the principle features will remain the same.

Martinsburg and New Enterprise, Pennsylvania have been good fields for the Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes. First Brother Hall ordered seventeen copies and then Brother Byers ordered twenty copies and then the other day we sent him fifteen additional copies. If other pastors would take an equal interest in the sale of this splendid report the surplus of the booklets we now have on hand would be greatly reduced.

Not many ines of work have been any more severely affected by the peculiar industrial conditions that have been brought on by the war than the printing business. The impossibility of securing sufficient skilled help as operators, composers or pressmen has worked havoc with many a print shop. And the Brethren Publishing Company has proved no exception to the common experience. This situation has compelled some of our publications to be a little late and then congested mail service has made matters worse. In order to get our supplies out in time for the coming quarter we have been compelled to have some of our composition as well as some of our press work done by outside establishments and it has taken considerable persuasion to get these busy firms that are themselves short of help to come to our assistance.

We ask the churches and Sunday schools to be patient with us and to keep in mind the sign on the wall in a frontier dance hall, "Please don't shoot the pianist, he is doing the best he can."

This number of the Evangelist is bound to be one day late in spite of our efforts to get it out on time by having the Garber Company make it for us, as this company found it impossible to do the press work because of their own shortage of help and we had to do that part of the work ourselves after all. But in about two weeks more we expect to catch up with the work and then settle down to normal conditions.

Brother Beachler's experience at Dutchtown, Indiana, was one of the happy surprises that break the monotony of a long campaign for College Endowment. In some of the unexpected places the most enthusiastic support to the College is found and such small congregations as Dutchtown often prove to indeed be "the salt of the earth." The response to our campaign secretary's appeal from such churches should inspire other and larger churches to put forth their best efforts to make the campaign a success.

Around the Editor's Table

District Conferences

The first district conference of any of the Brethren churches for the year nineteen eighteen will be that of the Ohio district at Fremont next month. These district conferences are of as great importance in many ways to the churches as the General Conference is, but it is rather a sad condition of affairs that they do not appeal to the people in the same way. Numbers are not actually necessary to a good conference, but it is exceedingly difficult to develop any kind of enthusiasm without numbers. One coal of fire alone will not make much heat, but put a number of live coals together and their warmth can be felt all around.

While the rules of the Ohio conference provide that a pastor who absents himself from the conference without excuse can not have the conference seal attached to his yearly ministerial credentials and thus a good attendance of the pastors is usually assured, there has always been a dearth of laymen in attendance at the Ohio conferences.

Sometimes it is said that the chief reason is to be found in the fact that the conference program is made up almost entirely of ministers and the laymen of the district feel they have no recognized place in the work of the conference. An attempt to overcome this difficulty has been made more than once, but here the greatest difficulty is found in getting the laymen who may be assigned places on the program to quit their home business long enough to fill their place on the program. For a number of years now the secretary of the conference and a member of the program committee has been a layman; and although he is a busy school man he makes an effort and finds time to attend the conference. If we had a few more laymen in the state like Brother Mason it would not be so difficult to give them places on the program. But the Ohio churches as well as the churches of all other districts should endeavor to make the 1918 conferences really count in getting the work of our great Program before the people.

Zeal for Missions

The point has been reached in the life of the Christian church where it is not considered good taste, let alone being good Christianity, to express one's self as being opposed to foreign missions. If one should actually feel that way he knows better than to bring the disapproval of his fellow-Christians upon himself by saying so and consequently he remains quiet. But while he remains quiet and offers no active objections to missionary work we feel that too often such a one, and sometimes in rather large numbers, gives expression to his indifference if not his opposition by remaining away from missionary services and by not cooperating with his home church in making up the amount of its annual missionary offering.

One of the essentials of a missionary campaign is that zeal shall be both aroused and expressed, but there is a difference in zeal and the kind of zeal to which expression is given has very much to do with the response that comes from the people. The American people have passed the stage where they can be successfully moved by a zeal that is not accompanied by knowledge. While the people may be blind they have no desire to be led by the blind, and thus missionary knowledge and missionary information are among the first requisites of a missionary leader, if he would stir up any manner of enthusiasm among those whom he would lead in this very essential Christian activity.

As to the effectiveness of zeal, David Lloyd George said: "There is a hot zeal and a cold zeal and the greatest things of the world have been accomplished by the latter." We may not be able to give the correct interpretation to Mr. George's statement, but we take it to mean that the greatest things of the world have been accomplished by men who have had a zeal based upon actual knowledge and upon a fixed determination to accomplish a set purpose without considering the effectiveness of their appeal to others, rather than by men of an emotional temperament who would undertake some great task simply because they FEEL that it is their's to do. The man who accomplishes great things is the man who feels the need and then calmly sits down and counts the cost, "whether after having begun the building of a tower he shall have sufficient money to complete it," or "whether with five thousand men he be able to go out and meet his enemy with ten thousand men." This taking time to count the cost is plain, practical common sense and has received the approval of the Lord himself.

The executive board of our foreign missionary society has carefully estimated the probable cost of the missionary work under the direction of this society and has made an appeal for that amount from the Easter offering of the church. With the same cool determination to meet the requirements each church should resolve to do its proportionate share in making up the amount asked by the missionary society. Anything less will prove a great hindrance to the missionary cause.

Profanity in the Pulpit

One of the old sayings of the country used to express a very serious prevailing habit of an individual is: "He swears like a trooper." Undoubtedly one of the most common after effects of a war is an increased use of profanity. The common or even the excessive use of profanity is more noticeable in some sections of the country than in others. In some towns or villages it is to be noticed that the small boys have a greater vocabulary of profane words than in other communities.

In an effort to fix the attention of the people on the message he would bring to them sometimes a preacher employs the language of the street, not alone in its crudity, but too often in its profanity. Though this method has been employed on occasion by some of the great preachers of the world with telling, if not shocking, effect its common use by the "near" great preachers can hardly be justified under any circumstances.

The Watchman-Examiner, Boston, finds the common use of imprecatory terms "disgusting to every right minded person," and speaks of the use of such language in the pulpit in the following terms:

"Years ago Dr. Joseph Parker, of the London City Temple, startled and shocked the world by exclaiming in the midst of an impassioned denunciation of Turkish atrocities, 'God damn the Turk!' Such an invective, and others of a similar character, with another application and objective, have become so common nowadays that they neither startle nor shock us as the original utterance did. But ought we not to be startled and shocked? Are such expressions in the pulpit or in supposedly religious speech in accord with the spirit and temper of the gospel for which the pulpit stands? Would it not be well to leave the matter of dealing with the eternal destinies of those responsible for this wicked war entirely in the hands of a God who is almighty, merciful, and just? There is no excuse in these days for smooth sayings and mincing words: no excuse for a man in whose soul is not seething hot and furious hatred for the iniquitous war, and fierce indignation against those whose cruel ambitions and lustful passions have thrust it upon us. But there is no excuse for the minister who in his endeavor to declare that hatred allows himself to use words and phrases that in any other connection and directed toward any other objective he would be the first to condemn as profane. Even tho he might justify to himself his strong words by the plea of extreme provocation, it would not be strange if the average boy in the congregation before him failed to catch the essential and saving distinction between damning the Kaiser and damning anything else against which for any reason resentment might rise. Men who stand as representatives of religion should be ever on the alert against anything that smacks of extravagance."

Church Statistics

The greatest church statistician in all the world is Dr. H. K. Carroll, and while the accuracy of his statistical reports must depend upon the accuracy with which the official bodies of the various churches of America do their work his general conclusions may be usually depended upon.

In his work of gathering statistics from the churches for the year 1917 it has been learned that while the financial gains of the churches has been very marked over against this is the apparent fact thay there has been quite a noticeable falling off in the numerical gains. Among the churches which are largely made up of a foreign population the explanation is easy, but it is a more difficult task for the all-American church to give an account of its smaller gains.

The great gains made in the financial resources and in the contributions to the welfare work of the world through the channels of the churches and their auxiliary organizations has been stated by Dr. Carroll thus:

"The financial resources of the Churches, heavily taxed by contributions to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, and similar organizations for the care of soldiers and sailors of our own and allied countries, and for the relief of war-devastated populations, have not failed to support generously their own church and benevolent work. Besides the many millions going through general and denominational channels for war-purposes, the leading Churches show large increases in the amounts contributed for missions, home and foreign, and other denominational enterprises. The Presbyterian Church (Northern) gave $4,250,000 to its missions, an increase of $500,000 and for all denominational purposes, $31,000,000, a net increase of over $3,000,000. The Methodist Episcopal Church gave $5,500,000 to its missions, an increase of $250,000, besides special contributions of many millions to educational, endowment, and ministerial pension funds. It plans to raise for its missions $15,000,000 a year for the next five years. The Protestant Episcopal Church finished its ministerial pension fund at the end of February last, for which it raised nearly $8,750,000, $3,750,000 beyond the goal it had set. Its total contributions for other denominational purposes reached the sum of $25,500,000, an increase of $1,400,000.

"Altogether it has been a great year for the churches, which show a strong tendency to increase of cooperation and federation, finding, despite differences in creed and church government, much common ground for harmonious work in caring for the nation's armed forces and in assisting our Government in furthering the purposes of the war in every way possible."

Modern Missionary Efficiency

From Fenchow station as a center, the American Board, with a staff of thirteen American missionaries, and 120 Chinese evangelists, teachers, medical assistants and Bible women, is carrying on a great work in West China, in a territory practically untouched by any other evangelizing agency. Systematic methods are being used. First comes a careful investigation of the country; its agricultural, timber and mineral resources and the natural centers of population, so that permanent stations shall be wisely planted. In the past, points selected for missionary occupation have sometimes proved undesirable from a practical point of view.

With these surveys, the mission force is able wisely to locate its churches, hospitals, dispensaries, and opium refuges, its network of schools ranging from a theological and Bible training school down through the normal, high and grammar grades to the kindergarten. In the short space of ten years a splendid equipment, strategically located, has come into being, the Gospel being preached each week in seventy-seven different places and the printing press last year sending forth nearly three hundred thousand pages designed to uplift the people socially, economically and religiously. The mission conducts a Bible Study circle among the gentry, officials and literati, with an enrollment of 350 men. One church has grown in the decade from 37 members to 350 and in the whole field 4,000 church members have been gathered.

An Arnold of Ruby for China.

A boston Business man, who heard Chang Po-Ling speak at the recent annual meeting of the American Board, said: "It was worth a trip from Boston to Columbus just to look into the face of that man. I had no idea there were such Chinese. A similar impression was made upon all who heard this splendid product of missionary work in China. Dr. Wallace Buttrick, the Secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation, upon returning from a trip to China, compared Mr. Chang to the great pagoda on the Yangtsze River, which dominates the landscape for many miles around. So towers this man above his fellows. President Eliot, of Harvard, spoke of Chang Po-Ling as the most interesting person he met in China. Mr. Chang is a member of the independent Congregational Church of Tientsin. He conducts a Christian school of 800 boys, which many consider to be the best school in the land. His influence upon these boys is seen in their erect, soldierly bearing, their careful attention to cleanliness in person and apparel, their intellectual keenness, their patriotism and their earnest Christian character. Mr. Chang has come to the United States to place twelve of his graduates in American Christian colleges, and on his own part to engage in study at the Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York. He is an impassioned advocate of Christianity as the only hope of China. No one should lose a chance to hear and see this man. He will give one a new idea of the power of the missionary movement.

Chinese Memorizing the Bible.

In spite of the conflict in which almost the entire world is engaged, the year 1917 has been the greatest in the history of the Bible Success Band; and the number of booklets issued for 1918 promises to be almost double that of the past year. In China alone over 25,000 of the 1917 booklets were called for; and it is expected that at least 50,000 of the 1918 booklets will be issued in Chinese. The Chinese Christians realize fully the blessing that comes from memorizing Scripture; and the missionaries are keenly interested in promoting the movement throughout the Republic.

It is probable that in China and Korea over 16,000,000 verses will be memorized next year. In Korea, one may see at any time a Bible propped up on the ironing board, the wash tub, or the kitchen table and the earnest faces show that the workers are "meditating thereon day and night."—The Sunday School Times.

Changes in Tsinanfu.

"Never has the country been more open in every direction to outside influence," writes James B. Neal, M. D. "We who have lived in Tsinanfu for twenty-five years and more can scarcely believe that it is the same city which in former days was one of the most hostile in the country, and most opposed to anything in the way of Western improvements. From being one of the most backward cities, it has changed to be one of the most progressive of the provincial capitals with its foreign settlement, the streets of which are well macadamized, broad and electric lighted; with its numerous schools of every grade from the lowest elementary to its large normal school of several hundred students, its law school, its agricultural, commercial and industrial schools, and with a new medical school being planned on Western lines. Two evangelists in the employ of the Bible Institute which is a rather notable part of the Christian work in Tsinanfu and now incorporated with the Shantung Christian University as its Department of University Extension, have within the past few months visited over two thousand persons in various shops in the city in order to establish friendly relations with them and draw their attention to the claims of Christianity.

Missionary Influence in China.

Bishop Cassels of Western China, writes: "Never in my experience of thirty years have missionaries had so much influence with officials, people and even with brigand chiefs, as during the past months. Again and again have they been called in to act as peace-makers or go-betweens. They have secured protection for ousted officials and for defenceless women and children; they have obtained from brigands more moderate terms for the cities they have captured; they have even secured safe passage for Government troops through districts held by powerful brigand bands. . . . Speaking generally, and remembering that there are exceptions, the progress of our work has not been much hindered by the great unrest. Where the missionaries have gained influence by the part they have been allowed to take, it may be hoped that the upheavel will turn out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel."—The Mission Field.

Norwegian Missions in China.

The union of the three leading Norwegian Lutheran Church bodies in the United States into the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America has been followed by union on the mission field. The first regular conference of the Chinese Missions has been held and will be known as the Lutheran United Mission. The new mission carries on its work at 15 stations and out-stations. According to 1915 statistics, the Chinese workers totaled 282; the communicants, 2,618; the total Christian constituency, 5,628.

More than half the continent of Africa, in square miles, is still without missionary work of any kind.

Rev. Ding Li-Mei, of China, has not only influenced large numbers of his countrymen to enter the Christian ministry, but has inspired many to imitate his habits of intercession. He keeps a prayer list which now numbers over 2,300 names.

During Dr. Zwemer's recent visit to the Moslems of China, the Ahung (or Mullah) of the new mosque in Hankow joined with him and others in a Christian prayer.

Many children from Mohammedan families attend Christian mission schools in China. Their parents attend Christian preaching services. These facts show how accessible is the large, but almost untouched, Moslem element in the population of China.

In view of world conditions and the examples set in war time, the eight hundred student volunteers, at their recent convention in Northfield, Massachusetts, called for more missionaries, greater sacrifice in giving, more persistent effort and more earnest prayer on the part of all Christians for missionary work at home and abroad. An outstanding Christian Chinese, Chang Po-Ling, the principal of a remarkable school of 800 boys, is now in this country, in order to place twelve of his graduates in Christian colleges, and to engage in a course of study himself.

In spite of China's brave efforts to rid herself of the curse of opium, the end is not yet, inasmuch as opium is now being grown in Korea for export, with not only the connivance but the encouragement of certain Japanese officials.

The Christian College in Teheran, Persia, includes in its enrollment of 540 students 350 Moslem boys, most of whom belong to the most influential families in the land.

The British Government, having decided that all German influence must be eliminated from the work of the Basel Mission on the Gold Coast of Africa, the United Free Church of Scotland has been asked to look after the 25,000 baptized Christians in the Mission, and the thousands of pupils in the schools.

Twelve Japanese school principals who have recently visited the United States were given opportunities by Christian leaders to study the work of the Sunday-school.

There are at present seventy-four Buddhist temples in the United States, most of them on the Pacific Coast, where converts are being made from among Americans, as well as Japanese.

DISQUALIFIED

Erica Gilbert sank into the rocking-chair and fanned herself with a magazine.

"This is the hottest day we have had this year," she said. "You are lucky to be able to stay indoors, mother."

Mrs. Gilbert, who had spent the afternoon finishing a new dress for Erica to wear to a party the next day, was not so sure of her good fortune. She had thought wistfully that it would be pleasant to have leisure to spend an hour in the hammock, with a book. She only said, however: "Where have you been, Erica?"

"Down to the library to change my book. Then I went in to see Louise Hull. Oh, such interesting news, mother! Louise says a family from the city has taken the old Bolsover place. Their name is Gleason; he is an artist, whose health has broken down. Mrs. Gleason was a teacher of modern languages before her marriage, and she has traveled all over Europe. She wants to get pupils for a French class here. I do wish I could take lessons from her; it is the chance of a lifetime."

"I'm sorry, Erica, but I do not see how it can be managed," Mrs. Gilbert said, slowly. "Your father is rather worried about business just now."

"Oh, I did not mean to ask father for the money," Erica said. "But Louise told me another piece of news. Mrs. Upton who teaches the primary grade, has resigned, on account of her mother's ill health. She is leaving at the end of the month—that is only two weeks off—and, of course, they must have some one at once to fill her place. I am going to write an application this afternoon. If I get that position, I can afford to take the French lessons."

"There will probably be a great many applicants," Mrs. Gilbert said.

"No, because the school board wishes to give the preference to graduates of our own high school. That means either me or Louise, since all the other girls are already teaching, and I think I have a better chance than Louise. I stood higher in my classes."

"You are forgetting Christine Stoddard," her mother reminded her.

"Oh, Christine doesn't count," Erica laughed. "She works in Clark's store, you know. She never had any ambition."

"She has to support her mother. I suppose she was compelled to take the first work that offered."

"At any rate, I do not think she is a rival I need fear," Erica said. "I think I will go now and write my application."

Erica went upstairs. Soon Mrs. Gilbert heard her calling: "Mother, where is the ink? I left it in my room."

"I brought it downstairs," Mrs. Gilbert called back.

"What? I can't hear you, mother."

With a sigh, Mrs. Gilbert rose and went to the door of the room.

"The ink is down here, where it belongs," she said.

"Oh, bother! Nothing ever stays in the same place in this house," Erica grumbled, as she came downtairs again."

"I do wish, Erica, that you would give up this habit of shouting at some one in another room," her mother said. "It is very rude."

"Oh, life is too short to stand on ceremony with one's own family," was Erica's careless answer.

For the next few days Erica walked on air. She was sure she would get the position, and she had already planned several additions to her wardrobe, which she felt would be justified when she was earning $60 a month. She meant to begin her French lessons as soon as she was sure of her appointment.

One afternoon, a week later, Erica was hurriedly dressing to go out. She took a muslin dress from the closet and scanned it critically. "Decidedly rumpled," she said, "I shall have to wear a shirtwaist, and my white linen skirt. Oh, bother, where is that skirt? I don't believe mother ironed it this morning, after all."

She went out on the landing and called "Mother!" over the banister, but there was no answer. Erica went back to her room, which was over the living-room, and pounded on the floor with her umbrella. The door of the living-room opened.

"Please do not make that noise, Erica," Mrs. Gilbert said.

"Mother, where is my white linen skirt?" Erica called. "I can't find it."

"I'm sotrry," her mother began, "but—"

"Do you mean to say you didn't iron it?" Erica cried, stamping her foot with vexation.

"I had no time, dear; I had to do up Allan's white shirt."

"Oh, of course Allan must always come first!" Erica cried. "Now, what am I going to wear to Louise's, I should like to know?"

"There is your white lawn; I ironed it yesterday."

"Yes, but you forgot to mend it. You never do anything I ask you."

"I'm sorry. I was very busy yesterday," Mrs. Gilbert murmured.

"But what am I to do?" Erica asked, with another stamp of her foot. "What is the use of saying you are sorry? That does no good."

"Erica, I think you are forgetting yourself," Mrs. Gilbrt said, severely. Then she retreated to the living room.

Erica was on the point of running downstairs and insisting that her mother iron the skirt at once, when she heard voices.

"Must you go?" her mother was saying. "I am so glad you called; I hope you will come again soon."

"Oh, horrors!" Erica exclaimed to herself. "I never dreamed mother had callers."

Running back to her room, she looked out of the window; she could just catch a glimpse of the departing visitor—why, it looked like Mrs. O'Brien.

"Mother, who was that?" she called downstairs.

"Mrs. O'Brien," was the answer.

"Oh!" Erica collapsed on the stairs. "Just my luck! Whatever will she think of me shouting and stamping that way? She is one of the school board, you know, and some people say she is the one who really decides what appointments shall be made. Why didn't you warn me? I had no idea you had callers."

"Really, Erica," Mrs. Gilbert replied, "you could hardly expect me to say: 'Do not shout and stamp, because Mrs. O'Brien is here'."

"But what will she think?" Erica groaned.

"I am afraid she will think that you are not very courteous to your mother," was the reply.

Mrs. O'Brien, meantime, had remembered that she needed some handkerchiefs, so she turned into Clark's department store. It was a "bargain day," she found, and a dense crowd surrounded a counter in the aisle, piled high with muslins. Two clerks were trying to satisfy the demands of the impatient shoppers, and Mrs. O'Brien was struck at once by the difference in manner of the two girls. One was pert and disobliging; she paid no attention to customers until they actually forced themselves on her notice. Then she would measure off the cloth with an indifferent air, and wrap it as slowly as if twenty customers were not waiting their turn. But the other girl was waiting on half a dozen women at once, meeting sharp and impatient words with a smile that acted like oil on troubled water.

"Have you any more of this green muslin with the black dot?" a tired-looking woman asked the first clerk.

"I don't know, madam; all the goods are on the counter," was the indifferent answer.

"No, madam," the pleasant clerk was saying to another customer, "the pink muslins are all gone. Oh, yes, we really had them as advertised, but they have been sold. Would you care for pale blue?" "Yes, madam, I think there is some brown in that pile in the middle of the counter," she added to a third shopper, while she wrapped the package of a fourth. "I will look in one moment."

Mrs. O'Brien went toward the back of the store, where the proprietor was busy in the furniture department. He came forward with a word of apology as soon as he was at leisure.

"I didn't come to buy furniture," Mrs. O'Brien said. "I merely wanted to ask the name of a clerk at the muslin counter in the aisle."

"I am sorry if you have any cause for complaint," Mr. Clark began.

"But I haven't," Mrs. O'Brien interrupted. "I simply happened to notice this girl, and thought that I would like to know her name, so that I may always be sure of having her to wait on me when I need anything in that department. She is the taller of the two clerks."

"Oh, you mean the polite one," Mr. Clarke said, with an air of relief. "That is Miss Stoddard."

"Yes, her courtesy was what attracted my attention. She seems very capable too. You are fortunate to have such a clerk, Mr. Clark."

"I am, indeed," the merchant replied. "Usually I can not hope to get clerks who have had Miss Stoddard's educational advantages. She is a graduate of the high school here, and intended to be a teacher. But there was no vacancy in our local school, and she could not leave her mother, who is an invalid, so she took what offered."

"That was brave," Mrs. O'Brien replied. As she went down the aisle again, she lingered at the bargain-counter. The crowd was thinning now, and presently she had an opportunity of speaking to the tall clerk.

"You are Miss Stoddard, I know," she said. "We can not talk here, but could you come to see me this evening? I have heard of a better position which I think might suit you." She handed Christine her card as she spoke.

"You are very kind, Mrs. O'Brien," Christine said, glancing at the card. "Yes, I will come."

"About eight o'clock, then," Mrs. O'Brien said, as she turned away.

Next day the school board met to decide on the applications. The chairman called the meeting to order, and then went on:

"As you know, Mrs. O'Brien was appointed a committee of one to report on the only two applications we have received. They are those of Miss Louise Hull and Miss Erica Gilbert."

Mrs. O'Brien rose. "I am sorry," she said, "that I can not recommend either of these young ladies for the position."

"I know that neither of them has had any professional experience," the chairman admitted, "but a teacher must begin some time, you know. We are not born with experience."

"It is not that," Mrs. O'Brien replied. "Both the applicants are sufficiently well educated to teach a primary class. But we must consider other things besides scholarship. A teacher should be neat, businesslike, good natured, and, above all, courteous. I called at Miss Hull's house in the forenoon. I found her wearing a soiled wrapper, and dancing-slippers run down at the heels; her hair was in curl-papers. I do not think our children would learn neatness from her. That afternoon I called at Mrs. Gilbert's." She described the scene she had overheard. "Do you think Miss Gilbert is likely to teach our children courtesy?" she concluded.

"But it was decided not to go outside of the town, if possible," one of the board said, "and there are no other girls eligible."

"Pardon me, but I have here an application from Miss Christine Stoddard, a local girl, and graduate of our high school. I can speak from observation as to her patience, courtesy and ability. I move that Miss Stoddard be appointed to succeed Mrs. Upton." And the motion was carried unanimously.

"We are both out of it, Erica," Louise said to her friend, some days after. "Christine has got that position."

"Yes, I know," Erica answered, gloomily. "Some people are born lucky. I suppose she worked on their sympathy about her mother being a widow."

But Louise was not so sure of that. She had an uneasy feeling that things might have been different if Mrs. O'Brien had not seen her off guard.

"After all," she said, generously, "Christine deserves her good fortune."—Young People.

News From the Field

KITTANNING PENNSYLVANIA

The time is here when we should come to the front and inform the brotherhood at large that we want to make good our promise when we said that at no remote time things would be happening in this once North American-Indian town that would prove there was no taking chances when we started to build a Brethren Church here, and regardless of the fact that the number of members in the town was a little above the zero mark, that it would prove to be a prolific field and that every dollar expended would assist in winning souls to Christ. We are less than six months old and we are not creeping or even walking, we are "running" and the devil don't seem to be able to stop us. We started our prayer meeting, and got busy in our personal work campaign prior to our revival we hope to hold in May of this year. The spirit some way got hold of the folks and they pressed to get into the Kingdom. I have baptized 20 who have united at this point and have a couple of candidates for baptism. The Baptist people of E. "Kitt" allowed us to use their "pool" for which we surely are grateful. Last night we received 11 into fellowship. One young man is a Bugler in U. S. Regulars stationed at Chattanooga who was home on a 10 days' furlough. Among our new recruits here are three fathers or rather husbands and their wives. One lady whose husband has not yet taken a stand but informed me that he was considering the matter seriously. One young lady who has since baptism been intermarried with one of our young brethren. I state these conditions to show those interested that heads of families are coming with us. Eight adults and 12 young people, all children whose parents are identified with the Brethren. Our Sunday school is a live one and up to this time shows no signs of reaction. We are now starting one cradleroll and Home department. We hope by 'Easter' to have a total enrollment of not less than 200.

We are necessitated to finish the basement for primary work in our Sunday School. It had not been finished. We thought in course of a couple of years, or by the time the main building was paid for we would then have grown numerically so as to need the basement, but we need it now and need it badly, However we believe God will open up somebody's pocket-book enough to meet the demands. We started this work on faith and work and hope to keep it going on the same principal.

Brush Valley is forging along slow but sure, and planning for a spring "drive", so look out for something from there ere long. The Blanco Sunday school is going on as well as can be expected. The interior of the Church has been newly papered and painted. However they are having a sad experience as our Sunday school superintendent, Miss Nellie Raric is in "West Penn" hospital having undergone a serious operation.

"Notice"

I want S. S. C. E. literature at once with full instructions as to organizations and how to win. I don't want much red-tape about it as we have no organization of this kind in this county. At one time I was familiar with this branch but there have been changes since then I want to start the "Kittaning" Brethren church on the road to "loyalty" and success. "The Harvest is great" etc.

ROANN, INDIANA

The Roann church has just passed through a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Brother Jennings being the channel through which it was brought to us. This meeting I have asked him to report. But allow it to be said: that with every campaign conducted with Brother Jennings as leader, friendship deepens and fellowship sweetens.

In our last report we were in the midst of a campaign for souls at Center Chapel. Suffice it to say we struck that winter weather or else it struck us, of which all have been complaining, and you know the rest. The field was well worked. More than that I held my own meeting the year before. But we fought the bitter cold and labored persistently and God blessed our feeble efforts and gave us the increase. Four souls came to the blessed Christ for the first time. To Him Be all the Glory.

God bless the work and workers everywhere. God give us grace sufficient to stand in these perilous and testing times. God turn our feet back homeward to our only hope and refuge, the inspired and eternal Word of God. Men we have laid down our Bibles and picked up our newspapers. Shame on us! Some even can preach in war times, sermon after sermon on the world war. God forgive me! Let us turn again to our Bibles and read, John 5:59, "Search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and there are they which bear witness of me;" And then read also Acts 17:11. And as preachers let us remember Paul's admonition which was thundered to Timothy: "Preach the Word." II Timothy 4:2. God help us to instruct men aright in these days of dismay and doubt, and these days of faked fads, isms and shams.

MIDDLE BRANCH, OHIO

Dear Evangelist readers:—As this is my first attempt to write church news I hope you will pardon me if I am very brief. On the 3rd of February Brother A. E. Thomas came to us to hold a revival of 3 weeks. We surely feel like rejoicing and singing "Hallelujah." Brother Thomas preached the unadulterated word of "God" to saint and sinner alike. Till old Middle Branch was shaken from center to circumference. Sinners were made to tremble when they saw themselves as God sees all sinners. There were 50 confessions, some going to other denominations, some were reconsecrated to their former life and a number came very near the kingdom. If Brother Thomas could come back a week in the near future we feel sure there would be added to the church a number of very good men. The men of Middle Branch were never stirred and awakened to read their Bibles as now, and out of these meetings there was a prayer circle born and it is very much alive. On a very rainy and stormy night of last week there were over a dozen out. There has been no prayer meetings for more than 15 years at this place. We pray for a long life for Brother Thomas. For God so wonderfully blessed his labors here with a lifeless church. We also anticipate a men's Bible class in the near future, which will mean so much to our Sunday school. We would not forget to honor our beloved Brother Miller who so faithfully teaches our boys the Bible. We surely have been blessed with good clean boys coming here to preach for us. Such men will surely be a blessing to the world and an honor to the Brethren church.

Brother Boardman led the singing in a manner equal to Rhodeheaver and Brother Thomas is Billy personified. So we had the equipment to frighten the evil spirits and convict sinners. We beg an interest of Gods people every where in our behalf. So we may prove faithful to the end.

Mrs. Loretta DeWick.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Perhaps some have wondered at my unusual silence. I have simply been overwhelmed with work. A great deal of my time and attention has been given to matters made incumbent upon me as the official representation of the church at large, with reference to our doctrine of non-resistance. Many have been the requests that have come from different parts of the brotherhood, (and they are still coming), requests of all kinds. It is pitiful, indeed, to be brought face to face with facts that show that much confusion exists everywhere with reference to this great question. And the matter still remains unsettled. The president has not yet given any definite decision. However, we believe that the matter will soon be settled by an act of Congress. In a late conference with Secretary Baker, we had assurance given us to this effect. In the conference just referred to, we met also with representatives of the Friends Church, and two branches of the Mennonites. We received the most cordial treatment from the secretary. In fact we have had occasion to meet him a number of times, and we have always been received very kindly. If the bill referred to passes, we understand that it will be of such a nature that our boys will have assignment to agricultural work in the home land, or re-construction work in France. This plan will probably require direct supervision of committees to be selected by churches, in co-operation with the civil or military authorities. It is a great question, and we should be deeply grateful that we have a president and secretary of war, too, at this time, who seem to be quite anxious to get this matter settled in a way that will not deprive non-resistant people from exercising religious freedom. Lately we have been permitted to visit our boys at Camp Meade. Many of them are still there in the detention camp. If I had the time I should like to tell you all about our worship with the boys there, and how patiently they are submitting to conditions and circumstances that do not have a tendency to keep one in a quiet state of mind.

Many have written me to look after their sons in this city and elsewhere. I have done the very best I could in every case within my reach, but have not been able to write to those who have written me. Perhaps they do not realize the greatness of the task.

Thousands of people are flocking to Washington monthly to engage in government work and all this adds to our responsibility. I have spent a great deal of time trying to find rooms and houses for people accepting positions here. And still they come. At the same rate of increase for the next few months, Washington will likely go beyond the half-million mark in population. I am glad to say that we are getting new people added to our congregation as this increase in population continues. Will say more in a personal way later, if time permits. Meanwhile, I hope to have friends, or any of the brethren or sisters, write me of any who may be coming. I find that I will have to close for the present, altho I have much more I would like to tell you. Perhaps I can get time to say this a week later.

IN THE MEANTIME

So many of my friends and correspondents have wondered why I have not been in the East this season, and what I have been doing, that it seemed good to me to report in this general way, as fate has seemed to dictate that I should labor this year on the Pacific Coast.

I had made arrangements, definitely and fully, to return for an all season engagement east of the Rockies, but our family physician denied me this privilege on account of Mrs. Cobb's health. For two weeks I spent a vacation attending Billy Sunday's campaign in Los Angeles, and on 16th of September I began a campaign on the Pacific Coast and have lectured a week in each of the following places, since that date:- San Bernardino Ontario, Upland, Rialto, Chino, Upland, Arlington, Garden Grove, Palms, Hollywood, Bell, Huntington Park, Alhambra, Shorb, Wilmington Pasadena, Torrance and four weeks in Los Angeles.

My day book shows that in the last six months, I have spoken to 48,812 individuals. Of course individuals return night after night, which proves that these were not separate and distinct individuals, but in the sense that I gave eight different lectures each week, means that is the number of individual lectures given.

I have lectured every night, except four nights in Holiday week, and each Sunday afternoon and evening. On Sunday mornings, I preach for a Presbyteruan Church down in the city of Los Angeles, whose pastor has gone to Y. M. C. A. Camp, so this is why you have not heard from me or seen more of me this season. We are booked for weeks ahead.

I am very much interested in the progress of the Four-Year Program. Push it along. In the mean time, I'll break up some fallow ground outside the fence to be sown later.

E. M. Cobb.

ALTOONA, PA.

The last six months has been for the Brethren in the Mountain City a time of seed sowing. Special emphasis has been laid upon the work of developing the present membership. The writer believes that if we are to build permanently, we must build well. The church which lives and grows, is the one whose members are spirit filled. The conference in October did us much good. To entertain the Brethren of the State was indeed a pleasure. A number of our people received a vision and have since given themselves diligently the work of the Master.

It is not our purpose to give an account of the work in detail. We are endeavoring to make the goals of the Four-Year Program. Will fall short on a few this year, but hope to reach them till another. Every department of the work of the church is well organized. Financially we are on top. We are praying now, for a deepening of the Spiritual life. Brother H. E. Eppley gave us five sermons in October, in a preparation for communion. His service did us much good. We are anxiously awaiting the coming of Brother Beachler. May I digress long enough to say this word. Pennsylvania is getting ready to do her part for Ashland College. The reports which come to me from the various pastors strongly indicate this. But to come back again. Since our last report, four have been added to the church by baptism and three have been reclaimed Quite a number have entered into a deeper spiritual experience. At the present time we are engaged in a great revival under the direction of Brother G. T. Ronk. The meeting is only a week old, but already the house has been crowded to the doors and a number have been converted. Brethren, pray for us.

W. C. Benshoff.

BERLIN, PENNSYLVANIA

The call to conduct a religious campaign at this place came unexpectedly.

Mrs. Byers and I, having decided that we would like to enter the evagelistic work some time, were inspired to accept the above invitation.

Upon arrival we were received and made welcome during our stay in the home of Brother and Sister Clark White.

Sunday Morning January 13 we began our work and the pleasant greeting of the morning made us feel at home with these people.

We looked over the field, saw the need and endeavored to meet it with the gospel; resulting in a spiritual uplift to the church and 18 confessions.

In spite of the deep snow and zero weather the people became very much interested and the attendance was good throughout.

At the beginning of the third week Mrs. Byers became very ill and our meeting continued only two evenings, but we remained with these people and did personal work with good results closing our services with preaching Sunday morning and evening Feb. 10.

For the support given Mrs. Byers in the song service during the meeting and the very kind hospitality of Brother and Sister White and other members of the Church extended to us during her illness manifested the true christian spirit.

The church at Berlin has a live Sunday School and other auxiliaries, willing to work, and with a good energetic pastor as leader much good can be accomplished at this place.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES.

Pennsylvania 25—Ohio 17.

So stood the score at the end of last Friday evening's hard fought game. The score was tied at the beginning of the third quarter, but Boardman, Pennsylvania's guard, took the ball down the floor twice and dropped it in the basket. The last five minutes of play were splendid moments as far as an exhibition of real basketball playing was concerned. This ends the series between these two teams. Penn. has won two of the three games.

It is now about time for the new Student Councils to be elected. Perhaps the Brethren are not aware that the student body at Ashland is a self-governing body. That is the students elect, by popular vote a governing council to administer and conduct the rulings of the student body, of course under the direct approval of the President and Faculty of the College. The past year the boy's council has been:—F. M. Lambert, president, Clayton Starn, vice-president, Joseph Gingrich, Glenn King and Edwin Boardman. The girl's council is Mae Smith, president, Florence Bickel, vice-president, Ruth Teeter and Batrice Gentzhorn. The affairs of the two halls are conducted according to regularly drawn up rules and constitutions. Truly student government is a success for it is "government of the students, by the students, for the students."

Joseph Gingrich and Lester King came back from the Y. M. Conference at Denison full of enthusiasm and gave us some splendid reports.

The girls of the second floor recently entertained the girls of the third floor to a chocolate and biscuit "treat". The halls were decorated in patriotic fashion with pennants, flags and other streamers. Expressions by some of the girls would indicate that they had "some time."

The Hesperian and Philomathean societies are still active in literary work. Both organizations have their distinctive ideals to which they bend their efforts.

The Y. W. C. A. has just concluded a splendid series of Wednesday afternoon meetings. The girls had brought to them the fundamentals of Christian religion. First Prof. Garber spoke on "Faith", followed by Dr. Furry on "The Doctrine of God," Dr. Miller on "Deity of Christ" and Miss Billman on "Prayer." These meetings were extremely helpful in grounding the girls in christian truth. The new officers of the Y. W. C. A. are Pauline Teeter, president, Margaret Banghart, vice-president, Carrie Stoffer, secretary and Lois Teeter, treasurer.

A number of the students are contemplating attending the Berea Student Volunteer Conference next week

Dr. Furry will conduct a class dealing with reconstruction work after the war. This subject will be studied at the Sunday School hour. The book is "Christian World Democracy". Presented by Dr. Furry it will be an enlightening cours.

SENIOR STUNTS

The cast for the class play has been selected and now work is to begin in getting the production into shape for presentation. Miss Joyce Kanauer our expression instructor will coach the players in their respective parts. "At the End of the Rainbow" is looked forward to by the student body. The cast selected follows:

Robert Preston, a lawyer.....Frank Lambert.
Douglas Brown, a football player.....
N. V. Leatherman.....

Four girls were crossing the campus the other evening carrying real pies under their arms. Suddenly two forms appeared in the twilight. Misses Price, Wogoman, Smith and Gentzhorn forthwith dropped their pies and fled leaving Messrs Ford and Nieschwitz in possession of the pastry. The boys said they don't know why the girls ran but they are glad they left some token of remembrance. They don't like to pose as "highwaymen" however.

Pray for the College and its work. The writer will be glad to furnish any particular items of interest to the Brethren. Drop a card with inquiry. Yours for a growing Ashland College.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

We had a fine time at Dutchtown. Dutchtown is the home of Brother Thomas Plew, one of our brethren who has given many years to the ministry and at the same time "working with his own hands." It was a pleasure to me to meet Brother Plew in the church in which he has worshipped and preached for many years. During the course of our canvass at this place I preached five times. And notwithstanding the bad weather part of the time, and the heavy conditions of the road, we had splendid, attentive audiences.

Up until last fall Dutchtown had been without preaching for a considerable time. But brother C. C. Grisso came into their midst and held them a meeting in the fall: And it is evident that he did a mighty good piece of work. Dutchtown church is on the map and she is wide awake. I wish I might find in every rural church to which I go as much life, as good a Sunday school, and as much determination to go forward as I found at Dutchtown. This is a purely rural congregation, and it is in a community which needs badly the influence and work of a live church and Sunday school. It would mean a deplorable moral loss to a large scope of country if the Dutchtown church should for any reason fail to press onward in the work of the Master. But Dutchtown is not going backward; she is going forward.

Brother H. W. Anderson is serving this people now as pastor. He came to them from South Bend and is living among them and giving them all of his time. This was my first meeting with Brother Anderson. I did not find in him a noisy man, for he is modest and retiring; but I regard him as a sincere Christian man, and a man who thinks and who means business. He enjoys the implicit confidence of his people; and there is every indication that they will give hearty response to his leadership. In Brother Howard Mauzy he has a strong yoke-fellow. Brother Mauzy is superintendent of the Sunday school; and this superintendent and pastor make a good team.

During my stay at Dutchtown the home of Brother Mauzy was my headquarters. I am highly indebted to them for the warm, genuine welcome they gave me into their home.

As for my canvass for endowment in this congregation I am happy to say that I have had in no church a more uniformly fine hearing or a more uniformly fine response. Though a small congregation, with a membership of less than fifty and though they have had their discouragements in the past, yet Dutchtown went away over over the top. I am tickled to pieces to announce that Dutchtown lined up for $500 for permanent endowment. I am going to serve notice right now that any church anywhere in our brotherhood with a congregation of similar size and that is situated in every way just as Dutchtown is, that will make a better showing than Dutchtown on this endowment shall have to get up very early in the morning and work until late in the night. I want to congratulate Dutchtown publicly for this splendid record just as I congratulated them a number of times privately. And the best part of it is the cheerful spirit in which they gave. They did not sign those endowment notes as if they were offering their only son on the altar; but they did it gladly, cheerfully. And Ashland College has many strong friends at Dutchtown now as a result of the investment those people have made in the great cause of permanent endowment. Only two people in this church turned us down. And when they read this they will be ashamed and wish they had lined up too.

Wm. H. Beachler,
Campaign Secretary.

War Relief in Liberated Palestine—Personal Narrative from Jaffa

An interview with Mr. C. T. Hooper, by Stephen van Rensselear Trowbridge

One of the soldiers from the Palestine Front has brought back a typical picture of a refugee group. In the midst of a wide stretch of desert, absolutely bare of any growing thing, is a little group of refugees, old people, women and children, with one precious donkey, that by dint of effort or stratagem they had been able to save. Their babies they carried on their backs, and what was left of their worldly goods they had loaded on the little donkey. Their men had been taken months before, and they had been driven from their homes by the Turks, so they went out not knowing whither they went, hoping somehow, somewhere to find food and shelter. Multiply that group by hundreds who have already come inside the British lines and you see the problem that faces the staff of relief workers.

One of the most pressing tasks in Jaffa is to provide for the 150 orphans who had been gathered in by two French Sisters of Mercy during the Turkish regime. With rare self-sacrifice these faithful women have remained at their duties all through the past two years, while France and Turkey have been at war. The children have become emaciated and worn, and it is not an easy thing to get a smile from any one of them. It will be hard for friends in America to imagine children who have forgotten how to smile. Hundreds of other orphans are scatered about in the vicinity, and are gradually discovered and gathered in. Three young children were found in a street in Jaffa extremely weary and hungry. When questioned about their home they explained that both father and mother had recently died in Jerusalem, and that they had set out to walk to the sea. The forty-five miles of road through hills and valleys in this war zone they had traversed by themselves, and on foot.

Mr. Hooper found the old Church Missionary Society hospital had been used by the Turks for wounded. Foul dressings and every sort of refuse had been dumped in the courtyard and accumulated until the place was filled with an overpowering stench. The floors likewise were filthy and stained. To clear up and destroy the mass of sickening material in the courtyard the only certain way was burning. And there being no fuel, Hr. Hooper had the fence of the premises pulled down and broken up. Soon there was a good blaze, and today the hospital is thoroughly cleaned up and disinfected. No kitchen utensils have been left in the houses of Jaffa, because the Turks took every bit of metal. The population before the Turkish evacuation was nearly 80,000, but is much less at present, owing to the fact that large numbers of Moslems scattered northward at the last moment. In the C. M. S. Hospital, which it is proposed to open at once, under the direction of Bishop McInnes' Relief Committee, with Dr. Lasbrey in charge, only heavy furniture was left by the enemy. Every vestige of equipment, bedding supplies, cotton, wool, etc., is gone. The well and pump on the premises had been broken, and necessary pipes removed. But after a diligent search three sections of piping which exactly fitted were found in a Turkish house nearby. The pump is at work once more.

Each day a huge and wretched crowd fills the street in front of the hospital for the bread ration provided thus far by the British military authorities. Frequently oranges are offered for an extra bit of bread, because no wheat was left by the Turks.

As this crowd pushes forward to receive its portion, let me describe to you one family in particular. The father is still suffering from the tragedy which befell him recently while he was compelled to load and unload dynamite for the Turks. Both his hands were blown off and since then he has not been able to earn anything. His wife four litle children gaunt and wretched, follow close to him; a truly heart breaking sight.

In the relief hospital in Jaffa the 150 children had to lie on the cold tiling, without any bedding or even a bit of straw. And it has been very cold in Jaffa and Jerusalem recently. Mr. Hooper was able to find some worn flour sacks, thin and full of holes, but most welcome and useful. Each now has one of them. He also distributed the clothing and blankets sent from Port Said upon the first appeal, and began giving out pieces of flannelette to be sewn into garments. But the people went out and traded the cloth for food, so it has been necessary to organize, and to employ a number of women in sewing up dresses and clothes which will be used in the orphanage. Soon more systematic plans for clothing and blankets will be made.

The needs of the people in the country further north are more serious and compelling, so that, as the army moves on toward Syria there will be increasing demands upon our staff and upon our funds. But there is quite enough in the immediate opportunity to call into action every bit of human sympathy, and every material resource available.

Marriages

LOUX-WALLACE.—At the home of the writer in Dayton, Ohio, on the evening of January 31, 1918, Mr. H. Clyde Loux and Miss Permelia May Wallace were united in marriage. The bride is a member of the Bear Creek church where she rendered much valuable service as a teacher in the Sunday school. A. J. McCLAIN.

HEDRICK-SMITH.—At the home of Arthur Smith and family, near Loree, Indiana, occurred the wedding of their daughter Marie and Berlin C. Hedrick, on Saturday evening, February 23 at 7 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by the writer, the ring service being used. Both are members of the Loree Brethren church. May God's richest blessing be upon them in their voyage in life. W. T. LYTLE.

Our Dead

PRICE.—Mrs. Price was born April 24, 1842 and departed this life Jaunary 24, 1918. She united with the Brethren church in 1863. She transferred her membership from Pennsylvania to the Ankenytown Brethren church in 1899. Sister Price was loyal to the faith and a blessing and an inspiration to all who knew her. May the Father of mercy bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

WINELAND.—Geo. S. Wineland was born August 31, 1851 and was called home February 24, 1918, aged 66 years, 5 months and 23 days. Brother Wineland was a faithful member of the Brethren church at North Liberty. Brother Wineland is survived by a wife, two children and a host of friends. May the Prince of Peace bring consolation and comfart to the aching hearts. Services by A. L. LYNN.

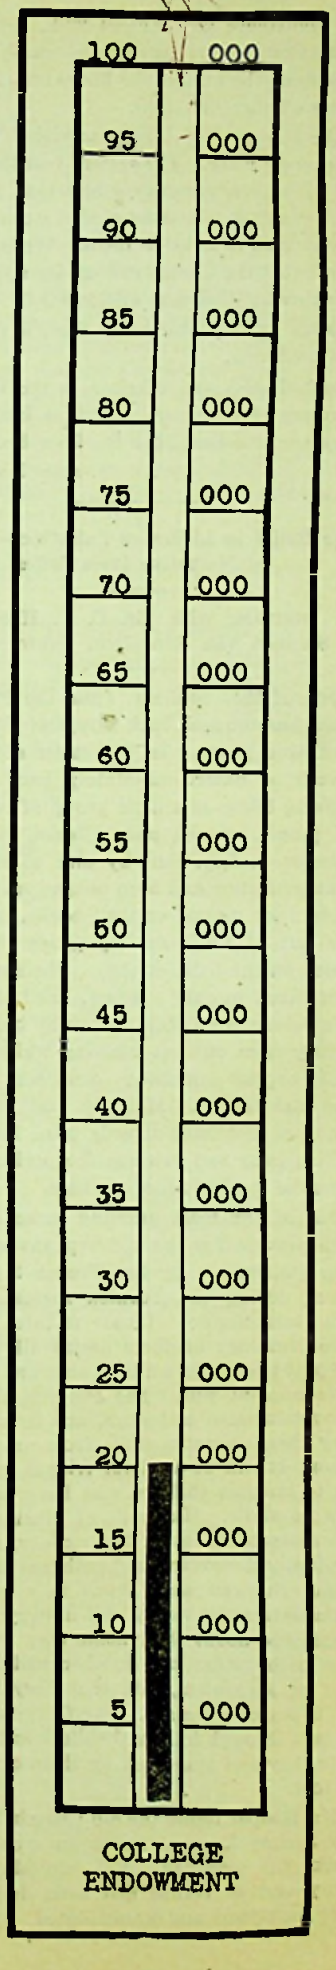
HUFFORD.—Susanah, was born in Hocking county, Ohio, January 27, 1843. Departed this life February 14, 1918, aged 75 years and 17 days. She was the wife of David Hufford, being married December 4, 1864. To this union eleven children were born. Eight are now living. Sister Hufford, with her husband had been members of the Brethren Church at Cambria, (known as Mt. Pleasant) since August 24, 1884. The funeral service was held at the home near Rossville by the writer. W. T. LYTLE.

THORNE.—Sarah Landis Thorne died at her home in Huntington, Indiana, January 24, 1918, aged 74 years, 6 months and 6 days. She was a faithful member of the Brethren church. She leaves her husband, nine children and nineteen grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Zion church near Huntington by the writer.

GARST.—Mrs. Alice Garst, wife of Jacob Garst, died at her home in Somerset, Indiana, at the age of 62 years, 10 months and 18 days. She was a member of the College Corner Brethren church and was faithful through many years of sickness. Her husband, 6 children and 5 grandchildren survive her. Funeral services conducted by the writer. D. A. C. TEETER.

TEEL.—Minnie Morris, daughter of A. and Hannah Morris, was born in Peru, Indiana, August 4, 1870. After she was three years old she made her home with John and Hannah Edwards, of Mexico, where she was regarded as their own daughter. She united with the Brethren church of Mexico in her 17 year and has always lived a consistent Christian life. She was married August 4, 1898 to John A. Teel. To this union were born eight children, who with their father remain to mourn the loss of a dutiful wife and an affectionate mother. The mother departed this life January 26, 1918, aged 47 years, 6 months and 22 days. Funeral by the undersigned. May God bless the bereaved in this the saddest time of their lives. D. A. HOPKINS.

DOBSON.—James F., was born February 13, 1855, departed this life February 19, 1918 at the Deaconess Hospital, Marshalltown, Ia., after an illness of three weeks. He leaves to mourn, his bereaved companion and two brothers. Emmet Dobson, a son preceded him in death. He united with the Carlton Brethren church three years ago and has been a faithful attendant. Brother Dobson spent his entire life in this community and will be missed by all. He was one of the foremost workers in the church, willing to give alike of his time and means. His smiling face and cheery optimism has been an inspiration to the services. Even when seriously ill he did not care to talk of his own troubles, but was watchful that he might do a favor for his fellow men. As the end approached, he was calm and serene, leaning upon the Master who had meant so much to him in the last three years. His last words, spoken to his companion, were, "Don't worry, I'm all right." May the Father comfort and sustain the bereaved. Services by the undersigned. FREEMAN ANKRUM.



KOUBA.—Frances Kouba, was born in Daceci, Moravia, Austria-Hungary on June 26, 1850 and died February 12, 1918, aged 67 years, 7 months and 16 days. She was laid to rest in Marshalltown, Iowa, the services being conducted by FREEMAN ANKRUM.

CRAWFORD.—Phoebe Jane Bevard was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, December 16, 1843 and died in Beaver City, Nebraska, February 2, 1918. Sister Crawford with her husband united with the Beaver City Brethren church in 1890 and was faithful to the end. She was for many years the efficient teacher of the little ones of the Sunday school. She loved little children and they loved and trusted her and were led by her in the way of life. Funeral from the Brethren church. Services by her pastor. C. M. PIERCE.

SEIBERT.—Benjamin Franklin Seibert, was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, September 29, 1854 and died at Beaver City, Nebraska, February 10, 1918. Brother Seibert was one of the charter members of the Beaver City Brethren church when it was organized by Elder C. Forney in the fall of 1884 and was one of its most substantial and consecrated members to the end of his days. His family, his friends ,the community and his church will miss him. For men of his sterling worth and Christian character are too few. Funeral services from Brethren chuch were conducted by the pastor, assisted by Elder C. Forney. C. M. PIERCE.

The Church's Social Function.

The church of divine origin is a social institution and has a social function. Its ownership points Godward; its responsibility points manward. Its commission is from him who hath "all authority"; its field of conquest is the world. Its power is from above and is to be expended in the interests of humanity. Its program is from God and deals with and is to be worked out in society. It is impossible to have either a church or divine favor without recognizing social relations and responsibilities. If, then, the church is a social institution, what may be considered her true function?

The New Testament requires that we reply, it is two-fold. First, it is to save the individual, and second, it is to regenerate society. To the first answer there is general agreement. In fact we have long considered that the whole duty of the church was with the individual and there her responsibility ceased. While the true Christian must ever be in hearty sympathy with and zealoiusly engaged in the work of the church for the individual yet he must be constantly guarding against the tendency to ignore or neglect the church's duty to society. For there is a tendency to do this very thing, accounted for very largely, I think, by our natural selfishness.

The church has always had a more or less worthy conception of her mission to the individual and her testimony to needy human souls has been superb. She has brought them into personal contact with the master, cultivated devotion to God, taught the duty of complete surrender to the divine will and emphasized the importance of separation from the evil of the world. She has used the Word of God to refute the skeptic, convince the doubter, guide the perplexed, comfort the sorrowing and cheer the despondent. She has preached Christ crucified and risen as the only hope of salvation for every unredeemed soul. Those who accepted Christ and believed the gospel were saved from lives of sin and transformed into saints. Those who spurned that gospel were damned and condemned to death. She has received countless multitudes into her fold and has led them step by step into deeper consecration, inspiring them to sacrifice everything that the world holds dear for Christ's sake when loyalty to him demanded it, and directing them into the most loving and unselfish service in the interest of his kingdom.

And what a wonderful work the church has wrought by so faithfully prusuing her ministry to the individual. She has already fulfilled the Master's prophetic statement regarding her future when he said to her first members, "Greater things than these shall ye do." The transformations she has wrought among men, individually and collectively, constitute the most astonishing miracle of all ages. She has worked grandly under the hand of God and we are proud to be numbered among her humble servants. We would not have her slacken her efforts to save the individual. If ever there was a time when the individual needed her ministry it is now. She must pursue her work of evangelism and soul nurture with even more holy zeal now than ever when individuals as well as nations are being blighted with hatred, greed and revenge. For personal religion is fundamental to community and national righteousness. Society can never be permanently saved until the individuals composing society have been renewed by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Both the social and the individual notes must be taken together however, to produce the harmony found in the teachings of Jesus. The Master of men had hopes of saving society as well as individuals. His aim was to make humanity new by working along both lines of service. He came to create a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. The phrase "kingdom of God," which was so often on his lips together with the new standards of conduct in social relations which he taught indicate that he had in mind not merely the salvation of the individual but of the organized group as well, which would make justice, kindness, mercy and faithfulness possible among men. I am sure our Lord is anxious for us to put forth the most strenuous efforts possible to evangelize the world and to convert individuals unto him who is the way, the truth and the life; but I feel equally sure that he is not pleased to have us keep hands off of the evil forces and institutions which are at work in the world and supinely wait for the ushering in of an earthly millenium of justice and happiness which will solve all social questions in one blessed catastrophe. We are workers together with God in combating evil, organized or unorganized as well as preaching the gospel.

It is the church's task to seek to save society as well as the individual, to redeem the evil world that the redemption of evil men may be more effective, to redeem the city that the redemption of its citizens may be more complete and permanent, to destroy the cesspools of sin and to relieve the congestion in city districts that the rescue of the unfortunate victims may not need be so oft repeated. Is the church doing her whole duty when she establishes rescue missions in the "red light" or "industrial" districts of our cities to save an occasional straggler while she permits vicious institutions to exist that are seducing and destroying a hundred to one rescued by her missions? Is the church doing her whole duty to the children whom she gathers into her Sunday schools to teach the gospel of purity, truth, honesty, strength and love, while she leaves unchanged their congested, unwholesome, immoral environments that make it practically impossible for the children to be pure and clean in body or in mind; that teaches them lying and stealing as a means of livelihood, that encourages habits that sap their strength and make them unfit for any worthy work in the world, and that force them to believe that hate, suspicion and revenge are the only practical virtues of this life, and that love is a mockery? Is the church doing her duty to the man who is "down and out" when she gives him the Bible, religious advice and charity, but finds him no new job and makes no honest effort to give him a fresh start in life? Is the church doing her whole duty when she gets men converted and exacts from them a promise to quit their sinning, but puts forth no effort to regulate his loathesome environment and make it easier for him to do right and hard for him to do wrong? Is the church doing her whole duty when she preaches temperance, but fails to throw her whole force against the legalized traffic? And we might go on. But these are enough particulars to bring clearly to our minds that the church has vastly more to do than merely to conduct preaching services, and that these preaching services are calculated not only to prepare us for heaven-by and bye, important as that is, but bring about heavenly conditions among men; even as he taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And our entrance into heaven will be conditioned upon the readiness with which we minister unto the least of God's children in distress, as he has commanded, and help to establish a new social order of love. "Not every one that sayeth unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven," is our Lord's eternal decree.

From the Editor's View-Point

When Justice is Blind

The blindness of Justice has ever been regarded as one of her chief virtues. In the strictest meaning of the term it is nothing more than that justice plays no favorites, that justice shall exact the last pound regardless of place or person. To be considered as an impartial judge one must be entirely free from bias and to consider and weigh evidence with what is called a "judicial mind," that is an open mind that is able to think clearly and to weigh carefully and to sift out skilfully false testimony from the true. But in another very marked sense justice is blind when it is unable to distinguish false testimony from the true, or when upon insufficient testimony one charged with a crime is compelled to pay the penalty whether guilty or not guilty. When, for fear the guilty may escape, the innocent are compelled to suffer justice is "stone blind."

Eight years ago a man was found guilty of robbing a bank in Colorado and was sentenced to twenty-four years in the Canon City penitentiary where he has served out about one-third of his sentence. It is now reported that he is about to be restored to liberty because evidence has been produced to clearly establish an alibi for the prisoner and to show beyond doubt that he was in Utah at the time the robbery with which he was charged occurred in Colorado.

We will admit that the "loop-holes" of escape for many criminals are open dangerously wide and it may seem that in the interests of the cause of justice the innocent must sometimes suffer for crimes they never committed, but we can not see it that way. It may be that large numbers of law violaters do escape the penalties of the law through technicalities which sometimes prompt the common people take the law into their own hands and mete out punishment as they think it is deserved. But to our mind a dozen guilty men should escape rather than that one innocent man should be deprived of his liberty for ten or twenty years. There ought to be some way for the state to recompense one who has thus been deprived of his liberty unjustly.

Extreme Pacifists

One of the principles upon which the American government was founded was that of liberty of conscience or religious freedom, and here men have been guaranteed the right to worship God as their own consciences dictate. There is no state religion and there is no law to compel the individual to adopt any religion, except the law of common sense.

The whole religious world has been more or less familiar with the peace principles of certain religious faiths that have sought religious freedom in America from the very beginning from that of the Friends on through to the list to the Brethren.

During the Revolutionary War some of these people suffered many hardships and persecutions because of their non-resistant principles, and, because they refused to fight, many of them were regarded as Tories. During the war of the rebellion in the early sixties they were again challenged because of these same principles, but many of them held true to the faith and refused to bear arms against their fellow men; but never before have the non-resistant people been called upon in so great numbers, to declare their principles or to bear arms contrary to their principles, as at the present time. While the real status of the non-resistant people in the present war has not been established, yet both the President and the Secretary of War are inclined to grant a limited freedom from this service, but such men who have come under the draft are expected to serve their country in some manner whether it be the bearing of arms or some industrial work they may be called upon to do. But there are a number of men in the encampments, especially in Camp Sherman, that are giving the officers considerable trouble and that are bringing the whole non-resistant faith into disrepute because they refuse to do anything whatever that the government asks them to do. In their own minds these men may be acting entirely consistent with their faith and may regard any service however remotely connected with the war as a part of the conflict and that should they participate in any manner guilt would rest upon them just as much as if they were fighting at the front. But it has been pointed out with some degree of clearness that under existing conditions it is impossible for any one to escape a[ll] responsibility and that every one is doing something to help eith[er] America and the Allies or to help Germany. The crops the farmer grows will feed either the allies or the enemy, or a refusal to grow crops will weaken the aliies and thus give strength to the Prussian cause. So while the non-resistant people may still refuse to bear arms as we feel they have a perfect right to do we can not see how they can hope to escape non-combatant service the government may impose upon them, and the more peaceably they submit to this service the better will be their standing in the eyes of all the public. We trust that the young men of the Brethren church who have been called into the service, but who have declared their peace principles may be numbered among those who signify their willingness to serve the government in any of the non-combatant departments of the service to which they may be appointed.

Thinking in Billions

To the man who has never had one thousand dollars in his possession at one time and who perhaps has never received that much for a whole year's labor, the juggling with figures reaching far up into the hundreds of millions and on over the line into the billions seems like an impossible thing.

We can remember a number of years ago one of the congresses of the United States made appropriations amounting to $1,000,000,000 and was ever after known as the billion dollar congress and was roundly condemned by the minority party of the country, principally, we presume, because it was their enemies instead of their political friends who would have the privilege of distributing this great fund. But today the man of affairs is not expected to think in any less terms than millions, commonly hundreds of millions, and frequently billions. Yes, times have changed considerably "since we were boys," and unless we are able to keep up with the procession of thought we may as well drop out of the race, for we will soon be pushed aside any way.

But as the world has learned to do things on such a large scale for the betterment of psysical and material conditions of mankind we trust after this great struggle is over it will not forget the lessons learned as it shall be called upon to minister to the spiritual needs of man. Just now the Red Cross is after another $100,000,000 and it is expected to be subscribed in seven days.

These many campaigns for funds should result in at least one good, and that is the common people should learn to think a little beyond their own restricted personal needs and to consider the welfare of the whole which may be cared for by the united efforts of many and that even they are distinct parts of the whole system even as a single dollar is a distinct part of the hundreds of millions that may be contributed for a great humanitarian cause.

Training for Service

Many years ago when the writer was a pupil in the village high school he had a feeling that the ordinary high school and the entire system upon which the high schools of that day were based were failing to give the best training possible for the boys and girls who were just entering upon the years of manhood and womanhood. This feeling was the result of considering the fact that with the possible exception of a few large city high schools, every boy and girl who completed a high school course was forced through the same mold. If every boy and girl had an opportunity to spend four years more in college, that system might not have been so bad, but such opportunities do not really come to all, no matter what may be said to the contrary, and the modern high school with its flexible course of study that gives its pupils a training that fits them for entering upon the work of the world in many departments is a great improvement over the old; and one of the greatest advances made in recent years is that which provides a four-year high school course in agriculture and home economics for the boys and girls who expect to spend their lives upon the farms of America.

Program Sermon for Easter

Here is a mighty strong sermon by Brother Bell. It is so strongly scriptural that I feel every pastor ought to follow the outline quite closely. It is easy to see that Brother Bell has done some mighty hard work on this outline and it is the pattern for the Easter message. Unless the future reports show that our pastors are following the outlines, we can not expect that any director will make them. We shall soon be in a position to tell how much our pastors appreciate Brother Bell's efforts. In fact we know that most pastors are with him in preaching doctrinal sermons as per schedule. BAME.

The Assurances of Christ's Resurrection

BY W. S. BELL

"Whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts 17:13.

Introduction

Jesus Christ was raised from the dead, ascended into the heavens and sat down at the right hand of the Father in the same body in which he lived, suffered and died. This fact is not only set forth with minutest detail in the New Testament, but it is also supported my "many infallible proofs." It is the keystone in the arch of Christianity. With it everything in our faith stands or falls. Without it there is no Gospel. "The Resurrection of Jesus stands fast as a fact, unaffected by the boastful waves of skepticism that ceaselessly through the ages beat themselves against it; retains its significance as a corner stone in the edifice of human redemption; and holds within it the vastest hope for time and for eternity that humanity can ever know." The skeptic rejects the Resurrection of Christ upon the ground that it is veiled in insoluble mystery and can not be fully understood. He prefers to die in his ignorance rather than live by faith. But the Christian who believes the testimony of God to the Resurrection of Christ bows his head before its mystery and is content to wait in patience the consummation of his redemption when in the light of his presence all things shall be made plain. In the meantime the Christian rests in the strong assurance which God has given to all men by the resurrection of his Son from the dead.

I. The Resurrection Establishes Beyond All Question the Divine Authorship and Authority of the Scriptures

1 The Resurrection was the fulfillment of the most remarkable prophecy among the many relating to the Messiah and his work.

2 Christ claimed divine authorship and authority for the scriptures. The Resurrection proves the truth of all his claims.

II The Resurrection Is God's Official and Final Answer to the Question, "Who Is Jesus"?

1 The raging controversy of the centuries.
2 The tremendous issues which depend upon its answer.
3 His own claims and their denial by the men of his times.
4 The One Sign, declared to be the Son of God with power by the Resurrection from the dead."

III The Resurrection Guarantees the Perfect Sufficiency of Christ's Atonement for Sin

1 The whole world guilty and without excuse before God. Sin must and will be punished.

2 But Christ died for our sins. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. Our salvation depends upon the sufficiency of his death for sins. The question, "Did his death settle fully our debt because of sin?" This is important. The death of Christ apart from his Resurrection is a thing to bring no joy but only despair. How can we be certain that the law has no further claims against us since we have transgressed its holy commands?

3 Strong consolation. "He was raised for our Justification." His Resurrection stands for all time as the divine guarantee that he paid in full our debt, that our redemption is complete. The law has no further claims against us. No wonder the apostle Paul cried to those who were by their teaching calling in question the Resurrection of Christ—"If Christ hath not been raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they which are fallen asleep in Christ have perished." But praise God we know that Christ hath been raised from the dead, and upon this mighty fact we can stake our hopes for eternity. Confident because of this proof of the sufficiency of Christ's Atonement we can say with Paul, "Who shall summon for trial any of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ Jesus that died, yea, rather that was raised from the dead."

IV The Resurrection of Christ Pledges the Resurrection of Every Believer

1 The scope of redemption indicated. It includes the body. The body not a useless appendage to the soul to be shed like the crysalis at death. It is a part of the man and there can not be complete and perfect state without it."

2 Christ risen from the dead is the "first-fruits" of them that sleep. "Because I live ye shall live also."

Conclusion

God has spoken through his Son and revealed these great facts of Christianity..... The scriptures are the divinely inspired and authoritative Word of God. Jesus Christ is the eternal Son of God, and Christ of prophecy, God manifest in the flesh. His death upon the cross provided the ground upon which God in justice can extend pardon and life to the guiltiest siner. There will be complete redemption of all them that believe involving the Resurrection and Transformation of their bodies.....Upon these great fundamental facts God has placed the stamp of eternal truth by raising the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead. God can no longer tolerate either ignorance or unbelief in the face of this revelation. For the man who persistently rejects the testimony of the scriptures, who ignores the claims of the Son of God, who counts the blood of the Christ as the blood of an ordinary man as having no value or power to clear and cleanse from sin....for such a man there remains nothing but a fearful expectation of judgment. And as the incontrovertible proof that such judgment is certain to come God again points to the resurrection of his Son. Acts 17:31.

But praise be to God the fact which guarantees a final judgment unto condemnation to all unbelievers is the same fact that pledges the word of the eternal God who can not lie that no believer in Jesus Christ can ever come into judgment, but is passed from death unto life. "Blessed be the God and Father, etc. 1 Peter 1:3, 4.

The Type of a Girl I Admire.

BY MRS. GEORGE STANLEY BAER

(Talk given before the Louisville Sisterhood of Mary and Martha and published by request)

Because the girl who has always been my ideal has meant so much to my life I am glad to tell you about her. If you think my ideal is high just remember that it takes high ideals to make high character and that my ideal for a girl is no higher than for a boy.

I want you to see her as she approaches from the distance, coming as a stranger to our sisterhood meeting. Let us enlarge upon our imaginations until we really see her. As she comes down the street we are attracted by her appearance. She is plain and neat, has a graceful carriage, and her hair is dressed becomingly—not overly curled and fussed.

As we meet her at the door our impression is very favorable. She seems friendly and is quite courteous and cheerful and we notice too that she has real skin and a real complexion. She enters the room and as we engage in general conversation we discover that she uses the English language properly and that she is an optimist, always turning out the bright side, speaking of the good, the pure and the beautiful, refraining from anything that might cast over us a shadow of gloom. She speaks modestly, avoiding any and all forms of slang and gossip. Nothing so coarsens a girl as slang, nothing so cheapens a girl as gossip. You know we read in the Bible that it is "not that which goeth in at the mouth that defileth but that which cometh out of the mouth."

By this time her conduct has attracted our attention. She is very refined and polite using "please" and "thank you" freely and that quite naturally. It is always easy to detect the artificial from the natural, that which is put on for the occasion from that which is a part of one's real self. She is not only lady-like in the house but on the streets. She is seldom, if ever, seen on the streets alone at night and she never meets a young man on the street corners, but at the proper place—her home.

In observing her type of dress we find that it is not in extreme fashion, not all fuss and feathers, but marked by simplicity and harmony of colors. And better still, she is in full dress; when I say full dress I do not mean what is commonly called full dress or what I would call half dress. Her dress skirt is not too short or too narrow, her collar is not too low and the material not too thin. Whether we are conscious of the fact or not the style of dress just referred to may result in sin on the part of the opposite sex, if nothing more than the sin of an evil thought. Then we also notice that she wears very little, if any, jewelry; jewelry does not add beauty to the face or hands, it merely attracts. Then too, many are dying in sin that might know of the blessed power of salvation if the money used in needless jewelry was carrying the gospel to them. And every one is responsible to the extent of their neglected ability. This girl I so much admire always lives within her means. If her circumstances are limited and she might, without saving anything for a rainy day, or by denying herself of some needs or going in debt, be able to wear just a little better clothes than her circumstances would warrant she does not do so for fear people might question the source from which they came. And what ideal girl will risk losing her reputation? Extravagant dress will never win the opposite sex for a life companion; if it should he is not the proper companion for the ideal girl.

Now as we have been learning to know and admire this girl we have been wondering what kind of parents she has and find them to be active, conscientious Christians although not necessarily so, for every girl should rise above her environments, every girl should be better than her parents whether they are good or bad. This girl has confidence in her parents and respects their wishes. She confides in her mother; the best friend of every girl is her mother. She is helpful and considerate of her welfare, always saying "please" and "thank you" instead of saving her kind expressions for company or strangers and allowing mother to take it all for granted. Remember girls, no one can appreciate your kindness like your own dear mothers who have suffered and labored to make your success possible and your lives happy. The most a girl can do for her mother is the least she ought to do. And then too, her mother always knows of her whereabouts; she never goes where she can not tell her mother.

After having become thus acquainted you are desirous to know about her amusements. Here she shows both refinement of taste and consideration of her influence over others. She is a real girl and enjoys all innocent amusements but will not participate in anything questionable. If the movies, shows, operas, cards and dancing might even be right for a Christian to engage in she is so thoroughly consecrated and given to the best interests of her friends and her God that she has no time for them.

My ideal girl is one whose religion influences her daily life, one who is proud of being a follower of the lowly Nazarine. She recognizes and honors God's claim upon her life. She gives at least one-tenth of her income and one-seventh of her time to God if she does not feel called to give him full time service. She does not sacrifice her regular church worship for friends or pleasure; she is so true to her convictions and her church that she wins her friends to it instead of them leading her away.

How about her social relations? This is one of the most important things in a girl's life. This girl is refined and proper in her relations with others. We see her mingling with and carefully selecting from the opposite sex her friends and later her companion. She recognizes no two standards. The one whom she chooses for a life companion must be equal to her in goodness and purity. The time was when the requirements for a young lady were much greater than for a young man, but we are slowly coming to place him on the same high standard. When our young ladies will require of our young men the same purity of life and freedom from bad habits that is demanded of them, the young men will meet the requirements. Her selection is one who is ambitious and whose character is without question. This requires him to be one who has always lived a consecrated Christian life and not one who has reformed. Though a man may reform and God may save his soul and use him for great good we must remember that what a man sows that shall he also reap and since the sins of the parents are visited upon the children, the sins of the father may bring their harvest in the lives of their children. The ideal young man is always courteous and in every way treats a young lady properly. Really, so many people do not seem to know what is proper treatment. He always calls at her home instead of arranging to meet her elsewhere. Previous to their engagement she never accepts anything from him more than flowers or candy. He tries to win her admiration and love in the same manner as a girl friend would and not by this so-called "love making," which is only the exciting of the passions, and my ideal girl will not tolerate any one who tries to excite the passions. She will keep herself pure for the ideal young man when he does come. No young man has a right to really make love to a girl until he has pledged himself to her.

And finally as we try to discover her ambitions we find that they are high and holy. She believes she is in the world for some purpose. She seeks to prepare herself to make the most of her life. She tries to secure a well-rounded education, to develop her spiritual powers and to preserve her health, not only for her own sake but for the sake of the future generations. She seeks to make her life-work that which shall carry out God's great plan for her.

The Minister and the Prayer-Meeting

The prayer meeting has a unique and indispesable place in the church life. And yet its value as a vital force in the Christian's experience has been rapidly decreasing. Its distinctive mission to God's people has been in danger of being lost, just because, like many a treasure, its worth has never been appreciated. The very appeal which it makes and the very energy which it creates ar being threatened in this failure to understand its supremacy. It will be timely, then, to show the unusual place which the prayer meeting holds in the life of the church and the community, with the hope that an interest in its mission may be revived and conserved.

The Mission of the Prayer Meeting

The contribution which any church service makes to the life of a community can not be comprised in one brief definition. The task is best accomplished by discovering the appeal which the quiet forces of such a meeting make to the minister and the people. That appeal in the prayer meeting is particularly unique, something which is offered in no other congregational service. Its fellowship which is so informal, its affections which are so close, its appeal which is so personal, and its intimacy which is so heart-searching, create that congenial atmosphere which is found in every happy family circle. So true is this that the half-hearted, entertainment-seeking, and ritualistic-worshiping beings of the Sabbath day services are culled out of this hour because that very intimacy oppresses them. Here then, as nowhere else in the church services, we have those who are heart and soul in sympathy with the work of the kingdom, and in a most cordial relationship with the minister. They are interested in the Bible, in the agencies of the church life, in the great throbbing work of missions, and in the desires of God's servant for the work of the Gospel. Thus he meets with them in this service as a friend with friends, where heart opens to heart, where love responds to love, and where the cordial response of that friendship is deeply and surely felt. Under such an influence even the prayers of the people grow to be sacred vows made in the very presence of God, and bearing testimony of their loyalty to the support of his work.

Certainly no true man of God could miss this tug on his heart-strings as he leads such an hour, or could fail to understnad the supreme privilege which it offers to him in his work as a minister. It matters not what may be his subject or the trend of his discourse, he unconsciously finds himself becoming intimate, uncovering his secret soul and revealing the deepest reaches of his heart as it had been touched by God through the Savior. And in that hour as nowhere else the people will feel the richest quality of his consecration, the certainty of his messages from God, and the vital beliefs of his innermost soul. It must be so, because no man can keep from revealing his soul where such an intimacy, such a feeling of confidence, and such a warmth of sympathy exist. I say that this appeal is made in no other congregational service of the church life. It is distinctively unique and supreme. It not only touches the deepest religious life of the minister, but also draws the same response out of the people. Thus its mission is the most solemn responsibility of the minister and the greatest privilege of Christian people. In anouncing this service, I say again and again that my very best is given in the prayer meeting. This is true, because the hour inspires it, and because the conditions compel it. Thus this service is truly the backbone of the church life, and if it be neglected, the very vitals are affected. Surely no minister can appreciate such an opportunity without the most careful and prayerful preparation.

The Leader

It follows then from what has been said that the minister is the only one qualified to conduct such a service. It is not because of his peculiar fitness in an intellectual way, in a social way, or even in a spiritual way. There may be others in his congregation who could meet these conditions. But it is because of that unique relationship with his people which makes him their leader from God in spiritual affairs. No other individual can create the atmosphere and draw that peculiar response from the people which makes such a meeting. So that when another, elder or stranger, is called in to take the minister's place, it matters not how great may be his ability or his power, the unique mission of the service has been weakened and the deepest blessing to the people is lost. For the very power which draws them to this meeting week after week, amid the busy cares of the world, is that feeling of nearness to God and that desire for a closer walk with him which are created in the kindly fellowship of such a relation. Now the minister who has found himself in his place is breathing out a life-giving power which will permeate his whole church. Nothing else can do it.

The Service

The question is naturally asked, What type of service will best create this condition? It is evident that the supreme element must be devotion: not a falsely pious attitude nor a sentimental commentary on certain passages of scripturs given on the spur of the moment, but that true spirit of worship which interprets the mind of God in his Word and which is the natural expression of a consecrated life. Of course, the people's hearts can be prepared by a generous use of familiar hymns, especially by the ones which have been ringing in their souls all the week and which they have requested. It can also be strengthened by a goodly season of personal, intimate prayers directed by the suggestion of the minister, and recognizing the experiences of the week. It is thus that they are seized by God and prepared for the real service. But these elements of praise and prayer can only be preliminary even in a prayer meeting; for the conviction of song and the power of prayer are experienced only in those lives where the Word is living, where it has become the very voice of God, the revelation of the great divine heart in Christ Jesus. There is something in the deeps of man's experience which responds to these truths in God's book, and men and women begin to commune intelligently with him, not through prayer, not through song, not through charity, not through sermons, but through the Living Word.

Three years ago this conviction led me to attempt in my prayer meeting talks the use of large passages of scripture, a whole book of the Bible each week. I had learned that God always speaks the clearest and surest when his whole scheme of revelation is understood. In these talks I was led to see the history of Israel only as the background or the setting for some spiritual truth which God had for his people. The Everlasting Covenant became the key to the spiritual history of a chosen nation. Through this the great truths of revelation were seen in their message to Israel or to the Gentiles, and in their contributions to the experiences of the church and the world today. It has meant much hard work, much prayer, and much study—sometimes a whole summer's preparation—but it has brought a lasting foundation in my own life and the lives of my people which is building for all eternity. It has also redeemed the prayer meeting hour in the church which I serve, sustaining an average attendance of two hundred for the past three years, forty per cent. of which have been men.

I can understand how a prayer meeting will be killed if the minister, however brilliant he may be, expects to prepare for it on an afternoon or perhaps an hour before the service begins. He gives God nothing to work upon, and the deep truths which such a meeting should call forth are lost in an unprepared mind and soul. It is the plea of this paper that the minister of the gospel should conserve the unique effectiveness of the prayer meeting, even thought it means less sleep and almost crushing labor, for herein lies strong abiding power in the public service. It affects the whole life and faith of the church.—The Presbyterian.

"Children First"

"The results of underfeeding or indiscriminate food substitution in childhood are startlingly shown abroad as a result of the war, and are beginning to be evident in our own great cities." And "milk has no substitute in the diet of the child." These and other unqualified statements of the importance of guarding the milk supply to prevent the physical deterioration of American children during the war are scattered through the latest report issued by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and entitled "Milk, the Indispensable Food for Children."

This report, with its striking figures showing a decrease in the amount of milk now available and in the amount which is finding its way to the children in poor homes, has special interest in connection to save 100,000 lives of babies and little children during the second year of the war. It not only emphasizes the fact that children who are deprived of milk can not thrive properly, but it analyzes the changes in the production of the export of dairy products during the war and shows the necessity of public action.

"The nourishment of the children is the first duty of the nation. Since milk and milk products are a vital necessity for children, for nursing mothers, and for the sick and wounded, the public should be made to realize that the children's need for dairy products should be assured."

England and Italy have regulated the sale of cream and curtailed the use of butter, in order that their child population might receive the more adequate and economical nourishment offered by whole milk. Germany, early in the war, providd that the adult civilian population might have milk only after the needs of the children, mothers, invalids and the army were met.

The report discusses the various forms in which cows' milk may be used for children. For the young baby, it says, there is nothing so good as mother's milk.

"Never before in the history of civilization has it been so urgent a mater that every child should have breast milk for a long a time as possible, in order that every child that survives birth may have the best chance for life and health."

But for children under two other than those breast fed, and for older children the report states that cows' milk is an absolute necessity if disease and death are to be kept within bounds and if the coming generation is to survive and to sustain the national standards. "'Children first,' should be part of the national food slogan.

"It is the duty now of every individual community to see that its children have milk of good quality and in sufficient quantity to assure their normal development. To do this the price of milk must be controlled or fixed, and the milk supply to infants and children carefully safeguarded. The malnutrition of our children was, even before 1914, a serious national problem and one demanding urgent attention. Poverty and ignorance of dietary essentials have been ever-present factors in the malnutrition of the young, and war conditions can not fail to increase the gravity of the situation and the difficulties of maintaining the health of the Nation."

Men of Affairs and Agnosticism

A Bryn Mawr professor thinks that men of science tend strongly toward agnosticism. I shall not argue the question. But the big men in finance, politics, trade and transportation are not atheists by a long shot. Charles M. Schwab, of Bethlehem Steel; Alva Dinkey, his brother-in-law, and president of the Midvale Steel; E. C. Felton, of Pennsylvania Steel and Alba Johnson of Baldwin's, are all sound church men. President Rea, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is a church elder, and President Agnew T. Dice, of the Philadelphia and Reading is no more an unbeliever than he is a Turk. Our biggest Philadelphia stores, operated by the Gimbels, Snellenburgs, Strawbridges, Lits, Clothiers and Wanamakers, are what? Jews, Quakers and Presbyterians! If Samuel T. Bodine, president of the United Gas Improvement Company; Joseph B. McCall, president of the Philadelphia Electric; and Edward T. Stoesbury, managing director of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, are followers of Colonel "Bob" Ingersoll, their friends and their families are not aware of it, as all go regularly to church. The owners of all the Philadellphia newspapers are church-goers, and if there be an unbeliever among them, I never heard of it. And politicians, too. Governor Brumbaugh is a regularly ordained preacher. Senator "Jim" McNichol is a respected and popular pillar of the Roman Catholic church, while the Vares are genuinely sound and orthodox in their religious beliefs. * * * Look over the United States Senate and see how many agnostics you can count. Call the roll of the Presidents, and you will observe that they were religiously sound. Jefferson was often accused of being an agnostic, and a hair-brained medium wrote a book to prove that Lincoln was a spiritualist; but it is unfortunate that there is not more of the Lincoln brand of Christianity. Every little while 10,000 people walk down Chestnut street. Let one of them throw a stone through a store window, and immediately he becomes more conspicuous than the 9,999 put together. A snowball is an odd thing in a bucket of coal, and so the agnostic when he appears looks prevelent because he is so rare.—H. W. E., in The Lutheran.

Easter Week of Prayer

Subjects Recommended in the Call for Prayer Issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America

Sunday, March 24

Sermons on Joy and Sorrow; Sympathy and Service. Neh. 8: 8-12; Luke 19:29:44; John 15:11, 17:13.

Monday, March 25

Prayer for our Country, our Allies, and our Enemies. As we confess our sins and unite in supplication may the Christ who cleansed the temple cleanse us from unholy motives and desires. Palms 65:1-4, 139:23-24; Matt 5:43-38, 21:28-32.

Tuesday, March 26

Prayer for all nations; for Missionary and Evangelistic effort throughout the world. That the ends of the arth may see the deliverance of our God and before all nations his righteousness may be openly shown; that lust for war may be swallowed up in love for the world and that day hastened when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the deep. Psalm 67; Matt. 28:16-20; 1 Tim. 2:1-6.

Wednesday, March 27

Prayer for our Soldiers and Sailors; for Christian and Philanthropic organizations; for the Red Cross and for every agency seeking to destroy evil and to exalt good. That every enlisted man, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, may render to God the things that are his; that all associations of men and women may emulate Jesus in doing the will of God; that in the camp or on the sea, in the trench or in the battle, at the front or in the hospital, the men shall have with them our God who is not far away from every one of us. Neh. 4:13-20; Mark 9:38-41; Eph. 6:10-18.

Thursday, March 28

Prayer for churches and schools in all lands; for the unity of the church and the brotherhood of man. That we may heal divisions and exalt unity by the burden-bearing love of the strong for the weak; that beneficence and personal devotion may be magnified; that we may blend education and evangelism in witness alike of love to God and love to man. Psalm 119:9-166; Isa. 32:1-4, 16-18; John 17:20-23; Eph. 4:1-16.

Friday, March 29

Prayer for the suffering and the dying, for the poor and the children, for fathers and mothers and wives and families of all in our camps and armies and ships. That the scattered and helpless multitudes in Asia and Europe, who have been so cruelly robbed of their dearest rights, may find succor and comfort, that Christian sympathy and service may continue unwearied in their behalf. That their trust in him who makes the solitary to dwell in a home may not falter. Isa. 63:7-9; Jonah 4:10-11; Matt. 11:25-30; Acts 10:34-38; James 1:22-27.

Saturday, March 30

Prayer for the triumph of the righteous cause, for the establishment of justice and liberty and truth in all the world. That the kingdom of God may come in every land; that the longings for liberty hiding in the hearts of the peoples may leaven the whole lump of their national life; that the open sore of conflict between caste and class, rich and poor, employer and employee may be healed; that our own beloved land may keep its highest ideals unstained and that peace established in righteousness with covenants sealed in justice and love may bind all nations in permanent good will. Psalm 85:9-13, 87; Isa. 47:21-29; Rom. 15:1-7; Heb. 12:18-29.

Sunday, March 31

Sermons on the triumph of Christ and of his gospel in the world. The victory and the glory of the King of kings. Psalm 110; Phil. 2:9-11; Rev. 1:4-8.

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches;

The Sunday School

The Improved Uniform Lessons and Graded Lessons—An Explanation

In a circular letter sent to all our Sunday schools at the close of the year 1917, I endeavored to make as clear as language could make it just what the Improved Uniform Lessons are, and how they differ from the regularly Closely Graded Lessons.

It is not my purpose at this time to go into details as to the difference between these two systems of lessons, except this, that the Improved Uniform lessons aim at a happy medium between the Old Uniform Lessons and the Closely Graded Lessons introduced about eight years ago. The most important advance of the Improved International Uniform Lessons, as the new system is called, over the old Uniform Lessons, lies in the fact that in connection with the same general lesson for each Sunday, different study topics and additional Bible passages are provided for pupils of different ages. The Improved Uniform Lessons are now a graded system of lessons, but not CLOSELY graded.

The question has been asked and is now being asked, "Will the use of the Improved International Uniform Lessons meet the requirements of the Standard of Excellence which requires the use of graded Lessons in at least one department?"

The answer is plainly, No, at least not until there is a different ruling on the subject by those in authority. To be a Front Line school according to present requirements you must use Graded lessons other than the Uniform in at least one department of your school. If your school uses Graded Lessons in the Beginners' Department you are qualified for a Front Line school.

What the future ruling with reference to this mater will be I am not now prepared to say. A circular letter giving detailed information on the place of the Improved Uniform Lessons will be mailed about May 1. A. D GNAGEY.

The Bible School

There are Bible schools where there are no churches—missions that grow into churches. We have known many such schools, but we do not recall a church that had no Bible school. Nor could we conceive of a church with any life in it, in this day, without a Bible school.

We have, however, known churches—quite a number— that did not have well organized, adequately equipped, resultful Bible schools. The hit-and-go-miss, let-it-run-itself, non-producing Bible school is everywhere too evident—it can be easily found in city, town and country.

The question respecting every Bible school should be the question ever connected with every business enterprise: How can it be made to produce the greatest results?

Bible school experts are plentiful, and theories—printed in books, periodicals and pamphlets and explained in conferences—are now so numerous that one may speak with poetic license and say, "They are as the stars and as the sands of the shore."

The average Bible school does not lack theory—it would be practically impossible for a present-day superintendent or teacher to be unacquainted with practical methods. The greatest lack in the average school is a consecrated, vigorous, determined interest. No mater how excellent his theory, the superintendent or teacher or secretary or music leader who is not on the job—early and late—and all hours between—will not succeed in Bible school work. Simply going to the appointed place at the appointed time, and mechanically "serving" will not put life into and build up a Bible school or a Bible class. Thought and effort must be put into every thing that succeeds. Successful Bible school workers are therefore men and women who think and plan and call on people and talk up their school during the week, and who are, as a result of the week's activity, so cheery and hopeful and magnetic on Sunday that their very presence in the school is as a fresh sea breeze which exhilarates and inspires.

Every one is familiar with the saying: "It is better to have a small, well-organized, carefully taught school than to have a large, unwieldy, half-taught school." Sounds good and looks well in print, but, like many another current saying, it lacks common sense. A large school is as easily organized and handled and taught as a small one. Our observation has been that the larger the school the more readily it submits to discipline and instruction. There is an abundance of life—the pulsating life of childhood, youth, middle age and even old age—in the large, full-orbed school; an abounding, active life is always more easily organized and handled than death or slumber. Life, if properly guided, will, like onrushing water, handle itself—and handle itself aright. We are in the Bible school business to reach and hold and instruct and save the multitudes, and the moment a school ceases to reach out—becomes self-satisfied, crystallizes—it begins to decline in cultural power as well as in numbers."

"The Bible school should be what its name indicates." Unless the scholars are taught the Bible, they are cheated—they come and ask for bread and fish, and are given stones and serpents. Dishonesty in the house of God, perpetrated upon young people and children!

We once heard a Bible school efficiency lecturer say, in a round-table conference: "Follow the thought trend of your class—if they want to talk ball or whatever is uppermost in their minds, talk it to them and watch your opportunity to make applications." We doubted the wisdom of this advice at the time; and we still doubt it. It would be as sensible to say, Let the preacher talk stocks and cooking and pleasures to his people and watch his opportunity to make applications.

They tell us that adults are children grown up, and that children are adults in bud. It is a change—different thinking—which people, grown-ups and children alike, need on Sunday. And if the Bible supplies the need in the morning church service, why should it not meet the same necessity during the Bible school hour?

No school should tolerate literature that contains a trace of rationalism or skepticism. If this note of warning appears strange to any one, let him compare much of the present-day Sunday school literature with the Bible and be convinced that dangerous teaching is creeping into many of the schools. The rationalism that wrecked Germany, first spiritually, then morally, is abroad in our land, and its advocates are seeking to put it into every Bible school quarterly, paper and leaflet.

The boys and girls of today will guide the civilization of tomorrow. The Bible school officers and teachers are molding our future manhod and womanhood, and upon their shoulders rest responsibilities that can not be measured or weighed. And the day of reckoning will speedily come!—Christian Standard.

Her Daughter's Bible

"There's one thing more," said Mrs. Allen, as she consulted her shopping-list. "Dorothy wants a Bible for a birthday present. An inexpensive Bible will do just as well, of course, until she is older."

"May I tell you a story?" asked Mrs. Foster. "When my daughter Gladys was ten years old, her grandmother gave her a Bible for a Christmas present. The gift was so attractively bound that I thought of asking Gladys to lay it aside for a year or two, and carry a cheaper Bible to Bible school; but somehow I neglected to do so. One Sunday afternoon, several months later, Gladys came to me in great distress. 'Oh, mother!' she cried, 'I've lost my precious, precious Bible!' I put the baby in his crib and joined in the search. When at last we found the lost treasure, my daughter gathered it to her breast.

"'Now I can mark another love verse,' she said rapturously, as she opened a box of crayons; 'Mr. Rollins explained it to us in church. I have thirty already.' And she turned to the fifteenth chapter of John and placed a red dot beside the 'love verse'—the text of the morning's sermon.

"'What are the blue dots for?' I asked, as she turned several leaves.

"'Oh, those are the love verses,' was the quick reply, 'and the bright orange dots are the faith verses, and, oh, mother, there's your favorite verse marked with a yellow star.' I took the Bible and read, 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee,' and I well remembered the hour when I repeated those words to Gladys. My mother was seriously ill at the time. 'And there's Mr. Rollin's favorite verse,' the child went on, 'and my Bible school teacher's, and Aunt Ellen's and grandmother's—and here's mine!'

"As I felt the soft leather and noticed the quality of the paper I was grateful to the wise grandmother who chose a Bible that would stand many years of constant usage. No other Bible would ever mean so much to my daughter as the Bible with which she was growing up."—Exchange.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

Once again we are able to report that one of our leading churches has won a place on the Honor Roll for the Evangelist. This time it is from the far northwest and Sunnyside is the church. Brother Ashman is to be congratulated upon his success in this effort. Nearly one hundred names are added to our subscription list. All things considered the far west has done well, if not just a little better in this matter than any other section of the entire brotherhood. Some of us remember that a malicious report was circulated a short time ago that Brother Ashman had been sent to prison for disloyal utterances. When we received this list from Sunnyside we said: "Well, if Brother Ashman can get a list of subscribers like that while in jail we wish a few more of our preachers might have the same experience. Again we congratulate both Brother Ashman and his loyal helpers at Sunnyside. Please do not think, Brethren, because the beginning of the year has passed it is too late to get your churches on the honor roll of churches. Any time will do and one month is as good as another. Who will be the next pastor to get his church numbered among those that have accomplished this goal in the Four-Year Program.

In his College Notes this week Brother Lambert tells of a visit to the College and an address by a returned missionary,, Dr Mabie, from Africa. We are glad to be able to carry a part of the message Dr. Mabie is spreading among the American Christians in an article written by her for the pages of the Missionary Review. Read this article on page ten of the Evangelist.

Every church in Ohio should be represented at the Brethren conference at Fremont April sixteen to eighteen. These are busy and important days for the Brethren church and the churches should see that their pastors attend without fail and wherever possible lay delegates should be sent also.

R. P. Miller and the band of faithful workers he is leading in Spokane are having their periods of "waiting on the Lord" as well as their periods of great activity. In spite of the many hard experiences that have come to them they are pushing on and the work of the Brethren is progressing nicely. The Sunday school has grown perceptibly and seven members have recently been added to the church with others ready for baptism. One of the most urgent needs at present is funds for the completion of the church building. N. W. Jennings has arranged to hold an evangelistic meeting in Spokane in May.

A. P. Reed sends just a few lines from the First Brethren church of Los Angeles just to let us know that they are busy about their Master's business. Since the last report two members have been added to the church. Here the Christian Endeavor work is being featured and Brother Reed has sent us a couple of "sermonettes" prepared by some of the young people for use in their meetings and which appear on another page.

The Brethren of Fremont, Ohio, have recently passed through a splendid revival meeting. The meeting was begun by the pastor, H. M. Oberholtzer, and was continued by A. E. Hoppes, of Burlington, Indiana. The meetings resulted in thirteen confessions, most of which have already been received into the church. The Fremont church will entertain the Ohio conference on April 16,-18.

Our youngest readers are favored this week with letters from the children belonging to both the African and South American missionary parties that recently sailed from the home land to their distant fields. Little Marguerite Gribble dictated (?) her letter to her mother and Eleanor Yoder writes for the Yoder children on their way to South America. Both letters were written while aboard the ships sailing "o'er the waters blue."

Brother Carpenter sends the February report of offerings for the work in Kentucky and also announces the close of the winter term of school at Riverside in the near future. O. E. Bowman, secretary of the General Missionary Board will give the commencement address.

Brother Cook is now arranging for the dedication of the Kryptton chapel. The work in Kentucky has cost the Brethren church some money but it seems to be making as much progress as the work in any part of the brotherhood.

J. D. Kemper, pastor at Morrill, Kansas, has been called into the Y. M. C. A. war work in one of the camps in Colorado and will soon take up his duties in connection with that position. So far as we know Brother Kemper is the first Brethren pastor to be called into such work. One of our students, "Bob" Frehse, was called into this work last summer. It is a work that gives one a world of opportunity to do good.

J. F. Watson is now engaged in an evangelistic effort in the First Brethren church of Johnstown. Thorough preparation was made for this meeting, one feature of the preparation being an every member canvass to place the Brethren Evangelist into every Brethren home.

La Verne, California, recently enjoyed a short evangelistic meeting with Brother Beal, of Los Angeles, coming to the assistance of Brother Broad, the pastor. Among the visible results of the meeting may be mentioned the addition of four members to the church, two of the number by baptism.

A. L. DeLozier still has the courage to press on in a peculiarly difficult field, Allentown, Pennsylvania. He and his members enjoyed a short visit from A. E. Thomas, a former pastor, over the holiday season. The closing service of the old year saw the reconsecration of one member of the church and the confession of the Master by another. Brother DeLozier is now engaged with his people in an evangelistic effort.

Do not fail to read Dr. Furry's announcement of the Summer School at Ashland. This will be a splendid opportunity for the young teachers of the Brethren church in Ohio to get acquainted with Ashland College. The Normal work must be done somewhere. Why not do it at a Brethren school? Ashland is a fine place to spend a few weeks in the summer.

The paper which appears on the C. E. page expresses the earnestness of the young people of Elkhart in their efforts to carry on the real work of the Master. We are sure many of the young people of other societies will enjoy Miss Leonard's contribution.

W. H. Beachler experienced a happy surprise in his work for the College Endowment last week. Banished from one community because of a small pox epidemic he met with a splendid reception and received a splendid gift for the College while on his way to his next engagement. The whole brotherhood will thank Brother Juillerat for his generosity.

For two weeks we have wanted to give room to a display advertisement for Dr. Miller in behalf of the Easter Missionary Offering, but have not been able to get it in shape because of shortage of help. But every one in the church knows of the offering and they also certainly know it is their duty to make the offering a liberal one.

Around the Editor's Table

Incubator Christians

A few days ago we read an article, in a popular magazine, entitled "Raising Chickens Without Hens." It was a splendidly written article and full of information that would prove of great value, especially to an amateur in the chicken business, but it was not of any special interest to one who is not concerned about raising chickens.

As I looked at the subject of the article in question I was made to think how often people try to raise Christians without Christ. Now, we know that it is thoroughly practical, especially for an expert, to raise chickens without a hen. In fact many poultry men are firm in their belief that you can do it more successfully without the hen than you can with her, and those who are engaged in chicken raising on a large scale are experienced operators of the incubator; but some how or other the man has never been born who can make it plain that a Christian can be raised without Christ. We know that some of the modern methods of church work and of evangelistic work are carried on along incubator lines, and where heretofore men have been content to secure "hen" results in a revival meeting with twelve or fifteen new-born Christians, now they are considered obsolete as evangelists if they do not succeed in bringing out an "incubator hatch" of from one hundred and fifty to ten thousand "professed" conversions.

It is to be noted also that when chickens are hatched without hens it is very essential that a suitable "brooder" be provided to care for the chick that "hasn't scratched yet" until it has gained sufficient strength to care for itself and to keep warm by its own efforts, and so it seems to be in many churches, the brooder system must be employed to "coddle" along the big hatch of the incubator system of evangelism, but there is no equipment in the way of modern Sunday school buildings, with provisions made for every department of the school, nor will the latest style of church architecture, nor the addition of a pipe organ or a paid quartet, supplemented with a new preacher now and then who has imbibed the "freshest" ideas of religious work, that can take the place of Christ in the salvation of souls.

There can be no Christian nor no Christian church apart from the enthronement of Jesus Christ as Lord of all. For the raising of Christians there is but one way, the "way of the cross," all other ways lead into darkness and death. In the face of every modern innovation let us not forget that the one thing that will remain the same is Christ.

Choking the Swine

When the demoniac from the tombs came to Jesus and was set free from the demons that had bound him with fetters that no man could loose and that made it impossible for human restraint to prevent his violent outbursts of madness and the demons that had possessed him entered into the swine resulting in the destruction of the swine by drowning in the sea the men from the surrounding country begged of Jesus that he would depart out of their coasts.

Jesus promptly complied with their request because he had accomplished his mission to the man set free which seems to have been his purpose in entering their country, but no doubt there were those remaining in the country who thought he should have compensated the owners of the swine before he left that they might not suffer loss.

Some time ago the authorities of the State of Iowa seized $125,000 worth of liquor held by the Des Moines, Iowa, Drug Company, and just recently the courts have ordered it to be destroyed. And no doubt there are hundreds of people in Des Moines and in all parts of Iowa who will say it is a downright shame to destroy so much perfectly good "licker" in such a wanton manner, and that if it must be destroyed the authorities should pay the drug company for their loss anyway. Of course they do not take into consideration the fact that the drug company had no right to have such a stock of liquors on hand and that they were taking the risk in their own hands when they made the purchase. In a like manner there are many who seem to think if a state or the nation goes dry the men who are engaged in the liquor business should be compensated for their loss. They should remember that any man who has entered the liquor business during the last ten years, has done so, knowing that he was engaging in a business that was rapidly being outlawed all over the country, and if he chose to invest his money in such a precarious business the risk has been entirely his.

We are glad to note that good men everywhere are coming to see the general worthlessness of the entire liquor business and are coming to agree that it must be destroyed, and considering all things the public is very lenient with those who are engaged in this unholy traffic in that they give them every opportunity to change their business before the curtain is rung down on the whole traffic and before the swine are choked in the depths of the sea.

Christ in the Commonplace

Christ was with his disciples on their journey from village to village and from country to country during his ministry on the earth; he was with them on the mountain top at the time of his transfiguration; he was with them in the storm upon the Sea of Galilee and he was with them during the feast in the upper room in Jerusalem during his last days. These were always eventful days and the occasions seemed to be occasions of special importance. We consider that the disciples took it for granted that he would always be with them on such special and important occasions, but they may have wondered if he would grace the commonplace duties of life with his presence as they may have engaged in these tasks.

One of the lessons that Jesus seemed to teach with a great deal of persistence during his forty days upon earth after his resurrection and before his ascension that he would be with his followers in all the common walks of life. When the two were on their way to Emmaus their Master walked with them, and when the eleven were in an upper room with the door shut and all the world locked without, Jesus appeared in their midst to comfort them in their feeling of left-aloneness, and when he had found them returning to their old occupation of fishing in the lake and in the early gloom of the morning ministered to their wants he let it be known that in the common and practical things of every day life they could count on his nearness. The disciples had many things to learn before they could carry out their mission of thoroughly establishing the Christian church and during these pre-ascension days they were learning some of these lessons. Now we may profit from their schooling.

It is good to think of Jesus being present with us on every great occasion and when we are engaged in some great definite work for him or his kingdom, but it is better to think of him as being present with us to encourage and cheer while we are engaged in the commonplace, every day duties of life. With most of us the commonplace has been our lot, and had we to wait for some great occasion to feel the nearness of the Master such an experience would be denied to most of us, but when we remember that any common duty, performed as in the presence of the Master and in his name, becomes uncommon and is graced by his presence, then all of us may feel that the Master is with us as he was with his disciples of old.

The Powerlessness of Christ

To those of us who have been accustomed to thinking of Jesus Christ as being all-powerful it may seem like blasphemy to even intimate the possibility of his being powerless under any circumstances; and yet Mark says of his ministry at Nazareth, "And he could there do no mighty work." Of course he laid his hands upon a few sick folks and healed them, but this had become such a common experience in his ministry that it was not regarded as anything remarkable in itself, but as for doing any great thing toward the establishment of his kingdom in Nazareth it was out of the question. He was left in a situation where he was powerless to act. This may seem like a strange statement when made concerning the work of the Master, but after all it is not strange when it is understood how and through what power he worked. Jesus had the power in himself, but the connection between him and the people had not been made or had been broken. The writer chances to be the unfortunate possessor of an automobile, equipped with an electric self-starter, and the starter never fails to work, except sometimes. One day last fall he was driving through the country with his family when he had occasion to stop the car on the summit of a long grade, but when he attempted to start the motor wouldn't budge. Seemingly not a spark of the magic fluid called electricity could be sent into the self-starter. It was not because the batteries had run down for they had been re-charged only a few days before. By pushing the car a few feet by hand it would coast down the hill; by this process we started on our way and then throwing on the clutch the engine started and we gave it no chance to stop until we reached home. We traced all the wiring and could find no broken connections or short circuits. We took the switch apart and could find nothing wrong there. The wet storage batteries still tested 1250 with the "testometer," so we decided to visit an expert and lay the case before him. After explaining the matter to him he said: "Disconnect your ground wire from the batteries, scrape off the post and the inside of the connection terminal with your knife, put on a liberal application of vaseline, tighten up the connection and try it again." We followed his instructions and the first time we threw on the switch the engine started off with a "hum." The power was there all the time, but it could not get to the place where it could be utilized because of a faulty connection.

And Jesus is sometimes left powerless because those upon whom he would exercise his power break the connection by their unbelief. Jesus is all-powerful when faith in him is exercised; he is powerless when we refuse to believe in him—that is his power over the souls of men can be effective only where there is faith in him because that is according to the Father's plan for the redemption of mankind.

Work in Congo Belge

There are no schools in Belgian Congo save mission schools and the entire burden of education falls on us. From the beginning our missionaries have sought to place native teachers in the little towns and villages. At Banza Manteke for many years we had a school where men were given eight to ten months' training, preparatory to such work. At other stations children were gathered in boarding schools for two or three years and then sent back as teachers to their own towns. It became evident several years ago that we must have better trained teachers and evangelists to hold the present generation, many of whom have been familiar with the gospels from earliest childhood. The English Baptists, whose stations on the Lower River adjoin our own, found their need for such trained leaders as great as ours, so the two societies joined together in founding the Congo Evangelical Training Institution at Kimpese.

Picked men from both societies are sent here for three years 'training. All married are required to bring their wives and children for whom training is also provided. The Faculty is drawn from both societies. Four years ago the trustees of the institution invited me to join the faculty for work among the students' wives. A resident physician is desirable at such an institution, both for the care and instruction of the student body. We think that we have an ideal educational community.

The student families live in small individual two-room brick cottages back of which are small cook-houses and a considerable stretch of good garden land which they keep under cultivation. Sweet potatoes, peanuts, corn, native peas and beans and manioc are the staples, while down along the stream to the west are magnificent plantain gardens. The houses are furnished with brick beds cemented over; the walls and floors are also coated with cement and can be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected when necessary. Native-made tables and a chair or two complete the simple furnishings. Twice a month I inspect the houses and cook-houses and insist on cleanliness.

The women are in school three hours a day and as practically all have young children, we allow each woman to bring with her a small boy or girl to serve as a nurse for the little ones while she is in school. These nurse children compose the larger part of the Practice School in which the students receive instruction and practice in teaching. Many of the women can neither read nor write when they come to us, for while the men are picked fellows we have to make the best of the sort of wives they have chosen and do what we can with them. A few prove too old or too stupid ever to master the fine art of reading well, but even such are greatly helped by their three years of residence here. In my Bible work, I place much emphasis upon story telling, and often those who read but haltingly, can tell a story splendidly. If we can scatter throughout these lower Congo hill towns a goodly number of mothers with stories to tell to their own and other children, stories from the dear old Book, who knows but that they may prove as potent forces for good and godliness as the village teacher or preacher? The Congo mothers sitting on the ground about their cooking pots, picking open squash seeds, have nothing better than gossip to retail. They have no wholesome stories, no beautiful fairy tales to waken high resolve and cultivate imagination in the minds of the little children.

We try to send the women away thoroughly familiar with the life of our Lord, also with a knowledge of the more prominent Old Testament characters. This year I spent three hours a week with the advanced women, all of whom read intelligently, in a study of the lives of Peter and Paul with the Acts as a text-book and their epistles as commentaries. They were immensely interested. One woman in her final examination received 98 per cent. on a stiff paper, because I didn't quite want to give her a hundred. We expect them to help their husbands in the day and Sunday schools in their towns when they return. Mrs. Moon has been training them to teach the younger children in Sunday school here throughout the year. We find the large primary Lesson rolls, and, in fact, any good illustrations of Bible subjects, very useful and would be pleased to have you mail us those with which your own Primary Department has finished. Smaller Bible pictures we use to illustrate the women's and children's composition books.

One old white-haired chief came this morning for the third time, much relieved from the ailment from which he sought relief. This morning I had a quiet talk with him about getting acquainted with the good God who could relieve his spirit's indispositions and troubles, while I could only relieve those of his body, which before many years he must lay in the grave. He listened somewhat perplexed, like a little child, and finally said, "I am too old to believe new things. Tell the children." I replied that God too was old, older than the world and would understand, men could never grow too old to forsake their sin and evil ways, and love and obey the Giver of Life, the God and Father of us all. There are many coming daily for medical attention who are not Christians and so there are daily opportunities for sowing the good seed of the kingdom. Pray that we may be faithful in season and out of season, ever mirroring the likeness of the Man of Galilee who went about doing good.—Catherine L. Mabie.

First—Our Country or Our God

One of the great lessons to be learned from the present war and the cause that led up to it, is the obvious one that the world is greater than any one country, humanity is greater than any one race, and the church of Christ is greater than any one denomination. It takes a world war to draw some of us out of our provincialism and out of sectarianism.

It is unquestionably best for mankind that patriotism should be promoted so that each citizen may have the incentive to develop the resources of his own country, and take a pride in seeing his nation stand for the best. As men are constituted, it is also good that every Christian should be loyal to his own particular creed and denomination, so far as that branch of the church is truly loyal to Christ. The time has come, however, when every intelligent man or woman must place the welfare of the world before the prosperity of his own country, when the needs of men of any land or race must have prior claim to the comforts and luxuries of family and nation. The same is true of the church. One who thinks that his own denomination comprises the Church of Christ must be blind and deaf; one who fails to realize that all men have an equal right to the blessings of Christ's gospel has not yet comprehended that gospel.

The war must lead us to recognize the fact that "God hath made of one blood all nations for to dwell on the face of all the earth," and that what affects one must affect all. One nation can not be selfish or heathenish and others more enlightened nations not be contaminated. The world to be safe must be safe for all. Mankind to be saved must all be saved—as individuals.

The war makes clear the other fact that men must unite on a program—not each section work on an individual scheme and theory. There must be unity, if not union. The churches must face their common task together — recognizing individuality, but making sectarianism subject to the whole Christian program.

A paper has recently been sent out by the "Advisory Council on Americanization to the United States Bureau of Education" calling for united action of all forces to train into American citizens the 66,643 aliens who are subject to draft. Many of these are Italians, Poles, Hungarians, Russians, Jews and others can not speak English. There are 1,500 foreign language newspapers published in the United States and many of them are anti-American in spirit and ideals. The unnaturalized and undigested alien element is a menace to the best American ideals, and is often anti-Christian.

The registration and drafting of these aliens and un-American residents furnish a great opportunity to educate them in the English language and in American institutions. Those of military age and others registered may well be required to attend classes in camps, cities and factory centers conducted by carefully selected teachers. The foreign-language press should be used to print a series of educational articles, and speakers should be sent out to lecture. At the same time the Christian churches should co-operate to train these same millions in a thorough understanding of Christian standards. The "America-First Campaign" may well be accompanied by a "Christianity First" campaign. These aims and ideals are not at all antagonistic or inharmonious. As a matter of fact, the best Christians are the finest patriots, and a man can serve his country best by seeking first the kingdom of God.

Our Youngest Readers

On Board S. S. City of Cairo

January 12, 1918.

Dear Little Friends:

Until I am old enough to write for myself, my mamma wants to write to you and tell you often of our experiences.

On Monday afternoon we left our boarding house, New Orleans, and went on the street car down to St. Andrew's dock. There they opened all daddy's cases and boxes, and even opened the letters that daddy and mamma had written each other. Then they put some queer white chalk marks on every box and case, which I heard daddy say meant all right (O. K.). Then we were all told we could show our pass ports. Mamma had her own, but daddy and I had one together, and my picture is on daddy's passport right under his. So daddy took me on his arm and we passed the port. I suppose that is what passport is for. I looked behind me to see if mamma was surely coming too, for I didn't want to go to Africa without her, not even on daddy's arm.

We found our cabins in one corner of the lower deck. Such tiny little places. Only two narrow beds, and three of us to sleep in ours. Well, the first night mamma put me to bed in the lower birth and daddy crawled in with me. Since then Miss Myers and Miss Snyder and mamma have been sleeping on deck where it is nice and cool. I want mamma to let me sleep there too, but we can't get my little camp bed out of the "hold" until Saturday, so daddy sleeps in the cabin with me.

We have a very busy day. At about six o'clock the steward brings what he calls "morning tea." I have a piece of toast and a cup of milk, and then mamma dresses me and takes me on deck.

All the missionaries have prayer together and then Bible study. I am too young for the Bible study yet, but I am learning to pray. Please pray for me that I may know and love Jesus very, very young.

Afterwards we go down to breakfast, and then I play on deck while the others study French and Sango. Sometimes I stand around and say the French words too, but the others laugh at me and I run away again.

At twelve o'clock I have my dinner and go to bed. The others eat at one. When I wake up I play the rest of the afternoon. I have dollies, and a kitty, and a dog, a pocket book, a ball, some toy money and many other things. There are many children on board, but most of the others are travelling first class. I am not the only child second class however, for there are five little ones going to India with their papa and mamma.

Little ones almost fill up one of the life boats and some are scattered about in others with their papas and mammas. We have had life boat drill only once. Mamma says she is not afraid, for Jesus will take care of the others and of us.

It seems strange to be traveling here where it is so warm when you there at home are suffering with the cold as we too did only a short time ago. We shall soon be where it is very warm. Now we are very comfortable.

I hope as I grow older to be able to write you myself. Lovingly,

MARGUERITE.

Our Trip to Argentina

February 4, 1918.

Dear Boys and Girls in the Homeland:

In my last letter I promised to tell you about our trip and as we are almost to Buenos Aires I will begin. We have been happy and safe so far. We got to New York, January 3, just a month ago and had to wait a few days there for the boat. It was cold there and the streets were covered with ice. Many horses as well as people fell down. We stayed on the sixth floor of a hotel and went to eat at an "automat" across the street. We saw some buildings that seemed to reach almost to the clouds.

When we went to the boat the streets were full of big wagons full of barrels and boxes. When we got there we found the boat was not going till next day The next day we came through a "tube." When we got to the pier we had to open all our baggage and have it examined to see if there were any bombs, and while we were waiting we nearly froze, all except papa. He had to sweat because he had to rope and unrope the trunks.

When we started out we went under the big suspension bridges and among hundreds of boats hurrying back and forth and then through a lot of fine pieces of ice floating, past the Statue of Liberty and then into the big blue waves. It was cold at first but every day got warmer as we went south. The third day we had a storm and only two people on the boat could eat. The waves dashed clear over the deck. On January 16, we arrived at Charlotte Ancalia, on the island of St. Thomas. Here we stayed all day to take on coal. Several hundred negroes, mostly women and children, carried the coal in baskets on their heads and got a penny a basket for it. Papa went over town and also took us over the hill to a nice bay where we put on our bathing suits and went bathing and gathered a lot of sea shells and corals and little sea animals. I stepped on a "sea nettle" in the water and it stung me. There was a big shark near the boat but they could not get it. After we left St. Thomas we did not stop for two weeks till we got to Rio de Janeiro. The weather was warm all the way and nearly all the first week was stormy. One big wave brought a flying fish up on the deck and papa got it.

They put up a large canvas tank on the deck and we went bathing in it every day. The day that we crossed the equator they "initiated" all who had never crossed it before by blacking their faces and putting them in a large basket and tossing them into the water. We got to Rio de Janeiro January 29, and stayed ou our boat the "Saga" until papa arranged for us to go on a Japanese boat which left two days later. It is very much larger than the "Saga" and does not go up and down and sideways as much as the "Saga."

While we were in Rio de Janeiro we went out to the botanical garden. It took us forty minutes on the street car and we passed many beautiful houses and flower gardens. In the garden we saw all kinds of beautiful things.

There were avenues of royal palms and others of bamboo and others of cocoanut palms and banana trees and mangos and the guide showed us how they get rubber and got some juice from the rubber trees for us, and some cinnamon bark from the cinnamon tree and some leaves from the camphor tree and flowers and fruit from the cocoanut tree and gave us a drink from the traveler's tree." He just stuck his knife in and out came fresh water. We saw also the water lilies and one kind of the Victoria regia with leaves turned up at the edges so that a person could stand on them.

The water was full of fishes and when we would clap our hands they would come swimming, hundreds of them and would jump out of the water and fight to get the pieces of bread we threw them.

There were many other beautiful things I could not tell you about. The garden is just below a mountain several thousand feet high called Corcobados which has an observation station on the top of it and on an island nearby is another that looks like a finger stuck up out of the water. They call it sugar loaf mountain and there is a wire cable to the top of it which carries people up in a basket.

We enjoyed ourselves very much in Rio de Janeiro, but were glad to start on our way again as we are anxious to get to Rio Cuarto. We stopped next day at Santos, but only for a few hours and we did not go on shore. They do not have second class on this boat but they took us first class for the same price and it is very nice. There are only a few passengers.

Perhaps I may write more when I get to Rio Cuarto.

All pledges should be paid soon. The close of the Riverside regular school is near, Commencement ciming on Friday, March 22. Any desiring to visit the school at that time and enjoy the commencement will be welcome. Brother Orion E. Bowman, of Dayton, the efficient and hustling secretary-treasurer of our Home Mission Board, will give the commencement address. Brother Cook is planning for a special dedication of the Krypton chapel. He has ordered 12 dozen chairs and writes that the chapel is taking on a fine appearance and will be very inviting to those who worship there. He writes also that a water system is being installed and a trying problem is near its solution.

(Points About Christian Endeavor)

Dr. William Shaw, general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, is back at his desk after more than a year's absence, owing to injuries caused by an automobile accident.

About 250 St. Paul Endeavorers took the examination in "Expert Endeavor" last year. Every member of one society became a Christian Endeavor Expert.

Christian Endeavor war gardens were highly commended by government officials. The largest crop value from one acre was $550, and the smallest $102. The average was $328. The largest value from 400 square feet was $47; the average was $7.50.

California Juniors are being urged to read the Bible through this year, and many have adopted the plan.

As an instance of Christian Endeavor field-work, Mr. Charles F. Evans recently rode fifteen miles by mule-team, and two miles more by wagon to reach one meeting; then back the same night, by the same road, to the depot, where he sat from 12:30 A. M. till 5:30 to catch a train to take him to his next appointment.

Brethren Endeavorers will need to get busy along many lines if the Endeavor part of our Four-Year Program is to be a winner. "Over the top" we must go.

A Short Message on Rom. 12:1, Given at a Christian Endeavor Meeting at the First Brethren Church, Jan. 27, '18

By Ernest Chung Hoon

Let me take you back to the time when sin reigned in your hearts. When your minds were turned to the pleasures of this world. When love for the things of this world was more to you than the love for God. But a day finally came when you heard the love story of Jesus Christ. You heard how "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life." You heard how he was crucified on the cross that you might be saved from sin and death. You heard how he was buried and how he rose again. You heard how he is living now with his Father making intercession for us, and that he is coming back again to receive all those that have believed on him. That story touched your heart and you came to him. You opened your heart and accepted him as your Savior. Let me now draw your attention to what Paul says in Rom. 12:1: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Now Paul says by this verse that by the mercies of God, which is by the love of God that he had for you, that he gave his only Son to die for you, and that since you have accepted him as your Savior, to present yourselves a living sacrifice to him.

A question no doubt arises here. What does Paul mean by a living sacrifice. Let me draw your attention to the days of old when the children of Israel offered sacrifices of goats and lambs. These offerings were slain before they were offered to Jehovah. But Paul says present yourselves a living sacrifice. Have you accepted him as your Savior, have you in turn surrendered all to him? Jesus Christ when he saved you did not save just a part, but all of you. Have you in return said, "Lord, take all I possess and make me what you want me to be?" I believe this is what Paul means by a living sacrifice. To surrender all to God. Friends this sacrifice as we see by this verse is well pleasing to God. God accepts such a sacrifice. It is God's delight to see a person come and give myself, wholly surrendered to him. Is it anything but right, that we should give ourselves to him after he did so much for you and me? After he suffered the many hardships that we might have everlasting life? Think friends, think, are you going to surrender all to our Lord tonight?

What Is Our Duty as a Christian Endeavor Society to Ashland College?

(Read before the Elkhart, Indiana, Society, when Ashland College Night was observed.)

Our Christian Endeavor society is a training school for the purpose of interesting our young people in Christian work. Here is where they learn to express their thoughts in words on the topics for discussion. Then becoming more and more interested many are led to accept Christ as their Savior, and new desires are awakened in their hearts for a higher training in some definite Christian work.

To give the best service in any line of work one must have training, and Christian Endeavor can not fully train our young people to be ministers, missionaries or social workers; but it does start them on the way. When these new desires are awakened in their spiritual lives then there must be some place where they can receive higher training and where, but in the denominational colleges? There are many and they supply the special training required for definite Christian work, and at the same time their doctrines are taught. This then is the purpose of Ashland College, to train our Brethren young people in a college where our Brethren doctrines are taught. We find most of our ministers and mission workers have come from Ashland College, and if it had not been for her do you think there would be much of a Brethren church today? No. Our people would have gone some place else and perhaps our doctrines forgotten. Now we find many of our young people going to Ashland every year, and many more making plans and preparing to go.

What then is our duty as a Christian Endeavor society, but to give our college our most loyal support in every way? Let us be loyal in thoughts, words and deeds, and always stand by her. Let us pray for the divine guidance of those who have charge of the training of our young people. Pray for the students, that God will help them do the things they are striving to do for him. Pray for our young people who desire to go, that they with our help will find a way to do what they want to do for Christ.

Let us have faith in our college that she is going to go on in her good work, but faith without works is dead. We must give of our money and help support her, give gladly and willingly, so that we may feel we have a part in her good work. Let us as a society give bountifully from the blessings that God has given us when our offering is taken this evening.

Let us always observe Ashland College Night in our society and try and make it one of the best nights of the whole year. Make it a night to be remembered by our young people. Perhaps some of our number will take the stand tonight and become a Life Work recruit; and then go to our beloved Ashland for training. Looking back in years to come they will say:

"How dear to my heart is the church of my childhood,
When fond recollections present it to view;
First a Junior, then Intermediate, then Senior Endeavor
With their songs, prayers and teachings I loved so to hear;
O, our Christian Endeavorers were loyal Endeavorers
And, for that reason with God's help I'm now here."

MAYME LEONARD.

News From the Field

The Summer Session of Ashland College

First Session.....May 6 to June 15
Second Session.....June 17 to July 26

To meet the needs of the teachers of Ohio and other states Ashland College will offer two special terms during the summer of 1918 According to the new Code of Ohio no teacher will be permitted to teach in 1918 who has not attended an accredited Normal for at least eighteen weeks. The Department of Education in Ashland College has been officially recognized by the State Department of Education for the training of elementary teachers. The courses offered and the instruction will compare favorably with the recognized schools of the state. Teachers will have no difficulty in securing recognition of the work done in Ashland College.

The first session will open at the time of the closing of the rural schools and the courses of study offered are arranged with special reference to the needs of teachers of this class.

The regular faculty of the College will be supplemented by the addition of the following instructors: Prof. John A. McDowell, City Superintendent of Schools, Ashland, O., Professor L. L. Garber, formerly instructor in Ashland College and lately instructor in Kent State Normal School.

There will also be two teachers of recognized training and experience to offer special courses in the first four grades of the elementary school. Actual teaching will be done in the schools of Ashland.

Expenses As Low As the Lowest

The summer session of Ashland College affords an excellent opportunity to the members of the Brethren church to secure their professional training in their own church school. Ashland is a professional training school. Ashland is a delightful place and the more so in summer. If a sufficient number of the members of the church are in attendance special work in the Bible will be offered for their benefit. Why not be loyal to your church and its institutions? Ashland College can give you as good work as you can secure elsewhere and under the most wholesome religious influences. Write for Summer School Quarterly.

The last two months in which we have been engaged in the King's business here have been full of varied experience and spiritual joy.

Our three weeks' revival meeting has just closed. Brother Beal of Los Angeles, who with our pastor conducted the services, gave us splendid sermons. He stands four-square on the Bible and is an out-and-out premillenialist. He won many friends here by his sincere old-time religious messages. All the services, in spite of considerable rain, were very well attended. A children's choir three nights a week was much enjoyed. If ever a preacher loved children and found a place for them in his church it is our dear Brother Broad. Four were added to the church: two converts and two by letter from the east.

In tests which have come we have been busy exposing error and defending "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." Pamphlets by Shailer Matthews attacking the second coming were distributed over our city after we had been having some prophetic sermons. The people from the other churches having read these, flocked to hear two later sermons on "The Second Coming," and "Why I Am a Premillennialist." The truth is attracting the true believers. Then upon discovering that Christian Science was actually tainting some of our members and townsfolks, its erroneous teachings were exposed. We have also refused invitations to co-operate in Sunday evening war meetings. Thus Satan sends tests to the church.

We are glad to report that the Evangelist is now a weekly visitor in every active Brethren family.

May the Lord keep the church faithful. Pray for us.

The new year started off with the reconsecration of the life of each member of the church to Christ. Evangelist A. E. Thomas was with us in our last service of the old year, and after a heart searching message, asked for reconsecrations. Beginning with the pastor, the entire congregation was soon to the front as a token of our determination to live more intensely for the Master.

At that time one brother was reclaimed and a young lady came to confess Christ.

We also had a watch night service where Brother Thomas made an address that was truly worth while to those present. I take this opportunity to say that both pastor and people were helped by the presence in a few of our services of one who had once been the pastor here.,

Our Sunday school attendance fell off over the winter, but seems to be picking up now again. We fear that our circumstances here are such as to prevent our school from becoming a "Front Liner." Our work suffers from a dearth of young people and consequently our Sunday school must readjust itself to the situation.

The new Christian Endeavor officers are taking hold, with prayer meeting leaders already appointed for a period of the present term of office, and topic cards put into the hands of all Endeavorers.

Plans are laid for an attack on the enemy trenches, to begin March 17. Brother Fehnel will fire the first shot, and then all hands to the task, we hope to "go over the top" ere the "drive" closes.

Our city is a conspicuous example of religious camouflage, but as sure as the ass's ears showed through the lion's skin, so are his malignity's horns and hoofs betraying the camouflage. In French, camouflage means a shoddy imitation. May God help the Brethren church to stick to the real thing!

We are living in a day of changes. It looks as though King Alcohol will be ousted from Lehigh county. If this happens, any radical and almost unexpected thing may happen—even the Brethren cause may yet triumph here. A. L. DeLOZIER.

Ashland College Notes

Indiana came to the fore last night. The students from the Hoosier State surely know how to entertain. The gymnasium was the scene of the affair. It was decorated until it was quite "homey" in appearance. A splendid program was rendered. Miss Switzer and Harvey Becknell played a piano duet, Misses Banghart and Lentz read appropriate and characteristic selections. Miss Switzer sang "Ireland Must Be Heaven," and "Where the River Shannon Flows." The concluding number was an Indiana song by all the Hoosiers. After the program came a jolly good time and then refreshments. We can assure the folks from Indiana we spent an enjoyable evening.

We were especially favored this week in having with us Dr. Mabie, a returned missionary from Africa. She addressed a joint Y. M.-Y. W. meeting last Tuesday evening. She is especially pleasing as a speaker and her theme touched our hearts.

The Theological Association was addressed Thursday by Prof. Garber on "Soul Winning." He led in an hour of profitable discussion in the theme dear to all who obey the Master's command, "Go ye.....and make disciples."

Mr. James Ilger, former student of Ashland and now in U. S. service at Montgomery, Alabama, was a visitor here last week.

Miss Kanauer's expression department has things "cut out" for them in the coming months. Junior and Senior recitals are to be given and the students are striving earnestly to be ready and give a good account of themselves. Miss Pauline Teeter is at work on a number of selections for her recital. Those who are acquainted with Miss Teeter's elocutionary abilities look forward to an evening of good things.

Last evening's Philo program deserves especial mention. Hesperian's meeting was called off so that we might attend Philo's program. The numbers rendered were splendid and enjoyed by all. A minstrel sketch wes especially clever.

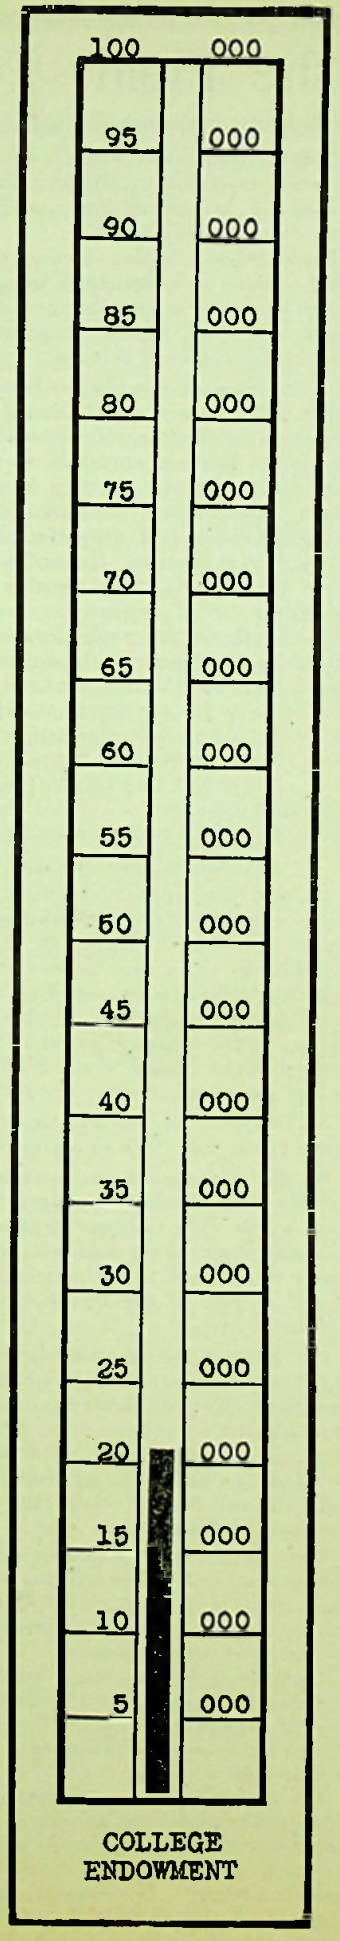
So many requests have come to the writer of these notes asking for copies of our college songs. It is not possible for the writer, owing to the press of college work to supply each person thus requesting with a copy of our songs. So through the columns of the Evangelist I will seek to reach all with our songs this week. I am including the song most often sung at conference and on College Hill. It is entitled "Old College Home," and the words follow. The song is sung to the music of "Sweet Genevieve."

Old Ashland dear, with voices clear
To thee we lift our loyal song;
Old Ashland U, old Ashland true,
Life's dearest mem'ries round thee throng.
Close to the Purple and the Gold,
The heart of youth will fondly cling;
And every heart string will enfold,
Around old Ashland as we sing.

Chorus:—
Old College Home, Old College Home,
The years may stray and fade away;
But faithful, true, to Ashland U,
Thy sons and daughters will remain.
Old Ashland stands, with beckoning hands,
Her dark pines breathe these songs of yore;
They weave anew, the old dreams too,
Of those who Ashland's banner bore.
The golden haze of student days,
Hath power to charm where'er they roam;
And often still their fancy strays
Back to the dear old college home.

Sing Ashland's songs. Get the college spirit. Let our young people know we have a college. Be loyal and boost the college of our denomination. New Lebanon we have heard about you. Go to it. F. M. L.

CAMPAIGN NOTES



The Bethel congregation at Berne is a rural congregation. We would have remained in this church for a week if a small pox epidemic in the community had not changed our plans. As it was, we preached seven times, and for the most part to good sized, attentive audiences. . Brother Frank Johnson is the pastor of this people. He lives in the midst of his people and is a farmer as well as a successful pastor and preacher. The Berne congregation has distinguished itself in the past by the successful evangelistic meetings it has had, and also by the large delegations of its people which atend General Conference. At the last conference there were from Berne 12 automobiles with 63 people. This church has adopted the budget system for the Evangelist and now 58 papers make their weekly visit to the homes of this congregation.

The immediate results of our canvass here for endowment were hardly what we expected. However, we consider that our time here was very profitably spent. This congregation has a great number of young people in their 'teens. And in addition to trying to enlist folks with their money, we also tried to turn the minds of these splendid young people toward Ashland. Up to this time Berne has had no representative in Ashland College, but if I am not badly mistaken the future will tell a different story. I have no doubt in the next few years several of the Berne young people will make their way to Ashland college.

The immediate result of our canvass was $900. However, it will go beyond this when the returns are all in. If it had not been for the small pox scare we could have brought the result to $1,000 at least. I shall remember for a long time to come the fine visit I had with Brother Johnson and his many good people.

While in this congregation the home of brother Frank Sipe was my headquarters and the hospitality was of the good old-fashioned kind which is hard to forget. I was also in the home of brother John Parr a number of times, who is one of the pillars in the Berne work.

It is going to be Pennsylvania next. We look for a great time in our canvass of the Pensylvania churches. Indiana has set a great pace. But we know now that Pennsylvania will not back down for anything that Indiana sets up. So look out when we Strike Pennsylvania.

Later.—On my way from Berne to Muncie, I stopped off at Portland to see brother E. A. Juillerat. Brother Juillerat holds his membership at Berne though he lives 26 miles from his church. But don't think he is isolated, for he is not. And what is more he believes in Ashland College and Christian education. He proved his faith by his works. Cheerfully and readily he laid down $200 cash for the cause of permanent endowment. May the good Lord give us many more men like him! Brother Juillerat has two daughters in high school; and one at least of these ladies will go to Ashland when she finishes high school. I am glad to have met this family.

Spokane Progress

The Lord has been pouring out great blessings without measure to us constantly. But truly, our choicest blessings are given after the severest testings. The devil always is busiest where the Spirit of God is saving sinners and where true Christians are endeavoring to live a holy, Godly life. "For all who live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. 3:12.

We are straining every nerve to get enough money on hand to justify us in borrowing enough to complete our building which we are sorely needing. Not having a local district to help us personally and financially and in moral support, we of necessity look to the whole brotherhood for the help we need. We need about $2,000 besides what we can raise here in Spokane. So far we have received about $300 of it and are hoping for the rest of it to come in time to complete the building this spring. But we are doing and giving all we can in the meantime knowing that God will not fail us when the time comes, for he has never failed us yet.

Our Sunday school is doing fine and growing steadily. We now have 135 in attendance and are getting more right along. We have a Teacher Training class of twelve members, with sister Lillian Bowers, our superintendent, as teacher. They are doing fine and bid fair to increase in numbers and graduate a large class. With our school growing so rapidly, our great need is competent teachers. But our present accommodations are altogether inadequate to care for the school as it is. I don't know what we'll do when it gets much larger. We have a contest on now for increase in attendance, and it is sure to swell the school still more.

Our church membership is increasing steadily, and we are having a splendid spirit in all the meetings. The attendance at all the meetings is fine and increasing right along. The Lord has added seven more to our number since last report, and we hold another baptismal service next Sunday morning. One woman came forward last night and accepted Christ. The best part about these additions is that the most of them are confessing Christ for the first time. We are earnestly awaiting the coming of Brother Jennings the first of May, to hold a few weeks of evangelistic services for us. I am teaching a personal workers' class in preparation for the meeting. How to overcome objections and difficulties of souls, from the Bible. I am expecting great things from them during the meetings. But they are not waiting for the meeting but are at work already, and I hope to bring joy to Brother Jennings' heart with a good corps of workers.

We are going to try to beat our offering for foreign missions last year, which was $86. We are aiming for at least $100 this time. The best we can do is only too little for the poor fellows who live and die without God and without hope in the world. We earnestly desire the prayers of you all that we may be found faithful.

R. PAUL MILLER.

Travel Notes—Roann, Indiana

We have just closed a two weeks' revival which was blessed of God though short. lifted closer to the heart of God, and the old rugged cross on which our Lord died. But it is a shame to butcher up an opportunity in a campaign as the writer had to do at Roann, also Sidney, but most especially so at Roann, for the lack of time, but there are some things over which we have no control, and this past winter has certainly been one of those things. Men of all walks in life have been held up, and thus run in behind time. The writer was never more rushed with his work and I am doing all I can to get to each place as nearly on time as possible. If God spares the writer until another year and he continues in the field as an evangelist he will make his plans for four weeks' meetings at each place and where it is not necessary to stay that long a little rest between each meeting would keep the evangelist in better trim for his work.

Brother Roy Brumbaugh, the pastor informed me before coming that my main work would be in the church among the members and most especially getting the young converts indoctrinated which were taken into the church in the union meeting held in the fall, so we found the field well gleaned, yet going from house to house we found some old trees that had stood many a winter, some leaning toward the kingdom of God and some toward the kingdom of the wicked one. Brother Brumbaugh, who is a six footer, got on one side of the tree with axe, the writer on the other side. We chopped away as the church pulled hard on the gospel ropes fastened around the top of the trees to pull them over on God's territory, but in the face of every effort the god of this world who bent them early in life and put his iron feet on them holding them these many years swung them his way. We wanted to work the material into heavenly timber, but failed. Our Lord said, "Ye will die in your sins and be lost." What an awful word Lost! Lost.

In the two weeks we were only able to bring five into the kingdom of God lined up in his service, but if they are faithful until the end and those who helped to bring them into the faith can at that last great day see them safely in the home of the soul where there is no wicked jealousy, no burning malice, will feel paid for every effort.

War is robbing many a platter of its fullness here and there, but not in the many homes in which we visited in Roann, platters were not only filled but filled with good things. We had our home with the preacher and useless to say we had a good time together.

Brother Brumbaugh is a young man but is a power in the pulpit and thoroughly orthodox and is doing a splendid work. His people love him and his good wife. I have never worked with a preacher old or young who knew his Bible better than Brother Brumbaugh, he will win out while others who neglect it for other books will lose.

Other books are good and ought to be read, but the King-Book, the Bible ought to be first in the morning and last in the evening.

The Roann people lack one thing, a new church house, and they have plenty of money what a blessing! We were glad to have with us one evening Brothers Bame and Teeter of North Manchester. Pray for your servant at Portis, Kansas, in a battle with Brother Whitted and people.

N. W. JENNINGS.

Fremont, Ohio

Our revival meetings at this place closed March 6. Weather conditions were quite favorable for the most part. The effort lasted for a little more than three weeks and resulted in thirteen conversions and much added strength to the membership. Nine have been baptized and received into the church. Others will probably be baptized in the near future.

During the first week the meetings were conducted by the pastor, after which brother Arthur E. Hoppes, of Burlington, Indiana, came to our assistance, and from night to night sounded forth the gospel message in a most earnest and convincing manner. It was upon very slight acquaintance and reputation that Brother Hoppes was secured but the church and pastor both feel that no mistake was made in this regard. He delivered the messages fearlessly and powerfully. He is a man of strong convictions and preaches with great enthusiasm. His exposition of the doctrines is thorough. He courageously declares the whole truth and denounces sin in no uncertain terms. His word pictures are painted with the skill of an artist and deeply stir the emotions. Brother Hoppes made many friends while in Fremont, and will find a hearty welcome at any time he may return.

Seventy-two were assembled at the tables of the Lord Sunday evening, March 3, to observe the love feast. It was a most blessed and enjoyable time. It was not quite the required 75% of the entire membership, but we still press on toward the goal. Many of our members live so far away from the church that it is hard for them to attend. We are now looking forward for a great conference April 16-18.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

First Brethren Church, Los Angeles, Calif.

Since our last letter we have had the pleasure of receiving into our church two members, a husband and wife, who had moved away from the city for a time, but are again back in our neighborhood and who wished to be restored to their former position as members of our fold. Last Sunday night we had a special musical program and the pastor preached on a topic that was pleasing to all who heard it, "Heaven, Where It Is and Who Are There." The church was well filled and there was evidence that all were glad they were there. A fine program is being planned for Easter Sunday when Brother Lowman wishes to see every member of this congregation present.

"Be Careful What You Say"

In speaking of a person's faults,
  Pray don't forget your own;
Remember, those with homes of glass
  Should never throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
  But talk of those who sin,
'Tis better we commence at home,
  And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
  Until he's fairly tried;
Should we not like his company,
  We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—and who has not?
  The old as well as young;
We may, perhaps, for aught we know,
  Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
  And find it works full well,
To try my own defects to cure,
  Before of others tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
  The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we commence
  To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
  To those we little know;
Remember, curses, sometimes, like
  Our chickens, "roost at home;"
Don't speak of others' faults until
  We have none of our own.

COMMUNION NOTICES

The First Brethren church of Roanoke, Virginia, will hold its regular spring communion services on Easter Sunday at 5:30 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and especially to isolated members.

L. G. WOOD, Pastor.

Communion services will be held at the Fort Scott Mission Sunday, March 31, at 7:00 o'clock. All neighboring Brethren are invited. MRS. L. C. WEBB.

Marriages

DE ROLPH-LECKRONE.—On February 21, 1918 at the home of the bride, Chalfant, Ohio, occurred the marriage of Floyd De Rolph and Miss Chloe Leckrone. Their many friends wish them much happiness as they journey through life. Ceremony by the writer. B. F. OWEN.

ROSER-WISE.—On the evening of the 5th of January, 1918, at the home of the writer Mr. Fred Roser and Miss Beulah Wise were quietly united in marriage. The bride's brother and a few other friends were present. Both of them are members of the Center Chapel congregation. May God bless them with a long and prosperous married life. Ceremony by the writer.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

LA FON-HENEGAR.—At the residence of the writer in Roanoke, Virginia, on the seventh of February, at 8 P. M., occurred the marriage of Mr Lahma LaFon and Miss Jean Henegar. They are both well known and highly respected young people of Roanoke City, Mr. and Mrs. LaFon will make their future home in Coeburn, Virginia. Ceremony by the writer. L. G. WOOD.

SMOKER-KIMMEL.—At the home of the bride's parents, 1320 Kirby Avenue, Muncie, Ind., March 5, 1918, surrounded by many guests Mr. Ralph Smoker of New Paris, Ind., and Miss Ruth Margaret Kimmel, of Muncie, Ind., were united in the bonds of holy matrimony by the writer. J. L. KIMMEL.

TRACY-HOUSOUR.—The marriage of Mr. V. O. Tracy and Miss Hortense Housour was solemnized at the parsonage at Elkhart, Ind., in the presence of a few friends. Mrs. Tracy is a member of the First Brethren church at this place. Her many friends wish for them both a long and happy life.

H. H. WOLFORD.

Our Dead

RAISH.—Sister Fannie Raish, daughter of Jacob and Sarah Raish, departed this life January 18, 1918, aged 23 years. She had been an active and consistent Christian from the time of her conversion some seven years ago until the end came, which was not until after three years of sickness and confinement. During these years of wasting vitality, she continued true to him in whom she believed, and patiently and confidently awaited the call to lay aside the earthly tent. Funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer.

W. S. CRICK.

HILL.—Brother John M. Hill departed this life March 1 at the ripe age of three score and ten. He identified himself with the work of the Master in his young manhood, and was a diligent member of the Brethren church at Dayton, Virginia. The respect and esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the attendance of over 500 neighbors and friends at the funeral services. Besides this host of friends he leaves a wife and eleven children to mourn his departure. Services were conducted from the Mt. Zion Church of the Brethren, by the writer assisted by Rev. Wm. Miller of that church.

W. S. CRICK.

RODGERS.—Sister Minnie B. Rodgers, wife of William Rodgers was called to her reward March 4, after an extended illness. She leaves to mourn her departure a husband, an aged mother, nine children and nine brothers and sisters, besides a host of friends. Years ago she identified herself with the Mt. Olive Brethren church, from which the funeral services were conducted by I. D. Bowman, of Philadelphia. W. S. CRICK.

BOWMAN.—Mrs. Laura Culver Bowman, wife of H. I. Bowman of near Roann, passed to her reward February 12, 1918. She was born near Wabash September 25, 1868. Her age was 49 years, 5 months and 17 days. She was a faithful, devoted wife and a kind loving mother. She suffered a long illness and affliction which no one can describe, but she always tried to be cheerful and happy. She has gone to be with Jesus. Thrice happy and blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. May God bless the bereaved ones. May they all let Jesus take the vacant place, he is the great consoler of sorrowing hearts and all shall be well here and in the hereafter. May her smiling face and beaming countenance lead us higher. Services by the writer.

ROY BRUMBAUGH.

LOUGHMAN.—Mrs. Nancy Loughman was born in 1846, departed this life February 25, 1918, aged 72 years, 3 months, 8 days. Those left to mourn her departure are four sons, a number of relatives and a host of friends. Services by the writer. B. F. OWENS.

ANKRUM.—Helen Katharine Irvin was born May 6, 1918, departed this life February 28, 1918, being in her twentieth year. She was united in marriage with Mr. Ivan Ankrum December 25, 1916, making their union on earth brief. The last place she attended while in health was at church in Glenford. She was the flower of the community until God plucked her for himself. Those left to mourn her departure are a husband, father, mother, sister, numbers of relatives and many friends. The services were conducted in the Methodist church of Gratiot by the writer. B. F. OWEN.

BRENNER.—Michael Brenner was born near North Georgetown, Ohio, December 10, 1838. He was married to Sidney Benner, June 3, 1851, to whom was born a son who passed to the great beyond September 1, 1855, also a daughter who is the only surviving member of the family, Mrs. Brenner having departed this life October 23, 1908.

Mr. Brenner united with the Brethren church over 30 years ago and remained a faithful, consistent member of the Sidney church until his death, always being loyal in attendance of the church services as long as he was able. Funeral preached by N. W. Jennings in the absence of the pastor.

Don't Break a Bad Habit—Let It Rust Away

As a help in occupying your mind there is nothing better than the cultivation of a good hobby. It does not matter so much just what this is if only it is absorbing. It may be wireless telegraphy, history, chemistry, photography, mechanics, motoring, aviation, writing, drawing and painting, music or even amateur acting. Without question, music is the the finest of all hobbies because it has a certain exalting, inspirational influence that is of infinite value to any one striving for self-improvement. Play in the band if the idea appeals to you. Take up any form of instrumental music, stick to certain hours for practice, and then put in any "extra' 'time at it that may help you to tide over any critical time when you are tempted to yield to the old habit. But, best of all, take up singing if you can find any justification for such a course either in your voice or your facility in the use of it—and if your family will stand for it.

Best of all hobbies, however, are athletic pursuits or open-air pastimes. If there is any form of sport or outdoor exercise over which you can become enthusiastic, cultivate it for all you are worth. For it will occupy your mind in a wholesme way at the same time that it imprves your body. Outdoor life has a certain inspirational and refreshing influence all its own. It is not only healthful, but mentally stimulating and uplifting. It appeals to our best instincts. No matter what the nature of your habit, the more time that you can spend in the open air the better will you be enabled to resist it. If you are sufficiently vigorous and under the age of thirty you may be best satisfied with some form of vigorous athletic indulgence, such as cross-country running, handball, tennis, rowing, baseball, tree-climbing, hockey or football. Otherwise, become absorbed in some of the less violent, but not less enjoyable pastimes, such as golf, riding, gardening, mountain climbing, hiking or motoring. It is not so important what you do as that you get out into the open air and especially away from city streets.

One great advantage of most outdoor pastimes is found in the fact that they build up and perfect the body. It is highly important that you should cultivate pride in your body and build up a body that you may be proud of. If you will concentrate upon this purpose you will make it increasingly difficult to indulge in any practice which tends to injure that wonderful structure—the "Temple of God."—From "How To Break That Bad Habit," by Hugo Masters, in Physical Culture.

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27, 1918 NUMBER 12

IF CHRIST BE NOT RISEN

Have you ever doubted the fact of the resurrection of our Lord from the dead? Have you ever felt that, no matter how sincere the apostles and also other disciples were who claimed to have seen the Lord and to have talked with him after the resurrection, perhaps they were only deluded after all and that their testimony would fasten a delusion upon you should you accept it as accurate and trustworthy? Have you ever felt the necessity of speaking in defense of the resurrection? or is it taken for granted just as it is today taken for granted that there is a God? Many yeare ago we heard a minister preach a sermon on the subject "Is There a God?" But we have not heard another in more than twenty years. The being of God is so universally taken for granted that it seems a waste of time to preach such sermons.

Perhaps when the apostle Paul said, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain," it was but his way of saying as strongly and emphatically as he could that there is no room for doubt whatever about our Lord's resurrection from the dead. He tells his readers that Christ is risen, because if he is not risen consequences must follow which he knows they will treat as plainly absurd.

The apostle says, "If Christ be not risen, then OUR preaching is vain." He thus associates himself with the older apostles who had seen the Lord Jesus upon the earth and who had associated with him even after his resurrection.

Both Paul and the other apostles had been preaching a message and a doctrine to the world that apart from the resurrection of Christ was altogether in vain because of its meaninglessness. If Christ had not really risen from the grave there was no foundation upon which to build any of the hopes they held out to their hearers as one of the fruits of the Christian life. In fact the only excuse the apostles had for preaching at all. Three days after the crucifixion and burial of our Lord as the feeling of emptiness came upon the apostles and as their hopes were rapidly vanishing into nothingness they were about ready to scatter to their various places of abode and to take up the thread of life where they had laid it down three years before. As the disciples on the way to Emmaus said, they had hoped it was he who was to have redeemed Israel, but now all their hopes were blasted. They knew the grave was empty, but they did not know that the Lord was alive

The great event that turned them again to the work to which the Lord had called them was the realization that he was not dead after all, but that he was alive and that he would now be with them more certainly in the spirit than he ever had been in the body. So once again they began preaching repentance and faith in the redeeming blood of the Savior as the only hope for man and as the only means of escape from eternal captivity and darkness. From now on the sustenance of the apostles' preaching would be the risen Christ, and if they were deceived as to the reality of such a Redeemer their teaching had neither basis nor substance. Their preaching would then be vain indeed.

But the apostle adds more than this and declares that not only their preaching, but their faith also is in vain. It is said that the most characteristic state in the habitual thought of the Christian is the conviction that, although utterly unworthy, he is a redeemed man, a man redeemed by the blood of the Son of God in whom he has faith. But if this Jesus in whom he has this faith be not raised from the dead, where is the justification of this faith? If Christ be not raised, there is no proof that he who suffered on Calvary was anything more than the victim of a perfidous wrong.

Once again the Christian is constantly looking forward to another life. He does not expect that his personality shall cease to exist when the days of his earthly career shall have terminated. But if Christ died without bursting the fetters of the grave, it is trifling with the hopes and with the anxieties of the soul of man to tell us that he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel or that he opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

And last of all Christian faith has produced in the mind of man the confidence of victory of good over evil. But if Christ be not risen, then our faith in the ultimate victory of good is only too surely vain. Whether we believe this victory shall come before or after the millenial period of the world's existence, without this risen Christ in neither case can our hopes be realized. But, if Christ be risen indeed, then neither the apostolic teaching nor the Christian faith is vain, but they will be the strength and consolation of millions as they pass through the world to the life which is beyond the grave.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

OUR EASTER OFFERING

The Goal Is 40 Cents Per Member

Who says that? Bauman? Yes. Bame? Yes. The Program Committee? Yes. The pastors? Yes. A great per cent. of them. The laity? Well, we shall know better after Easter. I believe so. The goal was advertised on this page some weeks ago that the judgment of the committee was that 30 cents per member was high enough for the goal this year. Six of the Committee so decided. But a better understanding of the situation and an explanation has changed things so much, that all who have followed these pages, will know that we can not get $10,000 at 30 cents per member and therefore we shall have to make the goal high enough to supply our needs. Read on.

Let the Missionaries Beg or Starve

Who says that? Nobody. It is sacrifice enough for them that they have left home and native land, friends, relations and all worldly pleasures to spend their life among the dangers of the wild life of the heathen, that they should be supplied with every need and benefit that we can give them. It is not sacrifice for us that many of us should comfort our consciences with any paltry 40 cents or less. Oh, the smallness of 40 cents! It looks almost as small as 30 cents, and you know what a fellow looks like who looks like 30 cents! Read on.

Give or Be Shot?

With the exception of Smileage, I have not turned a deaf ear to any appeal for the army boys. I feel that if they are willing to go out and risk being shot so that my flag shall still float, I have no right to deny them anything possible to make life more bearable for them. I have again and again appealed to my people on that basis. If so for the army of the country, why not for the army of the KING? If you do not want to give 40 cents or give so hard that your congregation shall average 40 cents, then—well, the inference is plain, though I am not sure you would make a good missionary. Read on.

A Change of Front

You say this is a change of front. Well, I do not care what you call it so you get 40 cents per. But it is not a change of front. It is a change of interpretation that is made necessary or had been made necessary by the compulsion of distance. Had the committee had time or money to have meetings and have worked out all the far reaching ends of this program, no schism would have ever appeared. I feel sure that the Committee will back me up to a man when we interpret the goal for this year as 40 cents per. Read on.

"Once Again"

If I believed in luck, I'd say it was lucky that Brother Bauman used that "Once Aagain," in his write-up on the Program Page last week; but believing more in inspiration, I'll give a higher Power the praise. When, in that last paragraph of Program Page, Number 9, he said, "If the money was given between September 1, 1917 and September 1, 1918, it will count, provided it passes through the treasury of the Brethren Foreign Missionary Society," he knocked all the 30 cents out of me. I hope it did out of all the people who ahve the cause at heart. It was the offerings that he speaks of in that paragraph that made me think 30 cents was enough for Goal 11 in 1918. Read on.

"Over the Top"

So, over the top for 40 cents. In a private letter to the writer, brother J. C. Cassel, who feels that he will not make many more appeals for the Master's cause, says, "Much less than $10,000 would handicap our work." Reread Brother Miller's appeal in Evangelist Number 9, especially the last paragraph, two sentences of which read thus: "Our obligations can thus be seen to be greater by far than ever before.....The Foreign Mission Board looks with confidence to the pastors and churches to support the work committed to it by the church." Do not betray this confidence, brethren. Read on.

That Postcard

In number 9 Evangelist, Brother Bauman asked the pastors to return the inquiry postcard sent out some weeks ago? Have you done so brother pastor? Remember you pastors are the key to all congregations. You will be reflected in your responses as well as in the offerings. If your Easter day offerings do not amount to what they ought, to make the goal, take another or draw on some surplus fund you may have so that we shall keep the place the Holy Ghost has given us as overseers. "Like priest, like people," you know.

Today's Good Cheer

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," says the good Book. "Just for today," are we to pray. But is is a fine thing to get a nice soothing breeze once in a while like this that came from one of the District Keymen in today's mail. He says: "I know you are having a delightful time taking care of the whole Program, but some one has these tasks to do; may God bless your efforts. Anything I can do, write me, and I will try to do the best I can in any way to make this a sure go." It is not as easy as some may think to be fair and keep sweet in all the conflicting ideas that are suggested, but I say again, I am not looking for sympathy. I may need a good deal more than I think I do but I am glad if we shall, working together with God, get further along with his works by getting a good many criticisms and "knocks" from sources I did not expect them.

"O watch and fight and pray: the battle ne'er give o'er Renew the conflict, day by day, and help divine implore."

BAME.

The Comfort of the Resurrection

We have come again to the season when the attention of the whole world is directed to one event—the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The testimony to the truth of this event surpasses and transcends the testimony to any other fact in history. We have repeatedly summoned this evidence. Here we would fix attention upon the great comfort arising from the fact.

FIRST of all, the resurrection of our Lord is the Seal of the Gospel. Paul puts this in the negative way by saying, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; you are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But now is Christ risen from the dead, and what would not have been true without his resurrection is true beyond question. It seals the deity of Christ, for none but God could conquer death. It makes true all the teachings and works of Christ, and they become believable. If Christ were but a man, he would have no right to say, "Ye must be born again." But since he is God, he may see it, and it must be true. Since Christ has risen from the dead, he must be God, and he has a right to say, "If a man love father or mother, wife or child more than me, he is not worthy of me." If he were a mere man, to say such things would make him an impostor. Since Christ arose from the dead, his miracles are believable and true, for he who can rise from the dead can control all nature, and is above all nature, and he doeth as he pleaseth in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants and forces of the earth. Since Christ has risen from the dead, it settles the value of his death. It was not the death of a mere man. It was the death of God, and that death was a ransom. He died for our sins, and therefore our sins are settled for. The resurrection crowns the cross in power and glory. Without the resurrection, the cross would have been robed in darkest gloom—the symbol of defeat. Since Christ rose from the dead, we are assured of the victory over Satan, for death was the power of Satan. He was a murderer, and in the resurrection, the ascencion and the present reign in heaven and his present company on earth are guaranteed. Yes, the resurrection of our Lord seals the whole Gospel and lifts the believer far above the realm of doubt to the Rock of faith.

AGAIN, the resurrection of Jesus is the assurance of our own resurrection. The fact of death is an impressive fact to every normal mind. When we think that death has passed upon all men and all must die, when we remember that millions of our race die with every revolution of the earth, and that this annual departure of men from this world has been going on for more than forty centuries, and every year the death list is greater than before then; indeed, the question of life and the issues of life become profoundly impressive. What purpose can there be in men coming into this world, passing through its checkered and evanescent course, and then ceasing to be? It would have no purpose, no meaning, save as a tool, were it not for the resurrection of Jesus, by whose power all men are to rise. But the resurrection gives us a closer comfort. It means reunion with loved ones gone before. How heartless life would be if we formed attachments and tasted true love, only to give it all up forever, and have its place filled with dark, deep, cold loneliness. But the resurrection assures us that our loved ones live forever, and that we will rejoin them and live with them in the heavenly country, walk with them along the river of life, through the green fields, and enter the pearly gates, and the golden streets, and behold the great white throne, and sing with the countless multitude, in perfect harmony and melody, the blessed song of redemption. Again, the resurrection gives us certainty in the darkest hour of earth. We live in a material age. Our interests center in material things, and so we do not like to think of death. We put the thought away. But to every soul there comes a time when he must face the fact of departure from this world, and all it is and all it contains. We enter this world on the arms of love. We marry in couples. We mingle in companies, but we die alone, and none go with us. Whither do we go? The resurrection assures us that death is but a gateway to the eternal, we part to meet again. We leave loved ones here to meet loved ones there.

ONCE more, the resurrection spurs us on to newness of life, The certainty of a perfect body in the resurrection requires us to seek a holy spirit for that perfect body. So Paul says, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into his death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." John, in his gospel, says that the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. Then he goes further and says, All that are in the grave shall hear and shall come forth. A new, perfect spirit for a new, perfect body is the inspiration of the Resurrection.

LAST of all, remember that the preaching of Jesus and the resurrection was the bugle call of the early preaching of the gospel. It was the fact of the resurrection which arrested attention, gave hope, and formed the foundation for abounding faith. It is still so. Modify, weaken or cover the fact of the resurrection, and the attraction of the Gospel ceases. It is the resurrection which calls forth the strongest faith and the most decided unbelief. It is the touchstone of salvation.—The Presbyterian.

Resurrection

It is evening. The sun sinks in the west. With it dies the day. Night comes on and buries the day in darkness and in silence. But after the night, the morning dawns. The sun bathes the earth in light. The shadows flee. The day revives and rises from the dead of night in triumph.

Summer wanes and passes into autumn. Autumn passes into winter. The leaves fall; the flowers fade; the ground is crusted with frost and covered with snow and all nature's life lies buried in the sepulchre of the earth. Then spring comes. Its warm rays and gentle breezes impart life to the frozen earth. The trees begin to bud. The tiny blades of grass push their heads above the sod. The plants and flowers come to life again and all nature rises from the dead of winter into blooming, blossoming spring.

The Son of Man, despised and rejected, a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief, hangs upon the Cross of Calvary. His life of gentleness and love has availed him nothing. The offended pride of scribe and Pharisee is gratified. He who claimed to be the King of the Jews and the Shepherd of Israel ends his life on the cross of shame and is buried in the tomb in the garden. The tomb is sealed with a stone and guarded by a watch of armed men. All is over. The disciples and the faithful women slowly wend their way back to Jerusalem in deepest gloom and dejection. But on the third day, very early in the morning, as the faithful women come to the sepulchre, bringing spices—lo! the stone is rolled away! The tomb is empty! An angel speaks—"Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here. He is risen, as he said." Quickly the wonderful news is carried from disciple to disciple. "He is risen! He is risen! He is risen from the dead." Sorrow turns into joy. Out of defeat springs victory. The cross becomes a throne. The Son of Man has triumphed over death and the grave. He lives! He lives!—a glorious, conquering, redeeming King!

Life has gone from one we love. Seated beside our dead we weep and the heart is heavy with grief. The years to come stretch out before us empty of joy and gladness. But even as we mourn, we feel a presence near and a sense of peace steals into the heart. We hear the gentle voice of the living Redeemer, full of calm assurance, saying, "Weep not. She is not dead, but sleepeth." "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Grief is ended! A hallowed joy surges through the heart and the glad cry of victory springs to the lips—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory! Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

We wend our weary way along the rugged road of life. The load of life becomes heavy and we are worn with life's trials and perplexities. Sin, perhaps, lays strong hands upon us and drags us down and holds us fast and life itself becomes a living death. When, lo! the power of the risen Christ touches us and lifts us up. With infinite compassion he pleads with us—"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And as we respond, we feel the power of a new life within. With the risen Christ we rise into newness of life. Courage, hope and zeal are born anew. We die unto sin and live unto righteousness. The very gateway into life eternal opens before us. Through the power of Christ's resurrection we set our minds upon those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.—Reformed Church Messenger.

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

STOP! LOOK and LISTEN! This week's Evangelist is only half size, but it is the best that could be done. We have stated before that we are crowded to our capacity, and while there are four large printing establishments in Ashland, including our own, using machine composition, yet, because of a scarcity of operators, no one has been able to set a line of type for another for several days. We hope to catch up with our work in about ten days and then a mighty effort will be made to keep up. But in the meantime just "keep sweet" and all will end well.

Still the good work of getting the Brethren Evangelist into every home of a Brethren church goes on. This time it is Denver, Indiana, that has won a place on the Honor Roll. Denver is one of the newer congregations of Indiana and has not the old spirit of conservatism to overcome that a few of the older churches must overcome before they can see the light. But we are glad they are falling into line "one by one." We are thoroughly convinced that it is a good work, therefore we are willing to accept any plan that will get the work accomplished. We may have a suggestion to make a little later that will prove of assistance to some of the pastors who have not yet succeeded in getting their congregations to adopt the budget plan for the Evangelist. In the meantime Brother Myers and his band at Denver are to be congratulated on their successful accomplishment of a splendid work of progress in a thoroughly practical manner.

This is the last issue of the Evangelist before the date set for the offering for the foreign missionary work of the Brethren church. Easter Sunday is the time for the offering, and a record breaking offering is both wanted and expected. This week Brethren Bauman, Bame and Miller make urgent appeals to the churches and to individuals to respond to this supreme need of the church in a most practical and liberal manner, that is with ready cash with which God has seen fit to abundantly bless the American people. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

The Ohio churches are urged to give special attention to the announcement by Brother Oberholtzer in regard to the Ohio conference which meets at Fremont, March 17, 18, 19. A well attended and enthusiastic conference will prove of valuable help to the work of the Brethren in Fremont. This is a new field with splendid possibilities and the other churches in Ohio should make an effort to make the conference worth while.

One of the most successful revival meetings of the season among the Brethren churches was that at Altoona, Pennsylvania, where Brother Benshoff was assisted by evangelist G. T. Ronk. Seemingly the special preparation for these meetings consisted mostly of CLOSET prayer, a most effective method after all. Brother Benhsoff had a vision of what he thought would be large results from the meetings, but it seems his vision was only half large enough. The total number of confessions and reconsecrations was an even hundred. While a goodly number of these were reconsecrations, many more were conversions and more than forty have already been baptized and others will be in the near future. Brother Benshoff is interested in the different departmental work of the church and continued progress may be expected.

Professor Edward Byers of Morrison Cove College, Pennsylvania, makes an earnest appeal to the churches of that district to prepare for the coming of Brother Beachler among them and we sincerely hope Brother Byer's vision of $50,000 endowment from Pennsylvania may be realized.

Professor J. A. Garber reports two very interesting Teacher Training graduating exercises that have recently occurred in Indiana. One at Mexico and the other at Nappanee. These were splendid achievements at both places. A great day was experienced at Nappanee with more than five hundred present in the Sunday school. Here two classes were graduated. One in the advanced course. The editor rejoices that he had the privilege of starting the three members who completed the advanced course in their first year's work while he was pastor at Nappanee. They have proven themselves to be faithful and persistent students.

Brother Beachler makes a splendid showing for his week's work in the Endowment Campaign at Oakville, Indiana, where over fifteen hundred dollars was received for the fund. Brother Beachler tells the truth when he speaks of the splendid people at Oakville. We know, for this was a part of the editor's first circuit nearly twenty-five years ago. Surely $25,000 will be reached before Brother Beachler leaves Indiana.

This week we are able to give to our readers another communication from one of our missionaries written while aboard the vessel sailing over the seas to far away Africa. As this is not the first missionary trip Brother Gribble has made to Africa we can have confidence in his ability to judge the situation and in his knowledge of the needs of the field and as to how these needs may be supplied. As the Easter missionary offering is taken next Sunday our churches should not forget our four workers that have just gone into the African field.

Around the Editor's Table

A New Proposition

Knowing that some of our churches have had a desire to get upon the Evangelist Honor Roll but have been hindered because they have not been sure of their ability to meet the expense connected with the plan we have decided to modify the conditions or terms in a way to help such churches and yet be fair to all other churches that have already won their honors.

The plan is this: We will send the Evangelist to the members of any church, that will adopt the budget plan for placing the paper into every home of active Brethren in their congregation or who may reach one hundred per cent. of their active families by an every member canvass, from May first to the end of the year for ONE DOLLAR. This is not a reduction of price any more than that of our regular offer for yearly subscriptions; it is simply giving the paper for two-thirds of a year for two-thirds of the yearly subscription price, so no one will get any more for their money than they would if they took it for the whole year. But some churches may see their way clear to invest one dollar per family that do not feel like taking advantage of the yearly rate at one dollar and a half. Now pastors, this is your opportunity to help your churches to a place of honor. While we have added fifteen hundred names to our subscription list in the last six months we yet must have two hundred and fifty more to reach our aims for this conference year. Will not some of you pastors help us to realize this aim for YOUR publishing house and for YOUR paper? Upon the shoulders of the pastors this responsibility rests and to the pastors belong the credit and the honor when the work has been accomplished.

Love's Promptings

While love itself may be a very difficult quality to define, the works of love are more easily recognized and understood; although sometimes instinctive acts get credit for being prompted by love. The care a mother bird gives to its young and the motive that prompts the tigress to fight for its young are sometimes called love, but we have our serious doubts about it being anything more than a natural parental instinct without any of the qualities that go toward making up the quality which belongs to God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, angels and mankind, the quality of love.

Since God is love and since we attribute divine qualities to the emotion of love it would seem improper to regard any being except those that have been made in the image of God as having the power to love in the true sense. We have always been taught to believe that it was and is the love of God that provided the way for the redemption of man and it is only as the love of man is turned toward the Father that this redemption can be appropriated.

While Jesus Christ's love reached its climax on the Cross of Calvary yet it can be seen how love was the impelling motive in all his public ministry and we may safely assume that in his private life before his public career began he was prompted by the same principles of love to make the human preparation necessary to carry out his purpose in life.

One of the acts of Jesus that was a distinctively love prompting was his last visit to Nazareth. He had been rejected there by his old neighbors and by those who should have been his friends and he might have felt that he had done enough, that he had given them an opportunity to be saved and that since they had rejected it there was no more responsibility resting upon him, but no, he would give them another chance, and his love led him to return once more to the village of his childhood. Sad indeed, that the people failed to return that love by accepting the salvation offered them.

The Place of Repentance

The preaching of John the Baptist was largely a call to repentance, and when the Twelve were sent out two by two they were told to preach that men should repent, and we may be sure one of the great success of their preaching was found in the fact that they were "doctrinally" sound. In these modern days when "distinctive" doctrines are frowned upon by many we need not be surprised at the meager results from the average preaching. And among the neglected doctrines seems to be that of repentance.

In his notes on the Sunday school lesson in a recent number of the Sunday School Times a writer says: "Repentance is not primarily a part of the offer of salvation by grace, for here not repentance, but simple faith, is the condition." And here he cites Paul's answer to the jailer when he had been delivered from prison by an earthquake. But had the writer taken the pains to go a little farther he might have found in the next chapter of Acts where Paul said in his address on Mars' Hill, "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commendeth men every where to repent." In his great sermon on the day of Pentecost the apostle Peter answered the men who came to him crying "what shall we do?" "Repent, and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins." The result of this doctrinal preaching was three thousand were added to the church.

Some years ago while the writer was conducting an evangelistic effort in the west, one of the elder members of the church said, "I feel there ought to be more of the old-fashioned repenting with tears in our revival meetings. It seems to me the converts do not feel their guilt as they should." There may be more than a grain of truth in the expression.

In answering the question why men don't hold out in religion. Mr. William Ridgeway says it is because most of the "dont-hold-outs" had never repented. It is easy to "get religion" while others are getting it, but a truly godly sorrow for sin is a different matter altogether.

The Art of Making Friends

Nearly all evil is some good thing perverted. For many years the American people have been finding fault with the professional politicians of the country; but there is one art the professional politician possesses that should be cultivated by every man in the world, and that is the art of making friends. A man who has not this art highly developed can hardly expect to get very much out of the political opportunities of America, while a man who is an adept at making friends can secure most any office he seeks whether he has the necessary qualifications or not. The writer remembers a man who had held a "court house job" in a western state for about thirty years, which included a term or two in most every office in the county, and this man had hardly been sober a day during the thirty years. "What a disgrace to the county," you say and we readily grant it, but there was one redeeming quality the man possessed that caused the people to forget his slavery to drink, he had the art of making friends and was regarded as the most obliging and accommodating man in the county, and the strange part of it was, the drunker he was the more obliging he was, and while in this condition there was no pains he would not take to accommodate in the capacity of his office any of the citizens of the county who came in.

What a wonderful power for good this man might have been had he turned this great talent for making friends to some really good account. Had he been a Christian worker instead of a drunken politician what inestimable good he might have accomplished in life! But while some of us may not possess the ability to make friends in a large way as a natural gift is not a difficult gift to acquire after all. And one of the surest ways to develop this quailty is to follow the rule of Joubert, who said, "When my friend is blind in one eye, I look at him in profile." And another writer has said, "Friendship is to be valued for what it is, not for what can be got out of it." It must have been a great thing to Abraham to be counted "a friend of God," but this is a virtue that need not be confined to Abraham, and the more truthfully one can have it said of him "he is a friend of God," the easier it will be for him to be a friend to man. Thomas Hughes said, "Blessed is the man who has the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things; but, above all, the power of going out of one's self and seeing and approaching what is noble and loving in one another." It is worth while to any one to seek this power and to cultivate this gift. One of the great compliments to the ministry of the Savior, but which was intended as a criticism was the saying, "He is a friend of sinners."

Faith or Works

The conflict between faith and works is an old one and while the first disciples of Jesus were somewhat slow to learn the supreme importance of an abiding faith the lesson was learned in time so that the whole Christian world has come to be a world of faith. Of course this faith has been weak at times, but it is possible to strengthen it through Christian works; however the faith of the Christian world is now in danger of being undermined by an insidious philosophy which hopes to give expression to itself in "Religion After the War." It is a wise man indeed who can prophesy what the religion after the war will be. Any one can speculate, but not many men are given the power to foretell the results of so great a struggle between faith and practice.

The Detroit Free Press has set up a lay pulpit and preaches from strange texts. Among the sayings of this lay sermonizer are found such expressions as, "Religion after the war will become a thing of Practice, not of Faith." It will have more humanity, and be "bent on serving by works." And it is prophesied that "Along with this change will come a disappearance of the visible symbols of the old order." It is further prophesied that the revival, "if it comes, will not be concerned so much with individual salvation as with the regeneration of the race and the world," which is a very good philosophy, but it is not Christianity. Christianity always has been and always will be a matter of faith between an individul and his God, and an acceptance, by an act of individual faith, of the redemption offered through the crucified and risen Lord. Anything less is not Christianity. But read what the Free Press has to say and see if you can accept it as Christian teaching:

"We ask ourselves how it happened that at a moment when the world was felicitating itself on its progress in civilization and Christian brotherhood, a war unprecedented in blood and brutality should break out among the nations worshiping the same God and professing faith in the same Redeemer.

"The effect of the war upon participants and the resultant moral consequences have been variously estimated. There are many who believe a great spiritual revival will ensue, uplifting the souls of men; others, gleaning the lessons of history, foresee a lowering of the moral standards. It is already predicted that the revival, if it comes, will not be concerned so much with individual salvation as with the regeneration of the race and the world. Religionists have heretofore been most concerned with the salvation of individual souls. The religion that is to come will be on a less personal basis; it will bring out the inarticulate religion at the bottom of every heart. War, we have every reason to believe, is doing this, and in this connection what a man who knows war and has made the supreme sacrifice as a soldier has to say on the subject is of interest.

"Donald Hankey, author of that widely read book, 'A Student in Arms,' admits the average man is not a Christian, but believes in his potentialities. The clue is to be found in the qualities he admires or detests in other people. He has an ideal, but judges others, not himself, by it. The possession of his ideal is his religion in so far as he has one. He admires courage, generosity, honesty, practical kindness and persistence in doing the right thing. He despises physical and moral cowardice, lying and 'toadying'; he hates 'swank', cant and cruelty. Out of these he makes his ideal. And Hankey points out that the things he admires are, after all, the ideals of the gospel; the things he despises the things Christ fought against. He reminds us that it is a poor business to have an ideal and not live up to it, and that all we are asked to do is to try, and keep on trying."

News From the Field

Special Notice

I have just received a letter from Brother Yoder from Rio Cuarto, Argentina. He reports a safe arrival and a week's work among the people. The work has been reorganized for renewed efforts of evangelizing the people.

Brother Yoder reports that through the efforts of Romanists and politicians the college rector has lost his place and that the vice-rector now in charge is not so friendly. He fears trouble may be ahead. In view of this fact we should prepare to meet Brother Yoder's salary the coming year.

WE SHALL NEED $1,200 MORE TO PAY HIS SALARY. The Easter offering for Foreign Missions next Sunday must be the largest we have ever made if the Board is to meet its obligations. Brethren everywhere should remember this.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

Final Instructions for Eastes Offering

The Goal. Although it has been stated recently by the chairman of the Four-Year Program Committee that 30 cents per member will attain the goal for this year, yet there is room for doubt as to that. If there is any difficulty in the matter, the difficulty lies in the fact that $10,000 is too low a goal for foreign missions for 1920. Moreover, 40 cents per member is too low a goal for 1920. The average gifts of all denominations runs more than 50 cents per member. Shall our goal for 1920 be less than the average given by all Christian peoples to this work? Such a goal would not be very worthy. So, in all probability, when the committee gets together, there will be a decision to stay by the original goal fixed at our last Conference,—40 cents per member for 1918, with a raise in the amount for 1920. If you want to be sure of "going over the top" this year, don't permit your offering to fall below 40 cents per member. That will simply be your duty. More than one hundred churches have reported to me their intentions to reach this goal. Only ten churches were either silent on this point, or expressed doubt as to the outcome.

Memberships. Remember, that every person paying as much as five dollars a year to our foreign work through our treasury, is entitled to a membership for one year, in the Foreign Missionary Society, but, when the money is sent they must request such membership. Those paying ten dollars are entitled to two years' membership, etc. . Those paying fifty dollars, are entitled to a Life Memebership. Be sure in your reports to plainly state when money is included for memberships, and give the names of persons so subscribing. The "Brethren Missionary" is sent to every member of the Foreign Missionary Society so long as they are paid-up members, without other charge. Kindly be careful to make out your reports very plainly.

Distribution of Funds. Be sure and state very plainly just where you want your money to go. Remember that all money sent in without stating just where it is to go, is placed in the General Fund, and is used in our South American work. African funds must be plainly designated as being sent for that work.

Counting for the Goal. All mission money sent to us after September 1, 1917 and before September 1, 1918, counts for your goal. We are keeping the record. If your record shows that you have reached the goal, please say so when you write us. Also, report to your District Goal Director when you have reached the goal. When you make your claim as having reached your goal, please state your church membership. All isolated members sending us money should state the place of their local membership, so your offering will be used to assist your local church in attaining its goal. Don't make us write and ask you where you belong. We know where most missionary givers belong, but not all.

Ho wto Send Money. Be sure to send your money in a safe way. The very best way is by a personal check. That forms a good receipt, when it is returned to your bank. The bank here in Long Beach cashes all these checks free of charge. Cash has often been stolen in the mails, and we can not be responsizle if you send money that way. Send by check, registered letter, bank draft, express money order, or any other way that is safe.

Where to Send Money. All money for foreign missions must be sent to the undersigned. If you send it to the treasurer, J. C. Cassel, or to any one else, you simply give them extra trouble and expense in forwarding it to me. It must come to me if the records are to be kept clear.

NOW,—are you all ready? Then "over the top!" As for us, our goal in our own congregation this year is not less than $2.50 per member. Don't stop at 40 cents! Leap high over the top! What say you?

Yours for Christ and his church,

LOUIS S. BAUMAN.

Open Letter to the Brethren of Pennsylvania

It is with pardonable pride that we call the old Keystone State the birthplace of our nation. In Philadelphia were born the three greatest state papers ever penned by the hand of man.

When we think of our own religious body we are led to Germantown to discover the place made historic by the first organization, the first missionary journey, the first baptism, the first communion, the first printing press. Our fathers in the environs of Germantown builded better than they knew. From this center may be traced every Brethren influence.

With such a record as this we must not fail to do what we can and ought to do for Ashland College.

Indiana will reach the $25,000 mark and Pennsylvania with her great welath should exceed this.

Brother W. H. Beachler begins his campaign for permanent endowment for Ashland College after Easter. Every pastor and every congregation ought to receive him most cordially and prove the welcome by liberal gifts. Permanent endowment is an absolute necessity. Why can not Pennsylvania reach $50,000?

Pastors prepare now for Brother Beachler's coming. Wisely distribute printed matter which will reach you shortly.

Yours for Ashland College,

EDWARD BYERS,

Leader Endowment and Recruits for Pa.

More Teacher Training Graduates

After some delay, caused by the unusually severe winter, two more classes succeeded in holding their graduating exercises.

Mexico, Indiana

The members and friends of this church witnessed a unique service on the evening of March 31. For about a year the pastor, brother L. W. Ditch, labored assiduously in the hope of securing some trained teachers for his Sunday school and the half dozen graduates showed their appreciation of his faithful efforts by presenting him with a nice purse which seemed well filled. Moreover, they presented an interesting program. Those graduating were: Mrs. Leota Strong, Mrs. W. S. Bond, Mrs. J. L. Kraning, Mrs. Ruth Chapin, Charles H. and Loren T. Black, father and son. It was a real pleasure to address these appreciative people, and it is gratifying to learn that they are planning to pursue the Three Year Course. While here we were privileged to share the hospitality of the homes of C. H. Black and P. M. Fisher.

Nappanee, Indiana

Having classes graduating from both the First and Advanced courses, these energetic people made ample provision for a red letter day. The program called for the merging of the Sunday school and morning preaching service. Nothing apparently, had been left undone to secure an attendance of five hundred. The weather was ideal. The people came and kept coming, and when the secretary read "a total atendance of 509," he was greeted with a storm of applause. A varied program of appropriate selections preceded and followed the lesson study. At the close of the commencement address Mrs. U. J. Shively who had taught them with unstinted devotion happily presented eight ladies with diplomas. Their names follow: Mrs. Chester Richmond, Mrs. Hubert Woygandt. Mrs. Melvin Walters, Mrs. W. A. Price, Mrs. Ira Ashman, Mrs. C. B. Clouse, Mrs. Calvin Lehman, Mrs. Sarah Rex. The advanced class consisted of Mrs. Cora Stuckman, Mrs. Harold Woygandt, Miss Grace Miller, and they received their diplomas from Superintendent Widmoyer. He and Pastor Hubbard did their utmost to make March 3, a record breaking day in the history of school and church and their most sanguine expectations were more than realized.

In the evening Christian Endeavor was merged with the preaching service in observance of Ashland College Night. Miss Cora Culp directed the program and the Juniors, under the supervision of Miss Frieda Price, joined heartily in the singing of college songs. It was a treat to share their enthusiasm and to preach in the presence of a large and responsive audience.

Nappanee is thoroughly alive to her opportunity and intensely loyal to the general interests of the church. You may expect to hear encouraging reports from her in teacher training, Christian Endeavor and every other good work. The Lord prosper all these splendid people.

Ohio Conference Delegates—On to Fremont

We are looking for you. The Fremont Brethren are preparing to entertain you. We are planning to meet the trains Tuesday afternoon. New York Central trains, west bound, arrive at 1:20 P. M., eastbound at 3:55 P. M. Lake Erie & Western train, northbound, arrives at 3:25 P. M. Wheeling & Lake Erie trains, eastbound, arrive at 3:49 P. M.; westbound, at 4 P. M.. Fremont may also be reached by the Lake Shore Electric line, conecting with other points at Toledo, Clyde, Bellvue, Monroeville, Norwalk and other cities; also by the Fostoria & Fremont Electric Line, connecting with other electric lines and railways at Fostoria. Those coming over the Fostoria & Fremont line should get off at South street and they will be only about three and one-half blocks from the church. Go west on South street. The church is just about one mile from either station. If you do not care to walk, a taxi will take you to the church for 25 cents. If we should happen to miss you at the station, inquire for the South Street Brethren church of almost anyone and you will be directed.

Your lodging and breakfast will be free. Dinner and supper each day will be served at the church at a reasonable price. This includes supper Tuesday evening.

We hope that many will come and we will do our best to make everybody feel welcome and happy. We are looking for a great spiritual feast.

H. M. OBERHOLTZER, Pastor.

Altoona, Pennsylvania

Like Brother Boardman, we can say, "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." No one rejoices more than does the writer in the victory which has been won for Christ and the church at Middle Branch, Ohio. It was my privilege to serve this congregation as pastor some years ago and I was at that time much impressed with the large field we have there. Give yourselves diligently to prayer, Brethren, and take this field for Christ and the Brethren church.

We began our special series of evangelistic meetings February 25 and closed March 17. During these three weeks the church labored faithfully. We were just a little fearful of the results of the meeting because of the fact that we had been unable to carry out our plans of preparation to the letter. No cottage prayer meetings were held. This was due to a number of reasons—cold weather, industrial rush, business, war spirit, etc. But we urged the people, though we could not meet in groups, to spend much time in prayer in their homes. For nearly two months we emphasized this point. We pointed out this fact that there is a radical relation existing between the intercessory prayer life and the results obtained. And they gave themselves to prayer, more than the pastor at the time realized. Here we have the key to success. I am persuaded that any church can have a revival if it is willing to pay the price.

We were led in this campaign by brother George T. Ronk. If it is true that the church prepared itself through prayer and reconsecration for the effort, it is equally true that the evangelist came among us filled with the Spirit. Of the work of Brother Ronk I need not speak. He is well known over the brotherhood and then his life and work speak for themselves. Will just say that our people were more than pleased with the service. To work with Brother Ronk was indeed a privilege.

As to the results obtained. We told Brother Ronk a few hours before the first service, that we had a vision of 50. This was more than realized. When the last service had closed we found that 98 had come to the front. On her way out of the church a mother informed me that she had decided to come with her daughter into the Brethren church. On Monday evening following, another made his confession of Christ over telephone. This brings the number who responded to the gospel invitation up to 100. Thirty-two of these were reconsecrations. This was indeed gratifying to the pastor to see his people rededicate their lives to the work of the church. A few have gone to other churches. Others are still undecided. Among those who made the good confession were some children who will be taught and received into the church later. At this writing, 41 have been baptized. By the time you read this, others will have received this blessed service. One of the special features of the campaign, was the doctrinal teaching by the evangelist. This was done in connection with the baptismal services and made a wonderful impression on the minds of the people.

The church feels its responsibility in the proper care of the new recruits. For this work we are now praying for the special guidance of the Spirit. This is a critical period in the history of the congregation. Great care needs to be exercised or disaster will follow the great victory. A reception for new members has already been held with good results. Brethren pray for us.

Before closing I would like to make mention of some special work carried on by the congregation during the winter. This has been in the nature of special studies. Within the next two weeks the Sunday school will graduate a class in Teacher Training. The Christian Endeavor will graduate a class in Expert Endeavor at the same time. Two Mission Study classes have been maintained and will finish their text soon. For the results obtained in our work here we give God the glory and earnestly pray that he may continue to use us.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

We have not been disappointed in our canvass at Oakville. But on the contrary Oakville has scored a big record—a record indeed which will cause some of our bigger churches to look at her with envy. Oakville is one of the churches which has given much to Ashland College in the past through the Temporary Endowment plan. And in the last fifteen years there has attended school at Ashland at different times at least seven young people. So I knew when I started for Oakville that I should find here many friends for the college. Nor does the result of the canvass show any decrease in the interest at this place for our school. Oakville like many other of our churches has had its discouragements. During the greater part of the winter it has been without a pastor. But because of a splendid loyalty among the people here the work has held up in a remarkable way notwithstanding the discouragements. And to me it looks as if Oakville has a big mission in the community and a grand future of usefulness and achievements. At the present time Brother Staley, a student in Ashland College is serving this congregation as pastor. Brother Charles Kern in the superintendent of the Sunday school and I have sized him up as the right man in the right place.

But you want to know how much Oakville pushed the mercury upward. Well, we reached $1,500. But it is my suspicion that Oakville will go on up to $1,600 and get in the class with Nappanee. If she does it will almost put her in the class with Mexico on the per capita basis. But Oakville with about 125 members is coming up to a mighty high second.

The home of brother George Metzker was my home while I was in this field, and it was indeed a pleasant home. Brother Clem McShirley was the man that enabled me to cover the field with his Ford. Brother McShirley is a lightning rod man and he is my kind of a man. With him I sure could hit the high places. But I could not get him to go along to other churches and help me on the endowment business. He felt that lightning rod business paid better as far as wages is concerned.

I can only say it was a very pleasant visit I had at Oakville. We had fine audiences each night at the preaching services. And I covet rich things for Oakville in the years to come.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Echoes from Ubangi-Shari

In the beginning of the year 1812, there landed in British East Africa a party of missionaries laboring under the auspices of the Africa Inland Mission. A few months later, three of these new recruits were among the seven missionaries who went into the northeastern part of the Belgian Congo. Strange as it may seem, five of that number are once again journeying together in the cause of the Master. Five of us are passengers on this good ship "City of Cairo." Now we are not all bound for the same location in Africa, as the Lord of the harvest has so led that we are now members of three different missionary societies, but still one in the common interest of making Jesus known in that land that is so dark. It is such a blessed privilege and surely one of divine appointment that we should be returning to Africa at the same time, having spent a month together on ship-board to review old- time experiences, relate to each other the lessons that we mutually and independently learned, and last but not least, to study together once again the dear old Book that has become so precious to us. Twice daily on ship-board we have our Bible study.

While we are returning to Africa at the same time, we did not leave there the same way. Our home coming was scattered over more than one and a half years. The last section of our Eastern Congo party to leave the field were Brother and Sister Haas. In a number of respects theirs was the richest experience of us all. After leaving the Eastern Congo they spent considerable time in traveling and doing evangelistic work among a number of tribes living far to the west of that work, and even penetrated somewhat into the Ubangi-Shari district of the Frech Sudan. As far as we have data, Brother Haas is only the third man to visit that great and needy field with any serious intentions of doing something toward the giving of the gospel to the millions of peoples living in those parts. And the great shame of it all is, that travelers have visited that field for almost every other purpose and we even learn that not a few white settlers are locating in some parts of it.

After reading over a typewritten article by Brother Haas of some of his experiences since we separated in the Eastern Congo, I was so impressed that I decided, by his permission, to copy some of them and use them as the body of this article. Concerning some of the actual conditions of the Ubangi-Shari-Chad Territories of the French Sudan, he writes as follows:

"The French government has a school at each of its twenty or more posts in the Oubangi-Chari (English, Ubangi Shari) districts of almost pure pagan tribes numbering some five million people in which hundreds of young chiefs, chief's sons, and most promising of the natives have been educated during the past twenty years. Less than thirty miles from its model post—Moyabe, where there is a school of 180, a hapless native lagged back a litle too far behind the caravan and was killed and eaten about the time that I was there. * * * Yet one of the expressions I have ever seen upon any face in Africa was borne upon a sensible, industrious, and converted woman of the Banda (one of the tribes in Ubangi-Shari) tribe—the last person I baptized in Africa, and the only baptized Christian in that tribe with an estimated population of two or more million people * * Mohammedan traders are already among these tribes in pagan Oubangui-Chari, and unless we give them a better religion than their own, or Islam, the daily public prayer and other ceremonies of these Mohammedan men whom the native regards as his superiors, and therefore worthy of imitation, must inevitably lead to their being lost to us. The very Africa instinct which superstitiously accounts for any superiority in wealth, power or intelligence as being the magical effect of some religious charm, makes him earnestly desire the secret power of fetich of all those who excel him. The white man is considered superior to both the native and Moslem, and if now the native could see that his white master has a religion he can grasp, Islam would never prove a serious menace. But unhappily, the white official and trader practice no religion the native can perceive and Islam only, among those he looks up to, offers him anything tangible in this direction. Now is our opportunity, for the recent advent of the white man and his power gives him an open door to the native mind; but if we wait, Islam will take opportunity as the only religious hope of a superstitious people. Today we may enter and give a pure gospel at a comparatively easy and inexpensive door; tomorrow only at the price of the blood of those daring missionaries who will be assassinated in the jungle and by poisoned food and water. Many of the tribes to the north have already gone over and while those of the south of the Oubangui-Chari yet despise the Moslem subject of his white conqueror because he was not equal to the white man's arms, a change, such as has come in other parts of Africa, will come sooner or later."

After relating some wonderful experiences that he had in the giving out of the gospel message, and the receiving of same by the natives, he touches as follows on some of the inevitable and spell-binding questions the natives, after hearing the gospel, are continually firing at the missionaries. He writes as follows:

"In different languages this same story was told to the fifty different tribes along several thousand miles of travel in different directions. Everywhere, on the path, in the villages, or in the schools and wherever they could be found this same story was told with almost uniform acceptance to deeply interested listeners. Over and over again powerful chiefs would say to me, 'Now you will make your house with us and teach us all about this affair of God, for we have never heard it before and there are thousands of my men who have never heard you.' I was really afraid to tell them that in our land there were many who had plenty of money who could go over and tell them these same things, for fear they would ask me why they didn't come and tell them, and so it would have had the bad effect of their discounting the power of the gospel or of thinking that, if the white man could know this heavenly truth and not feel concerned about it enough to want others to hear it, they as well, would not need to tell those around them. I confess that it has led me to believe that many of our churches have never really believed the story of the Son of God's death for our sins and his resurrection except in a formal or mental way that condemns rather than justifies. Nevertheless, as I avoided all subjects leading to their asking about the degree of our heart-belief in the gospel, I am sure they think that all I will have to do in order to lead many to go back to them is to tell the need and their desire for teachers. Who will go?"

There have been times while we were among you that I was asked which seemed to be the easier to get, workers or the needed funds for the work. I always invariably replied that the great need was workers who would really believe God, and stated that God would be sure to supply their every need. Now I know that this is the case from actual experience. While up until just a little while before sailing, we had scarcely any more money than was actually needed for passage, etc., for the party, when the time for sailing had actually come, our funds were greatly increased, and from appearances, we could have taken a considerably larger party with us, and none of us have suffered thereby. Just twenty-four hours before leaving New Cumberland, Pennsylvania, on our way to Africa, a draft for $500 was received from one of the Lord's own. And suppose our party would have been twice as large as it is, there is not the last doubt in our minds other than God would have provided two dollars in the place of every one that he did provide. Young man or lady to whom the Lord is speaking about dedicating your life to him for this service, remember that you can not hide behind the excuse that God can not or will not provide your every need for the work. He will be faithful to you as he has been to us. He does not ask you to exercise any faith that he has not given you. All that he asks of you is a consecrated will and the exercise of the faith that you now have, and when a greater need of it is required, you will find the abundant supply. Remember the old saying of "Do not cross a bridge before you get to it." Will you not cease your rebellion before God simply because you can not see the end clear from the beginning, and walk the sweet path of perfect obedience to him? What life can be better spent than one which is spent in perfect obedience to God? Such a life is your privilege, will you enter into it?

Our Own War Babies.

BY DR. ANNA H. SHAW

More babies died last winter—more babies are dying now —than before we entered the war. A complex of conditions, resulting from the war, is sapping our national life at its roots; infant mortality is increasing.

Women, who alone know what it costs to create human life, instinctively recoil from war. That it may the sooner be over they have rushed to the support of our armies, and are doing their utmost to repair and restore as much of what is being destroyed as can be repaired and restored. Will they not with equal earnestness and energy, devote themselves to the prevention of loss and damage to human life by war wherever they can be prevented?

Even in times of peace one-half of the deaths of both mothers and babies are unnecessary. That is to say, they could have been prevented. The increased death toll among babies since we entered the war is also largely preventable. England, spurred by war conditions into more adequate attention to the problem, has brought down her infant death rate to a figure lower than that of peacetime.

It is not the sword of the invader that is killing our babies and threatening the physical and moral welfare of older children. The war is using more indirect, insidious means. Some of them are a rising cost of living, without compensatory increase in income, resulting in inadequate food and shelter for children; shortage or prohibitive prices of milk; entrance of nursing and expectant mothers into industry without proper safeguard; failure of our social organizations to provide adequate medical and nursing facilities for rural women; dangerous suspensions or relaxed enforcement of child-labor laws, permitting young children to enter industry too soon or under improper conditions; lessened incomes for public and private agencies devoted to infant and child welfare; improper absence of boys and girls from school, leading to present irregularities and future handicaps.

These are the things that are menacing the children —some born of war conditions, others only aggravated by war conditions. Every effort toward eliminating or ameliorating these conditions is war service of the highest type; and to this service women everywhere, whatever their situation, are called. You can serve by enlisting under the forces of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense, which, through its Department of Child Welfare, headed by Miss Julia Lathrop, Chief of the United States Children's Bureau, and Dr. Jessica B. Peixotto, Exeeeutive Secretary, is going to go "over the top" for the children in wartime.

What is it proposed to do? The conditions suggest the remedies, explicitly expressed in the Children's Bureau wartime program. Here it is:

(1) Public protection of maternity and infancy. Essentials: Public health nurses and suitable medical attention for every mother in America.

(2) Mothers' care for older children. Essentials: Adequate living income for all families; mothers' pensions for civilians; family allowances for soldiers' families and special provision for extraordinary needs to secure every home against lack of adequate comfort and protection for children.

(3) Enforcement of all child-labor laws and full schooling for all children of school age; maintenance of standards in spite of all war pressure.

(4) Recreation for children and youth, abundant, decent and protected from any form of exploitation.

The problem of adequate provision for mothers, babies and older children is in many respects a community problem. Treating it as such there are many things that the average untrained woman in the community, busy with her own home or work, can do. Here are some of them:

Information is the first requisite. Has your community the information it ought to have about its mothers, babies and children? Are all the boys and girls in school who ought to be there? If not, why? Are any private interests or public officials seeking to relax child-labor regulations and laws? How many women with young children are taking "war jobs"? Are there any children suffering from lack of enough milk or other nourishment?

Ask these questions in your club meeting, in your newspapers, in your churches; ask them of your local authorities, your doctors and your school teachers and officials. Asking the questions will start a discussion, which will bring out facts. These in turn show you what needs to be done.

Keep in mind the program laid down, and cooperate with the forces of the Woman's Committee to make that program a reality. Those who possess the vote have a powerful means of bringing local governmental officials and agencies to its support and securing the money necessary to execute it.

There is much for women to do, mothers particularly, if they will but recognize their vital and common interests at stake and act accordingly.

From the Editor's View-Point

Flowing with Milk and Honey

One of the features of the land promised to the seed of Abraham was that it should be a land "flowing with milk and honey;" and compared to the oppression the children of Israel suffered during the years of their sojourn in Egypt the promise was made good when they were established in the promised land. But these conditions did not always prevail; human interferences sometimes robbed the people of their rightful inheritance and the substance the fruitfulness of the land had to offer them.

When America was discovered and more especially when its great interior was explored and its fertile valleys and fruitful plains became known to man this great country was regarded as such a land as had been promised to the Hebrew children, and indeed it is a land "flowing with milk and honey" when its possibilities are developed and its products directed along right channels instead of being diverted into channels of less usefulness, but perhaps greater profit.

One of the states that, because of its peculiarly favorable conditions for dairying, has been called the "land of milk and butter and cheese" has now come under some industrial conditions that are robbing it of its great name, and even in Wisconsin we are told a serious shortage of milk threatens the lives of the babies of the state. Dr. Dorothy Mendenhall, a Wisconsin child welfare worker told a conference of welfare workers in Washington the other day that in four Wisconsin cities no milk could be obtained.

The brief statement from Washington mentioned only the fact of the shortage and nothing was said of the cause. There can not be an effect without there first being a cause, and the fact that four cities of considerable size in Wisconsin are unsafe places to raise babies because of a shortage in the milk supply indicates that something is wrong somewhere; as the old saying goes: "There is something rotten in Denmark (Wisconsin)." Just what it is we are not able to say from this distant view point, but we have an opinion that back of it all is selfishness and personal greed. While our government is in the notion of investigating many things, it might be well to instruct the child welfare commission to look into the matter of starving babies for shortage of milk in a land that is virtually "flowing with milk and honey." If any section of America suffers from want of proper food in times of great plenty it is because mismanagement has been permitted for the sake of personal gain.

Angels Unawares

If we knew we were to actually entertain angels at some time, even though that time might be in the distant future many of us would be a little more particular about our housekeeping; but angels unawares, or blessings in disguise come to many of us, and we fail to recognize them at the time of their visit. We have been developing such a spirit of discontent and fault finding during the last few years that many of our people have come to be regular calamity howlers and we act and live as though God had abdicated his throne or that he is dead and has left his kingdom without a successor upon the throne.

When our pleasures are interfered with or our luxuries are curtailed we too often feel that we have been imposed upon and that our rights have been taken away from us by force, when in reality these things that we have looked upon with displeasure and have submitted to with ill natured grace are blessings in disguise, "angels unawares." When the great shortage in sugar became a realized fact a mighty protest went up from the people who were already steeped in sweets and suffering from an over consumption of sugar without realizing it.

We are now told that this one thing has been a great economic blessing, and that from a standpoint of hygiene and economy, changes in diet because of this shortage represent a positive gain. While sugar yields more calories per unit of cost than any other food, yet on the other hand it gives us nothing but energy. It contains no protein and no mineral value, elements which are essential. And the disguised blessing is found in the fact that as a people we have been forced to substitute in its place, vegetables and fruits, which are real body building foods. Necessity is the "mother of substitutes as well as the mother of invention," and we are told by those who are in a position to speak with authority, that had we made some of these simple substitutes many years ago we might have been a sturdier race today. So in the light of these claims of our scientists and our food experts let us accept this one shortage in our food supplies, for its true worth and apply ourselves with as good grace as possible to the task of eliminating an appetite for sweets and cultivate a taste for the more wholesome foods that have real body building value.

Poetry Gives No Protection

In former ages of the world's civilization only those who went to the battle front were in danger of life and limb from the attacks of the enemy, but in these modern days there seems to be no place or people immune from the dangers of present methods of warfare. In olden times a poet and even more especially a poetess would have been considered perfectly safe from harm from military attacks because of their retiring and secluded manner of life far away from the turmoil and strife of the world and because they would be found many miles away from the field of battle. But these conditions no longer prevail and today no amount of poetry, either in temperament or in expressed thought will safeguard one from the dangers of the enemy. Only a few days ago as the wreckage was cleared away in the northwest section of London after a German air raid the body of Mrs. Guilbert Ford, American poetess and author of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," was taken from the wreckage a victim of the German bomb.

There is no escaping the influences of the war nor the consequences of it. We may deplore it, abhor the very thought of it, and stand unalterably opposed to the principles of warfare, but the world is in it, and as we are a part of the world, we too are in it. Just what part we shall take in the great struggle we may not be agreed upon, in fact we may not have reached an agreement with our own minds, but the facts of the situation can not be denied or ignored. We may not participate in the struggle at the battle front but neither poetry nor Christian convictions will save us from the consequences of the struggle in the present age. The extent of the world's sufferings is so great that there is no excuse for anyone, no matter how much opposed to warfare in itself, to not have some part in relieving the sufferings attendant upon and the outgrowth of the war. While the war is a curse in itself, and is pretty generally acknowledged so by those engaged in it, we yet can not believe it can take so great a toll of human life and leave so great a trail of human suffering without in some manner leaving a blessing as well to future civilization and to generations unborn, without saying anything about the benefit that a concluding of a righteous peace would bestow upon the present generation. There is some work we should do and we should do it heartily.

Coming to Their Senses

It takes a long time for some people or for some groups of people to come to their senses, that is to a sane and sound way of regarding life and its opportunities and possibilities. We have long held that no man has a moral right to engage in any business, profession or avocation for no other reason than that he can make money, or even a living out of it. Unless the business or occupation gives some needed service to the human family the one who engages in it, no matter how industriously he works, is only a parasite upon the human family after all. Many of the so-called amusement companies exist for the sole purpose of extracting money out of the pockets of a gullible and weak minded people; but world conditions are opening the eyes of the people and they are beginning to balk at such schemes for relieving them of their coin.

The safety director of Youngstown, Ohio, has barred all street shows and carnivals from the streets of Youngstown for the coming summer. He has taken this action for economic reasons, but it might have been taken for moral reasons just as well. We have yet to learn of any town or city that has been benefited in any way by turning its streets over to a carnival company and its hangers on for a week. Yes, some of us are slowly coming to our senses.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Reports---Look At Yourselves.

What This Page Is For

I feel that there is nothing more important than that I should tell the brethren everywhere that there is need of reading what is on this page more closely than has been done. If anybody feels that I am devoting from one-half to more than one-half of a day each week to making this page simply for the fun of making it, they may as well get themselves undeceived as soon as possible. I have the positive evidence that people who ought to read every word of these pages are not doing so, and so, the work is being hindered to that extent.

Who Spends Most Time?

It is needless to tell you that it takes you but a few minutes to read this letter each week while I spend several hours, most of the weeks to tell you what is important to the progress of the Program in the churches. Directors, Pastors, Workers, everywhere, if you do not read this page, no wonder your reports will not be as good as they should.

Peports, Reports..

Now, some of the directors think I am going to report on this page the exact status of each church. I am not. It would be too embarrassing right now, to these churches to have me do that. I do not say they should be spared; indeed, I feel that they should be exposed and I would not be surprised if some of our conference work would be to pass a resolution that they should be, another year.

Plenty of Time

Pastors and churches have now had a year and a half to get ready to have something to report. I am as sure as I live if some of these churches were reported on this page as they have been reported, there would go up a howl from the camp that would be heard a long way off. I'll not quote a bit from them, but I hope that a few weeks from now, when another report is sent for, there will be none of these slip-shod excuses.

One Director's Report

Of course each director has had his way of telling things, but the way one director reported was: "No Report. ——— Pastor." Now, brother pastor, would you like a fac simile of that report to appear after we have been in this game for one and one-half years? When one of these directors reported the name of a church and then after it "Dead," I of course had no right to expect anything. But when a church has a pastor and then reports nothing, what is the difference in the showing?

All Have Something

Now, there is not a church that can not add some encouragement to this Program. Because you can not report perfect on more than one goal is no reason you should not report. For instance, one church that has had one of the most high sounding reports on the "News from the Churches" about a revival that has been held this winter, made no report at all. If that pastor had reported his good revival and it had read that he had finished Goal 4 for the entire four years in a single year, as he had, it would have helped the whole report at least a small bit.

Now, Look

These figures may not be exact. I did not take the time to find an adding machine nor did I take time to verify my own additions. But they are near enough to show which way the wind is blowing. It will let the districts know about how they stand with other districts in the game we are playing. It must serve to show who are taking seriously this Program adopted by the delegates at two conferences. It must allow the pastors and leaders of the various state districts to see themselves as "ithers" see them. I shall not even figure out which district has come nearest reaching the goal, but I know without figuring. It is not Indiana, Ohio or Pennsylvania. Almost 1,000 points are unreported because a lot of pastors or leaders failed somewhere.

Does It Suit You?

If the showing is not what it ought to be, then you know whose is the fault. I hope you will take half as much time as I have to get some figures about your own status and ponder whether you have done all you can to make your district the success it ought to be.

A Big Thing

More and more if we are at all serious, we are coming to know that we have undertaken a big thing. It will take all the leaders working full hours to put the right figures in the goal sheets in 1920, and "slacker" ought never be heard of in the work of the Master. He is doubtless looking at our serious or frivolous attitude toward this Program which after all may be a lot smaller than he would have made it for us. Will we be "Good and Faithful" to this Program, so that he will be able to say that of us when it is finished?

Co-Operation

The District Keymen, with a single exception, you will see, have done their part and I am glad that I can report their excellent interest in your work. Respond to their appeals and we will be co-operating.

BAME.

Stilling the Tempest

MATTHEW 8:23-27

BY H. L. GOUGHNOUR

This is one of the most remarkable stories in the New Testament. It describes the power of Jesus over the forces of nature—the wind and the waves

There are those who try to explain the miracles of Jesus by asserting that he was a hypnotist of great power. But though his works are thus explained, the explanation can be applied only to his power over other men. Hypnotic power would not give him dominion over the wind and waves.

I am very far, however, from admitting that his power over men can be explained as the result of hypnotic influence. The healing of paralytics, a deaf man, a man born blind, a dropsical man, a fever patient, a man with his ear cut off, and several lepers; and the raising from the dead of Jairus' daughter, the widow's son and Lazarus; are not such works as hypnotic influence will explain. This any psychologist will admit.

The story we are considering is plainly one that asserts miraculous power. The records assert that at the word of Jesus the violent winds ceased and the waves, which ordinarily would have continued to roll for several hours, were stilled, "and there was a great calm."

This account is only one of several that set forth the Master's power over forces of nature. The changing of water into wine; the feeding of the four and five thousand; the blasting of the fig tree and the walking upon the sea, are all in the same class. The only way the miraculous power of Jesus over nature can be denied is by denying the authenticity of the gospel records: and this, as we have often considered, as an impossible task for a person who honestly faces the facts.

The event we are considering gains added significance from the fact that it is recorded in all three synoptic gospels. There are only nine other miracles which share this distinction—feeding of five thousand, raising of Jairus' daughter and seven miracles of healing are the others. When we consider the synoptic gospels are separate and largely independent accounts, the force of this fact is realized.

But, should we have any difficulty in believing in the miracles of Jesus? My answer is, "We should not." Back here at the beginning of the first century of our era is a great black field of intellectual and moral decline. Here, in the midst of it is a white spot of our Master's life and teaching. And that spot is the whitest all centuries have seen. The life and teachings of Jesus ARE the marvel of ages.

ACCOUNT FOR IT! YOU CAN NOT! Men often make the mistake of taking some little event in the life of Jesus and accounting for it. The first task, and real task, is to account for him, himself. It is just because Jesus can not be accounted for as the product of his age, or product of the same influences that mold other men, that the best minds of our scientific age accept him as the Son of God. But, if we once accept Jesus as the Son of God, why should we hesitate to believe his miraculous works? Could we expect anything else?

In the eighth chapter of Matthew, from which the text is taken, four other miracles are recorded.

Suppose when the leper came, verse 2, Jesus had, instead of verse 3, said, "Poor fellow, I pity you; but I can do nothing for you." Would that have been a mark of Christ?

Suppose when the centurion, anxious for his palsied servant, said, verses 8 and 9: Jesus had answered, "I appreciate your confidence, but palsy is beyond my power; besides I can do nothing for a person at a distance." Would that have satisfied a world that needs a Christ?

Suppose he had shown a like weakness in Peter's house; with the demoniac and in other situations which he met with manifestations of supernatural power; would such weakness have met the needs of men?

No! When God acted in aid of the race he has created through the ministry of his Son, we have a right to expect a manifestation of that power which has called us into being. A real marvel would be the absence of it.

Likewise, when the disciples went to Jesus, "Save, Lord; we perish," we do not expect to have the Son of God arise and say, "This is a bad storm, but we will hope to get through somehow.."

The incident we are studying can be separated into three very simple divisions: The time before the storm; time when the storm was raging; period of calm after the Master spoke. Let us notice in order:

I. It is a beautiful picture the gospels give of the little sailing boat crossing the Sea of Galilee before the storm broke.

The Sea of Galilee, which Luke calls Lake of Gennesaret and John calls the Sea of Tiberias, is a little inland sea about 13 miles long and 8 miles wide at maximum width. It is shaped like a pear and is set deep among verdure clad hills, which rise above the lake as much as 2,000 feet on the east side. The water is clear and of a bluish tint, so much "Blue Galilee."

It is the evening time, after a day that Jesus had spent entirely in healing and teaching. He had said, "Let us go over unto the other side of the lake," and the disciples had launched a boat and, inasmuch as a cool evening breeze was blowing, had hoisted a sail; and were moving smoothly along. The slanting rays of the late afternoon sun, no doubt, bathed the scene in slightly hazy golden color. The shadows were beginning to lengthen over the hills. The sunshine sparkled from the water, except where the hills threw their dark green shadows deep down into its blue depths. It was a scene of placid and imposing grandeur, as all such scenes are in the late afternoon.

The Master, weary, is asleep upon a cushion in the stern. The disciples are quiet, meditative, peaceful and satisfied.

Isn't that a picture of our life's journey when the sailing is smooth?

We live in a beautiful world. My, how beautiful it is! I could not even begin to describe the beauties of this our earthly home.

The forces of the world seem to operate for our advantage and pleasure. Just as the wind bore the little boat along they seem to move for our benefit and are very kind. We are with our friends and are contented and satisfied. We meditate upon the beauties and mysteries of life, but all anxiety is gone. Some people are glad that Jesus is with them on the journey and think much of him. But some, unlike the disciples on boat, think nothing of him. They do not care whether he is asleep or awake. In fact, care nothing about him. In times of peace and prosperity, many people seem to feel, "Life is beautiful, life is splendid; if God Almighty will just let us alone."

II. But life is not all peace and prosperity. The little Sea of Galilee, set in the midst of towering hills where are many currents of temperature, has always been the scene of many sudden and violent storms. This evening one of those storms arose. A swift gust of wind rushed over the lake. Heavy, dark clouds arose above the hills. A sharp flash of lightning broke directly over the heads of the company in the little boat. The thunder rolled away from hill to hill. Nature seemed to take on suddenly a militant mood. Hosts of dark, angry clouds appeared, seemingly from nowhere. They shut out the sun, overspread the sun and robed the lake in ominous gray darkness. Bolts of lightning shot from every cloud; the thunder crashed about them everywhere and heavy reverberations rolled incessantly. The winds swept in angry fury upon the little lake. The occasional gusts were followed by charge after charge, each one more violent than the one before and more seemingly bent upon destruction.

The disciples were men accustomed to such experiences. With practiced hands they prepared the boat to weather the storm. Soon Peter said, "This is worse than I ever saw it before." John, "I fear it will awake the Master." But the storm demon seemed mad! Waves rose higher and higher. The boat was tossed about like a shell. Great white caps broke over the sides of the little ship. In the troughs of the waves rough and jagged rocks revealed the danger they were constantly in. But still the Master was asleep in the stern, the quietest portion of the boat.

At last the balers announced that the ship was surely sinking and the courage of these strong men gave way. They rushed to the stern in terror and awoke the Master with the cry, "Save, Lord; we perish."

Isn't that, my friends, a picture of our experience when the storms of life fall?

Generally we seem to be subduing nature; but there are times when nature most decidedly subdues us. Generally the elements seem to be our servants; at other times they master us with a stern hand. One moment man is nature's boasting lord; the next moment he is nature's crestfallen toy and sport. The storm casts down his orchards and crops. Lightning smites to earth like the hammer of Thor. Earthquakes topple over his cities like a house of cards. Floods sweep away his home. Hot winds and drouth burn up his fields. Sickness robs us of our finest plans and will yield to no remedies. Death snatches away beloved parent or darling child. Pestilence threatens an entire nation.

At such times nature seems an irresisible machine, grinding us to pieces in its remorseless cogs. Our hopes and joys and dearest treasures disappear, as it were into nature's yawning maw.

In times of calm we sometimes almost wish God would let us alone; in times of storm we come, like the disciples and cry out in utter hopelessness and despair: "Save, Lord; we are sinking! Carest thou not that we perish?"

Now, my friends is it not apparent to you why when God stooped to meet the needs of men he gave humanity a miracle-working Christ?

To meet emergencies of life! It is easy enough for us to be speculative when life's seas are smooth. Then we can think without fear perhaps Christ was not much different from other men. That laws of nature, not God, are supreme.

But, when storms of life come, it is then we pray that our previous speculations are not true. Then we want wonder-working Christ. We want Christ who can say: "Arise, take up thy bed and walk." "Thou evil spirit, I say unto thee come out of him, and trouble him no more." "I will, be thou clean." "Thy sins are forgiven thee, go and sin no more." "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise." "Winds and waves, be calm. Peace be still." We want a Christ who can say such things as these!

And my friends, listen! We live in a day after Christ has spoken. When he was here he showed himself capable of meeting every emergency of life. Now, he is sitting at the right hand of the Father accessible at all times to every one of us. I know the reason he is not present more often to still our storms is because we do not call upon him.

Did you notice my friends that when Jesus stilled the storm he first stilled the troubled spirits of the disciples and restored their faith?

While yet lying upon his improvised couch he said, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm."

If our faith were not so wavering; if we would more often approach him without fear—we would be less storm-tossed and our confidence would triumph over many a trial.

And, now in closing let me ask, Did you know there are two occasions recorded in the gospels when Jesus stilled the storm? Read Mark 6:45-51.

Notice. 1. The disciples thought they were alone this night; but Jesus was watching them from the mountain whither he had gone to pray. He saw them "distressed in their rowing."

2. He came to them upon the waves and cheered them with the words: "Be of good cheer: It is I, be not afraid."

3. When they took him into their boat, "the wind ceased" and the storm was past.

So it will be with us if we take him into our little craft as we sail the seas of life.

A Suggestion

In a late issue of the Brethren Evangelist, Brother Copp had something to say in regard to ministers who fail to pay their honest debts. And right here and now let me say a loud Amen! I wish that it might ring from coast to coast. My suggestion is that churches would do well to investigate a little along that line before extending an official call. Some of us are at this moment in possession of hard facts, which, if known in some churches would surely cause their pastor to wilt, (at least we hope so) and doubtless his parishioners would also experience a change of opinion. This may seem rather stern, but it is high time that some one should give a note of warning. I happen to know of one church in the east that has suffered much on this account.

The outgoing pastor must surely have had a very short memory, and since then the coal dealers and others have suffered from "shortage." Doubtless this will be read by——. Well, the rest need not be said. There's a remedy. Why not use it.

American Japanese Relations

Japan's relation to the world and the world war is a matter of increasing interest to millions of Americans. Is Japan playing a shrewd, selfish game, reserving her forces until the time comes to strike hard in order to reap enormous profits to the loss and even the permanent danger of her present allies? Or is she honestly co-operating with them ready to aid in building up a new world order, in which all nations, the small and the weak, as well as the great and the strong shall have justice, security and opportunity? These are questions of vital importance. And indisputable facts that throw light on the situation should be keenly welcomed by every intelligent American.

These remarks are suggested by a booklet recently published by Dr. Gulick entitled, "Anti-Japanese War Scare Stories." The author has rendered an important service by running down a number of stories that have been circulated throughout the United States during the past few years. He shows that whatever may be the facts in regard to Japan's alleged sinister policies, many of the stories used to prove them have been without foundation.

It is now known, moreover, that the German Government has for years been at work seeking to foment trouble between America and Japan. German agents have circulated in America plausible stories about the "Japanese menace to America," and in Japan about the "American menace to Japan." How much of the mutual suspicion now found in both America and Japan is due to these stories it is difficult at once to decide. A few things, however, are beyond dispute.

FIRST. Japan faces a serious economic problem because of her enormous and increasing population. Her mountainous islands (147,000 square miles) have but limited natural resources. So small is the amount of her arable land that for every square mile there are 2,688 inhabitants. Emigration to the great continents of vast undeveloped resources has, moreover, been refused by Canada, the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Siberia. In spite of her economic obstacles, Japan has, nevertheless, given her people universal education, modern methods of justice, industry, civil government and a world outlook. Her adoption of western medicine, hygiene and the principle of the sacredness of human life has stopped destructive epidemics and infanticide, by which factors population in ancient times was held to a pretty even scale. These physical and psychological conditions create in Japan and for the world also a problem found nowhere else.

SECOND. The policy of the European nations in their dealings with Africa and Asia has too often been characterized by selfishness, greed, fraud, aggression and secret diplomacy. Too often have they resorted to ruthless military occupancy and annexation. In the light of these features of the policies of Occidental Nations in the Far East Japan has feared the participation of China among the powers of Europe. For it would cause her incalculable harm and prevent her from having any opportunity whatever in the world.

THIRD. Japan, accordingly, following more or less closely the methods of Europe, has been seeking recently to get ahead of those nations and to take the leadership of China into her own hands.

FOURTH. The time has come for a new policy in the dealings of the nations. America should make this a cardinal principle at the World's Peace Council. But in order that it may be really adopted and followed, provision should be made for the real economic needs of the heavily populated countries. Safety, opportunity and justice for all, small and great alike, should be the guiding principles of the peace terms. But whatever may be thought of these larger questions, it is of highest importance that our people should know the actual facts in regard to Japan's relations with America. "Anti-Japanese War Scare Stories" deals effectively with the matters which it discusses.

It is now beyond denial that German agents have been industriously at work for years past in the malign campaign of falsehood and treachery which has made the German name a hiss and a byword wherever frank and honorable ideals of statesmanship and diplomacy are cherished. Germany has had everything to gain from a successful effort to estrange the United States and Japan. In both countries the work of German emissaries has been incessant.

Christian Love Defined and Illustrated

BY MISS LOREE CUTRIGHT

Let love be without dissimulation; abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Romans 12:9.

In the first age, when Christian communities were few and small and persecuted, the life that the followers of Christ led was very much a life in common, and very distinct from that of the world around. So we cannot wonder that so many of the apostles' counsels and injunctions referred to the conduct of church members toward one another. Still, many admonitions were given to Christians moving in a more or less general society. In this chapter, after Paul has instructed the Roman Christians in their mutual duties as members of society, has shown how each office is to be filled and each gift is to be used,(he proceeds to more general counsels. He describes the spirit that is to be employed in the common intercouse of life, both among themselves and in their associations with the un-Christian world, that of brotherly love.

"The Apostle of Love," John tells us that "God is love" and makes this the Christian motive to the love of his brother. Paul, writing to the Ephesians says, "Walk in love, even as Christ also loved us and gave himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God." For the man who believes that God sent his Son to save us from hatred and all other sins, who believes in the infinite love of God, it is natural to live a life of love. The right kind of love is love unfeigned. Unreality, falsehood, insincerity and untruthfulness are prevalent evils in our day. There were hypocrites whom Christ denounced in the early church. Thus Ananias and Sapphira professed love and generosity but there was no reality in their profession. Where there is true love, vice and crime are banished. Every virtue and grace may be regarded as the fruit of love; for how can we wrong those whom we love? Christ said our duty was summed up in these two commands, "Love God," and "Love thy neighbor."

Dr. Holbeck, a missionary of the Church of England in Southern Africa, from the top of a neighboring hill, saw lepers at work. He noticed two in particular sowing peas in the field. One had no hands, the other had no feet. These men were being wasted away by disease. The one who wanted the feet was carried on the back of the one who wanted the hands. The former carried the bag of seed and dropped a pea every now and then which the other pressed into the ground with his feet. Thus they managed the work of one man between the two. Such should be the true union of members of Christ's body, in which all the members should have the same care one for another.

Impromptu Flashes

BY W. J. H. BAUMAN

Infidelity may flourish in conection with morality or immorality; but true Christianity can not justify any connection with immorality whatever.

Self-righteousness and Bible Christianity are uncompromisingly at variance with each other.

FOR JESUS' SAKE. Keep that before your vision. Then do all the good you can.

The devil doesn't care by what means and methods he may influence you; whether by cursing or by so-called nice flattery, just so he gets you.

God is too noble, honest, loving, good and kind to accept of anything not influenced by nobility and honesty of heart.

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever." Heb. 13:8, penetrates the eternity of the past, present and future.

"Silver linings." Lets study them, then utilize them in practical life.

"Pray without ceasing" must mean that we should pray when al lalone as well as in church or public crowds. O how sweet to be ALONE WITH GOD! Think of it. It seems so much like a privilege adorned with high and heavenborn honor.

We absolutely have no right to hate anything but sin, its author and effects.

If it were not for the vicarious atonement of Jesus Christ all our morality, education, forms of worship, gentleness, honesty in business, sincerity in purpose, charitableness toward the poor, social nicety, etc., would not save us from the power and thralldom of sin.

Only the blood of Jesus Christ contains cleansing power from the putrefaction of sin. Noble manhood and noble womanhood can be perfected only by the blood. It is blood fruit.

The pretending hypocrite can only exist where righteousness is exalted.

Say, you people who decline to join church because there are hypocrites in her ranks, do you get any comfort from the idea of becoming their comrades in the eternal future? You know that the Bible teaches that "wicked shall be cast into hell."

Our salvation does not depend upon the misdeeds of others, whether in the church or out of her.

You say you are just as good as your neighbors who belong to church so far as character and good works in general are concerned. That may be true. But your self-righteousness means dishonor toward the atoning merits of the blood of Jesus Christ.

The refined efforts of the devil are often far more dangerous than are those more crude, in dragging souls to hell.

Wonderful indeed, in our day, are the literal fulfillments of both Old and New Testament prophecies. Through eyes and ears they appeal to us, and increase our responsibilities.

My, oh my, how Satan is monopolizing the great discoveries and inventions of our day. I guess he knows that his time is short.

"At the time of the end men shall run to and fro and knowledge shall increase."

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The Children's Generation in Korean Sunday Schools

The statement that comes from Korea that they are now prepared to work their Sunday school problem in a thorough manner for the first time. Much in the way of Bible study has been accomplished in Korea during these past years. They have had practically the entire congregation in their Bible school but this fact has prevented intensive work among the children. A missionary puts the matter very directly when he says:: "We have had 33 years in Korea now —just one generation. It has been an adult generation. Now comes the generation of children. You know we have always had our church Sunday schools which everyone attends, from grandpa down to the babies, but we have not had Sunday schools for the children until recently."

"Last May we set a man to work to cover the 120 churches of our denomination in this province, and to try to organize children's Sunday schools in every possible church in addition to all that we had before. I am not sure of the total that he started but I think that it is over 20. I have over half that many in my own 45 churches and they are doing well."

Then an appeal is made for help by supplying pictures which have been used in our American Sunday schools. "Our people are so poor though and there is so little in the way of literature that they can afford to buy. Every bit that you have sent has been used to the limit and some of it several times over. Now in addition to the 120 Sunday schools we want anything in the shape of a picture, preferably those large wall charts for these schools. We hope to have 40 of the new schools running before summer." This appeal is especially to Presbyterians and Methodosts, both "North" and "South." For further information and an introduction to a missionary, write, indicating your denomination, to the World's Sunday School Association, Surplus Material Department, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. There is a call for similar pictures from every foreign mission field, where your own denomination is working.

A New Name

Such news as the following rejoices the heart of a missionary. The letter was written by a little girl in Egypt to Rev. Stephen V. Trowbridge, Field Secretary for Egypt of the World's Sunday School Association. "This has been such a glad Sunday for us all. Two of the girls of this school have been baptized (one an Abyssinian and the other an Egyptian), and two others have joined the church anl also taken their first communion. The Abyssinian girl's name was Fatma, but now her name is Naomi, which means grace, and is her teacher's name. The other girl's name was Aneesa so it did not have to be changed. I forgot to say that two men joined the church and a baby was baptized. That made seven in all."

Subjects Presented at a Sunday School Conference in Khartum

The program of a Sabbath School Workers and Teachers Conference that was recently held in Khartum, in the upper reaches of the Nile, has reached the office of the World's Sunday School Association, Metropolitan Tower, New York City. The program would be a fitting one for use in the homeland. The conference motto was "A little child shall lead them." Here are some of the subjects that were presented: "The Relation of the Sababth School to the Church," "How to Increase Attendance at Sabbath School," "The Relation of the Teacher to the Pupil." Then came a general discussion and supper, just like home, only they called it "tea" in Egypt, and the hour was 5:00 P. M. Before final adjournment two other vital subjects were considered, "The Importance of Bible Stories and How to Teach Them According to the Ability of the Pupil to Understand Them," and the "Conversion of the Child." These subjects were presented by a turbaned Egyptian, Rev. Ibrahim Girgis, World's Sunday School Seretary for the Sudan.

China's Busy Sunday School Secretary

In one letter from Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, of Shanghai, Field Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association, a few things are named indicating the active life that must be lived by one who seeks to help the Sunday schools of a nation. The date was November 6, 1917. He was dictating the letter an hour before the meeting of their Executive Council. The next morning he took a steamer for South China, to make a Sunday school tour that would last till after Christmas. Two weeks would then be spent in the office before starting on another trip, covering Hankow, Changsa and up the great Yangtszekiang river. By that time Sherwood Eddy would have arrived and co-operation in that campaign would demand both time and strength. Previously there had been active work with the Buckman Party. Particular emphasis is placed by the party on the "Personalization and Spiritualization of every department of mission work." With this Buckman party Mr. Tewksbury had part in two summer conferences and in city conferences in Peking, Tientsin, Hangchow, Nanking and Shanghai.

Faithful Sunday School Attendance in Japan

Japan has a National Sunday School Association. Their Secretary is Rev. Kawasumi. Mr. Kawasumi just reported to the World's Sunday School Association about the giving of medals for Sunday school attendance and made the interesting statement: "Last Christmas we gave medals for those who attended Sunday school without rest through the year. There were 3,602 and those who continued through five years were 19. Of the teachers who had taught classes through five years there were 77 and for ten years there were 18." There are about 200,000 in the Sunday schools of Japan.

Winning Chile's Young People

How the Sunday school is being used in South America as an agency in soul winning is graphically described by Rev. George P. Howard, Sunday School Secretary for South America, of the World's Sunday School Association. He said, in part, "We have ended our evangelistic campaign in Santiago and Valparaiso. We held meetings for two weeks in each place, and the results have been most inspiring. Ever since arriving on this field I have been studying the method of evangelistic approach to the Latin-American mind. And I feel that the Master has led me to the discovery of some things that are going to prove of immense value to us in our work on this field."

"In Santiago we had 250 converts come up to the altar during the two weeks, and in Valparaiso we had 407, all adults. Apart from these numbers we secured a fine group of adolescents from the different Sunday schools. On a given Sunday during the campaign we had Decision Day in all the Sunday schools and the army of young disciples that responded filled the hearts of the superintendents and teachers with joy. These young Christians from the Sunday schools are the best converts of all. It will be fully a year or more before the other converts are trained and ready to join the church. But these young folks from the Sunday school, they are the kind we need most. "I shall never forget that Sunday school service," said one of the Presbyterian pastors, referring to the decision day service we held in his church. Out of his school we got 90 young people, mostly adolescents, who came up and made the choice for Christ and his kingdom. Then I got the teachers and older members to join hands as we formed a circle around these new soldiers of the cross, swearing them in and binding them to eternal loyalty to Christ."

"'I feel so happy,' said one of the Presbyterian lady missionaries, whose fine influence among the girls of Chile was that day bearing rich fruitage. 'I am discovering that Presbyterians as well as Methodists can get happy,' was my answer. 'The biggest attendance we have ever had,' was the exultant declaration of another superintendent after the first Sunday of our campaign in Santiago. All together, it has been a great revival. Now, if next year we get some pep into our churches on this side of the mountains, I shall be happy. I am hoping to see a similar revival break out in Argentina and Uruguay. It is one big way of injecting new life into our Sunday school work.

Sunday School Progress in the Philippines

Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, Field Secretary for the Philippine Islands of the World's Sunday School Association just wrote from his intimate experience in the islands, "I am quite convinced that the Sunday school work is the center of the whole missionary propaganda here in the Islands at the present time. It is one of the most encouraging parts of it all. I was able to hold Sunday school conferences in two principal centers while I was in the south. Silliman Institute, the Presbyterian Industrial school has over 800 students and I was there for six days, holding meetings every day and individual conferences with the men. Recently some 160 young men there definitely gave themselves to Christ, and quite a few of them are going into Christian service. About 100 of them are going to put in their Christmas holidays in Sunday school work."

REVIEW OF
The Thought and Work of the Church

This week Ohio gets back into the game of placing the Evangelist into all the homes of the active members of the church and Bryan, with brother G. L. Maus as pastor is the winning church. This is an illustration of the old poem, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." Brother Maus tried last fall and did not succeed, but he is not the type of a preacher to give up at the first attempt, and with prayer and much hard work and with the expenditure of a great deal of nervous energy he has gloriously "gone over the top." We would not decorate him with the "iron cross," but we would commend him for his endeavors to honor the cross of Calvary. We rejoice with Brother Maus and his congregation in this victory for the adoption of advanced methods in promoting the work of the kingdom.

On the young people's page this week is published a letter from one of Pennsylvania's Endeavorers who is "somewhere in France" doing the work of the Lord under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Our readers will note that Brother Link asks his wife to forward the Brethren Evangelist to him in France after she has read it. Brother Link has been isolated from the church of his choice for some time, but with him church relationship is something more than a convenience or even a field of usefulness, it is a matter of conviction and he has kept in touch with it in the only way an isolated member can, by reading the Evangelist. We pray that Brother Link may be used of the Lord to accomplish great good in France and that he may be kept safe until he returns again to his family in Pennsylvania.

L. G. Wood is rejoicing in the victories the Lord is giving the Brethren cause in Roanoke, Virginia. Seven members have been added to the church since the last report, and the church and all its auxiliaries are making an effort to reach all the goals set for the Four-Year Program, and Brother Wood is one of the kind, who having "put his hand to the plow" does not turn back. We shall expect good work from Roanoke until the goals of the whole Program have been reached by the entire brotherhood.

G. L. Maus makes an announcement and an appeal to the pastors in Ohio that should have their attention. If Brother Maus keeps after the pastors of Ohio as persistently as he does other things the state chairman will realize that he made no mistake when he selected Brother Maus as director for Goal No. 7 for the Ohio district. The pastors might as well do the work he calls upon them to do now as any time for he will keep right after them along the line of work cut out for him, "if it takes all summer," and then some.

As A. E. Whitted, Portis, Kansas, states he does not rush into print to report everything that occurs in his home church, but when he does make a report he usually has something very good to say. However our readers enjoy the reports that tell of the common things of the church as well as of the uncommon. This time Brother Whitted reports the evangelistic meetings recently conducted by himself and Evangelist Jennings and wife. These were splendid meetings and seventeen made the good confession, most of the number having already been received into the church.

Alva J. McClain reports his efforts to locate the baggage belonging to the Gribble party that had been lost in the sailing for Africa. Their friends will be pleased to learn that it has all been located, and we trust is now safely on the way to the Dark Continent. It is supposed that the party has landed at their African port by this time where they will wait for a time, pending the arrival of their baggage.

The first letter written by C. F. Yoder since his return to South America appears this week. It is to be observed that the spirit of evil that is so active in the world at the present time has been especially industrious in South America during the lats six months and Brother Yoder finds conditions greatly changed in the short time he was in the home land, but still he feels the Lord will bless the missionary efforts we are making through our South American workers. According to this report from Brother Yoder, Brother Bock has made splendid progress in acquiring the language of the native people and is now able to do good work most anywhere in the mission.

Brother Beal's report of his labors in California shows continued activity. His labors in a recent revival meeting at Lordsburg have already been reported by another, but the way the services were sustained in his home church during his absence shows the efficiency of the organization of the Compton Avenue church in Los Angeles. The plan this church has adopted to develop the talents of the younger members of the congregation seems to be working successfully and it might add interest to the services of many another church to give this plan a tryout.

Brother Beachler is home in Ashland again for a short rest before completing his canvass among the Indiana churches for the endowment of Ashland College. His last report is from the Eaton, Indiana church and shows good results when the membership of the church is considered. With the mercury in the thermometer now up to twenty-three thousand dollars it should be no trouble at all for the Indiana churches to reach the goal of twenty-five thousand dollars, as set for them.

The congested condition of the United States mails seems to grow worse rather than better and no dependence whatever can be placed upon them for prompt delivery of second class matter. Last Saturday the editor received his copy of The Independent for March 16, making it just two weeks late. The Brethren Evangelist mailed in the Ashland post office last week was not delivered to the members in Ashland for more than sixty hours after being mailed. Practically every periodical in the country is having the same experience, so we ask the readers of the Evangelist to be patient about it.

Homer Anderson in his report from Dutchtown, Indiana, no doubt tells the absolute truth when he says, "We hated to have Brother Beachler come, but we also hated to have him leave." Brother Beachler doesn't have horns, nor does he berate the churches that are a little slow about loosening up their purse strings for Ashland College, and we are quite sure a great many churches have had the same feeling that Dutchtown did, and they were really glad he came.

The attention of our pastors is directed to the announcement on another page from the Layman Company that a supply of pamphlets upon tithing can be secured, free of charge, by writing for them. Whether one believes the tithe is obligatory on the Christian church or not it will do no harm to read what those who do believe it have to say about it.

Around the Editor's Table

Repeat Orders

It is not only a test of salesmanship but it is a test of the quality of the goods when "repeat" orders can be secured from those who have purchased a certain brand of goods for the first time.

A few years ago the writer did some field work for a lyceum bureau and succeeded in placing, or in other words "selling" a few lyceum courses in towns that had never conducted courses before. It took considerable hard work and a great deal of persuasion to get enough people to sign the guarantee that would make the course prove successful, but it was done. That might properly be called salesmanship, but the point I wish to make is that the writer then severed his connection with that lyceum bureau, but as he was in that section of the state last winter to fill a Sunday preaching appointment he learned that these towns were not only still successfully conducting lyceum courses, but that they were still securing their talent from the same bureau he represented when he intorduced the work among them. These "repeat" orders indicate that the attractions furnished by this bureau are good and that the people are satisfied with the work they are doing for the community.

It will now soon be one year since we first succeeded in securing one Brethren church in Ohio to place the Brethren Evangelist into every family of the congregation, and we had been wondering for some time whether we would receive a "repeat order" from this church; but we need wonder no longer for a few days ago the pastor of the church called us on the 'phone and said, "Continue the Evangelist list from Gretna and the church will settle for it soon." That was mighty good news to us, for then we knew it was not simply salesmanship that had secured this order, but that the quality of the goods is such that the church wants to continue the good work among the members. The plan which we have worked so hard to introduce would prove a failure should the churches adopt it for one year and then return to the old haphazard method of securing Evangelist subscriptions and it is only as we receive these "repeat orders" from the churches that have tried out the plan that we can call it really successful. We are glad that the first church to adopt the plan has found it good enough to continue it and we feel that the second church to get on the list will also give us a "repeat order," at least the pastor intimated that it would in a letter received last winter for he finds it a great help in the work he is trying to do as he labors with his people. Let the good work go on and we will continue these churches on the Honor Roll, marking them second year churches.

A New Appeal

Last week we made a new appeal to the churches that have been hesitating about adopting the budget system for placing the Evangelist into every family in the congregation, but as we are able to announce that the Gretna, Ohio, church has determined to continue this plan it should help any church that has been fearful of good results to be obtained in this manner to reach a decision and to act at once.

We are exceedingly anxious to get fifty churches on the Honor Roll before the meeting of the General Conference in August but we are only three-fourths of the way to the goal, consequently we must speed up a little or the goal will not be reached. We must put a little more pressure on the "accelerator" and maybe open the "cut out" for a while until we get the necessary speed in our action. It may seem a little noisy for a time, but we feel the end will justify the means.

As an accelerator we made the proposition that was presented to you on this page last week, that is to place the Evangelist in your homes the balance of the year at one dollar. Now this does not mean that individual and personal subscriptions will be received at this rate, but that churches that will in any systematic way, either by an every member canvass or by the budget system, place the Evangelist in one hundred per cent. of homes of the active members of their congregations will be given the rate of ONE DOLLAR until the end of the year as stated above. But REMEMBER as stated last week this is not a REDUCTION in price, it is only a reduction in TIME. You will be getting the paper for two-thirds of a year for two-thirds of the yearly price. We will not deduct one cent from the price made to other churches that have won a place on the Honor Roll. We are not running a Jew business, moreover it would not be fair to the other churches, but this plan may help some of the churches that have hesitated about adding the amount to their annual budget necessary for a yearly subscription for each family, and this will give them an opportunity to try out the plan at a slightly reduced cost. We appeal to the PASTORS and to the churches to help us secure the desired FIFTY churches for the Honor Roll before the meeting of Conference.

The Overflow

How much attention have we given to the "overflows" of life? We usually take most of the things the Lord does for us for granted and as a matter of course without considering the possibility of an intelligent design on his part to supply every need. And not only is it that he provides for every need of his children but he provides something to spare as well, an overflow. When Jesus ministered to the multitude and supplied his disciples with enough bread and fish to enable them to feed five thousand men besides women and children he did not provide only enough that each might have a "little", but they "did all eat and were filled." But the Lord did not stop with "filling" the multitude, there was an "overflow" and of the overflow twelve baskets were filled with the fragments.

This is characteristic of the Lord's doings. The Psalmist says, "My cup runneth over." We believe the experience of the Psalmist is the common experience of those who trust in the Lord for the things he has promised them, but who are busy at the same time in doing whatever work the Lord may have appointed them to do. But it is not of the "overflow" as it has to do with one's physical life and one's physical comforts that one should be specially concerned, it is in the experiences of the soul that this great overflow is most definitely experienced.

When Jesus came into the world he came for a definite and fixed purpose; it was that the children of God should not perish but that they should have eternal life, and it was not that they should simply have eternal existence, but that they should actually have life. When Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it ABUNDANTLY," he undoubtedly was speaking of the overflow life. Of course many people miss this abundant, this overflow life because they do not put themselves in the way of receiving it. Jesus works according to fixed laws and to accept his plans we need not be surprised if this overflow ilfe is denied us. Jesus told the disciples to make the people to sit down in companies of fifties and hundreds, and we do not think we are straining any point when we say, "Had the people refused to obey the Master in so small a thing as this they would have been denied the "overflow," even if they had been filled. Obedience is necessary. Paul says: "God is able to make all grace abound unto you; that ye, having always all sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work." But it is obedience that brings this sufficiency into the life of the Christian and gives him of the fullness of grace in such a measure of overflow that it may be passed on to others and still there be no lack on the part of the one who passes on his blessings.

Always and in every case there is an overflow when we simply believe and receive. It is because of this overflow in him that the apostle was able to say: "In all things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." It is the "MORE than conquerors" that indicates the overflow life of the one who takes God at his word and who gently submits to his leading or to his law. It remains to be seen whether we appreciate this overflow in life and whether we are able at all times to praise God for his abundant mercies.

Philanthropic Religion

It is difficult for man to live without religion and thus practically the whole world is filled with religion of one sort or other. Many of these religions have some good in them but the kind and degree of the good is limited by their knowledge or lack of knowledge of the one true God. Many of them are lacking a true conception of salvation, in fact many of them are not able to build their systems around a true center because their centers are not made up of Jesus Christ and his love.

Some religions are built around a professed principle of philanthropy, but their claims are false because there can be no real love toward one's fellow men where no room has been made for the love of God. Men talk about the great brotherhood of man but there is no great brotherhood outside of the Fatherhood of God. Because of this love of God which must find some earthly means of expressions works of philanthropy, relieving the want and suffering of the many who have found the struggles of the world a little too keen for their enjoyment or their happiness. All true Christianity is philanthropic for as John says: "How can we love God whom we have not seen, if we do not love our brother whom we have seen." It is to be noted further that except in Christian countries no really philanthropic works are carried on in the name of religion. Only the principles of Christianity will cause the brother of high degree to consider the brother of low degree.

Tithers vs. Other Givers

A church in Charlote, N. C., has made a study of the returns from its duplex envelopes, with the following striking results:

The non tithers number 160.

Seventy families of the 160 non-tithers own their homes.

For congregational expenses 210 members paid, $1,394.01, or $6.50 per capita.

Where the members paid $1.00 each on an average.

Whereas 210 members gave $371.51 to missions—or $1.77 per capita.

For the building fund 210 members contributed $991.72, or $4.72 per capita.

For all purposes 210 members contributed $2,754.24, or $13.13 per member.

The tithers number 90.

Only nineteen families of the 90 tithers own their homes. Therefore, 71 tithers do not own their homes.

For congregational expenses the 90 tithers paid $2,639.36, or $29.33 per capita.

The tithers paid on an average $4.50 each.

The 80 tithers gave $386.52 to missions, or $4.29 per capita.

For the building fund 90 tithers gave $956.30, or $10.63 per capita.

For all purposes the 90 tithers gave $3,982.18, or $44.25 per capita.

This shows that while the tithers were not more comfortable in circumstances than the non-tithers they gave on an average 3.37 times as much for all church purposes 4.5 as much for congregational expenses, 2.25 as much for the building fund and 2.5 as much for missions.

The Significance of Gordon College

A writer in Asia recalls a characteristic illustration of Britain's policy in dealing with Mohammedan peoples in the following:

"After Lord Kitchener had shattered the Mahid's army at Omdurman, it was a clear head, no less than generosity, that prompted him, after the close of his military campaign, to begin a campaign for English subscriptions in behalf of a Mohammedan institution, the Gordon Memorial College at Khartoum. He was simply building up a new and better organized Mohammedan community to replace one that had been ruined by fanaciticism. If he had made the college a Christian institution he might have lost the fruits of Omdurman. The Sudanese at first were sorely puzzled by what seemed to them a kindness so utterlty illogical that it was accepted as the whim of either a fool or a mocker."

Many, however, will contend that a Christian institution bearing General Gordon's name would, in the long run, have done far more both for the Sudanese and for Great Britain's hold upon them.

French Reforms in Morocco

The British consul at Fez, has been lecturing in London on the great work accomplished by France in Morocco. Slaves who are ill-treated can change their masters or apply for freedom. Women slaves who bear children by their masters become free and their children are free. Local administration by the Bashas or Kadis is always subject to revision by the French authorities before whom the records come. Public slave markets have been abolished, though private places for selling slaves exist.

The needs of liberated women slaves are looked after by the service of the Habous (who appear to be a religious foundation under the Moslem priests), who see that they are protected from the dangers to which they would be exposed. The older women are employed in cleaning mosques; the young women and girls are placed in respectable families, and the Habous provide funds for those families who can not afford to pay for their services. The authorities do not fail to advise the Habous of the liberations which are granted, and all the former women slaves are benefiting from the measures which are taken.—Anti-Slavery Reporter and Aborigines' Friend.

Abyssinia and Christianity

Inasmuch as few states of the world have so old a Christian record as the kingdom of Abyssinia, there was much consternation when the young Emperor, Lij Yasu, became a Moslem. According to a writer in Life and Work, this apostasy is believed to have been the result of German influence. Notwithstanding the discontent aroused by the act, and by his libertinism of life, the Emperor managed to maintain himself in power by the aid of Mohammedan tribes on the Eastern border. Opposition grew, and on September 27 last, during the celebration of the national feast day, the head of the national church, the Abuna Matheos, solemnly released the Abyssina nation from its oath of allegiance and declared Lij Yasu to be deposed from the throne. Thereafter, amid scenes of popular enthusiasm, the Abuna proclaimed Zaouditou, younger daughter of the late Emperor Menelek II., as Empress, and installed Ras Rafari as Regent and heir to the throne.—The Christian.

A Revival in the African Bush

A Methodist missionary, Miss Maude Williams, writes from Krooland, West Africa:

"The drought that withers and kills the crop that is to be your daily bread and butter—what a grievous thing it is! How much more sad the spiritual drought that withers a human soul! And off here in the Africa bush, we were in the midst of both kinds of drought, equally disastrous to the poor Kroos. Loudly were our brown-skinned neighbors lamenting the loss of their rice, as the rains were delayed and the sun commenced to blaze down upon their farms. Deeply burdened were the two white teachers by the drought that seemed to have entirely withered up the lean souls of these same lamenting neighbors. In particular, we felt burdened for the salvation of the boys. Quite a number were Christians, earnest followers of the Lord, busy with the King's business. But very many were still outside the fold. Above all other needs we felt the need of a revival in the mission, and we got down to definite prayer for it."

After describing how the answer came in abundant measure, and about forty young people were converted, she continues:

"To nearby towns the fires spread. Men and women would start up from their beds at midnight and hurry along the four miles of beach to the mission for prayer. No building could accommodate the throngs. We chose a cool, shady, grassy spot in the bush close by, where under a magnificent mahogany tree, we held our revival services. Ours? No, God's."

The Church Army in Africa

The church army is doing effective work for the British soldiers wherever they are located. In British East Africa the war had been in progress only a short while when a hut was established at Narobi, from whence after a short time, the work was extended to German East Africa. The natives do a vast amount of building with what they call bandas. This is a species of matting material, which, in the skilful hands of the natives, is excellent for temporary huts. The Church Army has utilized this bandas and the labor with excellent results. Thousands of troops have found peace and shelter in these characteristic buildings.

Something similar in the way of creative ability is to be found in Egypt. By using the mud of the Nile and common rushes it is possible to erect for less than $500 a hut capable of seating 800 men.

The Church Army started, in the early days of the war, with a tent in Alexandria, and at that time there was no other place where the men might go. The Church Army was the pioneer of Christian and social work for the troops in this great center.—The Life of Faith.

A New Station in Africa

It has long been the hope and the expectation of the American Board to open a station, or rather a chain of stations and outstations, to extend from its plant at Beira, on the coast, in Portuguese East Africa, up to Chikore, on the western boundary of Rhodesia. Frequent tours have been made into various parts of the territory, but these have not been followed by permanent occupation, and the government has not permitted native evangelists unaccompanied by white missionaries to settle there, because the mission itself is located in Rhodesia. However, when Dr. William T. Lawrence, of Mt. Salinda,, and Rev. J. P. Dysart made a visit to Gogoya's kraal, in Portuguese East Africa, the chief, Gogoya, was very cordial and hospitable to his missionary visitors. It is near his kraal that the Portuguese have now granted to the American Board a concession of 1,000 acres, which must be proved up or obtained on the same terms that any other settler could obtain it.

The Native Church in South Africa

The tendency on the part of the native church to throw off foreign control is one that is more or less evident in most mission fields. That it has gained very little headway in South Africa may be inferred from an article which appeared in Imvo, in the course of which a native Christian, discussing the question whether the natives were fit to manage their own religious and political affairs without European supervision says:

"'A time is reached in the history of any race when they become better able to manage their own affairs, but in regard to our people in their present state of enlightenment, that time is not yet. Save in some unknown parts where our people may have progressed in civilization and Christianity, the white man must govern the native race in political and church matters, because if he does not, and as things are now, not only will the natives suffer themselves and disturb their own peace and impair their own prosperity; but they will be a danger to civilized neighbors, every one wishing to be a law unto himself. as is shown in the various religious sects which have wrought so much havoc in various South African religious denominations.'"—The Christian Express.

When Baby Squirrel Ran Away

Little Brown Squirrel was cross. I'm sorry to say it, but he was like a great many little boys and girls, who are tired of their playthings and want something new.

"It's so stupid living up in this tree, Mother," he complained. "I want to run down to the ground and see the world."

"You can see the world a great deal better up here," replied Mrs. Squirrel. "You catch the first glimpse of the sun in the morning and the last at night. The birds are nearer to you than they would be on the ground and the trees are much more beautiful, seen from up here."

"But I'd like to see something new and there is so little to do at home," said Baby Squirrel, fretfully.

"The breeze is always playing new music among the leaves; the clouds make new pictures every day on the sky and the sun paints in different colors all the time," said Mrs. Squirrel, reprovingly. "You have only to look to enjoy it all. If you are tired lie down on one of the smaller branches and let the wind rock you, or you may watch me make the chestnut sauce for the hickory nut pudding."

Little Squirrel still looked unhappy and Mother Squirrel added, "I'm sorry to see you so discontented. You have a comfortable home and until you are bigger, it is much safer for you to stay with me."

"But," pleaded Little Squirrel, "couldn't I go down just once and see that tall animal under the tree?"

"That tall animal is a boy and it is sometimes very dangerous to get within reach of him. He has put a Squirrel cage under the oak tree, and he might catch you."

Little Squirrel said no more but jumped to another branch, where I'm sorry to say, he sat and scolded to himself.

"Here I am," he grumbled, "almost grown and not allowed to go around by myself. I believe"—he peeped around the branch and saw that his mother was busy with the pudding—"I believe I'll risk going down. Surely I'm big enough to take care of myself. Why just see how high and broad my tail is."

Quietly and cautiously Little Squirrel ran down the tree to the ground.

"This is fine," he said to himself. "How soft the grass is and how sweet it smells. I wonder who cracked these nuts? I'll eat some and then have a look around."

So Little Squirrel ate nuts and bounded over the grass and had the best time in the world.

Presently he thought. "That boy has gone. I expect he was afraid of me. I think I'll run across to that cage and see what it looks like."

"Why," he exclaimed as he reached it, "the door is open and that must be one of those wheels the grown folks were talking about. What fun to have a whirl on it and then tell mother how mistaken she was."

With a spring, Little Squirrel jumped into the cage and with a snap the door locked fast and tight behind him.

"What was that noise," he whispered, looking fearfully around. "Oh, nothing, I guess, and now for the wheel. This is better than anything at home," he exclaimed gleefully, as he whirled round and round. "What fun it is. And now I'll run back and tell mother. She hasn't had time to miss me yet."

So Little Squirrel ran to the door and pushed and pushed, but the door wouldn't open.

"Why this is the door," he cried. "Why can't I get it open?" Round and round he ran. Again and again he tried to push through the cruel, steel bars.

"Ah, mother," he sobbed, "I can't get out. Come and help me. I'm shut in from all the big, beautiful out dors. Oh, mother, why—why didn't I mind you?"

Now, Mother Squirrel had been busy and thought that Little Squirrel was taking a nap. But, hearing him cry, she hurried to see what was the matter.

Very sadly she looked down at poor Baby Squirrel and then with tears in her eyes, she ran as fast as she could to grandfather's house.

All the squirrels went to grandfather, when they were in trouble, for he was kind as well as wise.

But now he shook his head.

"Those cages are very strong," he said. "I'll try to think of a way to get him out, but we can do nothing till night."

So when it was quite dark, Grandfather Squirrel with Father and Mother Squirrel and all the cousin Squirrels crept softly over to the cage.

Grandfather Squirrel looked around very carefully and then said, "I want the Littlest Squirrel to jump on my back, put his paw between the bars and turn that little bright thing on the door. Do you see it, Littlest Squirrel?"

"Yes," said the Littlest Squirrel. "I see. But will it open the door?"

"I think so," replied Grandfather Squirrel. "At least we'll try."

So the Littlest Squirrel jumped on Grandfather Squirrel's back, put his little paw between the bars, turned the little bright thing—and instantly the door flew back.

Out bounded Baby Squirrel and ran straight to his mother, crying, "Oh, mother, you were right. I'll never—never disobey you again. Oh, I'm so happy to be free."—Selected.

Two April Fools

The first of April was father's birthday, and Kenneth, who was father's namesake, wanted to give him a present "all by myself," which meant that he wanted to earn the money which would buy the gift. Now Kenneth, or Kennie as everybody called him, was only five years old, and boys only five years old can not earn money very fast. You would not expect them to, and yet Kennie earned ten cents in a week.

The next thing to decide was what to buy for a present for father. Here his big sister made a suggestion, which she whispered into Kennie's ear.

"I saw some beautiful—perfectly beautiful—pincushions at the ten cent store," she whispered. "They looked exactly like apples, all red and yellow, but they are made of silk and stuffed so that pins go in very easily. Now father needs a new pincushion for his desk. I heard him say so. Why not buy him an apple pin cushion? Then you can do two things—give him a present and at the same time you can April Fool him, for he will think it is a real apple, anybody would think it was."

So that was what Kennie bought, and mother and everybody said it certainly would fool father. Why even Katie, when called from the kitchen to look at it, said she would have been "sartain sure" to try to peel it if she had found it around the kitchen anywhere.

On the night of March 31, Kennie slipped into the study before bedtime and laid the apple pincushion on father's desk. Then he said: "You mustn't go in your study till morning, father, for there's a secret there, so promise me not to go." "All right," said father, "I'll promise not to go until morning but I really do not believe I can wait. Won't you tell me now what the secret is?" And Kennie almost told it, but clapped his hand over his mouth in time.

When morning dawned, Kennie was up early and down stairs long before father, and when he heard the latter's step on the stairs, he ran to meet him and caught him by the hand.

"Come into your study before breakfast, father," he cried, "and see the secret."

Then he led him to the very front of his desk and dropping his hand, stepped off to one side. "There," he exclaimed.

Then father looked about in a puzzled way. "Let me see," he said. "Evidently I'll have to search for that secret, so I'll just eat this apple while I look," and father reached out his hand to take it just as Kennie shouted, jumping up and down while he did so:

"It's an April Fool, father. It isn't a real apple. It's a pincushion apple, but it's a birthday present for you. Let me show you father, how easily pins stick into it."

Then from the front of his blouse, where sister had purposely placed them, he took two pins, and sticking them into the rosy-cheeked apple, he held it out triumphantly.

"There," he shouted, but his voice changed to a wail. "There's a hole in it, right there, and he pointed to a jagged little rent in the apple's cheek.

"Hello!" said father, taking it in his hand. "You surely did do the April Fooling business up brown, Kennie boy. I don't wonder that an apple like that would fool me, but it has fooled a little mouse, too. Now think of that! The mouse saw my cushion last night, after you left it here, and thinking it would have a feast on apple, tried to take a bite. Then wasn't it April Fooled! You've got a good joke on me and a good joke on the mouse. Let's go and tell mother."—Selected.

Our Young People at Work

G. C. Carpenter
Secretary
Peru, Indiana

Brother S. Walter Link is one of our faithful Endeavorers. He was president of our society during my pastorate in Johnstown. To pursue his trade as a draftsman he moved to Ambridge, Pennsylvania, where he has worked with the Methodist church, teaching the training class and serving as county superintendent of teacher training. But he has remained a loyal Brethren, being a regular subscriber to the Evangelist and contributing liberally to the missionary funds. Believing that he should help to minister to the young men required for military service, though he himself was beyond the draft age, he volunteered his services for Army Y. M. C. A. work. It was not easy for him to resign a lucrative position and to leave a devoted wife and daughter. But they made his contemplated course of action a matter of prayer, and came to believe that it was the will of God for his life, hence their willingness to make the necessary consecration.

"Over There"

Somewhere in France, Feb. 23, 1918.

My Dear Cristie, Eileen and Mother:

I received your letter today, that is Cristie's and Eileen's. Now mother you stick in a line or too for I am just as anxious to hear from you as can be.

Well, here is the eve of my birthday tomorrow. I start a new year and hope it will be one that will see me doing my duty just as much as I see it before me now.

I was booked to go several miles from here to another Y tomorrow eve to speak to the men, but owing to me being away from our Y on business this morning I did not get to make the arrangements with our leader and that left me out, but will likely have to go sometime again.

We had movies Monday night, a glee club Wednesday night and movies Friday night, then a colored minstrel of our own make up this evening and when it was finished the L give each man two oranges. They were small but good and the men did appreciate them.

We have a banjo, two mandolins and one guitar here—some musicians. A fine young man plays the piano.

Say you should tell Will Wike to come over here as a moving picture man. I do believe they need him and he could get a hundred a month for it. Of course, if you think he should not come, then don't say anything but I was thinking how they need men who know how to do real work like that and believe me they are scarce.

Oh, yes, the letter I received today was the one you wrote the 13 and the one you wrote the 20th I received the 10th, so the first was last by 13 days.

You don't know how much I think of that pillow and the good wool blankets. I would not part with them, but the washcloth was swiped from me and so was Sike's. So mother, please crochet me another one as I need it very badly.

Thursday night our stove pipe stopped up and I climbed the roof three times before I got the thing to working well—that was all for that night. About 4 in the morning a dog got to howling in our men's reading room, just next to where we sleep and I had to crawl out and coax him to the door when I gave him a good American hint with my hob-nails to kindly depart and he bid me good night or I think he did, for he only gave one yell. This evening I put him out before I closed everything up—safety first.

The worst cold weather surely must be over by this time. Our fine spring weather took a back-set and we had some pretty frosty weather and now it is warmer but raining. I can take it good natured as I am compelled to wade through it for miles and don't worry about the polish on my shoes for there is none there.

Well, here is the 24th and I am feeling fine. Hope you have chicken and ice cream in honor of me today. I had a good full meal, well cooked —of course there were no birthday trimmings, but when a fellow has an appetite like I have now, the trimmings are not much of a necessity.

By the time this reaches you the worst cold weather should be past there and by the first of April you should take the coverings off the rose bushes. I will not have any garden to work this year, will miss it quite a bit. Maybe not, for I keep as busy as this month I could not have any flowers in a garden at all.

How is the Sunday school going. I suppose the T. T. class have had their graduation exercises by this time.

Say, this man Sikes is getting fussy as an old cluck. He has been here three weeks and got no letters and every five minutes I hear this place is 100 years behind the time, or if they don't soon get my mail out here I am going to resign, they have my mail mixed up somewhere. He got a letter from headquarters today to find his address and now he is wanting to send a telegram telling them to forward his mail at once. Well I have tried to cheer him up. Hope he gets some mail before another three weeks or maybe my cheer will have all been used up—then what would happen is a question.

I have been keeping my eye open for that picture—hope they were fine. Say, those papers were fine. Send me some Evangelists when you save up a few of them. About the time this reaches you I will have been away from home almost three months. There is no telling anything may change our plans but I am sure God will answer our prayers if we ask as we should for he has answered some of mine already, and I know if we keep in the right attitude everything will be all right.

Tell Shenefelt to wrap up some of his Sunday newspapers with the funnies in them and send them over as they are appreciated very much by our boys.

You may tell all inquiring friends that I am doing fine, working hard, but enjoying it just the same. It is not like living at home, but if you can get along and not fret or fume. Here is a little verse I read:

It's always dreary in countryside or town,
When you wake and find the corners of your mouth turned down.
There's joy a plenty in this world to fill life's silver cup
If you'll only keep the corners of your mouth turned up.

Now, I am trying to live up to that—have not tried to find the things to turn my mouth down.

Yours as ever,
S. WALTER LINK.

Another Report in Expert Endeavor

Following Christian Endeavor Week we urged the organization of classes in Expert Endeavor and the first report comes from

Altoona, Pennsylvania

This class was conducted by Mrs. Nora Grosse who completed the course while attending the last General Conference, and it is gratifying to observe the commendable way in which she has carried the instruction to certain members of the Altoona society. She says the studies have created new interest in the young people and contributed to their efficiency. Those graduating are: Hubert C. Hammoul, Arthur Cashman, Carl Grosse, Edith Harman, Irene S. Cashman, Ida May Smith and William M. Cashman. The last named young man desires to enter the work of the ministry, but is being required for military service. Let our Endeavorers pray that his life purpose may be realized. Heartiest congratulations to Mrs. Grosse and these new C. E.'s.

Nappanee, Indiana

contributes another expert in the person of Mrs. Cora Stuckman, who mastered the course through private study. She, too is to be congratulated upon this additional attainment. Her case suggests the possibility of completing the course where it may not be convenient to have a class, and we trust that aspiring Endeavorers will follow her example. J. A. GARBER.

News From the Field

To Ohio Pastors

Through Brother Baer I have been appointed as director of Goal No. 7 for the Ohio District. I have sent to all pastors a letter explaining this goal and have asked them to let me know what they have done towards reaching this goal. So far just about one-third of the pastors have answered my letter. Now brethren, are you interested in this goal? I am going to do all I can to bring Ohio "over the top" on this goal but you must help me. Please do not treat my letters with contempt but let me know so I can at least make a partial report at our conference at Fremont. Let us unite in making this district one of the best in the brotherhood. G. L. MAUS.

Portis, Kansas

Just a little space in the columns of the Evangelist for some of the good things that have been taking place at Portis. It may seem to many of our readers that we only send reports after some special service or feast. Were this not true we would be sending them every week. We are having special services and enjoying God's wonderful blessings all along the way. Mal. 3:10.

Our winter campaign for souls came to a close Sunday, March 24. For almost three weeks we fought a mighty battle against sin and wrong with brother N. W. Jennings as our able leader. The church people joined hands and marched boldly at his command. In our evangelist we found a strong and fearless captain. A man after God's own heart and one who was neither ashamed nor afraid to proclaim a whole gospel. Brother Jennings was ably assisted by his good wife who touched and made tender many hearts by singing so beautifully the good old gospel songs. May the good Lord continue to put his stamp of approval upon them and use them for many years to come.

I know you are wondering what the visible results were. Though not what we had hoped for, yet it was a great victory when you know the field. Seventeen souls made the precious choice and named Jesus as their Lord and King. Twelve of these have been received into the church and we feel that the others will all come to us very soon. Outside of these confessions there were results that eternity alone can estimate. The entire church and community were strengthened and brought to realize their opportunities and obligations as never before. Brother Jennings laid much stress on the reading and study of God's word. How much it is needed in these days when men are so taken up with light reading and carnal things. Too many times our Bibles are on the shelf or table with magazines, fiction novels, newspapers and what not covering them over, when the word of the blessed Lord, which is this troubled world's only hope, ought to be read and studied first. See to it friend, that it is not at the bottom of the list.

Now we must take the wheel again and continue to labor with greater earnestness that the sheep may be fed. We expect to hold a two weeks' meeting at Hill City, Kansas, in the month of April and endeavor to do all in our power to bring Kanemorado to the front in the Four-Year Program. For all these good things and strength and a desire to serve him better, we give God all the honor and glory. May he continue to quicken and help us to be ready for his appearing. May his love abide in every heart.
A. E. WHITTED.

From Rio Cuarto, Argentina

For the first time in eight months I am permitted to write again from the mission field. We are profoundly grateful for our safe arrival and for the loyal affection we find in the hearts of the people here.

We have been truly fortunate in every part of our journey to the homeland and back. We got a boat without much delay in New York and again in Rio de Janeiro and in both cases there were very few passengers so that we had plenty of room and liberty.

We had no trouble in the customs house in Buenos Aires and had no duty to pay on anything. We also arrived just in time to get a train for Rio Cuarto before the beginning of another general railway strike which lasted a week.

In Rio Cuarto we were met by Brother Bock and a number of the members of the mission and as soon as our coming was known friends from all sides came in to give us welcome. Our reception this time has been very different from that of nine years ago.

Satan and his agents have been making a desperate effort in our absence to divide and destroy the work, but thank the Lord they have failed. The people have rallied loyally and are taking hold with new energy. We have reorganized the Sunday school and Endeavor society and are planning extension work of which we will write later.

We left New York in the midst of winter and arrived here toward the end of summer. The country looks beautiful as this year there has been plenty of rain recently and the wheat harvest is unusually large. However it appears that interested agents by getting a corner on sacks and by inciting strikes are largely impeding the movement of the crop.

There has been much political turmoil during our absence and a general strike among the students of the college here. The colleges of the country are also being reorganized and we do not know yet what arrangements may result here. A strong effort is being made by interested parties to put me out on the charge of having abandoned my post, although I had six months leave of absence, but I am not concerned as I have long left it in the Lord's hands, asking that if it is best to give my time to direct gospel work to close up the way for the school work.

We are losing several more members who are moving to another town on account of work, The majority of our members are now isolated, but I am glad to say that nearly all of them have remained true to Christ and also to the Brethren doctrine. We hope soon to have a doctrinal tract which will greatly help us in this phase of our work.

It has not been possible as yet to visit Cabrera but Brother Atkinson writes that the work has grown there since June, especially the Sunday school. I hope to visit the church there soon as we have some fine families there whom I am eager to visit.

Brother Bock will now superintend the Sunday school and lead the prayer meeting and teach the C. E. lessons. He has made great progress with the language and seems to me to speak Spanish far better than I did at the end of one year. Brother Iborra, a Methodist local preacher who formerly supplied for me when I went to Cabrera, is back again and with Brother Barrio also here we have reinforcements for aggressive work and we are looking forward to a more rapid growth.

There are several new openings of which I have learned since my return and there will be work for all of us. We trust that the Easter offering will be far more than the pitiful twenty cents a member which is the usual average. It ought to be twenty dollars rather for a great many and much more than that for some. But we believe that our tour of the churches will result in more prayer for the work, and more prayer will certainly mean more workers and means. Do not forget us for there are many things that we can only overcome by prayer C. F. YODER.

Gribble Party Changes Route

I have just received three letters from the Gribble party posted at Capetown, Africa which contain the information that for various reasons which I believe are well founded, the route of the party into the interior has been changed. According to former plans they expected to land on the East Coast at Mombasa and from that point begin their journey into the interior. The last dated letter which was posted at Capetown on February 28 informs me that the party will take ship up the West Coast instead of the East Coast. They will land at Matadi on the mouth of the Congo river and make a large part of the journey from that place by river. This change of plans will necessitate a change of address. All mail for the members of this party from now on should be addressed to them as follows:

Care of American Baptist Mission,
Matadi, Belgian Congo, Africa.

Now, since a number of folks interested in the African party have heard that a part of their baggage missed the boat upon which they sailed, it may be of interest for them to know how matters regarding this have been finally arranged. It would be too long a story to give all the details of the baggage tangle, and the trouble we have had trying to find out what missed the boat, and what was in New York, and where it was, and when and how it could be forwarded. Railroad shipping conditions produced by the war caused the baggage to miss the boat in the first place, and shipping by water is even worse. When Mr. Gribble boarded the ship at New Orleans he immediately began to check up on what baggage had been loaded at New York. He wrote me a letter which was posted at St. Lucia saying that besides his bicycle there were twelve pieces missing, and instructing me to forward if possible certain of these pieces as baggage with African inland missionaries who were expecting to sail on the next boat to the East Coast. The Gribble party would await them at Mombasa. The heavy pieces he asked me to send by freight to Matadi on the West Coast. After trying in vain by correspondence to locate all the missing pieces in New York, arrange with out-going missionaries to take some of these things, secure the necessary government export licenses for everything as now required by new rulings, etc., I went to New York for the purpose of getting matters arranged. After a very busy day there I gave up trying to send anything as baggage to follow the party to the East Coast, and arranged to have all go by freight to Matadi on the West Coast. It was with some misgivings that I came to this decision after looking over the situation, but this letter just received from Gribble saying they are going in by Matadi on the West Coast and to send nothing to the East Coast if not already sent, seems to show that God is guiding the affairs of the party in spite of the trying situation through which we have just passed. While in New York I found all but four of the missing pieces of baggage. Since returning home the Express company has produced two of these and in Gribble's letter I am informed that the remaining two have been located in the hold of the ship. These two cases contained things most sorely needed on their trip to the interior. So we may praise god that everything has been found, and if the things left in New York are not already on the way to Matadi I am expecting they will b e as soon as there is a vessel. The ocean lines will guarantee nothing these days as to time of sailings.

The party arrived in Capetown February 6 and found a vessel sailing up the West Coast scheduled to leave on the 8. By this time the party should be well on the way to Matadi. They are all well and ask the continued prayers of all Christians.

ALVA J. McCLAIN.

Roanoke, Virginia

Since the last report was made from this church, we have received two into the church by baptism and five by letter. The work is moving to normal again after the most severe winter ever experienced in this part of the country. Our Sunday school has made all the points and is now a "Front Line" school. Our Christian Endeavor society has also made the points and is now "Standard." The S. S. C. E. is also doing splendid work and is pressing to yet greater things. We have a Junior Christian Endeavor society which also bids fair in the training of the youth for the service of our King. Also a Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. Of course this church adopted the Four-Year Program and will endeavor to attain all the goals. Before Christmas the membership gave the parsonage a terrible "pounding," but as the writer was out in the country holding some meetings, the good wife was overwhelmed by such an offensive. A few days later the writer came in home and enjoyed a great victory in a "counter attack."

At Christmas time we were remembered with several nice tokens of appreciation and a pair of cuff buttons and a purse from the Bible training class. We appreciate all these things and receive them as an expression of esteem and good will.

We are expecting to see a call in the Evangelist from our officers for the district conference which convenes in June.

Our workers here are slowly moving forward to "advanced positions" where better work can be done. Attendance, interest and fellowship is good and gradually increasing. We need more workers for the great task and are endeavoring to constantly extend the call of the kingdom and appeal to the heroic for this glorious spiritual conflict.

The writer enjoyed the messages of our visiting brethren and hereby expresses his thanks. Remember us in your prayers.

L. G. WOOD.

Dutchtown, Indiana

We are on the job, having increased our Sunday school attendance from 25 to 54, and regular service Sunday evening from 25 and 30 to 90 and 100. Dutchtown has the spirit. Fifty-two members gave $500 to Ashland College. I think we made a point in the Four-Year Program. The members and friends gave a real surprise on us the 13 of February. Brother Beachler was with us for five nights. We hated to see him come and hated to see him leave. Many of us did say we won't, but we did and I am sure that if all the churches do as well as Dutchtown Brother Beachler will have no trouble in raising $100,000 for Ashland College. God loves a cheerful giver, but he hasn't much use for a tight wad. A man that won't help support the school of the church won't give very much to the local work. We are going to try hard to put the Evangelist in every home of the field where there is a member of the church. I intend to do my best for the interests of the Brethren church and to help her place of learning and her missions. I love to see the church widen out to all the world. There is a great work to be done before Jesus comes. We are feeding the flock the plain gospel and that is what they want. I never saw people so anxious to help support the work. A basement is going to be put under the church house and the house is to be remodeled. A building committee is to be called at our business meeting the first week in April. So I think they mean business. Pray for us at Dutchtown.

HOMER ANDERSON.

Compton Avenue, Los Angeles

Since my last communication I have had the pleasure of assisting Brother Broad of La Verne in a special meeting. It was a real pleasure to again be permitted to work with him. He has a congregation of good, loyal people who very nobly stood by us in the campaign. Although the number of accessions was not what could have been wished, yet all felt that lasting good had been accomplished. La Verne is rather a peculiar place. Night after night with a full house it was found that not more than a half dozen unsaved people were in the audience. Since another is to report the meeting I will leave the particulars to him.

I am reminded that I forgot to mention in my last communication that Brother Broad assisted me in our last effort at Compton Avenue. He served in a most efficient way as song leader and much of the success at that time was due to his help. He also rendered much valuable assistance in personal work and visiting. Having at one time served these people as pastor he has many very warm friends both in the church and among the outsiders.

It should also have been said when I wrote, that during my trip to Ohio the pulpit work was ably taken care of by Elders Schisler and Ross and brother G. C. Caldwell. During Mrs. Beal's illness Elder A. P. Reed of the First church very kindly filled the pulpit one Sunday evening. While in the meeting at La Verne the men of the church had charge of one Sunday evening service and Brother Remple of the Long Beach church who is doing work in the Bible Institute preached one evening. I want to express in this public way my appreciation to all those who have thus given assistance.

An innovation has been tried recently that gave very fine results. On the last Sunday of February the morning service was planned for the children. They were given a large place on the program. In fact, all the service except making of the announcements and a twenty minute sermonette by the pastor, was taken care of by the Juniors. They did their part so well that having a service of this kind once a month is likely to become a permanent arrangement.

Our Sunday school has recently captured the banner at the district convention. This is the third banner to be gained by our school in as many years. Nothing further need be said as to the enthusiasm and work of our school.

Since the first of the year our church has had charge of one service each month in the Midnight Mission in the heart of the city. This has been a means of great inspiration to those who have gone. The meeting on Friday evening, March 15, was the first I have had the pleasure of attending. It was an experience long to be remembered.

On last Sunday evening, March 17, we had the pleasure of listening to a lecture on our African work by Sister Srack of Long Beach. Mrs. Srack brought us a burning message. The lecture was illustrated by lantern slides made from photographs taken on the field, many of them taken by our own missionaries. Much benefit will come to our people as Sister Srack visits the churches of our brotherhood.

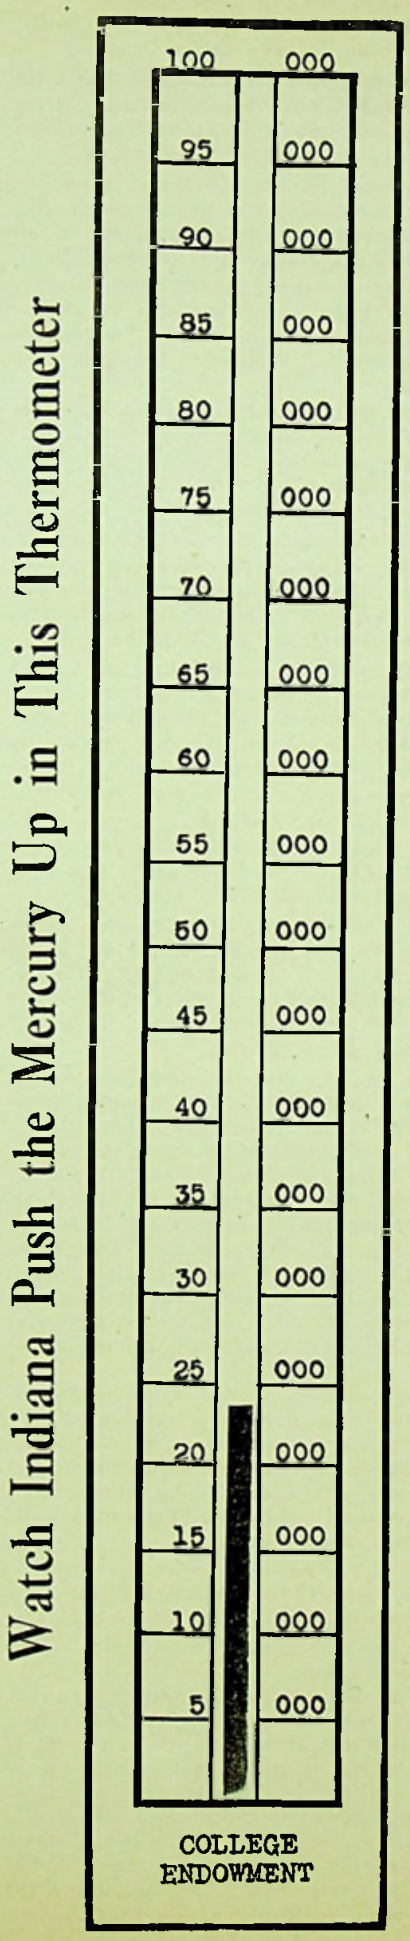
Soldiers Remembered

The soldiers need reading matter such as magazines, papers (not daily news), books, etc., to read while not on duty. If Christian literature is not sent, they will read the un-Christian which is distributed by the false "isms".

The First Brethren Christian Endeavor society of Roanoke, Virginia, sent one hundred and fifteen Christian papers, books and magazines to soldiers last week.



Endeavorers! Do your bit by sending literature to the soldiers.

Societies! Appoint a soldiers' literature committee in your society, ask the church members to give their papers and magazines to the committee after they finish reading them. Send them to some Y. M. C. A., or C. E. official at a soldier camp.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The Eaton church was the last congregation visited before coming back to Ashland for Easter and a little rest. This church is located in the country and although a number of its members live in the town of Eaton. Our canvass in this congregation was quite satisfactory all things considered. This is not a large congregation but it is made up of as loyal Brethren as are to be foud in any of our churches. I preached to splendid audiences while I was there and my work for endowment resulted in $600. With the exception of Clay City, Oakville and Eaton are the farthest south of our Indiana churches; but these two churches with a credit of $2,100 between them, are right up with their sister congregations in the state. Brother J. L. Kimmel is serving the Eaton church in connection with the mission at Muncie. I found that the people in both of these churches have implicit confidence in the leadership of their pastor. And I have no doubt good work will be done in Eaton by Brother Kimmel and his people. My home while here was with brother James Collins and I am highly grateful for the many kindnesses shown me while under his roof. I am glad to say wherever I go the folks are very kind and cordial to me: and only those who have done similar work know what it means to be thus treated when one is trying to execute a very hard task. Brother Kifer Cruea was the kind hearted man in this congregation who took me out among his people in his Ford. I'll never say anything but good things about Henry Ford and his cars. We could not possibly raise $100,000 endowment if it were no for Fords. I try other cars now and then, and while it is true they ride easier, still, somehow I can't swing the endowment right unless I use a Ford.

The next night after I finished in Eaton I preache in the Muncie mission. Brother Kimmel reports fine progress in the work at Muncie. I had a good audience and the outlook seems encouraging. I looked at the Cradle Roll and saw that they have forty babies enrolled; and that certainly is not discouraging. With the Oakville and Eaton churches and the Indiana Mission Board standing behind to push, and with Brother Kimmel and his good wife and family going ahead to pull, I have little fear about the final outcome at Muncie. Kimmel is in the habit of making good in the things he untertakes, and I am sure he will make good here. To be sure it will require time and patience as it always does to get a new work under way. I am glad I had an opportunity to look the Muncie work over.

Now then, I come to announce that the mercury has reached up to $23,000. And there are still enough churches to be canvassed in Indiana to go substantially beyond $25,000. I want to repeat once more that this is a great record for Indiana. And the finest part of it all is that the Indiana Brethren have done this with uniformly good cheer, and I can go right back over the field, I believe, and look everybody squarely in the face. And what is more, I have the assurance that when people respond to this denominational movement they are just a little stronger Brethren and they find themselves bound just a little more closely to their own respective congregations.

The splendid response that is attending the campaign goes very largely to lighten the work. And yet, if there are any who think there is very much rest connected with what we are trying to do I might disabuse your minds by reminding you that I was out this last trip six weeks lacking one day, and that during that time I preached twice each Sunday, and every night through the week with scarcely an exception. And during each day I was out among the people talking endowment. And besides this in the course of those six weeks I have addressed five high schools and three grade schools. Wherever I go I make an effort to get before the high schools, and in this way I have had some very pleasant times and I believe I have done some good. But I meant to say if any of the brethren feel that they need exercise I suggest that if they follow me about a month they will be ready to go back home very meek and gentle. It is exceedingly hard work, but I am praying for strength to do it. Because this task must be done. And I hear rumors to the effect that Pennsylvania is saying that Indiana can't do a thing that she can't do Well, we will know better later. It will soon be up to Pennsylvania to make good and I know she will make good.

"How to Tithe and Why"—Free

We hereby offer to send potspaid, a litle pamphlet with the above title, free, to all ministers, in sufficient quantities to supply one copy to every family represented in their churches and congregations.

The questions and answers of which it is made up, are condensed extracts from the larger pamphlet, "What We Owe and How to Pay it."

Please mention this paper. Also do not fail to give your denomination.

Prohibition Potpourri

Austin, the capital of Texas, has gone dry.

Indiana comes into the ranks of dry states April 12th.

New Jersey's local-option bill passed the Senate by 16 to 5.

Indiana's prohibition law is to be tested by the brewers.

A Dry Federation State movement has begun in New Jersey.

The state prohibition amendment was carried in New Mexico by 17,000 majority.

Captain Hobson has been helping to line up Rhode Island for ratification of the Amendment.

The Supreme Court of Kansas has decided that an automobile selling booze is "a place" of sale, under the law, and can be put out of business.

Two local-option bills were passed by the New Jersey legislature—one providing for municipal prohibition, the other for regulation; the Governor signed them both.

New England's Fuel Administrator notified hotel proprietors that liquor could not be served with meals in dining-rooms on Monday holidays if such rooms were heated.

The National Prohibition Party and the National Party held national conventions on the same days, March 5 to 7, in adjoining halls under the same roof in Chicago.

During 1915 Pendleton, Ore., had 1,440 arrests, of which 270 were Indians. During 1916, under prohibition, there were 385 arrests, of which only 69 were Indians.

Governor Milliken, of Maine, wired the Fuel Administrator at Washington urging an immediate order denying fuel to all brewers and dealers in intoxicating liquors.

In his annual report as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Cato Sells testifies to material help in his work from "the increase in prohibition sentiment throughout the country."

It is reported that army officials at Honolulu have sent a memorial to President Wilson saying there is not room enough on the Hawaiian Islands for booze and the army boys at the same time.

International Revenue Commissioner Roper has begun a campaign against "moonshine" whiskey manufactured in bone-dry states, and 600 "moonshiners" are said to have been arrested already in the South.

After ratifying the Constitutional Amendment for Prohibition, Kentucky's Legislature submitted a State Prohibition Amendment by overwhelming majorities. In the state 106 counties are already dry.

Writing to his fellow Democrats in New Jersey, Joseph P. Tumulty, private secretary of President, lately declared (we see it stated) that "the beer barrel should no longer be the platform of our party."

It is said that the New York state breweries use 2,378 tons of coal per day in the making of beer. And this, asserts "The Reform Bulletin," would warm 20,000 homes for six months, giving each home 100 pounds of coal per day.

A Nationad Dry Feredation was considered in a conference at Washington January 25 attended by representatives of several organizations in the rooms of the Federal Council of Churches, and its further consideration was fixed for February 12.

By unanimous act of their legislative committee, the 28,000 locomotive engineers of Illinois have endorsed National Prohibition and have urged the Legislature of that state to ratify it. The present Senate is dry, but the House is wet by a small majority.

Two thousand Chicago saloon-keepers following a mass meeting, announced their willingness to close their bars until November if the city and government would refund the money they had paid for licenses. And one of them said this would mean thousands of tons of coal released.

Promise for Ethiopia Fulfilled

After describing a very effective and picturesque sermon by a Congo preacher, Dan Crawford says:

"Well done, Ethiopia! Surely this is a true stretching out of your hands unto God. It is curious that all through Africa this idiom for 'stretching out the hands' exactly agrees with all the usages in Hebrew, and therefore disagrees with the stupid old error in English of thinking that this means Ethiopia coming to beg a boon from God. No, the very same Psalm that says that Ethopia shall soon stretch out her hands to God, explains this as not begging but bestowing in the words. 'Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto Thee* * * * Ethiopia shall etc.

"It is of the land of the slaves that it is written. 'Princes shall come out of * * ' Ethiopia,' and we are trying to build up a church of no-begging but ever-bestowing Africans who will freely give because they freely received. Pedhaps we did wrong, but these natives have lived with me for a quarter of a century and with their own eyes they saw us turn away costly gifts of ivory and rubber worth thousands of pounds; saw us refuse to develop great economic resources, lest by so doing our own souls and the souls of these young Lubans would suffer thereby."

Brethren's Home of Ohio

An Incorporation with over $9,000 in Assets

PURPOSE. To purchase a site and build a home for the aged and infirm of our beloved church, and an orphanage for our children.

POLICY. To increase the assets on hand fifty per cent. before beginning.

PLAN. To select a good site in a Brethren locality and build on the Cottage Plan. In this way some can build and occupy their own cottages, and upon their death the property to belong to the Home

NEED. Gifts of money, property, endowments and bequests to increase the assets in accordance with the policy of the Board.

Information cheerfully given.

THE UNITY OF BRETHREN

It is said that Bolivar, the Lincoln of South America, cried out in despair as all his attempts to unite his people proved fruitless. "I have ploughed the sand," he cried. This article may seem just as useless to my readers. The events of the past twenty years, together with the stupendous problems which Brethren people are now facing, makes division decidedly discreditable. Our peace principles, if nothing else, should hasten the desire, at least, to "be at peace among yourselves." Can not the early '80's be forgotten? From the view-point of our religious neighbors, has the name "Brethren" no significance? Can we expect to retain the respect of good people without, at least, making an effort to respect such Bible teaching as, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity?" Does not our high claims for morality demand that both "progressive" and "conservative" bodies, through their leaders, put on a program of education against maintaining division since the causes have long since been removed? Why should Brethren people be indifferent to the splendid spirit of unity prevailing among religious bodies and earnestly advocated by them. Is it any credit to ourselves to be found a half century behind the best religious thought of the times? Because of our rigid adherence to a sane interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, Brethren people ought to be leading the world on the great theme of "The Union of Christians."

John R. Mott is going up and down the land, constantly stressing the fact that the greatest need of this generation is the reconciliation of the religious bodies. He has declared that a united church could have saved Europe from this awful cataclysm of war. Certain it is that "Europe's redemption from the barbarous spirit of the 'Hymn of Hate' lies in the spread of the Gospel of good will; and that man who will spend his days in debating second-rate dogmas of a bygone age, while Christ's call comes to bind up the fearful moral wounds that war has made, will find himself anathema in that great day when he must stand before the Judge to give an account of the opportunities he has had."

Francis E. Clark came home from his journey around the world in the interests of the Christian Endeavor movement, and told the gathered thousands of young people in convention assembled, that the most pitiable sight he saw in foreign lands was that the churches that had been gathered out of heathenism were rent in twain by sectarian jealously, which had been introduced from our own Christian lands. Russell Conwell in a great Christian Endeavor Convention said, "The time has come in the history of the church when God says, "Unite, unite." God is calling us to "unite, unite." I would not for the world forsake my denomination, but for Christ's sake I would gladly give it up forever." Another great assembly declared, "The body of Christ, torn and bleeding, is the same of the church. It is our duty to put an end to divisions."

The men of the open Book are discovering more and more the mind of God on the subject of unity, and that division everywhere in the record is condemned. They read, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." They read from Paul, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." [I Cor. 1:10]. From Jesus they read, "For one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." [Matt. 23:8]. They know that it is written, "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." [Eph. 4:1-6]. In that great prayer recorded in John 17, Jesus said, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." And since these things are written in the volume of the Book, and therefore declare to be the mind of God concerning his children, these men of the open Bible are convinced that they should be taught in our churches. Yes, IT IS SINFUL NOT TO TEACH THEM. And yet, how many sermons have been preached in the last year among Brethren people urging the people to hear the Bible on this subject? Has the devil of strife so blinded our eyes that we can not apprehend the fact that the things in which we agree are finer and better than the things that keep us apart?

But I make bold to say that unity neither demands nor implies uniformity. In essentials alone, unity; in opinion liberty. Uniformity means a deadly sameness that can never be expected in real men who do their own thinking. Apostolic churches were made up of most diverse characters and elements. There were Greeks and Romans, Jews and Gentiles, Epicureans and Stoics, with deep-seated racial and religious prejudices, but they could all unite on Him as the world's Redeemer. They were free men in Christ. Were the uniting of these diverse elements in the early church a task less difficult than before us to-day? I think not. The great need might have been more apparent to them, but none the less real than to us. It was accomplished then by placing the emphasis where it belonged, on essentials. John Ruskin spoke a wise and searching word when he declared, "Whenever we allow our minds to dwell on points in which we differ from other people, we are wrong and in the devil's power. That was the essence of the Pharisee's prayer: 'Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men are.' We should, rather, be trying to find out, not in what we differ from other people, but in what we agree." Anyhow, Brethren people should preach the whole Gospel. If they do they will line up with the Master in trying to answer his great prayer, "That they all may be one."

On account of the preversity of some hearts who are sinful enough to wrest the truth of God to their own destruction, it may be necessary to add that the writer is in no way dissatisfied with his present church relations; for, the success of the battle he has been helping to wage for the last thirty years is absolutely assured. My plea is for a more exalted position for all Brethren people.

From the Editor's View-Point

LITERARY PREVARICATORS

Perhaps most of us are liars at times, for we remember the Psalmist said on one occasion: "I said in my haste all men are liars," and the Scotchman commenting on the assertion said: "Ah weel, had he been living in the present day he might have said it at his leisure."

While most of us may be unconscious prevaricators a great deal of the time there are others who are so by design, especially when they are writing for the papers and magazines. Of course we learned long ago to not accept most of the statements of a startling character in a news paper until an opportunity has been given to verify them later on, but in magazine articles at least a semblance of truth is looked for. Maybe poetic license and literary liberty will excuse the sins of poets and writers who sacrifice truth to beauty of expression or poetic accent, but sometimes their attempts to interest and entertain, if not to edify, their readers appeal in a very marked way to the sensibilities of their readers who love truth more than poetry.

A few months ago a poetess attempted to glorify the dirty looking, prosaic sugar beet, by ascribing to it beauties and qualities that never grow in the same field with it, in a poem in The Independent, but a few people who live in Minnesota, Montana and Colorado where the sugar beet grows to perfection of its kind replied and took all the poetry out of the poem.

A short time ago we read a story about a cat written for young people in which the statement was made that a cat never backs out of anything or any place and on this statement the story was based; but any boy who ever slipped a paper bag over a cat's head knows that under such conditions it will do nothing but "back out." More recently a writer who would interest the young people in strange facts mentioned the collection of many barrels of exceedingly small round paper dots of pink and blue and green and gold, etc., which are gathered up at Washington from the perforations made in postage stamps in the process of their manufacture, when any one who has ever seen a postage stamp knows the perforations are not made through the colored portions of the stamps but in perfectly white lines that separate the stamps from one another. Of course barrels of little white dots do not make as attractive an illustration as they would with the various colors of the rainbow, but why sacrifice truth for the sake of a story? If our young people are to have a high regard for truth and for truthful expression then those who give them their literature should adhere strictly to the truth in all their writings.

But it is not alone in the writings of those who contribute to our magazines this weakness is found, for we have noticed an occasional bending of the truth in illustrations and statements made by preachers in the pulpit as they have sought to engage the attention of their congregations. It is all a mistake. There is nothing that will so surely win out in the long run as the simple unadulterated truth.

DOOR KEEPERS

When the Psalmist said: "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness," he but stated in his own way the truth that the humblest position of service in the kingdom of God is more to be desired than the most exalted place the ungodly world has to offer.

Altogether too many people feel that they must have a position of honor in the work they do, otherwise they will not work at all. But the humblest position man can be called upon to fill, if filled faithfully and if the work is well done is more worthy of honor than the highest positions that are sought after for the sake of the honor connected with them more than for the opportunities they afford one for being of real service to his fellow men.

No doubt more men would have freely volunteered their services to the war department of the American government had they been assured that they would be given posts of honor and distinction both in France and at home; but in this work which has been cut out for America, door-keepers, or in other words, the call has been urgent for common workers and hard workers to help subdue the foe of civilization. And only a few months ago the call went out for an immediate recruiting of 6,000 "lumberjacks" to go to France to get out of the French forests the lumber needed by the American armies.

This might seem like such COMMON work that no honor could be connected with it, but it us as essential as any other work the American aids to the Allies can do, and the man who faithfully performs his task in the French forests as a "lumberjack" is as worthy of praise and honor as his more widely heralded brother who performs feats of daring on the aviation field.

After all honor is in the one who does a task more than in the task he does, and an honorable man can make honorable the humblest position in the world.

THE POWER TO OVERCOME

Many people are addicted to habits that they acknowledge to be harmful or at least void of any good, and frequently they express a desire to overcome or to break away from such habits, but acknowledge their inability to do so. They would not like to be called slaves to habit, but they must at least admit that they are not masters of themselves. Many men who condemn a victim of the drink habit for his lack of sufficient will power to break away from the habit that degrades, are themselves just as powerless to give up some habit of lesser evil that holds them in its chains. Many men who are addicted to the use of tobacco but who are strong in their opposition to the use of intoxicating drinks would find an attempt to break away from this habit of lesser evil as difficult for them as the drunkard finds it difficult to break away from the cup that intoxicates.

A man in the city of New York has hit upon a splendid plan for breaking away from the whisky habit. He has found that he can spend a quarter for some other purpose, when a desire to drink comes upon him, which will satisfy him for the time and which he repeats as often as the desire for a drink of whisky comes upon him. It is simply spending the quarter for a war savings stamp. Not only does this man find this a good way to keep his money from reaching the till of the saloon keeper, but he is so pleased with his strength of determination that whenever he buys a stamp with the quarter he had wanted to spend for whisky he celebrates the occasion by buying another savings stamp. Thus having a definite and fixed use for his quarters he finds it easier to save them from more than wasting and is pleased to know that while he is helping Uncle Sam to win the war he is also helping himself to overcome.

WHEN SUCCESS IS A FAILURE

Some men are determined to succeed regardless of the price they must pay for what they call success. But often when the cost is considered what has seemed to be a success is instead a failure.

At the time of this writing the final outcome of Hindenburg's drive on the western front has not been fully determined. But though the Prussian armies have gained a number of thousands of square miles of territory, yet when the price they were compelled to pay for the little advance they made into the territory of the allies it will be found that the expedition has been a colossal failure. The armies of Germany may have driven the armies of England and France back all along the western front, but they have not succeeded in breaking through the lines according to their plans before the great offensive was begun therefore their attempt was a failure, and while Hindenburg's armies have made some advance yet they have been defeated because they did not gain the object of their drive, and besides this they have lost hundreds of thousands of men in their vain attempt to break through the lines, thus whether they shall be driven back in the near future or not their apparent success has been a great failure.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

TAKING IT SERIOUSLY

The one question that ought to be given consideration in relation to the Four-Year Program is this, "Are we taking this program seriously?" To look upon it in any other way spells failure. To simply reach goals without a vital strengthening of the church is to only partially succeed. In reaching each goal some things will be achieved but we need to guard against a mechanical success. A smoothly running piece of machinery is a delight to behold but it is simply the putting together of pieces of cold metal in a scientific way. There is no real life. My concern is that there should be a throbbing genuine life. Life that manifests itself in a passion for the kingdom of God. The Four-Year Program must bring to the church a new passion for Christ and his Kingdom, or it is a failure. As the reports come in it is evident that many pastors and churches are taking the program seriously. But some evidently are not. From almost every district are churches making "no report." Bro. Pastor why is it that six months are past and nothing done? Is the action of National Conference, a delegated body representing the entire church, to be lightly set aside? Are we a part of the whole church or are we seeking to go our own way alone? Are the men of the church who conceived of this program and launched it visionary and devoid of leadership? Ought there not at least be a willing spirit of cooperation on the part of every one of us to the best of our ability? If the present crisis in the world's history calls for any one thing it calls for a united cooperative effort on the part of every pastor and church. "Over the top" to use a military phrase is the only consistent motto for every one of us. You say I am not a slacker but there is no report and not even an answer to the request of your district goal director. We must be serious about this program and we must be serious NOW.

On the whole it seems to the writer that we are making commendable progress. For one thing the church is BEGINNING to learn to give. Money is being given as never before. Will the report of goal six show that lives are being given. Consciousness of the many lives that are being given for the sake of liberty and national honor ought to bring a response of hundreds of lives to the service of the kingdom of God. We must be serious about the Four-Year Program and to do it we must be serious about our lives and their relationship to Christ and the church.

THE BOARD OF BENEVOLENCES

Through the request for an offering for the superannuated fund made by Brother O'Neil a misunderstanding has arisen. The Board of Benevolence asked for a Sunday in February for this offering. This was not granted by the conference. Brother O'Neil made his appeal under the impression that the request of the board had been granted. Conference did give us the SECOND SUNDAY IN JUNE, which will be the day for the offering. On this day every minister is requested to present the claims of the superannuated ministers and take an offering or otherwise provide for this fund. In order to provide for the time between conference and the second Sunday in June the Board borrowed $250. This must be paid and sufficient funds raised to meet the demands on the board until June 1919. $1500 is the goal set in the Four-Year Program. This to be reached by 1920. But the sum per member is so small and the funds so much needed that the Board is asking for the full amount this year. $1500 means six cents per member which we feel sure every member will be willing to give for the support of the men who labored so faithfully in the earlier years of the church. Begin now to talk about this offering and do your best to raise the full amount. Our funds are now exhausted so better still send your offering as soon as you can. Remember the date JUNE 9th. Your district goal director will remind you of this offering and appeal to you to do your part.

The following churches have made contributions to the superannuated fund.

If the above is not correct or if any church has made a contributon which is not here reported will you write me at once. The congestion of mails during the winter season may be responsibile or the secretary may be a at fault.

STATISTICS.

The plan of the director of statistics is to place in the hands of each district director of statistics, the statistical blanks with directions as to the method to be pursued. He will send you blanks and you will return them to him. He will keep after you until you report. Whether you have reached any or all the goals will, in some respects at least be determined by your statistical report, in comparison with your report for 1917.

As director may I call upon you to be careful and accurate in these reports. See now that proper reports are being kept by the church and all auxiliaries.

JESUS AS LORD

By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph. D.

Test—Ye call me Master and Lord and ye say well for so I am. John 13:13.

It was my very splendid opportunity some years ago to sit in a course of lectures given by one of the greatest scholars in this country, on the general subject of Christology. The purpose of a part of the course was to attempt to account for Christ and his advent. Without committing himself, fully the lecturer brought forward and criticised many theories of the Christ.

He was an Essene, so went one theory, and was put forward by that decadent order for the purpose of restoring it to vigor, Or he was only a great man; great as measured by the usual tests which may be applied to all whom the world calls great. Or, he was a man who could heal and in that lay his power. Or, he was the totemic race—soul, coming in the fullness of time only because the race had not reached a stage in which such a supreme character could have been produced before. He represented all that was good and perfect in the soul of mankind but being unappreciated went discouraged to his death. To be sure, there are many other theories, mostly as unsatisfying.

And so day after day, I went from those lectures, wondering just how all this could affect one who had, he thought, been grounded in what passed for a faith in the Christ. Supposing he was any one of these, or if possible, all of these, was there not something vastly more? And if so, just what did it mean? And so after some months of thought, I came to this very old and, as I think, very valuable conclusion, that no matter what else Jesus may have meant to any one, to be of fundamental and essential usefulness to our present day civilization, a considerable number of people must be willing to accept Jesus as Lord.

And so I want to insist this morning that no matter what place either science or history may give him, no matter about the so-called quarrel between science and the Bible, for Jesus to be of supreme use to this world, men must act from day to day, and from year to year, eternally and always, as if Jesus were the Lord of their life. Lord in no mystical or Jesuital sense, but simple and clearly as Lord. One might choke with pious prayers and emotions, one might wallow in sackcloth and ashes, one might babble about his resplendent character and might confess him as the flower and fruition of all that is perfect, yet if one does not own him as Lord, one is only rendered the more pitiable by these confessions.

And so in this day when some are praying with the lips but with the heart far away and others are praying more earnestly than ever before; when some hate with a hate which the demons might envy and others love with the love of angels; while some say Christianity has failed and others are now boasting at this moment of its complete success to make the sword reek and drip; while some say that tear gas and the Lord's prayer will mix, indeed so well that it seems now as if both were necessary, and others still say that they will not mix: it might be well to consider three fundamentals.

1. The Lordship of Jesus allows for all worthy ambitions in life but it does not allow of unworthy ones. I dare to believe this morning that the lordship of Jesus does not curb a single humanitarian endeavor, not a single unselfish deed, that it does not limit the good one may do, the number of lives one may save or the poverty one may relieve; that it does not set limits to the disease one may drive away or the number of little children one may love and help. Christianity does not limit the amount of social uplift one may feel disposed to give nor does it set bounds to the scholarship one may aspire to, nor does it in general limit one's better promptings. Not at all. Well, I have mentioned most of the big things of life right now! On the other hand, Christianity prompts these.

In one of my courses for the past years, I have always asked the young people what conditions they would like to see in the better world, in that enlightened kingdom, of which we so often speak, call it by any name you will. I have been able to reduce these answers to eight. You may want to add others you certainly would not want to subtract any of these. They are as follows: 1. There shall be no more war. 2. There shall be no poverty, or at least it shall be reduced to teh vanishing point. At present something over 15 per cent of the population of the United States are at or below the poverty line. 3. There shall be less disease and the misery that goes with it. Estimates are that as much as 80 per cent of diseases are avoidable. 4. Education shall be wider spread and better adapted to the needs of the hour. 5. There shall be some serious attempt at eugenics. 6. There shall be more democracy in government. 7. Every one should be actuated by Christian motives. 8. These conditions shall be world wide. These are the yearnings of young and therefore hopeful hearts and it is worthy of note that the complete Lordship of Jesus does not stand in the way of any of them.

There certainly is small place for the trifling and selfish young person with these standing as a challenge to what is best in manhood. But men have not always wanted to bless life but quite the contrary. When the Panama Canal was completed, the shout went up, "What a splendid thing this will be in time of war." So also, the invention of aircraft, the Lincoln Highway, improved methods in surgery, the automobile, etc. They would all doubtless be useful in war and just now we seem to be needing all we have, but these things ought to be to bless and sweeten human life and to elevate womanhood and childhood and not to despoil them.

I insist, again, that the lordship of Jesus allows for all worthy ambitions but is strong against wrong ambitions. It is opposed to slavery, oppression, lust, licentiousness and greed. But what other ambition do I need in life but the ambition for a place to do the tasks of life well? I do not need my neighbors lands, or place, and anything that is my neighbors, to use words hoary and sacred with age. I do not need kingdoms, nor thrones, nor subjects, nor slaves, nor flunkeys who come at my beck and call, nor does any man. What I need most is a job worthy of my best efforts. Let one's kingdom be that of scholarship, perhaps, that of another the kingdom of art, music, or what not,—all used to usher in that better day for which we all long. Man's over-leaping ambition for self aggrandizement has been the prolific mother of a brood of vipers which have stung and cursed the children of men always. Now for this very reason today families will go through life with fathers, sons, and husbands missing. The actual lordship of Jesus makes such frightful events impossible.

2. So far as I know, the lordship of Jesus is wholly practicable. And so far as I know it has never been tried in any large and complete way by any state or society. Have we not in thy name cast out devils and done many wonderful works? There is no stronger motive in the whole gamut of human possibilities than that of religion but religion gone wrong has lent itself to much that is cruel and vicious. Just make a man to believe that he is doing a religious act when he has a fiendish deed to perform, and he will do it with all the more zest. Hamlet, half demented but still shrewd, long ago said, "A man may smile and smile and be a villain. Why that is worth writing down" said he. "Hand me my tablet and let me write it." And it is still true today. And all of this has made religious wars and quarrels the cruelest of all history.

But Jesus came to give religious promptings their rightful place and if the time ever was when God winked at sin that time ought to be about over after two thousand years of Christian culture. The power of Jesus to save and keep has been sounded to its depths, perhaps, in the lives of moral derelicts, but to my mind it still waits full sounding in its larger relations.

3. The lordship of Jesus is needed now. I may be wholly in error but I believe that, while Christianity may have failed in some respects, it still is far from ultimate defeat. His lordship can not be spread by sword or even by preaching alone. It must be lived. And may it not be that when this unspeakable war is over, men will be so tired of it all that they will more willingly than ever turn to Jesus and own him more fully as Lord? At all events, the absolute lordship of Jesus among the nations of the world is a dream worthy of fulfillment, and would be a blessing, the value of which is past conjecture.

THE WAR AND RELIGION.

By J. L. Gillin

At the last General Conference I promised the Editor that I would prepare a series of articles setting forth some of the changes which I believe the war will work in America along lines of interest to church people. Up to the present time I have been so busy teaching young people and older volunteers how to care for the dependents of our soldiers and sailors that I have not reached this promised task. Since February 1st I have been directing the Bureau of Civilian Relief for the Red Cross in the five states of Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The University of Wisconsin at the request of the Director General of Civilian Relief of the American Red Cross has given me leave of absence to do this work. So important is this work in helping to maintain the morale of the men at the front and to "hold the home lines" by helping to maintain the families at home by giving them the money relief necessary for their sustenance and the neighborly service so often needed to help them bear with fortitude the burden laid upon them by the absence of the man fighting at the front to maintain our liberties that I have felt that I should attempt the exceedingly important work of educating the youth who came to a great state univerity in order to contribute my "bit" in this way.

The following article from the Literary Digest points out how the war will affect men's point of view in things religious. Such a change will be one of the by-products of the war of value to compensate for some of its evil effects.

HOW MEN WILL FIND THEIR SOULS

Religion after the war seems likely, to a lay observer, to become "a thing of practice, not of faith or doctrine." It will have more humanity, and be "bent on serving by works." Along with this change will come a disappearance of the visible symbols of the old order. "We shall have fewer costly churches and expensive choirs, and more humbleness of spirit, for the war is helping man to find his soul." It is the Detroit Free Press that sets up a lay pulpit, and preaches from the text of "one of the anamolies of the present," that is, "the manner in which the religion of peace and love has given way before a Moloch of strife and hatred aroused by an ambitious nation intent on its own ends." We read:

"We ask ourselves how it happened that at a moment when the world was felicitating itself on its progress in civilization and Christian brotherhood, a war unprecedented in blood and brutality should break out among the nations worshiping the same God and professing faith in the same Redeemer.

"The effect of the war upon participants and the resultant moral consequences have been variously estimated. There are many who believe a great spiritual revival will ensue, uplifting the souls of men; others, gleaning the lessons of history, foresee a lowering of moral standards. It is already predicted that the revival, if it comes, will not be concerned so much with individual salvation as with the regeneration of the race and the world. Religionists have heretofore been most concerned with the salvation of individual souls. The religion that is to come will be on a less personal basis; it will bring out the inarticulate religion at the bottom of every heart. War, we have every reason to believe, is doing this, and in this connection what a man who knows war and has made the supreme sacrifice as a soldier has to say on the subject is of interest.

"Donald Hankey, author of that widely read book, 'A Student in Arms', admits the average man is not a Christian, but believes in his potentialities. The clue is to be found in the qualities he admires or detests in other people. He has an ideal, but judges others, not himself, by it. The possession of this ideal is his religion, in so far as he has one. He admires courage, generosity, honesty, practical kindness, and persistence in doing the right thing. He despises physical and moral cowardice, lying and 'toadying'; he hates 'swank,' cant, and cruelty. Out of these he makes his ideal. And Hankey points out that the things he admires are, after all, the ideals of the gospel; the things he despises the things Christ fought against. He reminds us that it is a poor business to have an ideal and not live up to it, and that all we are asked to do is to try, and keep on trying."

has been set free no longer finds his great delight in serving self but in serving others and his love for his fellow men for whom Christ died just as surely as he died for him will prompt him to give expression to his appreciation of this liberty in deeds of loving kindness and mutual service.

As a further demonstration of this freedom it is found that we no longer are required to blindly serve a code of laws, but we are to produce a life of love. It is true that we are "under law" to Christ, but his "yoke" is so easy and his "burden" is so light that gladly we become his "bondservants" for it has been demonstrated over and over again that the bondservant of Christ has more liberty than any king upon the throne of any of the world's kingdoms can have apart from him. As some one has said: "Faith makes all things possible; love makes all things easy." In the light of all these facts, who would not accept the personal liberty which Christ offers?

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEED, A CHANGE OF LOVE

N. J. Paul

This subject deserves more than a passing notice. Love is something that all people have; that is, they all have a love for something. And, as a rule their love always falls on something, that if the proper change is not made, will separate them from God always.

In the beginning God created all things pure, and holy; and all of God's creation has remained just as he created it, except man who was not satisfied for his love to remain on God, but bestowed it on something more suitable to his own taste.

God's plan was for man not to eat of the forbidden fruit, man's plan was to take a try at it, and chance results; the result was, the link which held man to his Creator was severed. Ever since that link has been severed, man has been planing how he might serve God in his own way. Had Adam kept his love for God's command as he should, he never would have listened to the woman; thereby breaking the connection between himself, and his God. God looked on man with pity, and began in his own way to form another plan, whereby man might again be united to him, as in the beginning. The only plan God could offer that would prove successful, to mend the link broken by the first man, Adam, was to send his only begotten Son to serve as the connecting link between himself and man. [John 3:16] Jesus, serving as the link between man and God, tells us how we may connect ourselves to the Father.

Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." [John 14:6]. This being the case, the only way to the Father is to get into Jesus Christ: [See Gal. 3:27]. as he serves as the link, between man and God. In order to do this, can you not see at once, we will have to sever our love for the world, and the things of the world and give it to the Christ who gave himself for us, in order that we might have the opportunity to connect ourselves to Him? Had Cain changed his malice, for the love of God, he never would have killed his brother. [Gen. 4:8]. If king Saul would have changed the love he had for popularity, and esteem, for the love of God, he would never have sought the life of David the Lord's anointed. [I Sam. 19:15]. But Saul clung to his love for popularity, he thought more of the praises of the people, than he thought of his God, and see the result

ARMENIA'S TRAGEDY

Samuel T. Dutton

Since 1914 the world has witnessed its surfeit of tragedies. There has been the wanton, heart-breaking tragedy of Belgium, shorn of its splendors and robbed of its industries; the war-torn tragedy of Poland, with conquering armies sweeping one after another over its beautiful fields and through its stately old towns; the tragedy of Serbia, invaded from the north by the barbarians and ravaged from end to end. But of all the tragedies of the war, that of Armenia is the most harrowing. Here the cup of bitterness flows over. As if the history of this afflicted people were not gloomy and unhappy enough, this latest page has surpassed everything before it, in horror and despair.

The Armenian race scattered all over Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine,, The Russian Caucasus and Persia has for centuries been subject to suffering. The terrible plight of these people to-day beggars description. They have not only suffered from invading armies, and been driven from their homes by the conquerors, but they have been set upon by their own neighbors; they have had to bear again the fearful persecution of the Turk, sustained and strengthened by the thorough-going co-operation of his German superiors; they have been massacred and deported and tortured.

In the orient, where initiative and efficiency are often lacking, the Armenian has shown a remarkable industry. He has loved learning and has set up, with the small funds at his disposal, schools for his children throughout the Ottoman Empire, when the Government has flagrantly neglected to provide for the education of its own people. The Armenian has kept tenaciously to his religion, which has symbolized to him his national unity. He has developed industries and has shown unusual ability at finance and commerce. He is pre-eminently law-abiding. For all these things he has been hated and persecuted and last of all this greatest of afflictions has fallen upon him. The Syrian, too, equally a victim of this same wholesale deportation, has suffered untold persecution. It is said that in the region of the Lebanon death and destruction were more rampant than anywhere else.

It is difficult to grasp the purpose of a government in this twentieth century, which has attempted to annihilate a whole people. For many years previous to the war, hatred and distrust existed between the Turks and the Armenians. Add to this the new idea of turkification of the Empire which has taken possession of the Young Turk leaders, and perhaps it is possible to understand in some degree how the idea of the elimination of the Armenians, as unfit for complete turkification, was conceived. The idea has been carried out with primitive barbarity. Deportation, massacres and disorganization, with the natural results of starvation and disease have been the methods. What makes it all the more appalling is the fact that it was organized by a so-called government and put through by government officials. It is generally agreed that Germany will be held ultimately guilty in this crime.

An Armenian Woman

The Father Was Killed by the Turks

The Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee in America, six thousand miles away from this pitiful scene of devastation and pain, is trying to stem the increasing tide of human suffering by every means in its power. The history of the growth of this committee, with the self-sacrifice of its workers at home as well as in the field, and with the co-operation of generous Americans, makes fascinating reading. To-day, centers of relief have been organized in scores of cities throughout these desolate lands. Constantinople, Tiflis, Jerusalem, Teheran, Bagdad, Cairo, Tabriz and Beirut each is a nucleus of a whole region of relief numbering scores of small towns and villages in a radius of many miles. With the occupation of parts of Palestine by the British, opportunity for relief is growing. Armenians and Syrians are daily escaping to the haven of the Russian Caucasus of the British conquered territory, begging for bread and clothing. Missionaries and consuls work in out of the way places, risking, indeed some of them giving, their lives for this splendid work of the good Samaritan. They constantly write for more funds; each week brings cables asking for continued support and continued generosity.

We must not only take heed for the present but must look to the future. America has taken up in some measure the burden of Armenia. The freest of the nations holds out its hands to the most downtrodden. In the future there will be more and greater work to do, the constructive work of rehabilitation, so that properly speaking we might say that our interest in Armenia has only begun. It is to increase with the years and be of a wide and permanent nature. Already we can see that time coming. And let us hope that out of the depths, the broken people of the Bible Lands, which have given to the West the precious heritage of its religion, these people may be raised again to a life of Peace, to a sense of security, to an assurance that their terrible trials and afflictions and sufferings are over for all time.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT IN THE AUTOMOBILE

Susan Hubbard Martin

I found her sitting in her old rocking-chair, with its cushioned arms and the inevitable tidy on its back. The shade had been pulled up to the limit, and the sun came in, showing in the fine old face, the pencil-marks that old Father Time furrows in brow and cheek.

Her hair, neatly arranged, was white as snow. She wore a clean gingham dress, with a white collar at the neck fastened by an old-fashioned cameo-pin. She smiled when she saw me. "I've just been studying my Bible-school lesson," she said, as she laid down her quarterly. "It seems a little strange for me to be a member of the Home Department after all my years of teaching.

"Oh, yes, I taught in the Bible school for over thirty years. I still get letters from my boys. One of them wrote me only last week. He's a banker up in Michigan, and he's good enough to say he still governs his bank by the rules I laid down to him, a small boy, in that corner of the old church at home where I taught my class.

"Yes, I am getting old now. I was seventy-five the 6th of September—"

She paused.

"I wonder why it is," she added, "that some people in the Bible school don't think of the members of the Home Department more than they do. I mean in the matter of automobiles, I am too feeble to walk to the car, but on these beautiful Sundays I could easily go in an automobile, if any one should ask me, and I especially wanted to hear the new minister before cold weather sets in."

It was a week or two before I saw her again, but when I did, there was about her a difference—a new life and vigor, so to speak. She smiled at me again.

"Well," she began, "I must say I was never more surprised in my life, or more grateful, than when that fine automobile came up to my gate last Sunday morning. As good fortune would have it, I had my hair all combed, so it didn't take long for me to slip into my best dress. And what a Sunday that was! The new minister is wonderful, and his sermon did me so much good. You know, it gets lonesome sitting here alone so much. I can sew and knit and quilt, and always find something to do. But there is a benefit, an uplift, that comes from being with Christian people. One feels it. At any rate, I do. I can't explain it. Perhaps it is the contact with the Lord's house. But there is a great blessing there and a great strength. Even we do not understand it. Perhaps the prayers that go up from the pews have their reverberations, and, coming back, give us the spiritual quickening we need. Anyway, just being in the Lord's house is blessing enough for me."

She smiled.

"It was so good of you to speak to Mr. Pratt about me. He said he hadn't thought of it before, and that he didn't mean to be selfish. And I said: 'Bless you, I know you didn't; you just didn't think.' And how I did enjoy every minute of it!

"Being a member of the Home Department is all right, but there wouldn't need to be so many if people with automobiles would take us to church and Bible school. The automobile is quick. It gets one there before one has an opportunity to get tired.

"I was home a few minutes after twelve, and had a whole season of rejoicing after I took off my bonnet. I had been sitting alone so long. And to think I had been permitted to go out into the fresh air and sunshine again and take my seat in my old place once more."

And then she quoted: " 'I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord.' "

I took the old, withered hand and pressed it, and I was glad in that moment that the automobile had come to stay, and that in its swiftly revolving wheels it might work a greater revolution still—the revolution of bringing the old and feeble "stay at homes" into the revivifying stimulus of the Bible school.

WAS IT A FALSE ALARM?

America was repeatedly startled two, three and four years ago by assertions that Japan was seeking for a naval base in Lower California, that she had sent to Mexico tens of thousands of troops, that she intended to seize the Philippines, the Hawaiian Islands, California, etc. The statements as to Japanese veterans in Mexico ranged from thirty thousand to four hundred thousand, vouched for by "the highest military authorities."

What, we wonder has become of those plans? And are those troops still in Mexico? If so, why do we not hear of them? If they are not and have not been there at all, whence came the stories and why were they so persistently circulated?

The fact is, America for years has been subjected to a widespread, persistent anti-Japanese campaign. Certain chauvinistic newspapers by news dispatches, editorials and cartoons have persistently endeavored to stir up suspicion and hatred against Japan. Extravagant stories of Japanese hostility to America, of importation of cheap labor on the western coast, of designs upon the Philippine Islands and of efforts to organize military and naval bases in Mexico and on the southern California coast, have been the outstanding items in this campaign. And if the facts did not guarantee the alarming predictions, so much the worse for the facts. To counteract these vicious and often-disproven statements, men of goodwill on both sides of the Pacific have striven hard. It was apparent that some interested nation or group was busy with the circulation of such false and pernicious representations.

Every right-thinking man who desires that permanent peace, based on justice and truth may be established in the world, should help to overcome the international poison that has been so insidiously injected into the mind of the American nation.

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

The following churches have adopted the "budget" system for placing the Evangelist in every family of active Brethren in their congregation and are thus entitled to a place on the Evangelist Honor Roll of Brethren Churches:

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

Again we are able to head our page notes with the announcement that another church has decided to put the Evangelist into every active Brethren home in the congregation. This time it is Elkhart, Indiana that wins a place on the Honor Roll of churches and H. H. Wolford is the industrious and loyal pastor who has succeeded in bringing his church to the front in this portion of the Four-Year Program. Indiana now has eight churches on the Honor Roll and we are expecting other churches in the Hoosier state to win similar honors.

Last week we reported with gladness that the first church in the entire brotherhood to put the evangelist on the budget of the church had renewed its obligation and had requested to have the paper sent to all families for the second year. We were glad because the plan had proved a success where first tried out. This week we are glad again, this time because the second church in the brotherhood to adopt the budget plan for the church paper, namely Washington C. H., Ohio has also found the plan good and a few days ago sent us a check for the full amount to continue the paper another year. Brethren, the plan works. Try it in your congregations.

Just now we feel the need of assistance from the old colored preacher who announced to his congregation that he was about to "explain the inexplicable, to solve the insoluble and to unscrew the inscrutable." In no other way can we hope to untangle the why of the statement made on this page two weeks ago that the Ohio Conference would meet at Fremont on March 17. 18, 19, when we knew that it is to meet on APRIL SIXTEEN, SEVENTEEN AND EIGHTEEN. Please remember the date and arrange your plans accordingly. Brother Oberholtzer assures us that the conference will be well cared for by the Fremont people and we know that he is not accustomed to making rash statements.

A few days ago we received a copy of the Milledgeville Free Press which gave a full report of the patriotic services recently held at the Brethren church and a synopsis of the address given upon the presentation of a "service" flag. The address was carefully and thoughtfully prepared as all such addresses given by Brother Snyder are. The work in Milledgeville seems to be going steadily forward.

The program of the conference of the Brethren churches of Northern California, Oregon and Washington appears in this issue of the Evangelist. These churches are widely scattered and it requires a large faith to plan and to successfully carry out the plans of a conference under such circumstances.

Walter Clark, secretary of the Michigan conference of Brethren churches announces the meeting of their conference in the Campbell Brethren church on May twenty-eighth. The Michigan churches are urged to get their reports ready and to look after their missionary offerings before the meeting of the conference.

Just recently we received a printed financial report of the Carleton Nebraska Brethren church, including all the different societies of the church. It is perhaps the most comprehensive and most complete annual financial report we have ever seen made by a single congregation. It shows that business men have charge of the business end of the Carleton church.

After a silence of some weeks brother G. T. Ronk comes to our readers again with a report of his labors in the evangelistic field. His trip was indeed a "flying" one as we barely caught a glimpse of him as he passed through Ashland. He found the work in the east going steadily forward and has many good things to say about the workers in Pennsylvania. We most sincerely hope his prophecies concerning the good reception the Pennsylvania churches are going to give Brother Beachler in his canvass for the endowment of Ashland College may come true. From what we know of the character of the Pennsylvania people we believe all that he said will be done.

Brother Ed Miller of Uniontown is the kind that just "bubbles" over when good things happen and our readers may always look for reports from him that are of exceptional interest. His report of recent events in the work of the Uniontown church is a splendid one and shows determination and efficient leadership. Most of our churches will do well when well led.

The sermon by Dr. Jacobs as it appears on another page is one recently preached in the College Sunday morning service and shows that the students who are in attendance at Ashland College get good, orthodox preaching when they attend the Sunday services. We feel under obligations to Dr. Jacobs for his willingness to supply us with these sermons occasionally.

The work of the Brethren at Brighton, Indiana was greatly hindered during the winter because of much sickness and of the extremely cold weather. Twenty-one years ago last January the editor was forced to close a meeting in Brighton because of a scarlet fever epidemic and terrible blizzards. But the work goes on in spite of storm and sickness and the pastor, E. W. Deitrick is already planning his hot weather campaign for the summer. Arrangements have also been made to have A. E. Thomas conduct an evangelistic campaign in this congregation yet this spring.

One of the most active congregations of Brethren in the entire country seems to be that in Spokane, Washington. Here good things are constantly happening. This is still a mission point, new to many of the people in the city and greatly hindered because of the incomplete condition of their place of worship, but the Lord is adding souls to their numbers. Four were baptized on Easter Sunday. A new Sunday school has been opened in another part of the city and the one mission is carrying on missionary work among others as the opportunity presents itself. Brother Miller and his congregation believe the North West needs the gospel as preached by the Brethren church.

Only recently a successful evangelistic meeting was brought to a close in Elkhart, Indiana. A. E. Thomas was called to assist the pastor with splendid results. There were thirty-four conversions and reconsecrations in the meeting. Many have been baptized and others soon will be. The Elkhart church is planning for larger things to be done and has decided to keep their present pastor with them.

When S. C. Henderson was called back to Hamlin, Kansas where he had formerly served as pastor it seemed like going back home, but when he arrived upon the field he found that time does move and there were a great many changes that made the place seem strange after all. However his work has been fruitful; the Four-Year Program of the church has been made the pogram of the Hamlin church as it should be made in every church. Will our readers note what Brother Henderson has to say about the Evangelist in every home. He speaks from experience and says, "The Evangelist is the preacher's best campaigner, and I feel the biggest part of reaching the goals of the Four-Year Program has been made when the Evangelist goes into each home."

This church observed Easter Sunday in a splendid way and the missionary offering of the day as well as the offerings of Christmas day and Thanksgiving day were made up in fine shape, and Brother Henderson gives much of the credit to the Evangelist since it has made every home in the church acquainted with the needs of the work.

At a recent decision day service in the First Brethren Sunday school of Los Angeles, California about one dozen girls and boys accepted the invitation to serve their Master. Some of the number as well as two adults have been received into the church by baptism.

J. D. Kemper makes his last report as pastor of the Morrill, Kansas church this week. After a few months spent in Y. M. C. A. work in the army encampment in Colorado he and Mrs. Kemper expect to take up the work with the Carleton, Nebraska church.

After a silence of several weeks the correspondent from Ashland College again writes of the affairs at the College. It will not be many weeks now until this series of interseting notes must cease as the school year will soon be over. However, we hope another year to be able to secure a correspondent from the student body that will take as great interest in the writing of the notes as Brother Lambert has done.

Around the Editor's Table

OF ONE MIND

Greater emphasis is being placed upon the necessity of co-operation, federation or union of Christian forces today than ever before in the history of Christianity. The call, which is implied in the need, of the world today is for the greater efficiency which develops among Christian forces that do co-operate. In his splendid first-page editorial this week Brother G. W. Rench makes a strong appeal to the churches to claim this power and this efficiency.

Both Jesus Christ and the Apostles made strong pleas for oneness of purpose among all followers of the Christ. The early Christians were urged to "be of one mind." Now we know that too many people misinterpret that admonition by insisting that it be literally carried out and that "you shall be of MY mind." We can only ask another to be of one mind with ourselves when we are certain that "we have the mind of Christ." Of course any one who has strong convictions is sure that he has this mind of Christ and many times such a one has a great deal of difficulty in believing that any one can be sincere who holds to a different opinion or who gives a different interpretation to any portion of the scriptures. But one should not get being of one mind and being of one opinion confused. These terms are not necessarily synonymous. To get all men to think exactly alike is next to an impossibility. Do we not remember the experience of an ancient king who had been for many years trying to compel all his subjects to think as he did upon religious matters, but he was also interested in clocks and was earnestly trying to get two of his clocks to run exactly alike, but after vainly trying for a long time he gave it up and then said: "How foolish I have been to try to make all men think alike when I can not make even two clocks run alike."

HOSTILITY TO CHRIST

Sometimes we are amazed at the quick development of hostility to Christ as shown by his countrymen so soon after the period of his greatest popularity. One would naturally think that the enlargement of his ministry and the widespread reports of the great good he was doing wherever he went among a suffering people would aid his popularity to gain momentum as the years passed until like a mighty wave from the great ocean it would sweep all men off their feet and that wherever the Savior would travel he would be granted a "triumphal entry" into every city and village of the land and that every where men would wave palm branches before him and cast their garments down to keep his feet from coming into contact with the sin-cursed earth and that great shouts of "Hosanna" would be heard wherever Jesus chose to travel.

But this was not the case, and after he had healed and helped many a one who had been bound by the forces of evil for many a year in whatever land or village through which he traveled some of the people stirred up a great storm of protest and aroused the fiercest opposition among the people, for the people were not steadfast but rather of a fickle turn of mind and the same nature that can love intensely, when perverted can hate bitterly. Thus as some of the leaders of the people were made to understand that their entire system of reasoning was wrong they grew bitter toward the one who had come to help them and to render a service to the world that no man could render.

The events of which we have written occurred nearly two thousand years ago but the same type of men who so bitterly opposed the moral and religious reforms of Jesus in his day are still in the land and while they may not make any sudden display of their hostility yet their very attitude toward things religious and things sacred indicates that they are prompted by the same spirit that led the men of old to express their hostility to the one who came to make life possible for them. Yes, "He came unto his own and his own received him not."

PERSONAL LIBERTY

The kind of liberty sought by the Personal Liberty League of America is not the kind of liberty or freedom Christ and the Apostles talked about. In the minds of altogether too many people personal liberty means a freedom from personal restraint and the privilege of acting altogether in the interests of self.

That man needs liberty is not to be denied but the real nature of it needs a more careful definition. Man's great need for liberty is based on the fact that, whether he acknowledges it or not, he is in bondage. Before the freedom established by Jesus Christ became man's heritage he was in a threefold bondage, especially if he were a follower of the Jewish faith. According to the teaching of Paul he was in bondage to sin, to law and to ceremonial restrictions. And it has been suggested that possibly the reference made by Jesus to the "heavy laden" did not so much mean the burden of sin as the burden of the Pharisaical interpretation of the law as it was pressed heavily upon their consciences. From all these sources or types of bondage man needs to be set free and for this purpose Christ came into the world. The Jews declared that they had never been in bondage to any man which was an incorrect statement of fact, but when Jesus said: "And if the Son shall make you free you shall be free indeed," he was not referring to political or social bondage but to spiritual bondage and to spiritual liberty. And apart from the freedom which the accepting of him as Savior brings there is no liberty. The freedom of "New Thought" and of various ethical cults can never take the place of the personal Christ in setting captives free. And it is a waste of both time and opportunity to seek after liberty in any other way. When Jesus said: "I am the way, the truth and the life," he spoke the final word as it has to do with the freedom the human soul needs. And if we want the way of liberty or of freedom from the three types of bondage mentioned above it is to be found only in him. "For there is no other name under heaven, given among men whereby we may be saved."

A DEMONSTRATION OF LIBERTY

Just now the liberty loving people of the world are trying to make it clear to those who are giving their support to an autocratic system of political government or bondage that even political freedom is worth dying for and the three great nations of the world that best represent political liberty are fighting side by side in their attempt to stay the onward march of Prussian bondage. The very spirit of sacrifice manifested by the common people of these countries is a proof that the appeal to liberty is one of the strongest appeals that can be made to man and in their answer to the call of their Countries' needs they are demonstrating the strength of the hold liberty has upon them.

If such a demonstration of the appreciation of political freedom is to be made why shall those who have experienced the greater blessings of spiritual freedom not become even more demonstrative? When the believer in Christ is set at liberty this fact of his freedom should be clearly manifested in at least three particulars. First of all there should be prompt service to Christ or in the cause of Christ. The word serve may not seem compatible with the word liberty, but the man who thinks liberty means an absolving of all responsibility or obligation to another is himself in bondage to an erroneous idea from which he needs to be set free. If men love the freedom and liberty a country affords them they will prove loyal to that country and will support and serve it in any way they can that is not contrary to their convictions in regard to their relation to God who is their acknowledged sovereign of all the universe, and if men have been set free by the power of Christ it is making only a feeble recompense when they offer him their service in any way he can use it to advance the cause for which he died and to enlarge the borders of the kingdom over which he would reign. As another proof or demonstration of this liberty a true follower of Christ gives an expression to his feelings in his manifestations of love to others.

Missionary Education Through Ear-Gate

"How long have you known it?" said a man in heathen darkness to the missionary who came with the story of salvation.

"All of my life," was the answer.

With impassioned accusation the man, who had grown old in the worship of false gods, cried out, "Then why didn't you tell me sooner? My life is almost over now. If I had only known such a God as this I would have served him all the days of my life."

"Why didn't you make that address years ago?" said a woman to a speaker at a great missionary mass meeting last year. "If my daughter had only heard an address like that when she was a girl! She has given her life to other work now, but if she had ever heard there were such opportunities for women on the mission fields she would without doubt have chosen that service."

Along with the accusations of those in heathen darkness who have given their lives to the service of false gods because we have never told them of the only true God, comes also the accusation of many who know the Lord, but who have never heard of the great needs and matchless opportunities of the mission fields of the world, and of the joy of missionary service. Women there are, women of wonderful power, who are devoting their lives to things of little worth because they have never heard of the greatest work in the world; men who are giving great gifts of self and substance to things that are of only passing value, because they have not heard of the possibilities of enduring investments in life and in money on the mission fields; young people who would have given their lives in all the glory and strength of their youth to the greatest task that ever made bid for young manhood and young womanhood; boys and girls who are having their ideas and ideals of life shaped without hearing aught of the supreme service to which Christ has called his church and of the heroic courage with which great men and women have answered that call.

How shall they hear?

Talking Missions

More influential in molding public sentiment than are platform utterances or printed resolutions of allegiance to the cause is spontaneous daily conversation. When the fulness of our hearts expresses itself without any effort, when missions naturally becomes the main theme of our daily conversation, no protestations of devotion are necessary to prove our loyalty to that cause. When missions just as naturally and unconsciously become a theme for monthly, quarterly or annual discussion only, according to due announcement, and the subject is not on our lips between these designated days and hours, we may boast, or protest, or deprecate, but no case of real devotion can be proven. We talk about the things in which we are really interested, and we interest people in the things about which we spontaneously talk. Let us talk missions. Let us recognize the value of plain, everyday conversation as a method of missionary work. If women as they met together talked of the great things that are being done and that need to be in the missionary work; if men in hotel lobbies, at the street corners, in their places of business spoke of the recent wonderful mass movements in India, of the marvelous changes in the new China, of the great possibilities in Japan, of the stupendous home mission problems in America and the unparalleled opportunities for Christian stewards today in world-wide evangelization; if children as they played, gathered sometimes in groups eagerly to discuss, as some children have done, the work they are doing for the children of the world; then indeed would the contagion of missionary interest soon be spread broadcast.

Table Talk in Our Homes

Some home makers seem to know just how to give a constant missionary flavor to the conversation in their homes. Without announcing the subject on which they are about to speak, without forcing an entrance for their theme, without pious cant or Phariseeism, they just naturally talk of missions. The discussion of athletics seems to invite the recital of some incident in the life of one of the many missionaries who were famous athletes. Reports of advance in school or college leads on to some wonderful new educational plans for China, or India, or Japan, or to the remarkable progress of Oriental students in America. No one feels that any foreign theme is being dragged into the conversation and that the speaker is now performing an unpleasant duty.

A young minister who was graduated from a church college and from a theological seminary said the spontaneous interest and the intense earnestness of the daily missionary conversations in a home in which he was a frequent guest interested him more deeply and personally in missions than did anything in his college or theological course. Let us talk missions in our homes.. Let us entertain in our homes people who talk missions, so that our children may hear what great things God has wrought.

Bishop Selwyn, as a guest in the home of Lady Patterson, talked missions with his arm around her little son "Coley." No wonder John Coleridge Patterson followed the drift of that conversation until it led him to the South Sea Islands. A furloughed missionary walked home with a little girl from Sunday school and talked with her about being a missionary. Today that little girl is reaching hundreds of the girls of Japan with the message of the Savior's love.

"I may not be a missionary myself," said a fine high school boy to the mission secretary, who had thought it worth while to talk to a boy how he could make his life count for most, "but I have decided that if I do not go myself I will support a missionary." Entertaining missionary guests is a good investment for homes in which real missionary returns are desired.

A guest sat at the table in the home of a Florida judge. She noticed an extra plate was laid. The next day a missionary visitor came and was given that plate. When the visitor went away the extra plate was laid again. Then the hostess explained that ever since she had had a home she had always laid an extra plate which she called the Lord's plate, because she so longed to have in her home the messengers of the Cross, who were doing the Lord's work. Gradually it became known that she was always ready to entertain the missionary workers who came, and she testified that rich blessing had come to her home through their conversation, their example, and their prayers.

The Jubilee story told by Mrs. Montgomery of one girl who could not go to the foreign field, but who talked missions at home is worthy of several re-tellings:

"She was just an ordinary girl of moderate gifts, living in an ordinary home in modest circumstances, and belonging to the plain variety of church in the ordinary condition of tepid conviction on missionary matters that seem to characterize the common type. What this girl did any of us could do, if we tried.

"When she found that she could not be a foreign missionary she tried to see what she could do to help at home. She went to her pastor and got a list of all the women and girls in the church, with their addresses. There were 350 of them, but only 58 belonged to the Missionary Society. After districting the city and marking the address of every non-member by a pin in the map, she began her self-imposed task of calling on every one of them. Before the year was over she had made a thousand calls, had added about 300 members to the society and raised the contributions from less than $200 to $1,200.

"When this girl was asked to tell about this in a meeting in her home city she was very unwilling to do so, but her shy, simple telling of the story will never be forgotten by those who heard her. In reply to a question from the audience, how she alone had been able to do so much, she gave a recipe for Christian work that it would be hard to surpass:

"'I didn't know very much,' she said, "so I studied a good deal that I might have facts to present. I knew that I did not have much tact, so I prayed that God would teach me what to say and prepare the hearts of those to whom I went. I took leaflets and literature to leave with them so that they might know, too. I never scolded, and I always spoke of the love of Jesus.'

"Study, prayer, information, good cheer, no faultfinding and the love of Jesus; could anything be better?"

Interpretation of Scripture

Gone, let us hope, are the days when the whole missionary effort of the pulpit was stored for once-a-year delivery in the "annual missionary sermon." May the same bygone times rest the days when Sunday school teachers felt they must wait until the quarterly missionary lesson for any missionary teaching opportunity. Welcome the year whose calendar numbers fifty-two missionary Sundays. We are coming into the day when pastors, who preach at Christmas tide of the "glad tidings of great joy," do not wait for a special missionary service to suggest "Which shall be to all people." Coupled naturally with the Easter message, "He is risen," is the Easter commission, "Go and tell." An earnest missionary spirit can scarcely teach the lesson of our Lord's ascension without some reference to the last commission on his heart, on his lips, before he went away into heaven. When preachers and teachers faithfully and constantly present the missionary interpretation of the Bible, then will cease the feeling of church members that missionary zeal is an optional attachment of Christianity, which may be screwed on periodically or left off permanently, if not considered desirable.

The missionary association of some passages of scripture may also come to mean much. Following the Twenty-third Psalm, as it is repeated in Sunday school, with John 10:16—"Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring and they shall hear my voice and there sahll be one fold and one shepherd," gives that Psalm a meaning that extends far beyond the personal pronoun on which we have dwelt. Psalm 62:5-8, which the relief party, sent to find Captain Allen Gardiner, saw painted on a rock in Terra del Fuego; Jeremiah 45:5, the verse which made a missionary instead of a lawyer of Henry Martyn; Psalm 107:14, the verse through which Hans Egede triumphed when great icebergs surrounded his ship, "The Hope"; Psalm 121,, with which David Livingstone faced Africa; these are among the many passages which should have precious missionary associations to every Sunday school scholar.

"The Art of Living with Others"

Read by Miss Ruth Lichty when the Sophmore class had charge of the Christian Endeavor meeting in the College Society

The "art" of living with others—and yet how few of us even consider it an art at all, some, even feeling it an obligation. Of course, we as individuals are going to get as much out of life as we possibly can, but why? Is it for ourselves? We may think so but really if it were not for the "Others" part of our life wouldn't this be an awfully uninteresting world?

It is the "others" that makes us want to really do, to do ours just a little better than anyone eles. To make the "others" feel that we are these.

And yet, how about these "others"? What do they mean to use, or do they mean anything? We have all heard the quotation: "We are a part of all we have met." What a tradition for young America to carry and what a responsibility the idea gives us. If we ourselves are a part of all we have met then we must have given some of our own individuality to those "others" from whom we have taken something.

And what have we given, what are we giving now? It is evident then that it is not for ourselves we are living but for those "others" around us, that compose our universe. Just to think of what we owe to them is almost staggering. To live our lives so that we may give and receive the best of that "power that makes."

In this rushing, hurrying epoch in which we live with all its responsibilities surging around our doors, how often have we heard the statement, "I will look out for Number one." All very well, but how are you interpreting "Number One"? Two children were playing one day when one made this statement. "All right," said the other, with a sunny smile, "That's just what I think only my mamma told me to always number the other person as 'One.'"

Ever since the blood of Abel cried out from the ground and Cain faced the inevitable question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" men and women all over the world have cried out the same question, sometimes in one manner, sometimes in another: Are we our neighbors' keepers? Will any one face the brunt of our doings or misdoings except ourselves? We are and they will.

We are living "together" and the "together" is what puts us to the test. That hurried glance, that thoughtless word, the frown that wasn't necessary, the heedless act, is the heritage we are giving to others. Or are we giving the "others," our associates, a heritage they will be proud to claim.

But if we had to face all this alone what an enormous task it would be. And that's where the beautiful part comes in. We are not facing it alone. All the "others" are facing it with us. And the problem, why it isn't such a problem after all. Of course all persons in their own hearts, between themselves and God must decide just how they will solve it to meet their own particular need. Ella Wheeler Wilcox has solved it in her own quaint fashion, saying:

"So many gods, so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind;
When just the art of being kind
Is all this old world needs."

And from Henry Van Dyke's point of view we learn that:

"Four things a man must learn to do
If he would keep his record true:
To think, without confusion, clearly;
To love his fellow men sincerely;
To act from honest motives purely;
To trust in God and heaven securely."

And the Master himself tells us: "Be ye kindly affectioned one toward another."

And after all, doesn't it finally resolve itself into that, "In honor preferring one another." Then this "art", this universal peace is at our own doors, instilled in our own hearts, the "living with others" is to "in honor prefer one another." The following little poem, familiar to all, but worthy of repetition, is certainly the spirit of the Master, the one who lived entirely for others, waiting to be injected in our own hearts and lives:

"Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for—Others.

"Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true
And know that all I'll do for you,
Must needs be done for—Others.

"Let self be crucified and slain,
And buried deep, and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again,
Unless to live for—Others.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new task in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won,
While thinking still of—Others.

Others, Lord, yes Others
Let this my motto be,
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like thee."

Quiet Hour Talk

"Evangelism" has been selected as the "Service Theme" for Christian Endeavor societies during the month of April this year. This theme is of particular interest to comrades of the Quiet hour, and will make the observance of the Quiet hour all the more urgent. We can not hope to succeed in any Christian effort without much prayer, and we must certainly realize its importance in the winning of souls. Let us therefore make this all-important work the special object of our Quiet Hour prayers. If we are earnest and sincere, this will prove to be a mighty force. Let us hope that many more will enlist as comrades of the Quiet hour and join us in this effort. Let the Quiet Hour superintendents take up this matter with becoming zeal. It is apparent that evangelism is vitally related to the Quiet Hour. A life deepened and empowered by Bible study and prayer should express itself in active service for Christ. Superintendents of this department will therefore be largely responsible for the promotion of evangelism in the societies.

I would therefore hasten to say that our prayers should be backed by personal effort. It is not likely that many churches will be holding protracted evangelistic services during April, but many other opportunities will be afforded us to speak to our friends about Christ. Many times the personal appeal is most effective. The C. E. society affords a very fruitful field for such endeavor. It is a well known fact that youth is the most susceptible age for evangelism. "Win my friend" should be the constant desire and burden of every heart, and the object of faithful endeavor.

April affords a very opportune season for this effort. Impressions made by public effort still linger and should be conserved and followed up. Many hindrances retarded the winter's work and some are yet unsaved. Those recently enlisted in the cause of Christ should get to work at once. It will increase their strength.

Let us then all work together for a "Big Spring Drive," bringing our efforts to a grand climax on the last Sunday in April. Let plans be carefully made to this end. Remember that we are expected to win 400 new church members until 1920. Let us hope for 100 during April. One brought to Christ in each society throughout the brotherhood will more than reach this goal. Report the results to President Garber or to me. H. M. OBERHOLTZER, Quiet Hour Supt. for Brethren C. E. Union.

News From the Field

To the Churches of Michigan

The conference of the Michigan churches will be held the last week in May, beginning Tuesday the 28th of May, to be held in the Campbell Brethren church.

All those churches that have not paid their quota of the state mission money are requested to forward it soon so that the accounts of the mission board may be squared up before conference.

Also you should select your delegates for conference; the statistics of your church should be made up immediately and sent to brother W. O. Bowers, Decatur, Michigan.

Send your mission money to brother Sam Rice, Cassopolis, Mich., R. D. 5.

WALTER CLARK, Sec'y.

Morrill, Kansas

It has been some time since the undersigned sent in a report from this place and, now that the time has come for me to sever my pastoral relationship with this congregation, I feel that another report of the progress made in this "corner of the vineyard" should be forthcoming.

Morrill

Many people have asked about the town's size, location, etc. The latest census gives it a population of nearly five hundred. The farms and faarmers hereabouts are the equal of any in the state. There are four churches here besides our own, viz., Methodist, Baptist, Church of God and Church of the Brethren. The first two named and our own have an approximate membership of one hundred and thirty-five each while the last named has two hundred and fifty. The Church of the Brethren has just moved into a new $33,000 structure.

The last religious census taken showed that over 90 per cent. of the people of the town and community were affiliated with church. Last year the town was voted a cash prize of $175 for being the best town of its size in the state in which to rear children.

Church

As has already been stated the church has a membership of one hundred thirty-five. This includes a few isolated members. Thirty-eight have been received into membership during my term as pastor and eight have been lost by death and transference of membership. A. W. Lichty is the deacon and T. B. Butterfield and C. W. Yoder are the chairman and secretary, respectively, of the official board.

Sunday School

The Sunday school seems to have been the most fertile field during my term of service here and substantial progress has been made in the various departments. The combined membership has grown from 135 in 1915, to 175 at the present time. The school was classified and graded last year and graded lessons are now used in all but one of the classes of the Primary and Intermediate departments. The average offering has increased from $6.20 to $7.00 while the average attendance has grown from 79 to 96. Mrs. Kemper's mantle as superintendent falls upon one who is well qualified to carry on the work, Mrs. B. M. Lichty. She will see that it is kept a "front-liner."

C. E. Societies

The adult society has more than held its own, and that against "odds," and when the writer uses that terms you readers will understand what it means. A couple of societies in the middle west have "gone out of business." Great credit for the work done is due the president, Mrs. Glen McKim.

The Junior society has a membership roll of some forty with more asking for parental permission to join. Mrs. K. has succeeded fairly well in making it an "interdenominational affair," in fact two other societies quit and are allowing their children to meet with our young folks. Miss Thelma Lichty succeeds Mrs. K. as superintendent of this work.

S. S. C. E.

The sisters of this auxiliary are carrying their share of the burden here and doing it in a creditable manner. They have made gains in both membership and finances. Mrs. Clinton Scott is president.

Sisterhood

There are 18 young ladies in this society and it's a "front-liner," too.

It is also "interdenominational" and neither our girls or Mrs. K. had to proselyte in order to get the outsiders to join; they just came and asked to be taken in. Florence Lichty, a teacher in our public schools is president.

Now, Brother Editor, I have tried to make this report as brief as possible and still cover the ground, and I trust you will see fit to let it go through. It only summarizes in brief what the pastor and his "first assistant" have attempted to do. No, Mrs. K. didn't do all the pastoral work. The "dominie" tried to help along where ever he could and at no time did he allow his assistant to prepare a sermon for him. If we have accomplished anything of a permanent nature while serving this people, "To God be the glory."

We never expect to cast our lot with a better class of people and if any of you pastors are looking for a good place, you had better get in touch with brother C. W. Yoder, secretary of the committee on pastor.

The writer leaves to take up war Y. M. C. A. work at Ft. Logan, Colorado, for a few months after which he and Mrs. K. will take up the work at Carleton, Nebraska.

May God's richest blessings attend our Morrill friends as they journey through life.

J. D. KEMPER.

First Church, Los Angeles California

On March 24 we had a Decision Day in our Sunday school and at the close of the program the superintendent, Brother Earl Hedrick made a very earnest appeal to the pupils of the school to take a stand for Christ. About one dozen Junior boys and girls responded by first holding up their hands and then standing to thei r feet. Following this, at the call of the pastor, about ten of them came forward and gave him their hands and expressed themselves as intending to unite with the church. The pastor has followed this up with visits to all of the homes represented and found that in a number of instances the children are opposed by the parents who claim the boys and girls are not old enough to decide so important a matter. However, three of these were baptized last night and also two adults.

There was a combined service of the Sunday school and church yesterday (Easter Sunday) and a very interesting program was rendered to a full house. The offering to Foreign Missions was a little more than $125, but it is hoped that within a week we can swell that amount quite a little. A very acceptable musical program was rendered last night by the choir after which there was a baptismal service and the five persons mentioned above were received into the the church.

Our supply pastor, Brother S. Lowman, who has been doing such splendid work in the absence of our regular pastor, Brother F. J. Reagan, is preparing to begin a new work at the new and growing town of Fillmore, Ventura county, about the first of May. He reports that there is a fertile country surrounding the town, oil wells and a refinery are near by, many fine orchards of apricot, walnut, orange, and lemon trees are located in the valley, and the town is bound to grow and become quite a center in the years to come. And so for these and other reasons it seems to be a good place to open up a new work for our Lord.

Here and There

It was my privilege to take a few weeks off in February and March for an evangelistic trip down into old Pensylvania. I found the country piled high with snow, traffic congested, train service irregular and all the country humming with the traffic and bustle of war. During a short stop at Ashland, the first in several years, I found our institutions moving along better than most of those in the country and a general interest in the church's program for progress. During such a crisis as this we will do well to remember that the greatest service we can do our country is in keeping the altar fires burning and maintaining the morale of our own constituency. It was for just such service as this that the ministry was exempted by the draft law. As shepherds, let us be watchful and play our part with much time spent in prayer for the necessary calmness to lead aright a people made both a little irritable and a little hysterical by the strain of world conflict. Both these attitudes are abroad today here as well as in the old world. It does no good to blink the fact. Be strong; let the trained men do the fighting; as it is theirs to be calm on the battlefield it is ours to be calm and deliberate about all we say and do at home.

It was my first thorough acquaintance with Pittsburgh. I found a great official city of eight hundred thousand souls and as many more in adjoining boroughs which make Greater Pittsburgh in reality a city of nearly a million and a half stretching about thirty-five miles along the rivers. The Homestead steel works alone are one forest of stacks twenty miles long. As pastor, Brother Harley must make this whole territory as our people are scattered everywhere. The church is in east Pittsburgh at the foot of the steep hill on which the historic Fort Pitt stood and our people are scattered over its slopes, at places so steep that the sidewalks are stairs. However, this section is quite free from smoke for which the lower city is justly famous; you can't have the greatest industrial city in the world without that.

I am glad to report that the Pittsburgh church has a great working organization. I know of no church among us having a larger working force. All will be glad to hear that in a few months more at the present rate their long financial battle will be won. And they have a great plant as well as a fine parsonage. When once they get out of debt a few thousand dollars spent on their entry and in modernizing their Sunday school equipment, for which they have room, will give them one of the finest big city plants in the church. I am glad to say Pittsburgh is one of our great churches. Credit belongs to all the pastors who have fought her fight in years past, many in discouragement, as well as to Brother Wise, who proved her greatest friend in time of need. The personnel has naturally changed largely through recent years, though there a few who remember the beginning. Brother Harley has been the man of the hour who has finally brought things out, enlisting many new and strong workers, especially men. In fact if there is a stronger all around pastor in the church I have not worked with him. Let me point the reason: he plans his work to the last tassel; he works his plans thoroughly; when this is done he trusts in the power of prayer for results. This will win anywhere.

After three weeks of Pittsburgh I went on to Altoona, stopping at Johnstown a few hours to talk with Brother Trent about church extension. Trent is one of the big departmental heads in the Cambria steel works which employ about 18,000 men and use about 60 switch engines in their yards alone. He brings some of the vision of big business to the Mission Board of which he is secretary. Old Pennsylvania is going to do business on a big scale; just watch her when Beachler gets there.

Altoona I found to be the greatest locomotive city in the world with 75,000 people in the city proper and outlying boroughs. Her great shops turn out a new locomotive for the Pennyslvania lines every two days, repair about 6,500 in her round houses monthly and rebuild about 50 a month, besides making and repairing cars and other railroad material. 18,000 people work in these shops and we found them working all day and until about nine every night on the great winter's tie-up. This hindered things very much in the meeting or it would be hard to say where it would have stopped. The church is well located in a field of its own and easy of access by car. We doubt if a downtown church would have been wise in a city of this size. Brother Benshoff we found an efficiency man like Harley and of the same faith in prayer. He had the most intimate knowledge of this great field so no time was wasted in our short three weeks together. To this notable fact and his continual example in intercession we attribute the remarkable phenomena of this meeting which began on the third night and scarcely missed a service with large numbers of penitents in prayer and bitter tears. We never saw it before "on this fashion."

Altoona and the Morrison Cove country remind me much of the Miami Valley and Dayton. We have a number of churches scattered through this great populous country. Brethren Byers and Hall are pastors of two of these circuits. Viewing the thing as an outsider it seems to me agreat boost could be given to the cause of Brethrenism if a Blair County Association of Brethren churches could be formed to get the Brethren acquainted and popularize the doctrine. A sort of Pen Mar picnic, to imitate the Maryland Brethren, held annually, also an anual inter-church doctrinal conference and much newspaper advertising would do much to give momentum to the cause which we love. We believe the Brethren are awake to some such thing and with their great field it seems they are on the border of a great advance.

Leaving Altoona after a great spiritual feast with the Brethren I had the happy privilege of meeting Mrs. Ronk's brother, Dr. H. H. Wolfe, lieutenant in the Ambulance corps, at Allentown, visited Gettysburg and Antictam as well as St. James with Brother Willis, greeted Brother and Sister Cover at Hagerstown, ran in at Ashland, peeped in at Sidney, Indiana and spent Sunday watching the immortal "Billy" flay the German-American Alliance, the Kiser, the Devil and Booze all in one mighty drive. At the same time I heard a lot of irresistable logic, eloquence and good sound gospel preaching. All around could be heard fervent commendation from folks who had not heard such gospel since they left the old country meeting house. Chicago needs it and is taking it with thanks. At the invitation swarms came. With two big ushers in front of him and the penitents converging in two lines shaking with each hand alternately with marvelous rapidity Sunday was kept busy. After 25 minutes the jam became so intense "Rhody" had to call a halt to straighten the traffic out. Being ordered to the platform with others I looked down on two lines of penitents each jammed six abreast and stretching back half the width of a city block. The feverish handshaking did not let up for 47 minutes by my watch. As a physical ordeal it was wonderful. The number coming must have been about 2,500, as at the men's meeting he recived about 800 in 17 minutes. With a good opportunity to observe it was evident that to some the service was not very significant. But for very many it was evident by their faces that they had passed from death into life for which we praised the gracious Father.

This finds us back in Leon in excellent fighting trim for a long, hard battle with the hosts of evil. We are making progress. Pray for us. Brother Frank Coleman and our evangelistic singer Ed. Kemp are in a union meeting, saving multitudes as usuual. Pray for them. They are children of the mission. G. T. RONK.

Brighton, Indiana

After almost four months of no services we are slowly getting back again to normal. Sickness of the pastor and the extreme bad weather forced us to withdraw our services for a great number of Sundays. But with the better weather and health we are again "on the job." It goes slowly, however, but we trust that soon we will again be running on our regular basis.

Easter found us very well prepared in some ways and in some others not so well. We hope to make good in all very soon. Our program was very nicely given. Our offering was about half our apportionment but we will send it all later.

We are looking forward to Brother Thomas coming to be with us for three weeks to hold a revival meeting. This is a little late for a farming country but we will endeavor to put it across for the Lord. We expect to start our summer campaign soon after Brother Thomas leaves. Our outlook for conversions is good. Many people are friendly toward our church and it is our prayer that we may line them up with the work and above all with the blessed Lord. We do not know how it is in other Brethren churches where young men have taken the non- combatant exemption, but here in Brighton our church has suffered somewhat in the community standing it once held. This of course we feel sorry for but we feel that if the church is to be true to its doctrinal standards it will have to suffer something in a time like this. But we are being more fully understood day by day as the folks around us are looking into what we really do stand for on this question. We think, however, that the coming meeting will be hindered somewhat because of this. We want you to pray for Brother Thomas and Brighton that we may put forth our very best for the Lord and the salvation of souls.

May God bless his church. May his guiding hand be upon it, for only as he leads will it know how to follow. May God bless the ministry this day that they may preach fearlessly the whole truth without favor to any. E. W. DEITRICK.

First Brethren Church, Elkhart, Indiana

We wish especially to report our evangelistic services which closed March 24. The meetings continued for three weeks and were conducted by brother A. E. Thomas, of South Bend. Brother Thomas fearlessly preached the whole gospel and spared none of the prevalent sins of the modern world. His sermons were well received and much appreciated. We were glad for the opportunity to work with Brother Thomas and rememger him in prayer in his future meetings. The results of the meetings were 34 conversions and reconsecrations. We have already baptized and taken into the church 12 of this number. Six will go to other churches, a few are undecided because of home objections and the rest await baptism. On the whole the results were far beyond our expectations since there has been a large ingathering every year. During the meetings there were two decisions as life work recruits. We ask an interest in your prayers for these two young people that they may have an open door to a larger preparation for their work and a long life of service for their Christ.

At the regular quarterly business meeting of the church last week the present pastor was called to remain another year beginning October first. We are now beginning April, our sixth year as pastor here. We have accepted the call at a substantial raise in salary, the increase in salary however, to begin at once. We appreciate the confidence of the people of the Elkhart church and pray that our year together will be profitable both for them and the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The church here is doing most commendable work. Nearly every goal in the Four-Year Program will be met this year. Through the duplex envelopes the 30 cents per member for district missions, 20 cents for national missions, 40 cents for foreign missions and six cents per member for benevolences will all be reached without any extra offerings. All this among a laboring people. This the Elphart church is doing besides supporting a pastor full time, with a membership of 175. These results come through consecration and systematic giving.

The church is planning to either remodel the old building or secure a new site and build a new church. Part of the Easter offering of $103 in the Sunday school will be given for this purpose.

With fervent prayer for our beloved church and an abiding faith in the final triumph of the kingdom of God in all the earth we press on. H. H. WOLFORD.

Uniontown, Pennsylvania

Ere leaving my particular field of service to spend a few weeks assisting our good brother I. D. Bowman in a three weeks' evangelistic effort, I take a few moments to give an account of our doings so far in 1918. Our services have been fairly well attended, despite the extremely cold weather that we have had. Being located upon one of the richest coal fields of the country we were in no straits for fuel hence all services went on at their usual time. Those uniting with the church in the meetings held prior to Christmas, are already giving account of themselves, which is noteworthy and commendable. The church was never in better condition numerically, financially and permit me to say, spiritually. The fact of spiritual development has made all the others possible. I'll venture that if we would stress more the spiritual growth, and not so much the jots and tittles of the law, there would be no need of agonizing for our pittance given to missions and the other benevolences of the church.

Our Sunday school is rather above the average made last year, and when we strike our spring stride we will go beyond anything done so far. With a school running about 130 in attendance we are averaging close to $8.00 per Sunday in offering, which speaks well for a body no larger than ours. Then no call for assistance on the part of the work at large is turned down. At present the Sunday school is boosting for larger and more improved quarters which they will no doubt have before the year closes. The church has undertaken to enlarge the auditorium somewhat and in addition erect a Sunday school annex that will house our growing school and add to its efficiency. This is an undertaking necessitating an expenditure of about $5,000 or a little more. Of this amount the people of the church pledged $3,000 inside of two weeks and so we feel justified in going to the work. But Brother Beachler better give us a wide berth for this year, for although we don't intend to do less than our share for the college, we can do it better a little later. I feel safe in pledging Uniontown to come across with her proportionate part of the $100,000.

We have just lifted our Easter offering and it may interest our friends to know that again we have "topped" our past efforts in this line. Last year we gave $59, which was well above that asked of us, and this year we "go over the top" with a total offering of $84. Remember at Christmas we give $102 for Kentucky work, and we keep our "home fires burning," too, the quarterly report of the financial secretary being the best in the history of the church and then you will surely believe that these people have, or at least are getting the true vision. It would have done some of the "Ancient Order of Tightwads" a deal of good to have been present last Sunday afternoon (Easter) when the Juniors and Intermediate C. E. societies lifted their share of the offering. They held a joint meeting with exercises appropriate to the day, and then they passed the plates. The tots had been preparing for that event for some weeks, and so had the Int ermediates, consequently they came "heeled" for the event. It was worth a good bit to see the little ones with their pocket-books bulging with pennies, open said pocket-books, and taking hold of the bottom edges empty out the last cent for the little girls and boys across the sea. Yes, they left the services cleaned out financially but filled up with a something that some older folks could afford to empty themselves occasionally in order to obtain. Sixteen dollars was the total of their offering, and it is divulging no secret to say that they alone gave four dollars more than this whole church gave to the foreign mission board any one year up to three years ago.

I know this is rather lengthy, but I must say a word for the S. S. C. E. and the Y. P. S. C. E. The sisters are going strong. They have helped the church work in all ways in the past and now they pledge to pay $500 on the building extension, with a hint that $500 won't hold them. I'll tell you they are alive awake on the job all the time. The Y. P. S. C. E. is also a wide-awake organization. Their meetings are well attended and that means they are well conducted. Brother Finnell, the president, is ever on the alert to keep something doing. Then our youngest society the M. & M., is also taking root. We look to this body of young ladies to give a good account of themselves as the days go by and they get better established. Even to date they have done commendable work, and will undoubtedly take an active part in the work of church extension.

One more word and I've done. With all the activities and excellent support of the the church and its interests, this people took it upon themselves recently to surprise the pastor and his consort. The surprise shaped itself into a Wilton velvet rug that lay upon the floor one recent Wednesday evening on our return from prayer meeting. The rug is a beauty, the price was considerable, the surprise was complete and ties of love are certainly stronger than ever. It was surely a testimonial of love and even though we can't give each of the members a rug in return, we wish we could. May God bless this people and church and may they move on to greater things in his name. We are doing all in our power to pull across the Four-Year Program and pray as well as work for its success throughout the brotherhood. Pray for us. BROTHER ED.

Hamlin, Kansas

Last fall we returned to Hamlin after an absence of six years. When a pastor comes back into an old field of labor, he feels as though h e has dropped down into a strange world. He can really sympathize with old Rip Van Winkle. Among the familiar faces he sees many new ones. The children that he knew are now the young people and the babies are the children. We will have to confess that it took us some little time to readjust ourselves to the situation. But we feel now that we have reached our equilibrium and are very much at home again.

The past winter has been unusually cold for Kansas, yet our people have been very faithful in their attendance. Through the month of February the churches of the town united in the Sunday evening service in obedience to the request of the coal commission. We all enjoyed these union services, but we were glad to get back to our own evening services. We think we can see an increased interest and attendance lately.

After coming here last fall, we called a special business meeting and voted to accept the Four-Year Program as our standard of work. One of the first things we did was to put the Brethren Evangelist into every active Brethren home in the congregation. Brother G. F. Berkley and the pastor were appointed to make the canvass to raise the budget. Brother Gill helped us to put up a strong talk in favor of the church paper. We were really surprised at the willingness of the people to subscribe. I feel that the biggest part of reaching the goals on the Four-Year Program has been made when the Evangelist goes into each home. It is the preacher's best campaigner to put the Program "over the top" in the local church. In fact it is something the church ought to have done long ago. It brings the weekly information that helps the people to know the work of the church. Since it has been in each home we have put over the Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter offerings in fine shape. The church has adopted the budget the system of finance. The S. S. C. E. is working to be a standard society.

The Hamlin Sunday school has been a Front Line school for several years and we expect to keep our record good this year. The Sunday school is doing good work in spite of the fact that we are very much in need of more room for Sunday school work. This need will very likely be met in time. Not long ago, the Delta Alpha class, Mrs. Grant Bergley, teacher, gave a short patriotic service and presented the school with a service flag with six stars in honor of the six boys from the young men's class that have enlisted in the service of the country. The same class served a lunch recently at a sale and cleared a good sum that was turned over to the work of the Red Cross.

On Easter Sunday evening the choir rendered a very beautiful service which was given in the new town hall. The cantata was entitled "Mary of Bethany." There was an immense crowd in attendance. Many came from other towns nearby. The Hamlin church people have always been noted for their musical talent and good programs, and this program did not disappoint the people.

This church has added three by letter recently. They are looking forward for a revival early next fall. We are praying that the Lord will bless the effort with many souls. We ask your prayers for our work.

S. C. HENDERSOON.

Spokane, Washington

The Lord is still blessing us without measuse as he always does. Though our building is not going up as fast as we would like, or even as we need, God alone knows why, still, we are having other blessings which far outweigh the erection of the building.

The Lord has not only sent a revival upon the church body itself, but also upon the heads of sinners has conviction weighed heavily. Seven more have taken the Lord for their Savior, and there are four more to be baptized on Easter Sunday. There have been twenty additions since about the first of the year, all heads of families but three, two young men and a young lady. And there are many more who are making their last stand against their only hope of salvation, and will soon be in the fold.

We are just beginning services in a new quarter of the city, where 50 or 60 have been gathered together in a Sunday school, and we are planning to start preaching services in a couple of weeks. From the way it appears, we will soon have a fine work there, for there is plenty of material to work on, and the whole community is crying for such a work, and are agreeing to assist all they can.

Though we are not yet fully established here at the main church, yet we know that in helping others, we ourselves will grow stronger. Brethren, pray for the northwest and help the northwest all you can, it will pay big dividends in souls. This new work is the result of the faithful work on the part of one of the sisters of the church who saw the needy field and went to work for the Lord.

We are beginning our cottage prayer meetings now in preparation for our revival. We expect to have a revival prayed down by the time Brother Jennings gets here so that he won't have to work one up. Altogether, we are having a wonderful time with the Lord. "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad."

Ashland College Notes

The writer spent Easter Sunday and the first few days of the week at New Lebanon, Ohio. We were especially pleased to find in full swing an evangelistic meeting led by the Welsh Evangelist, A. E. Thomas. Thomas' preachments come from a fiery, spirit-filled heart, his messages are brimfull, whole gospel appeals, given with rare eloquence and all the nervous, energetic eloquence of a human dynamo. It is needless to say that Thomas "grips." Thus far for the man and his message.

One thing above all others which impressed the writer about this little evangelist was his devotedness and loyalty to the church and ASHLAND COLLEGE. Night after night, Thomas held up faculty, student body and college in the finest light. Were that there were more men of his stamp. He paid especially fine tribute to Dr. W. D. Furry and Prof. J. A. Garber. We have learned to love the little Welshman through our association with him at New Lebanon. Brother Lambert, Thomas and the writer are all Johnstown, Pennsylvania boys and you may be sure there was splendid co-operation.

Most of the students went home or to the homes of friends for the Easter vacation. They come back ready to make the final lap of the academic year.

Dr. Furry addressed an Easter Sunday audience at the Dayton City Y. M. C. A. on the subject, "The Moral Challenge of the Present Age." We felt our bosoms and our hat bands swell when we saw his pictures in all the Dayton papers and read the huge posters advertising Dr. Furry, of Ashland College. His message was well received.

Senior play rehearsals are in full swing. The play is to be given April 18, in High School Auditorium of Ashland City.

The writer is including another college song this week.

Ashland College
Fair place of knowledge
Where the youth meet
And old friends greet
Fling out your banner of true allegiance
While we sing now
Our Ashland song.
Ashland, Ashland, that's the place to be
Ashland, Ashland, that's the place for me.
Where I will be, to strive and learn and do my very best
To put dear old Ashland "C" a little above the rest. F. M. L.

Gone, But Not Forgotten

In our associations in life there are some things that occur that so impress us that we can not easily forget them. Will the readers of our beloved Evangelist bear with us while we relate a few things in the church at Beaver City that make us feel sad and lonely, although we may expect them.

In 1903 brother John Crawford, one of our deacons, a very faithful brother, went to his long home. On July 3, 1913, sister Mabel Baer, an accomplished lady of much promise in the very bloom of life passed away to be with us here no more, soon to be followed by her father, Israel Baer, a noble, self-sacrificing Christian and also one of our deacons who faithfully filled his place in the choir, now so nobly represented and filled by his children. We can not forget our own daughter Beulah for whom the death angel called July 27, 1913, at the age of 30 years. When quite young she was called upon to fill the place of organist for Sunday school and church which place she filled for years. Next was Grandma Crawford whom the children almost worshiped as Sunday school teacher. Her obituary notice appeared in the Evangelist with that of B. F. Seibert recently in memory of whom we have more to say.

Benjamin Franklin Seibert was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, September 28, 1854 and died at Beaver City, Nebraska, February 10, 1918, aged 63 years, 4 months, and 12 days. Early in life he realized the need of a personal Savior and was baptized by Michael Weand. Leaving his native state in 1878, he arrived at Beaver City the middle of March and located on a farm five miles east of Beaver City, Furnas county, Nebraska, near the place where the Brethren church was organized on December 7, 1884, when Frank Seibert, as we always named him and Israel Baer were chosen to serve as deacons. Both were eminently fitted to fill the place for which they were chosen. Brother Seibert was one of the most liberal hearted men I ever worked with. He was a busy man and always let God occupy first place in all that he did. He was a man of excellent judgment whether in religion or business. On the 24 day of December 1889 Brother Seibert and Mary Tripe, the well chosen bride, were joined in marriage by the writer at the close of the Christmas eve exercises. Brother and Sister Seibert were well mated and by industry and judicious management became quite prosperous. They have a family of three children now living, namely, Lottie, the oldest, married to J. D. Kemper, pastor of the church at Morrill, Kans., Ruby and Mildred at home with their mother. The will of Brother Seibert directs that one-tenth of the proceeds of his farms shall be paid to the church until the youngest child becomes of age. Brother Seibert was a beloved husband and father, a friend to everybody and a full fledged Christian. Though now dead he will live at Beaver City many days to come.

of one loving popularity more than he loves God, [I Sam. 31:4, 5]. Again, look at Belteshazzar the king, What caused him to tremble at the handwriting on the wall? Was it the love he had for God? Nay, verily, Belteshazzar had been trained by his father Nebuchadnezzar to serve other, than the true God. [See Dan. 5:4]. Not only was Belteshazzar serving god's of gold, but he was setting the example for others to follow. Fathers, mothers, take warning as to what kind of an example you set before your children, and how you train them. [See Eph. 6:4]. Teach them [Mark 12:30] as the text, and if lived up to it will solve all questions between nations, neighbors, church members, family troubles, and the great temperance question that is causing so much discord, and agitation among the people.

Just change the love for the world, for the love of God, and note the change in your own home, your neighborhood, your church, yourself. See what it would do; it would fill up vacant seats in the church house, [See Heb. 10:25]; it would feed the hungry, clothe the naked, entertain the stranger, visit the sick, etc. [See Matt. 25:35, 26]. Cause us to love our brother, [I John 3:17 also 4:20]. So we say that God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in Him. [I John 4:16]. If the love of God is able to lift us up out of sin, and to sustain us, and keep us from yielding to temptations. Is it not high time we make the change? change the love we have for the world, and for the things of the world, for the love of God. [See I John 2:15]. What can we expect of the world for our service? What can the world give you for your service? No man can serve two masters, [Matt. 6:24] "for where your treasurers are, there will be your heart also," [Matt. 6:21]. Love for God is the mark of discipleship, [John 13:34, 35]. This is the mark we want in our foreheads; if we don't have the mark, God can not, and will not recognize us as one of his servants. What the love of God has done for others, it will do for us, if permitted to reign in, and control our hearts. See what it did for Joseph, when he was tempted by his mistress, [Gen. 39:9, 10]. It was able to deliver him from one of the greatest temptations that men can be tempted with. Listen, "there hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." [I Cor. 10:13]. It caused Joshua to take a stand for the Lord. [Jos. 24:15]. It caused David to spare Saul's life, when Saul was seeking to destroy and take his life. [I Sam. 26:9]. It delivered the three Hebrew children out of the burning fiery furnace, [Dan. 3:26]. It closed the lions' mouths that they did not hurt Daniel, although he was cast into their den, [Dan. 6:16, 22]. This love caused Stephen to be filled with the Holy Ghost, and turn his eyes to heaven in the midst of sore persecutions and to pray for his enemies, [Acts 7:59, 60]. What did it do for Saul? It caused him to cry out and say, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Acts 9:6. It caused the scales to fall from his eyes that he might see, and know his duty toward God [Acts 9:18]. Brother, sister, friend, have the scales fallen from your eyes enough so you can get a glimpse or a vision of the love of God, and see what he wants you to do?

Now in conclusion, let me entreat you as one that loves your soul; set your affections on things above, not on things here on the earth. When the love of God fills, and reigns supremely in our hearts the divorce court will pass into history, prisons will be vacated, churches filled. What is wrong today? Men are traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. [II Tim. 3:1, 5]. THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEED IS A CHANGE FROM THE LOVE OF THE WORLD, TO THE LOVE OF GOD.

VOLUME 40 ASHLAND, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1918 NUMBER 15

Editorial

The Veterans in the Lord's Army

In a recent number of The Christian Advocate a writer refers beautifully to "the Road of Loving Hearts," which the simple Samoan Islanders built for their friend, Robert Louis Stevenson. The road was cut through the brush with many weary weeks of labor and toil, in order that the beloved story-steller might come and go, unhindered, between the beach and his house in the woods. It was a labor of love, and this is the inscription prepared for it by the native chiefs who built it: Considering the loving care of us in our distress, we have prepared a splendid gift. It shall never be muddy; it shall endure forever—this road that we have dug.

Thus did a lowly people honor one who had ministered to them faithfully without thought of reward, with morning face and morning heart. Significantly Dr. Hingely asks: "What of those other servants of God who, lacking perhaps the genius of Stevenson, lacked nothing of his courage, his patience, his sunny-hearted sacrifice? What of the aged ministers who, now too feeble to labor and earn, are without property or income—sometimes even without the common comforts of life? We owe them a debt money cannot repay—but we can pave the last mile of their roadway with loving gifts, and so make it easier for their weary feet which, without help, will find it all too rough. Can we do less than the Samoan Islanders for men who have taught and helped us—strengthened, encouraged, and believed in us? Shall we send them home by "The Road of Loving Hearts", or must they travel the rocky path of sorrow—forgotten by those for whom they labored?"

The Church of the living God can well afford to pay tribute to its veterans with hair of silver and hearts of gold. We have in our Almanac and Year Book a real Roll of Honor, on which are found the names of those whose ordination to the Gospel ministry dates back more than half a century. The Editor felt it would be a blessing to the readers of THE MESSENGER to have a special number of our Church paper devoted to our veterans, with brief messages from these men of God who have been so long in the Lord's service. We remember a great military procession, held some years ago, in which soldiers of the Civil and Spanish-American wars, as well as cadets from West Point, participated. Everybody admired the precision and finesse of the cadets, with their perfect alignment, their spick and span uniforms, their beautiful new flags. But the chief applause and homage of the multitude was not for them, but for the grizzled old veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, marching with tottering footsteps under battle-scared old flags that had come through the fire of shot and shell. "Let not him that girdeth on his armor boast himself as he that putteth it off." So we asked these men who have borne the burdens of many years to give a message to the Church of to-day, which it will be wise for us to hear and heed. Let them tell us what they feel the Reformed Church most needs to-day, what vision of the future task and opportunity they would set before our Zion, to what special activity their mellowed wisdom and accumulated experience would summon us. We are to listen not to the chirp of fledgelings, not to the vaporings of raw recruits, but to the counsels of these aged warriors of the faith who have fought the good fight—all of them for more than three score years and ten, and some for well-nigh a century.

We have been much moved not only by the willing response of these beloved fathers in Israel, but by the spirit of appreciation revealed in their replies. A few were prevented by physical disability from writing a message, a few were held back by a characteristic modesty and reticence—"we have never written anything for publication, and fear we could not write anything acceptable now"—and the rest, including that grand old Nestor of them all, Dr. P. C. Prugh, wrote letters which we are sure you will prize highly. Not a few expressed surprise that anyone should have thought of them as able to say anything worth while in our Church paper. They had almost come to think of themselves as "derelicts," or as "laid upon the shelf"; it was rather pleasant to come back in this way and speak to those now carrying on the more strenuous tasks of the Kingdom.

What useful members of society the old folks are—how poor the earth would be without them! It is a great temptation for them to think that their days of usefulness are over, and that they are "only in the way." What a mistaken notion! "If the Lord thought old folks were useless, He would devise some way suddenly to get rid of them." Is it ability to work which alone makes a person useful? No, indeed. "A baby cannot earn a penny, cannot do a stroke of work, and yet it is often the most important factor in the household." So an old man sitting in an arm chair, feeble and helpless, may be the most useful ,member of the family, and may linger amongst us as a benediction to many. Wise are they who rise up before the hoary head and cherish the counsels of the aged. Old people supply a necessary conservative force, making for the stability of society. Best of all, they link us to Heaven, reminding us of the future life and binding us more closely to the throne of God.

We owe a debt to these aged servants of our dear Lord, if we have in any way fallen short in our duty of considerateness and veneration and suitable provision for those no longer able to labor in the vineyard, but who wrought so nobly in the days gone by, we need to be reminded anew by these messages from our veterans of our obligation to them not only for what they once were, but for what they now are. They have grown old beautifully, these soldiers of the cross, and their hearts are filled with the optimism of a living faith. They do not strike one dismal note; they reveal the good cheer of men who know that "the best is yet to be." Thank God for our Veterans! May it be our joy to help in keeping these gray-haired warriors of the Lord on "the road of loving hearts."

From the Editor's View-Point

"HALT THE HUN"

This is the title of a poster designed by Henry Raleigh to assist the American people to decide in favor of the Third Liberty Loan just made to our government to support the war. It is a most striking poster and it and posters of other designs made for the same purpose were sent out all over America to the number of NINE MILLION to drive home this appeal for funds. Of course it was successful, such appeals cannot be otherwise when made to the American people, not alone on the continent but in all the island possessions as well. This is what is called GOOD advertising, that is it gets what it is designed to get, the attention of the people, and it gets this in the way about eighty two percent of all attention is secured, through the "eye gate" to knowledge.

The religious forces of the world have done SOME advertising in the past and are doing more of it now, but in the minds of some church advertising is regarded in about the same way advertising is considered by a physician of old school, a method to be used by quacks only. But we feel this is a mistake, and while the church and the church people are to keep themselves "unspotted from the world," yet there are some methods employed by the world to "do things" that might be used to good advantage by the church, and one of these is more systematic and more persistent advetrizing. But some one says, "Advertising costs money." Of course it costs money, most any good thing costs something and when the good is considered the cost is very little reckoned with. But think of the results of the expenditure of a little or even much money in intelligent advertising. Right here in Ashland county, Ohio the portion of the Third Liberty Loan was assigned them which amounted to $450,000.00 and it was all subscribed the first day of the campaign with $30,000.00 over for good measure. Certainly no such appeal can be made to the church, and yet when the work and mission of the church are considered would it not be possible to adopt some SIMILAR system to acquaint the people with the needs of the church if it would "proclaim liberty to the captives" of all the nations of the earth.

THINKING VICTORY

The effect of right thinking is most generally recognized though the practise of it is not always followed out. A very pointed and striking paragraph or rather only a half line, appeared in a recent number of The Independent. It was, "Don't think peace, think victory!"

This was not said because the editor of The Independent does not want peace, for he does, but just now he feels that victory is more important than peace, and, whether he recognizes the principle as one put forward by Jesus or not, he adopts the principle, "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he." The man who thinks victory is far nearer to victory than the one who thinks defeat or than the one who only thinks peace. It should not be forgotten that there is a "peace of the devil as well as the peace of God," and most of us are now convinced that any peace that would be brought to the world with Germany still in her arrogant and self centered mood would be "the peace of the devil." We believe the whole Christian world wants peace, but we also believe that all sane thinking people want right to gain a decisive victory over wrong before any attempt at peace is made.

The principle laid down by Jesus concerning the effect of one's thinking upon his life is being demonstrated to be a sound principle every day, and if it were more generally practiced in connection with one's regular Christian living there would not be such an opportunity for some modern philosophies and "new thought" cults to get a hold on the people to win them away from the true faith," once for all delivered unto the saints."

In this time of crisis in the church as well as in the world it is wise for the Christian people to think only victory in the work of the eternal kingdom. The kingdom of Jesus Christ must be established. It is not for us to say how. The plan of the ages has been fixed and in due time the cause of Jesus Christ will prevail, and it is more than heresy, it is TREASON for us to think anything but VICTORY for his cause. Our faith should make us strong and courageous.

FOR THERE IS NO OTHER WAY.

A short time ago Ex-President Taft in an informal address in Pittsburg speaking as President of the League to Enforce Peace said:

"The successful working out of the plan of the League of Nations to Enforce Peace depends primarily on winning victory over the Kaiser and his Potsdam gang on the western front. The whole energies of the nation should be devoted to that by adequate preparation.

We face a two or three years' war and we should, in our draft, provide for an army of 5,000,000 men, train and, as our ships are built, send them over.

With these we can win the war, and whom we do all the nations, including the German people, made amenable by defeat of their present vicious leadership, will be anxious to make a league to prevent another war.

We cannot make progress by further debate with Germany and Austria. Blows are the only arguments now possible to win permanent peace."

And the editor of one of the great magazines of the country adds these few words: "Mr. Taft is right. This is now the only way. We must face it with high courage and grim determination."

And who are we to gainsay what these wise men have declared, but we remember on an occasion a good many years ago when a crisis came in the life of a people the Nazarine in his meek and quiet manner declared, "I am the way," and we remember that some years later when his disciples had been brought face to face with the struggle between faith and materialism one of the fishermen apostles stood up and boldly declared, "for there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby ye must be saved." And while we must trust to the wise men of the world to arrange matters between the nations of the earth we can only trust and at least pray that they may not forget that the fundamentals of all true peace are found in the teaching and in the life of the one who declared, "I am the way." In his way is permanent peace.

FOSSILIZED FOGYISM.

For a number of years the boards of education in many of our cities have refused to engage married women to teach in the public schools, and some of the states seem to have made it a state law that such an exclusion should be observed in all the schools. The reason advanced by the Chicago board of education some years ago was that it had a tendency to make loafers out of the men and that there were too many men in the city who were lying around awaiting an opportunity to marry some lady teacher in the public schools so that they might live off of her earnings. Of course there are some males, not men, who are willing to be the "clinging vine," but not many and we take that more as a masculine "excuse" than as a reason.

It can not be denied that a married woman might have her interests divided if she were to continue as a teacher in the schools, but this is not necessarily so, while on the other hand it should be recognized that a woman who has received the training for a teacher that the schools give and has married and has had the experience of studying and observing the development of her own children is eminently more fitted to deal with the child problem than the one who has mastered the theory only as taught in the books and in the schools.

A great many things that had gone wrong in the development of American life and American civilization during the

WHY A PROGRAM

By G. T. Ronk

Sufficient time has passed since the last National Conference and definite methods, inquiries and reports have been in circulation long enough to allow a general view of the cause for failure to respond to the program in some quarters. In some cases it has been lack of a pastor, in others temporarily disrupted local machinery, in others the grim facts of local conditions which render church work a battle for existence at the very best. It is well for those who serve as pastors of stable, well organized churches—and are careful to serve only such—to restrain their righteous indignation just a little. It requires not a little acquaintance with our church as a whole to appreciate what a respectable per cent of our congregations actually live and get results under conditions that are perforce well nigh intolerable.

Of our whole number of churches let us remember there are quite a few where a full organization is impossible. Some can be little more than preaching points, without prayer-meeting or C. E. or Women's Organizations. Lack of local leaders and overworked circuit pastors, roads, distances, industry, malodorous past history, all conspire in a way to make an extensive program impossible. All such should and do receive our sympathy. Better to do what little can be done than nothing.

However, this article is addressed to the men who are not in sympathy with any general program, and there are such, especially among the older brethren, who do not understand or approve of what we are trying to do.

Standardizing The Product.

The Four-Year Program represents, first an effort to bring to church work some of that wisdom and foresight which has built up such a great industrial age. Automobiles, bicycles, pianos, sewing-machines and a host of other articles, including war munitions, have been standardized so that vital parts are of one size and description. The same thing has happened to the public school which we call "grading." So our program represents an effort to do our work easier and more completely by doing it alike and at the same time. That which has proven out in one place is made available everywhere else.

Conservation of Energy.

This systematization of work will result in much saving of energy by concreting for pastors and local leaders what they are driving at and when they have succeeded. Everywhere the pastors' great bugaboo is the anarchic disorder of his interests and work, so that too many men labor continually under a mountain of unorganized, unfinished tasks. While a part of this is imaginary the confused and dissatisfied state of mind is very real. Programming, not only of the general work but of their own time, hour by hour, is all that will ever save some men, and is a pretty general practice of big men everywhere and accounts for their bigness. It is just the capacity that big business men grow into, of getting definite tasks accomplished hour by hour that preachers and church leaders need to develop.

Quantity Production.

The natural sequel of standardization in the business world is quantity production. Surely there is nothing the Brethren church needs more and certainly this is the only avenue of approach to such a consummation. For instance, in the department of church extension there must be a co-ordination of effort of which we never dreamed. This part of the program is definitely marking time until our various boards can be gotten on common ground with one definite policy.

Spiritual Perspective.

Some of the lack of response to the program is because there is some fear the whole affair is an effort to do God's work in a purely human and mechanical way. Some have even said they prefer to get their results by prayer. Now, prayer we must have and spiritual results are the fruit of prayer. We all need to realize this and practice it more. This program business will not be complete until someone comes out with a program of the prayer life. But, let us plainly understand that God is not going to do through prayer that which is obvious and which we must do for ourselves. There is no more heretical and impotent doctrine than this. The giants in prayer are always giants in personal effort. Moreover, co-ordination of effort and prayer also is one of Christs first laws. "What two or three of you shall agree upon on earth shall be done of your father in heaven." "Go ye into all the world and disciple all nations eat." This is programming the prayer life and programming of effort. The best answer in all the world to "Why a Program."

PHENOMENA AND CAUSES OF POVERTY

By J. L. Gillin

Associate Professor of Sociology, University of Wisconsin

Poverty and pauperism are not synonymous. Pauperism means that mental condition which leads a person to try to live at the expense of the community in whole or in part, without giving an adequate return, rather than to earn one's own living. Poverty, on the other hand, is the condition in which one may find himself, which does not permit him to secure enough of the necessaries of life to maintain his economic and social efficiency. One may suffer from poverty and not be a pauper. On the other hand, one may be a pauper and yet not be poor. For example, a few years ago in New York city, an old Russian was found dead in his room, who for years had sat on the street corner and begged. Upon investigation it was discovered that he owned several houses worth many thousands of dollars and had almost a princely income. On the other hand, in a dark basement on the east side, a man in the last stages of tuberculosis was found, whose family for weeks had been living upon a 10-cent soup bone and stale bread obtained at Fleischmann's bakery at a penny a loaf. Here there was poverty, but no pauperism.

Just how much poverty there is in the world it is hard to say. In very few countries are there exact statistics. We know how many hogs and cattle there are in the United States; we know what the bank clearings were last year; we know how many people there are in the United States; we know how many paupers there were in almshouses in a certain year the last decade, but we do not know how many people were given relief outside of poorhouses in many states in the union to say nothing of the relief that is given by private societies and individuals. However, in spite of the fact that we have no authentic figures on the extent of poverty in the world, we have some very interesting estimates based upon accurate statistics from various cities in this and other countries. In 1903, in the United States, according to a special census bulletin, there were in almshouses 81,764 persons; in 1905 this had increased to 85,290, and 80,346 more in permanent homes for adults. Besides this, in orphanages and homes for children in the latter year there were 92,289, while 25,466 more were taken care of in municipal lodging houses and other temporary homes. Prof. Bushnel has estimated that there is a total of public and private dependents in the United States of not far from 3,000,000, or about one-twenty-fifth of the total population. The annual cost of supporting these is estimated at $200,000,000, or one-tenth of the total wages paid by all the manufacturing establishments of the country.

In 1910, nearly one-third of the entire population of the state of Massachusetts were beneficiaries of charitable corporations, according to the state board of charity of that state. However, it ought to be said that seven-ninths of these paid, in whole, or in part, for the service rendered. The annual cost of supporting the paupers in Massachusetts in 1909 was $5,806,188, or $1.93 per capita. There is a little more than one pauper per 1,000 of our whole population who are in almshouses alone.

An Estreme Estimate.

A more extreme estimate was made a few years ago by Robert Hunter. He, in his estimate, took into consideration those who much of the time were underfed, poorly clothed, and improperly housed. These he classed among the poor. Including this class, he estimates that 10,000,000 of our population are in this situation. As a part of his evidence, upon which he bases this estimate, he cites that in 1897, 29 per cent of the people of New York state applied for some kind of relief. This did not include relief given by small clubs, church circles, committees, etc. Even when he excludes one-half of the number who applied to medical dispensaries, as duplications, he finds that his figures still are 19 per cent of the population of the state who received relief, and leaving out all dispensary applications, 12 per cent received relief of some other sort. In 1903, 20 per cent of the population of Boston were aided in some way by the public authorities alone. In the same year in New York city, 14 per cent of the families living in that city were evicted from their homes because of their inability to pay rent. About 10 per cent of those who die on the island of Manhattan, in New York city, have pauper burials. Is it any wonder that the chief desire of all the poor on the east side of New York city should be to save money enough during their lifetime to have what they call a "decent burial?" According to a report of the Hebrew Charities in New York city for 1901, between 75000, and 100,000 Jews in that city had to depend on the public purse for help. According to the United States census in 1900, 100,000 persons in New York city alone were unemployed from four to six months in the year. On the basis of all these figures, Mr. Hunter estimates that 14 per cent of the people of New York state were in distress. Figures from a small town in Indiana, made about thirteen years ago and studies in Chicago made about eight years ago, lead him to the same conclusion. In 1900, over 2,000,000 of workmen were employed from only four to six months in the year. One-half the people of the country are practically propertyless. About 5,000,000 women in this country find it necessary to work, 2,000,000 being employed in mills and factories.

Another fact throwing light on the cause of poverty is that a million workers a year are killed or injured at their work, either throwing them out of employment or bringing poverty to them and their families.

Figures in Europe

When we go to Great Britain we find that in 1906, 27 out of every 1,000 of the population of England and Wales were receiving poor relief.

In London 32 out of every 1,000 were receiving help. Rowntree found that 15 per cent of the wage-earning class of the city of York in England and 10 per cent of the whole population of the city were living in primary poverty, while 18 per cent were living in secondary poverty, or in a condition where their income would have been sufficient to maintain them had they not squandered it on drink or gambling or through ignorant housekeeping. Thus for the whole population of York, about 28 percent were either in primary or secondary poverty. An investigation by Charles Booth showed about 31 per cent of the population of London are on or below the poverty line. In 1904, in London, one in every three persons who died, died either in the workhouse or a hospital or a lunatic asylum. According to the British Blue Book on Public Health and Social Conditions, issued 1909, 49 out of every 1,000 in England and Wales, 31 out of every 1,000 in Scotland, and 50 out of 1,000 in Ireland, and an average of 47 out of every 1,000 for the whole United Kingdom received poor relief in 1906 and 1907. In England and Wales the total expenditure by the public for the relief of the poor for the year ending Lady day, 1909, amounted to the enormous sum of $70,000,000. In the other countries of Europe, so far as figures are obtained, about the same situation prevails. Of course, in those countries where old age institutions are working, the figures for public relief are very much less.

Causes of Poverty.

The study of the causes of poverty have not yet been thorough enough to give us exact conclusions. For convenience the causes are divided into primary and secondary and contributory. The relative importance of these three classes of causes can not be stated numerically with exactness, Of the chief importance, however, are preventable diseases and accidents, unemployment owing to economic and social malajustment, to inefficiency of the worker, which in turn is largely due to inadequate preparation for his lifework and the abuse of alcohol and drugs. There is no doubt that the fight against tuberculosis, the propaganda in favor of the prevention of accidents, the dissemination of medical knowledge concerning personal and community hygiene, the proposition of a workingmen's compensation law, the proposal to introduce vocational training into the schools, all have an important bearing upon the cure of poverty.

Moreover, since housing conditions affect very directly the health of those who live in them, and touch the question of moral standards and a decent life, and since play-grounds and recreation centers affect vitally the question of physical recuperation, such movements as these and many others are concerned very closely with the question of the removal of the causes of poverty.

RECLAMATION

W. H. Morse

There are those who were born of Roman Catholic parentage, and who are at least nominally of Roman Catholic bringing up, who marry out of the Roman Catholic church, and after a time return to that fold openly or in a more or less furtive and clandestine manner.

The question that advances itself is as to what is to be done about it on the part of the friends of the transgressor who are not Roman Catholics. It may be the case that he or she has married a Hebrew or an atheist, but ordinarily the marriage is with a Protestant. So the question is as to the attitude of the Protestants in such a case.

All depends on circumstances. The husband or wife of the offender, as the case may be, may be a zealous Protestant, but I think that in the majority of cases this is not the case, and that he or she is only nominally a Protestant, and indifferent in larger or smaller measure to the claim of religion. It happens, however, that there are those who are ardent Christians who have married a Romanist, and who—perhaps by excessive and distempered ardor—have actually prejudiced the partner against the faith. This occurs sometimes. Again, the husband or wife may be only nominal Protestants, and caring little or nothing about religious matters. In consequence of this indifference, the other is sometimes driven to take the step concerning which complaint is made. If a woman who was born of Catholic parentage sees her husband careless and apathetic religiously, the chances are that she will not be a very keen and devoted Protestant.

So the first thing to do is to reckon with home influences.

Corollary to this is consanguineous, racial, and neighborly influence. The Romanist who has married a Protestant is looked upon by her "folks" with commiseration. This pitying attitude never lessens, but rather grows as the years go by, and is accompanied with urgent endeavor to get the offender back into the church of her fathers. She is advised, urged, reproached, and made to feel, if possible, that she is in danger of being eternally lost if she remains outside. Her advisers consider that they have a mission to reclaim her, and no Protestant ever works more ardently to convert a sinner than the neighboring Catholics to reclaim a wanderer. They work without remission, and by precept, example, and sometimes with threat, do all they can to induce the return. And the neighbor, friend or relative who succeeds is happy in that success.

Then there is the influence of the priest. He regards the reclamation as his bounden duty, and he will not relax his efforts. Unlike the lay workers he does not advise as much as he commands. In dealing with the wanderer he is imperative, and when once the priest gets after a rover, he is not apt to relax his efforts until he has succeeded in his purpose.

Again, in addition to the attitude of the husband [or wife,] the relatives, friends, and the priest, there is the attitude of the Protestant neighbors. "Before marriage she was a Catholic" is all too often equivalent to denunciation. "He married a Catholic" is viewed as enormous. Consequently, and especially in New England, this is never forgotten, and the former Catholic is treated much as Protestants treat converted Chinamen, suspiciously, mistrustfully.

So get at the influences at the outset, and—deal with them, and deal accordingly. Having done this, let the 26th and 27th verses of the tenth of Hebrews alone. Do not treat the transgressor as if she had committed the unpardonable sin. But let those who want to bring her into the fullness of the Protestant faith, see to it that counsel is taken of God and of the Bible. It is not enough to "remember her in prayer;" but go and pray with her, and go in the strength of the Lord, from your own closet. Go, believing, determined, and in the name of Christ. And go often. Go, till you succeed.

And see to it that she is influenced to attend Protestant worship. [I am saying "she," but it is the same if it is a man.] Get her to church. Go for her, and see to it that she is there with you. It is no matter of mere advice. You must go and take her there, regularly. One who is in love with the neighbor can do it all right. If the husband is indifferent, and by that indifference prejudices her, get him to attend also.

Look up the Bible in her home. If it needs dusting, dust it, and open it. The Bible is potential, specific. It is along the same line as seeing to it that the Italians are welcomed with the Bible, and on their return to Italy, are equipped with it. You may be sure that the offender has not an out-and-out love for God's love. Get her in love. Make yourself a match-maker until you have got her to "set by" the Bible as you do, or as your grandmother did. Your success is insured if you get her in love with the Gospel. When it becomes to her her greatest treasure, she will not go to mass, for she will realize that Rome does not want her to have the Bible. The perversion to Romanism is not apt to occur if the Bible is "set by," and its counsels followed. And when it can be restored to her favor, and she humbly accepts the Gospel, then see to it that she unites with the church.

Don't scold. However much you may feel like doing it, it is not wise to condemn the Catholic church to the offender. Post yourself as to the unwisdom of Romanism, so as to be ready to repel any arguments she may venture; but don't go to condemning the Church of Rome, point-blank. Patriotism enters into the question here in America, and there is a book called "Romanism and the Republic" which is to be commended as enlightening. Get acquainted with Rome, and you will know how to act. There are certain papers that make a virtue of attacking Romanism, but I do not always advise that they be read. Above all else, do not slander the priests, and [unless you know it to be so] accuse them of laxity of morals. There are priests who are as religious and faithful to Christ as any Protestant ministers. No, it is anything but wise to slander them and one is short-sighted to do it. Never mind condemning the inquisition, indulgences, Mariolatry, intolerance, image-worship, and the free pronunciation of the word "Babylon". Never mind holding up Leo X. or any other offensive Catholic as an awful example, when, if you will, you can recall certain Protestant derelicts.

Pronounce the Virgin Mary's name with respect and honor. It is only an ignorant Protestant who inveighs against her, and to do so is sure to anger any one, Catholic or Protestant, who respects the mother of our Lord.

Down at the bottom of this whole thing is regret at mixed marriages. The Catholic church deprecates it, and the Protestants should do the same. How a Protestant can exhibit indifference in religious matters so as to marry a Catholic, or how a Catholic will ever consent to marry a Protestant, is more than I can understand. It is deplorable. If the one marries the other thinking to win him to her faith, she must be of the same family as she who marries a drunkard to reform him!

In seeking the reclamation of the one who has turned back on the Protestant faith, be persistent. Go to Christ in prayer, claim the promise, and be determined on success. If there are children of the mixed marriage, get them into Sunday-school, and keep them there.

The Obedient, Baptized Believer's Future, Etc.

Samuel Kiehl

"Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" precede baptism [Acts 2:38; 8:12]. Obedience must continue throughout time and eternity; for without obedience to the law of God there can be no temporal, social, physical, or spiritual enjoyment in this age, or in the ages to come.

Baptism signifies immersion; and if administered according to the formulae given in Mat. 28:19 giving equal honor to the Father, and the Son and the Holy Ghost testifies that the one thus baptized is in possession of a most exceedingly rare gift which the world does not have, a good conscience toward God [I Pet. 3:21], without which he would have no real spiritual enjoyment even if admitted into the visible presence of his heavenly Father.

The conscientious, baptized, spirit-led, [consequently obedient] believer in Christ Jesus is a Twentieth Century miracle; steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. [I Cor. 15:58].

Jesus to the eleven said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Mar. 16:15, 16. Peter, obedient to the Master, on the day of Pentecost in reply to the request, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" said, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you.". Then they that gladly received his word were baptized [Acts 2:37, 38, 41].

To such baptized [immersed] believers the "word" says, buried with him [Christ] in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him. If ye [baptized believers] then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye [obedient, baptized believers] also appear with him in glory [Col. 2:12; 3:1-4]. Praise the Lord; the Bible is full of precious promises for all who will receive Christ as their Savior and Lord; but the texts [Col. 2:12; 3:1-4] refer with special emphasis to obedient believers buried with Christ in baptism.

There are commandments, especially for believers, in the Bible which the obedient one will cheerfully [not reluctantly] obey. Without obedience to Christ he can have no hope of appearing with him in glory. Let us select only one, to illustrate the truth in the preceeding statement. Zechariah 8:16 says, "These are the things that ye shall do; Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor." [Eph. 4:25]. Any one [believer or unbeliever] who does not always speak the truth is said to be a liar: and the "word" says, All liars [instead of appearing with Christ in glory] shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone [Rev. 21:8.]

The "Ananias and Saphira" route is the easiest, and shortest way to the ultimate, unchangeable destiny of the fearful, the unbelieving, the abominable, murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, and idolatirs [Rev. 21:8]. How would any one like to spend an eternity with such associates? Let us beware, lest we, being led away, fall from our own steadfastness [II Pet. 3:17]. It is written, "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God" [Rom. 14:12]. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also rap" [Gal 6:7]. Faithfully obeying his Son is the kind of sowing that is always well pleasing to the Father.

Dear reader, are you and I, by the grace of God, always doing our very best to live the Christ life; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ [Titus 2:13]; or are we carelessly traveling on the broad way leading to the future home of the one "who does not speak the truth to his neighbor?"

Our heavenly Father, be pleased to cleanse us from all sin, and enable every one of us to say in sincerity and truth, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart [Psa. 40:8]. Be it so. We ask in the name of thine only begotten Son, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification. Glory be to his name. [Rom. 4:25].

WHAT WE ARE FIGHTING FOR

By Robert E. Speer

Chairman of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches

There ought to be no doubt among Christian men as to what we are fighting for in the war, as to the great moral and spiritual ends which justify it.

We are fighting to put an end, if we can, to war and to the burden and terror of armaments. It cannot be too often said that it is a war against war that we are waging. Both militants and pacifists often deride this idea, the former because they do not think that war can be or perhaps ought to be destroyed, the latter because they do not believe that war can ever be ended by war. But there are millions of men who hate war and believe it must be ended and who are able with conscience and determination to support this war because it seems to them unavoidable and necessary as a struggle directly aimed at war itself. They did not want war. The precipitation of the war by Germany outraged all their deepest convictions. And the principles and convictions and practices as to the nature and method of war on the part of Germany seem to these millions of men to be intolerable on our earth. To give them unhindered room would make the world an impossible home for free and friendly men. They must be destroyed. War against them is war against war. It is war for peace.

This purpose also nerves the men at the front on whom the burden falls heaviest. They see the irrationality and wickedness of war more clearly than anyone else. What sustains them is the thought that they are enduring it so that no one else may have to endure it. The thing is so dreadful that it is worth every sacrifice to slay it and to make sure that the world will not have to go through it again.

We are fighting against aggressive autocracy. Not yet against autocracy itself. We disbelieve in it and we fear it, but if any nation wants it for itself and can have it without letting it imperil all other nations thus far we have said that we have no right to interfere. It is not our business. Each people has the right of self-government. But we cannot sit quiet and let autocracy, unwilling to stay at home, go abroad to rule the world. It is the strong nation invading other nations, attacking the rights of humanity, perpetrating wrong and injustice, that must be resisted and bound to keep the peace, just as the strong man breaking the laws of society and perpetrating wrong and injustice in the state must be bound to desist from wrong.

We are fighting against the claim of nations to be above the moral law. A state cannot endure if one class of its citizens is allowed to excuse itself from the moral obligations which bind all others. And the world cannot endure if any nation is allowed to set itself above the principles of truth and justice and righteousness which have their ground in the character of God and which are the foundation of individual life and must be the foundation of national life and of international relationship. It is moral anarchy for any nation to set itself and its interests above the laws of God, which are laws of universal right and justice.

We are fighting against the idea of power as its own law, against the ancient claim of might to be its own right. This idea, if yielded to, puts an end to civilization. If we merely match might with might and try to disprove the claims of might by superior might we support the very law we attack. But if we use might for right and hold it subject to right, and repudiate utterly the principle that it is or can be anything apart from right, we may safely and we must unyieldingly oppose what strength we have or can get from God against the falsehood of power as its own warrant for aught that it can do. The very essence of evil is in this falsehood and must be destroyed.

And we are not only fighting against great falsehoods and wrong, we are fighting for a new world order of concord and peace and justice.

Just as in each nation the elements which had to be combined were compelled to give up their separate claim to the end that a righteous and stable political order could be established, so now we realize that the world must in some simple and practicable way be reorganized to provide some instrumentality of international justice which will settle difficulties by peaceful, judicial processes, as men settle their difficulties among themselves without murder or any violence. To carry mankind forward by such a big advance is worth any sacrifice necessary to win it.

All of these things ought to have been won without war. They have not been. Against our wills the great war which involves these issues came out and laid hold upon us and, whether we would or no, we had to take up our part. And now that duty cannot be played with. Asking God for His forgiveness for all that has been wrong in ourselves, humbly trusting His grace and seeking His strength, we are to take up our task in the spirit of those who know only one fidelity, the fidelity that knows no yielding until its task is done. Without hate or pride or wrongdoing, without using against evil the evil we deplore, without malice toward anyone and with charity toward all men, including our foes, with patience and tenacity and deathless devotion, we are to do the work that has come to us until it is done and done to last.

It is the business of the Church to keep clear and unconfused these moral ends which alone justify the war, to warn against hate and evil will, to strengthen in men's hearts the sense of deathless devotion to duty, to encourage faith in the possibility of establishing on the earth a righteous order worth living and dying for, to show men that they must and can behave now as citizens in a manner worthy of the Gospel of Christ, to maintain in the soul of the nation an unswerving loyalty to righteousness and a fearless love of all humanity, to make the nation humble and penitent before God, and to summon it to such obedience to God's holy law that it can confidently offer itself to Him for the accomplishment of His purposes of justice and truth.

last half century have received a complete shaking up since the entrance of our country into the great world war, and among the ideas jarred loose from ancient moorings are many of those pertaining to woman's place in life, especially in industrial and in professional life. This shaking up has reachd the schools systems of the country and we hope for better things after the war has been won by the Allies. United States Commissioner of Education, P. P. Claxton, has recently issued to the schools of the country to fill the depleted ranks of school teachers by appointing married women to such vacancies as need filling.

American Citizen!

No title the world can bestow is more splendid! And, never has it been as resplendent as now. It stands symbol to the world for peace! Freedom! There is nothing better! The world yearns for it. For ourselves we need not now a "new birth of freedom," as Lincoln said we did in 1863. We then learned again, and finally, its value. But, the rest of the world DOES need a new birth of freedom. And it is for this and this alone, that we fight and shall continue to fight until it is achieved. For the world's liberty we have armed two millions of beautiful young men—such as Saul said Absalom was. We are sending them over the sea to battle.

We shall send as many millions more as are needed to paralyze autocracy. We have spent twenty billions of money in a few months and shall spend as much more as is necessary to write Freedom on the gates of the world. Our splendid boys go to this world battle for liberty with gay songs on their lips. Many will be mangled— Many never return to us! Yet they go singing. Their mothers and sisters and wives—yea, the stranger among us—remain and keep the deserted gates! And they, too, sing. It is all beautiful beyond words. There is, there can be, no more splendid theme than this we are chanting: For the Liberty of the World.

Perhaps we stop sometimes to wonder why a good God makes all this to be. Trust him. Some time we shall know. It may be that he means this "heaven rescued land" to strike the finishing blow to the destroyers and proclaim liberty throughout all the world as it once did throughout all this land. That all this horror of blood has been permitted that WE may be made ready for this glorious stroke. For, God can not have meant the most benignant government this world has ever known to become the accomplice of monsters who fatten up on world-loot. He can not have meant that a people who ask nothing of the world but to share its priceless peace with it, shall stand idly by while the rest of the poples are despoiled of theirs. It may be that this is the price we are to pay humanity for a hundred and fifty years of liberty unsullied.

If the destroyers are right and we are wrong, then must we face the conclusion that all of God's creations were made only that the destroyers might state their gluttony in destruction. Their system or ours must now perish. The two can no longer survive in this world. I believe this to be the judgment of Almighty God.

American Citizen, which is best for the beleaguered world? Answer. And upon answer act. Answer with your money, your hands, your head, your heart—with all you have and are.!

This is being an American Citizen!—John Luther Long.

If any of the peace proposals which have come from the Teutonic allies had come from nations alive to their international obligations, jealous of their national integrity, scrupulous as to their general honor, the world might be cheered by the hope that, presently, when the scales had fallen from deluded but honest eyes, we might reach a basis which would offer the poor comfort of a gradual reapproachment. But the Teutonic allies are not such nations—not any of them. They are, together, notorious for the lack of the things mentioned above. So, behind each offer camouflaged as peace, hides the grinning skeleton of other wars; of national and personal deceit; of the advanse repudiation of the very obligations they propose to take; of the absolute indifference to right; of the utter lack of aggregate and individual honor. All these are gladly lost, sunk, destroyed, in the mad stress to achieve unholy means to unholy ends. It is hopeless to treat for peace with sovereigns so entirely turned from right to wrong thought. But one thing these peace offers with baleful, hidden purpose will do; they will fix forever our determination to conquer this intolerable thing and to turn the minds of the rulers and peoples who have conceived and are fostering it, toward the right, or else to put them aside from the path of honest nations and men, to live sequestered in their ignominy. One of these two things is to be the judgment of the world against the Teutonic allies.

A few me nstarted this war in the blindness of autocratic power; all men will settle this war in the open vision of democracy.—Josephus Daniels.

The Way that Wins

GOOD morning, Fred. How are you making it go?"

"Not so bad, Tom."

"About ready for exams, I suppose."

"Oh, I don't know. Guess so."

"The papers are going to be pretty stiff this year, I hear."

"That so?"

"Yes. The head-master has an idea that the Latin paper will make us hustle."

"Well, I don't care as long as I make a pass."

"Make a pass! Why, man, I'm going to try for a scholarship, and you can beat me if you dig in."

"What line are you taking?"

"Mathematics, of course, and I think I'll win out, too."

"Well, go ahead Tom. I wish you luck, but a pass will do me all right; I'm not going to kill myself if I know it."

"You're bluffing, Fred. Why not pitch in and get to the top?"

"No, I'm not bluffing, Tom. Honest. What's the use of a scholarship, anyway? Just a lot of work for nothing. If I pull through on a pass, it's enough for me."

In due time the examinations for junior matriculation came off, and, sure enough, Tom took first place in mathematics and secured the scholarship he had worked so hard to attain, while Fred, equally clever, but indolent, obtained marks enough for a pass.

This incident occurred thirty years ago. After a brilliant course at college, Tom entered mercantile life, and is now at the head of one of the largest manufacturing concerns in Canada, giving employment to hundreds of men. Fred has tried at least half a dozen different things, but has not made a great success of any one of them. He has been satisfied with a "pass" in everything he has touched, and has never got anything better.—H. Harper, in Pleasant Hours.

REVIEW OF

We have no apology to offer because of the lateness of the Evangelist last week, but we feel we are at least entitled to a hearing while we make a brief explanation. First of all we feel we can blame the Kaiser for at least a part of the delay. The war has made such an inroad upon the force of linotype operators that the printing trades are put in desperate circumstances. The operator who had been setting our type for us for the past two years was suddenly afflicted with partial blindness and had to give up all work on the machine. Before this reaches our readers we expect to have a new man at the machine, but it has been practically impossible to get an operator any sooner. They simply are not to be found.

Through the courtesy of the Garber Company and the Ashland Press Company, we manged to get our work out last week even though it was late, and with what help the Garber Company can give us until our new operator reaches us from Harrisburg, Pennsylvania we expect this number of the Evengelist to go out not more than one day late. It seems no power on earth can avoid such experiences in these distressing times and we beg forbearance from our readers.

While the previous item was more or less of a distressing character this one is of the very opposite. The old saying is, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." This is the morning of joy for we are able to announce two more churches that have won places on the Evangelist Honor Roll. Both of these churches are located in Indiana. The first one is Denver with L. A. Myers as pastor, the other is Loree with W. T. Lytle as pastor. Both Brother Myers and Brother Lytle now have both of the churches on their circuits on the Honor Roll. It speaks well for the churches and it speaks well for their pastors. Indiana is now in the lead as to the number of churches on the Honor Roll, having ten churches that have won this distinction. Other pastors are working toward this end and we pray for their success. It is a mighty step forward and we sincerely trust we may succeed in winning ten more churches to this way of thinking about the Evangelist before General Conference meets. Remember the SPECIAL one dollar offer we made two weeks ago. Who will be the first to accept that proposition?

It will be only a few weeks until Pennsylvania will have the opportunity to push the mercury up in the College Endowment Thermometer. Indiana has done splendidly, even down to the smallest mission churches, as Brother Beachler's report this week indicates. But there is still just a little work to do in Indiana and we trust it may push the mercury up to the $25,000 mark before Brother Beachler goes over into Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania will then know that the old Keystone state will have to "go some" to beat the record. Indiana has set a good pace.

A. B. Cover reports splendid work being done at Hagerstown, Maryland, also at Mapleville where he recently held a series of meetings which resulted in adding three splendid members to the church. That Brother Cover's labors are appreciated is indicated by the call he received to continue another year as pastor with a substantial increase in salary.

An inovation for the Brethren churches was the holding of the ten days' Bible conference at Long Beach, California last summer, but so successful was this innovation that the Brethren of the west have concluded to repeat the performance consequently arrangements have been made for a similar conference at the same place next July. Every effort will be made to make this as great a success as the one of last year and the Brethren on the Pacific coast are urged to take advantage of this great opportunity.

The Maurertown, Virginia Christian Endeavor society has undertaken to reach the high standard set for the Brethren Endeavor societies as their part in reaching the goals in the Four-Year Program. It will be the cooperation of all the societies and auxiliaries of the whole church that will make it possible to reach the goals for 1920.

A copy of the Falls City Journal recently received tells of the recent action on the part of the Brethren church of that city in calling Brother Stuckman to the pastorate another year, beginning next October. A most magnificent gift of money was made to Brother Stuckman at the Sunday evening services to show the regard in which the congregation holds his labors among them. Falls City is able to do things on a liberal scale and we are anxiously watching for the time when Brother Beachler strikes the west in his Ashland College Endowment Campaign.

The last report of the White Gifts offering for the Kentucky and the Ashland work by the Sunday schools as made by the secretary, Albert Trent shows a grand total of $2532.85. This is a most commendable offering and goes to show what really good things can be accomplished when the churches or Sunday schools decide upom sone specific thing and then unite on that. It shows that the people have a mind to give when the need is made known.

W. T. Lytle has just completed his seventh year as pastor at Flora, Indinaa, but he will continue in this capacity until next October. Wonderful changes have taken place in Flora during these seven years and great progress has been made in the church. Brother Lytle may well feel that the Lord has greatly blessed him in his labors at this place. With the splendid new church and the Evangelist going into every home the church will be in a shape for his successor to go forward with the work in every way.

Wm. C. Teeter again reports the "doings at Dayton," but from what we gather from different sources we take it that there is always something "doing" at Dayton. Sixty churches in Dayton cooperated in a simultaneous revival meeting and the Brethren church a splendid meeting with sixty-five confessions, fifty of the number signifying their intention to unite with the Brethren church. About thirty have already been baptized and received into the church.

The secretary of the Maryland-Virginia conference issues a call this week to the churches of the district to prepare for their annual meeting at Mt. Olive, Virginia, May 28-30. It is important that all district conferences be largely attended from now on until the meeting of the General Conference in 1920. Every enthusiastic meeting of a district conference is that much power applied to the winning of the goals for the Four-Year Program.

Many of us may not fully agree with the article we publish this week from the pen of Robert E. Speer, but whether we agree with him fully or not we will have to admit that he presents the case in about as reasonable a manner as we have seen it presented for many a day, and no one can question the gentleness of his spirit as he makes the strong statements he does.

As George T. Ronk presents his case on page three this week we are made to feel that unless some of our churches get exceedingly busy there will be entire conference districts that will be found wanting when the last accounting is made for the Four-Year Program is made in 1920. Brother Ronk has traveled over no small portion of the brotherhood and he has every opportunity to know whereof he speaks.

The Ohio Conference is in session this week at Fremont. It is a very inconvenient time for either of the editors to attend, but an effort will be made to attend as much of the conference as possible. We trust that a very large representation from the churches may be in attendance.

Brother Carpenter makes a most earnest appeal for teachers to engage in the work in Kentucky. This seems the best opportunity that has ever been given to our workers in the mountains, but without more workers the work can not be conducted to advantage. Who will heed this call?

Around the Editor's Table

LET THERE BE LIGHT.

When God spoke and light began to shine on the world he had created one of the most beneficent forces the world has known was set to work and this good work shall continue while time lasts. Light in its various forms and in the various uses of the term signifies the greatest safeguards and the greatest blessings mankind has known since he became the crowning product of the God who created all things.

As darkness represents gloom and despair in the spiritual world as well as in the natural or physical world so light represents the only force or power that can dispel that gloom. Darkness can not be "shut off," only light can receive such treatment, but darkness can be "driven off" and there is but one force that can perform this hard task and that is light. Light can be "turned on" and with its turning on darkness must disappear.

When Jesus said: "I am the Light of the world," he spoke a marvelous truth, but when he said: "Ye are the light of the world," he stated an equally remar,kable fact; but there is this difference: The light of the disciples of Christ is a reflected light. Jesus who was the light of the world communicated his illuminating energy to those whom he called into his fellowship. With this communication of power to illumine was also communicated the obligation to use the power in the service of the world. The world receives little benefit from the sun inless it SHINES, so the world receives little benefit from the lives of the followers of Jesus unless they let the influence and light of his life go out from them as a beneficent force to be used constantly for him.

We take it that the only reason Jesus had for imparting this light which primarily belongs to him to his disciples was that they might impart it to others, and unless they were willing, and unless we are now willing to thus fulfil the purpose of the coming of divine light into the world we have no assurance that this light shall remain in us. This is not the light of a storage battery that will run down from use, but it is the light of an eternal dynamo that will grow in power and brightness the more it is drawn upon.

COMPANIONS IN MISERY.

The old saying: "Misery loves company," is but the voicing of a universal principle of human dependence. While men talk about independence and while they have fought to obtain independence, yet there is not a more dependent creature born in the world than an infant of the human species. Other new-born creatures may be as helpless at the time of their coming into life, but their total helplessness does not extend over so great a period of time as does that of the human child. But even after the full development of all his powers has been reached man is still a dependent creature. He cannot well live alone. His very nature requires the association of other beings of a similar kind. This nature and this tendency has again found expression in another old saying: "Birds of a feather flock together." These sayings are based upon principles than can not be eradicated, but principles that may be put to good uses as well as to evil uses. That which will call forth sympathy from one and extend it to another in similar conditions or circumstances whether they be circumstances of joy or of sorrow is a most beneficent principle at work in the human heart.

It was his power to enter into the feelings of the people in their misery as well as in their joy that made Jesus so popular for a time with the common people, because the common people were then and are now the ones who experienced the deepest sorrows as well as the most exalted joys of life.

While it is according to the natural tendency of man to seek to enjoy the happiness of others with them yet one of the greatest needs of the world today is for men and women to be able and willing to enter into and to share with them the miseries and the burdens of the oppressed and the downtrodden of the world. This is not a pleasant task as viewed from a natural standpoint but when viewed from the standpoint of Christian service it is possible to find joy even by sharing sorrow with another. The world may be too proud to ask for it, but it wants companionship in its miseries.

THE NEXT BEST THING

"Do your best" is a good motto or a splendid slogan that should prove an inspiration to any struggling soul who is ambitious to make his life count in the things that are really worth while. We have always been taught that God wants the "first fruits," the offering "without spot or blemish" and that he will accept nothing else. Reasoning along this line some may think if they can not offer to God a perfect achievement they will offer him nothing at all of their lives. They are inclined to reason in the same way in regard to their relation to the world of men and women of which they are only a very small part, and if they are not able to do for the world all that they have planned and in the way they have planned they will do nothing at all.

It is good to do the "best thing" possible and it is wise to lay one's plans, but have given consideration to the fact that sometimes the "next best thing" is the proper thing to do? It is an old saying: "The best laid plans of mice and men gang aft aglee," so one need not feel humilitaed if his carefully laid plans are interfered with and he finds it impossible to carry them out. Circumstances sometimes arise that make the carrying out of such well-considered plans impossible, and then the only thing remaining to be done is the "next best thing."

Often in our work in the church and Sunday school we plan big things and our hopes run high until we meet an obstruction, when because the great thing, the very best thing to be done cannot be done because of some unexpected difficulty rising up we become discouraged and determine to do nothing at all.

Under such circumstances it is evident that the "best thing" to do is to do the "next best thing," that is to do what it is possible to do and not refuse to do anything because ones original or best plans cannot be carried out. If a church has planned a revival meeting to be led by one of the best evangelists in the church and then circumstances arise making it impossible for him to come often the "next best" thing to do is for the people and their own pastor to conduct the meeting. It may develop that the circumstances that throw the responsibility upon the local membership and that send them to God in more earnest prayer and consecration are after all the "best things" that could happen to the church. At any rate it is never good to give up a project because one thinks it cannot be done in the "best way." Sometimes the "next best way" proves equally efficient.

A DOCTRINAL FOUNDATION

Less and less emphasis is coming to be laid on what used to be termed the doctrinal principles of Christianity. We used to often hear discussions of the "cardinal" doctrines of the church, but as the years have passed there has come an easing up all along the line of doctrinal preaching and it seems the modern church emphaszies works more than it does faith, or at least it calls for a visible demonstration of one's faith in the work that one does. In many respects this may be a helpful attitude to take in regard to the Christian Religion, but we are afraid that much of the modern building is without a sufficiently deep-laid foundation and we are fearful that in time the superstructure will topple to the ground.

We hold that the great work and the great workers of the Christian church in all the past ages have come as the result of great doctrinal convictions. The Bible is a book of doctrine, and the teaching of Jesus Christ is a teaching of doctrine. One of the accusations Jesus made against the work of the Pharisees was that they taught for doctrines the commandments of men, and we are afraid this is a modern tendency as well as it was a tendency and a practice among the ancient Pharisees.

The doctrines or principles of Christ are sufficiently flexible to meet every requirement of the modern world, but they are not as full of "stretch" as a piece of rubber and sometimes because they will not stretch to cover some modern conception of Man's duty they are abandoned and the commandments of men are offered as a substitute to the detriment of the spiritual life of the church.

MAKING HISTORY IN INDIA

Although there is little mention of present political agitation in India to be found in the English and American papers, it would be a mistake to assume that there is no history in the making in that important British Dependency. The "National" Congress, after a somewhat chequered career of more than a century, has found in these times of war an opportunity for a very effective insistency upon some of its principal demands. "Home Rule" is the cry today; but it is not at all easy to formulate any very clear statement as to what the leading agitators desire. A large and influential section of Mohammedans has identified itself with the Congress, but has made it clear that the reform it seeks is one in which provision shall be made for the fullest representation of minorities. It looks to the British Government for protection from the overwhelming Hindu majority. Meanwhile the Secretary of State has given a virtual promise that it shall be the aim of the Government to introduce the privileges of self-rule into the land as speedily as may be compatible with the highest welfare of the people. This assurance has been hailed with great delight by many, and is undoubtedly in entire harmony with the ideals and purposes of a large section of the real friends of India amongst the British statesmen. On the other hand, however, striking opposition to the introduction of any considerable degree of Home Rule has shown itself. The non-Brahmans of South India protest that they prefer British to Brahman ascendency. European business men protest against a course which they claim would result in the loss to the country and Britain of all that they have upbuilt with so much labor. They desire to secure the best things for the multitude which looks to them and to the existing Government, rather than to the men who lead the modern agitation, for the things that are most worth while. Few believe that the great Hindu and Mohammedan peoples can, without the presence of a strong controlling and guiding power, coalesce into a self-guiding people. Recent serious riots at the Bakr-Id festival, with bloodshed and destruction of property, and which only British authority was able to quell, have lent much color to this claim.

A curious phenomenon connected with the situation is the position of Mrs. Annie Besant in relation to it. A Christian, an atheist, a Malthusian, a Hindu, a theosophist and now in her advanced years, a propagandist of Home Rule for India, she wields an extraordinary influence over millions of people. Her popularity was largely lost through quarrels amongst the members of the Theosophic Society and certain judical cases in the courts where she and some of her associates were discredited. In the present agitation she has regained for a time, much of her former influence by her readiness to condemn indiscriminately her own people and to flatter those whom she choses to lead, together with her almost mesmeric charm of personality and speech.

It must not be forgotten, as we study the movements of the hour, that the great mass of India's people are very slightly, if at all, touched by them. They are, upon the whole, content and are loyal to the British Raj. They are appalled at the suggestion of the extremist that he and his fellows should supplant the man from the West. It is, therefore, fair to say that the general currents of the life of the country are as yet but little changed. The field for Christian philanthropy and evangelism was never more open and promising than now. A large increase in the privileges and powers of the administration will be accorded to the Indians, and it is only just that this should be so, as soon as suitable men are found. We do not at all believe that this will operate disastrously to Christian missionary effort. It is true that the spirit of antagonism to everything Western, which exists in companionship with the extreme "Nationalism" of the time, is an element of the situation with which we must reckon, but whatever of change in the laws and in the personnel of the Government may come, we may count with confidence upon religious freedom guaranteed to all. Britain is not contemplating such a thing as the abandonment of her great charge, and India has no desire other than that she should remain. Having modified, in some particulars, her method of administration, the great masses of Indian people wish her to continue to guide, defend and lead them to a point, where, in the somewhat distant future, her task shall have been completed.

PHILOSOPHY OF INDIAN MASS MOVEMENTS.

American Christians have not yet awakened to the significance and possibilities of the Christward mass movements in India. The stirring paper by the Rev. Brenton Badley in this number of the Review should open in the eyes and hearts of Christians at home. It is a remarkably clear and impresive presentation of the subject. Now is the harvest time in India. Neglected, these harvests will be ungarnered, and will become refuse. It is a serious situation.

In a recent number of The Continent we find the following summary of the meaning of these mass movements:

"Missionaries in India are concerned over the astonishing numerical growth in the native Church, resulting from the "mass movement" toward Christianity among outcastes. Undeniably, the prime impulse in the desire of these people to become Christians is their longing to get out from under the load of the Hindu caste system. Their own religion counts them too low down to enjoy anything of privilege. They and all their descendants are condemned to endless servitude and degradation; they can never rise to any position of respect; they are irrevocable outcastes. These folk have discovered that if they turn Christians, they will be treated like men and women, and their children will inherit education and opportunity. Is it any wonder that they are possessed with a nearly unanimous determination to get into the Christian Church as soon as possible?

There is no limit to the rapidity with which these people might be gathered into the Christian commmuion, if the missionaries chose to baptize them as fast as they ask to be received. But there is little sign of spiritual conversion to Christian faith. In their dense ignorance they cannot know enough about Christianity to have much intelligent Christian conviction. Prudence naturally suggests that they should be held off until they are instructed. But there is well grounded fear that if Christianity does not at once shepherd these millions, Mohammedanism will make place for them all too gladly.

Under this pressure many mission leaders are cutting down pre-baptism instruction to the minimum, accepting converts whose understanding does not reach much beyond the central fact that Jesus Christ offers them forgiveness by virtue of His death for them on the cross. Hundreds of thousands are joining the church yearly on that basis and in the hope that later they can have "expounded unto them the way of God more accurately." At least, it will be possible to mold their children into an understanding faith, and that will greatly strengthen the Church of India in the next generation. What an enormous increase of Christian school facilities must be provided in that vast land, in order that the millions of children growing up today in these outcast homes may be afforded the chance which their unprivileged parents are groping to procure for them.

HOME RULE AGITATION IN INDIA.

Ever since the Russo-Japanese War, the Asiatic peoples have seen a vision of national progress of independence of European tutelage. A desire for liberty has been in the air and has manifested itself in China, in Persia, in India and elsewhere. In some cases this ambition has had in view merely freedom from restraint; in others it has meant liberty for national development.

India has been profoundly moved by the European War and the Indian press is saying that certain changes must surely take place in the future, which will affect the nation socially, politically and economically. There is much talk of home rule for India when the war is over—with representation in the British Parliament, or a colonial government like that of Canada and Australia. The fact that Indian troops are in the trenches at the front, and are giving their lives along with the English and French troops, has stirred the national consciousness. This growing independence of thought along political lines is also lessening the bonds of social and religious customs. The impulse for home rule is revolutionizing the attitude of the Hindus, Mussulmans and other Indians toward Christians. Now that the Indian Christians, both of old standing and new converts, are showing that their "future is bound up with the people of their own blood," they are welcomed as patriots. The following statement by so distinguished an Indian Christian as Sir Harnam Singh is illustrative of this tendency: "It has been said that India can not be looked upon as a nation because of her varied religions and tongues, but the spirit of nationality has been awakened in us, and true love of country knows no barriers of caste or creed or language."

This is an important movement, as those who have left the Indian religions for the Christian Church have hitherto been looked upon not only as disloyal to their ancestral faith, but as unpatriotic.

It is unfortunate that the agitation has come now. We hope that the time will come—after the war—when the desire for home rule for India will be realized; but there is need first for education of the masses, for the development of wise leadership and for the adoption of Christian standards. Home rule can not be successful where caste prevails, where child marriage is practiced, where temple prostitution is permitted, and where the temper of the religious leaders prevents true religious liberty—without boycott and without persecution.

Already the loyalty of India to Great Britain has a promise of reward in the announcement by the Secretary for India in the House of Commons that native officials are to be introduced into every branch of the administration, that self-governing institutions are to be devloped as rapidly as possible and that the purpose is to make the Indian government fully responsible to the Indian people. In view of the prospect of a larger introduction of the men of the country into civil and military office in India we must recognize more than ever the importance of Indian education and training in accord with Christian ideals. Missionaries have been working to develop men capable of worthy leadership and prepared to sustain and to safeguard the new India that is coming to her place of influence in this modern world of nations. The value of this missionary training will now be seen more clearly in the political as well as in the religious life of India.

THE LITTLE BIRDS THAT WEAR LEGGINGS

By Margaret W. Leighton

Ptarmigan children love the cold. You will find them high on the mountain sides and in the artic country where snow drifts lie in the hollows all summer. The mountain folks and the snow people must be smart or they cannot live in the land of little food.

When the Ptarmigan [pronounced tar-mi-gan] babies leave their eggshells they are wrapped in warm, downy coats and before an hour has passed they are scampering about among the rocks and chasing each other over the mountain side.

Far up in the north country lies a great swamp called the Tundra. It is filled with berries of many kinds. When the short summer ends they are still green, as they have not had time to ripen. Then the snow comes and spreads a thick coverlet over them. The next spring when it melts away the warm sun quickly ripens the berries. Then what a fine feast the little artic folks have! But it does not last long. Soon the short summer ends and the big snow blanket is again spread over the world.

In summer the Ptarmigans wear mottled coats very much like their cousin grouse's. It takes sharp eyes to spy out mother Ptarmigan brooding her eggs among the lichen-covered rocks, when she has on her speckled coat. As soon as the children are grown the birds begin to doff their summer clothes. They change their suits four times a year instead of twice as most birds do. In spring and fall their feather coats are parlty mottled and partly white, which makes them look as if they were only half dressed. In winter the little folk of the far north dress in purest white to match the snow. The Ptarmigans wear feather leggings that reach to the tips of their toes. The feathers on their feet spread out like the net work on a snow shoe, so that they can easily travel about over the white wastes seeking the buds of the juniper, the larch, birch and poplar which are their winter foods.—Sel.

BILLY WHITE

Louella C. Poole

O Billy White,
A charming sight
You make, as in your coat of snow
And harness gay,
Upon you way
Along the streets you proudly go;!

A merry load
Along the road
You pull with tossing head held high:
Such shouts of glee
And jollity
Bring smiles to every passer-by.

So patient, kind,
'Twere hard to find
A playmate gentler, Bill than you—
You like the fun,
And anyone
Can see that you like "kiddies" too!

No unkind word
Have you e'er heard—
Ne'er known a blow, O Billy White;
'Twixt you and me
That's why, maybe,
To serve them give you such delight!

TRACING THE ORIGIN OF "YANKEE DOODLE."

Of course we all know that "America" is sung to the tune of "God Save the King," and "Hail Columbia," to that of "Rule, Britannia," but it did seem the United States might claim whatever credit lies in originating that sprightly quickstep known as "Yankee Doodle."

In fact, there was a very succinct account of its origin published in a musical magazine of Boston during the Civil War, from which I quote:

"During the attacks upon the French outposts in 1755, in America, Governor Shirley led the forces directed against the enemy lying at Niagara and Frontenac. In the early part of June, while these troops were stationed on the banks of the Hudson, near Albany, the descendants of the "Pilgrim Fathers" flocked in from the Eastern provinces.

"Never was seen such a motley regiment as took up its position on the left wing of the British army. Officers and privates had adopted regimentals, each man after his own fashion; some wore coats with amazingly long tails, while others were in their shirt sleeves; no two head coverings were alike, and their garments were of various colors. It so happened there was a certain Dr. Shackburg, wit, musician and surgeon, and one evening after mess he produced a manuscript of a tune he seriously commended to the officers of this queerly assorted militia, as worthy of the attention of the band they had brought along. Thus, there and then 'Yankee Doodle' was born."

It is certain that the Continental Army accepted the tune and its ridiculous words as worthy of being its battle song during many of its engagements in the Revolutionary War, but that the composition did not originate in the New World seems to be fully proven.

Going back to the days of Cromwell, it is found that a song was then popular in England having the words:

Yankee Doodle comes to town
Riding on a pony,
Sticks a feather in his hat
And calls it macaroni.

These hitherto cryptic words are now said to "allude to Cromwell's riding into Oxford with a single plume fastened in a knot that was called a macaroni."

And so it appears "American originality" consisted solely in substituting a "Y" for an "N" in the production of famous old "Yankee Doodle."—Lucille Caine, in Christian Observer.

THE BIRD-NEST COLLAR

Elbie A. Beecher

One bright morning in the springtime, as I opened my window, I saw a robin flying away with one of my lace collars which, with several others, I had spread on the grass to bleach.

I called, "Mamma, Mamma, Robin Redbreast is taking one of my pretty collars!" I clapped my hands, thinking that might frighten him so that he would drop the prize. He alighted on the fence and, turning his head saucily, looked at me, then flew away to the large elm trees on the other side of the street, where he was hidden from view by the leaves and branches.

Fearing he would come again and take another of the collars to help build his nest, I brought them into the house, and placed six narrow pieces of white cloth on the grass where they had been. Before noon, four of the strips had disappeared.

By and by summer came and with it heavy thunder showers. One day when there had been a severe storm and the wind had blown very hard, so that many branches were broken from the trees and were lying in the road, I went out to see how much damage had been done to the vines and flowers about the house. I noticed a neighbor's boy bending over a broken bough, across the street. A minute later he walked slowly toward me, holding in his hand what looked like a little strip of mud-colored cloth. As he came nearer, I found it to be my lace collar, which the robin had borrowed in the spring to help build a home for his babies. I washed it white once more and named it my "bird-nest collar."

THE SMALLEST DOG

The smallest dog ever known was "Tiny", a black-and-tan terrier, belonging to an army officer in England. He was thus described by a writer in St. Nicholas:

Tiny was less than four inches long, and could comfortably curl up and take a nap in a common glass tumbler. An ordinary finger ring was large enough for his collar; and when he sat up, a baby's hand would almost have made a broad and safe resting place for him.

Of course he could not fight against a rat but he had courage enough to bark at one—when it was dead. He could have had anything he wished to eat, but he was not happy for he had no appetite, and he shivered most of the time, even though he was usually hidden in warm wraps. Of course he caught cold easily, and then oh, dear! how pitifully he did sneeze!

KENTUCKY MISSION NEWS

A WEDDING.

It culminated, that Riverside romance on Sunday, March 24, 1918. One of the successful teachers and the lonely nurse were the contracting parties. They had noted that the farmhouse was deserted and they said to themselves, why shouldn't we serve Riverside by making this farm a most profitable investment for the Lord. And they talked and dreamed about the hundreds of chickens in the parks and pigs in the pens and cattle on the hills and the bushels and bushels of the autumn harvest of corn and potatoes and tomatoes and all the good things the dormitories could eat. And now they are pleasantly located and ready to receive their friends. If it was not so far all our readers would like to join in an old-fashioned belling and how the hills would tremble if we could all be there. But suffice it to say that we all join in wishing our good friends the best that our Heavenly Father has to give and withal the full realization of their fondest dreams for Riverside and all the mountain folk and the church we love. And we almost forgot to give you their names, but here they are, Miss Mary Newlin, the kind, business like, attractive bride, and Landis R. Bradfield, the earnest, determined, good-natured bridegroom, Mrs. Bradfield will continue to serve as nurse, at least for a time, and will also serve as queen of the Riverside farm home. Brother Bradfield has a big farm program laid out for the summer. Brother Brushal spoke the words that sealed the marriage vows and thus ended the first chapter of a most interesting mountain romance. To be continued.

TEACHERS NEEDED

Teachers for the grades will be needed at Krypton and at Lost Creek, the schools beginning the first of July this year. Consecrated and experienced teachers will find a splendid opportunity to render real service. Teachers holding state certificates will have an advantage. Please write us at once if you will consider being a helper in our mountain mission work this year. And write us anyhow if you know of someone who would like to serve the Lord in this field. The time is short. Write now.

DEDICATION.

At last! The Krypton chapel is now almost completed. The basement room has been in use for some time, but the main room was not finished. Last Fall Brother Lowman went to Krypton and did some splendid work on the building and Brother Cook has the plastering done and is now putting on the finishing touches inside. He will raise the square belfry in front and paint the building, and those who have seen it in the past will scarcely recognize it. Brother Cook is planning for the dedication of the building in May and Dr. J. Allen Miller has been invited to be present as the speaker of the day. Plans are under way to make that day a red letter day for Krypton and all the hill country for miles around. Brother Cook will announce the exact date soon.

RIVERSIDE COMMENCEMENT WEEK.

What a busy week, something doing every minute! Splendid programs are given by the various departments of the school and the final commencement is held on Friday evening. Brother Drushal can tell us better than anybody else of the events of the week. Brother Orlon E. Bowman, attorney and clerk of the courts of Dayton, Ohio, and the efficient secretary-treasurer of our home mission board, gave the commencement address. The writer regretted not being able to remain to hear Brother Bowman. Riverside had from several points of a view a most successful year. The teachers without exception gave splendid service and Brother Drushal was well pleased with the year's work.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Each year two of the members of our home mission board visit the mission fields in Kentucky and with the Superintendents and teachers take an inventory and plan for the future. Brother Bowman and the writer went first to Krypton arriving on Tuesday evening just in time to enjoy a splendid fish supper at the parsonage. Then we were announced to preach and more than a hundred of the Krypton folk gathered for that service and that on short notice. We never spoke to a more appreciative audience. Brother Bowman was introduced and he made a few timely remarks. This year the free school will be taught in our building under Brother Cook's supervision and by our teachers. Thus we can give to the community a far better school than they can provide and that under Christian teachers and supervision. And this will be done without any cost to our brotherhood, the school being supported by state funds. Two teachers will be needed.

Krypton is growing and Brother Cook has visions of a large work for the Brethren church in that section of Kentucky. Already Brother Cook has several outstations where he is preaching and conducting Sunday Schools. The mountains are full of coal and twenty or thirty trains of coal are taken down the railroad that runs thru Krypton almost every day. Brother Cook took the visiting brethren around the hill and back into a mine on a coal truck drawn by a mule until we were a quarter of a mile from daylight. It was some experience. The writer broke some rock, loaded some coal, grabbed a pick and mined some coal [please do not ask how many tons.] As we laid the pick down an old seasoned miner said: "You would not make fifteen cents a day."

Miss Gertrude Ham, of Huntington, Indiana, has given splendid service during the past two years as teacher of our school and she has won the love and respect of both old and young. It was at a sacrifice that Miss Ham renderd this service but as usual those who thus serve do not themselves count the cost and seldom do they count it a sacrifice. The mission board hereby expresses to Miss Ham their most sincere appreciation.

Sister Cook has proven herself a most faithful and earnest helper to Brother Cook and little Mildred, what a jewel, a million dollars would be only a feather if value was considered [by Papa and Mamma.]

Then we went to Lost Creek, leaving our train at Haddix, where we found the big iron bridge on its side in the river and we had to be rowed across as of old. One of the Riverside boys was there with Bill and the mule. We gave Brother Bowman his choice and how he did look with suspicion on that mule. No mule for him! At Riverside everybody was busy, examinations were on, practice for closing programs and preparations for early departure for home. Final plans were made to include the free school in our work for the coming year, thus enabling us to do as at Krypton, give the people a better school and assist our work in the grades in the way of state support. Two teachers will be needed for this work.

The farm outlook has already been mentioned, suffice it to say that both Brother Drushal and Brother Bradfield are going to do their best to make the farm a real asset this year. The people of the community are responding as never before to the appeals of Brother Drushal to do their part by Riverside. While we were there they were raising a fund to pay for the mule, the animal costing $199. Rather odd amount, perhaps they bought him by the pound.

Brother Drushal writes that the usual spring normal term had to be called off, that being one of the inevitable results of the war. The attendance was not sufficient.

Brother Drushal was loud in his praises of the service rendered by Miss Newlin, the nurse, also in his appreciation of the loyal service rendered by all the workers of the year. The health of Sister Drushal is greatly improved. Her many friends will rejoice with her and her family. Here we found another of the choice babies of the land, a good-looking, chubby, healthy little girl. And the two boys, real boys for sure, and how they grow! Brother Drushal has labored hard during the year, extra burdens coming upon him thru sickness in the home and also the loss that came by the hand of death. Brother Drushal said, "I still insist that we have four children, three here and one over there." O the glorious hope of the Christian!

All who have been supporting our mountain mission work can congratulate themselves on its growth and on the promising outlook. It is indeed a great field and a marvelous opportunity at our very doors to help evangelize a people whose need is as pressing as can be imagined and whose possibilities are immeasurable. Let the good work continue. And it should be remembered that the reflex effect on the whole Brethren Church has more than repaid the efforts put forth. The blessing has been twofold.

MAURERTOWN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

I don't think any report of our C. E. has been sent to the Evangelist since our organization about two years ago.

When we reorganized this year we organized a Junior taking in those also of Intermediate age.

We hope by 1920 to have the Intermediates also which would give us the three societies required in our Four-Year Program. We have not accomplished wonders but we feel that the meetings have been a help to us in many ways, spiritually socially and financially.

We have not been as active as we should in committee work and other C. E. methods but hope to do better.

We appreciate very much the C. E. page in the Angelus.

We use this paper in the S. S. and think it the best we have ever seen. May we all be more zealous in our Spiritual warfare during this awful war.

Mrs. G. Harry Haun.

SHALL WE FURNISH SMOKES FOR THE BOYS?

IT is high time that Uncle Sam ask what can be done to put a stop to the grossly wicked advertisements of the American tobacco industry, appearing in many newspapers as editorial, urging the sending of tobacco and cigarets to our soldier boys. Boys who never smoked are being shamed into it. One officer has already complained that men under him are being unfitted by cigarets for the duties of war. He speaks of the necessity of steady heads, strong hearts, and unpoisoned muscles. It is already whispered that we may lose in the present war if tobacco cannot be kept from our men. It is a deadlier weapon than German steel. The cigaret will leave the bones of thousands of our gallant boys upon the foreign shores. Already protests have been sent to Secretaries Daniels and Baker.

We are putting into the field, morally and physically, the purest army the world has ever seen. But these men are endowed with all the passions of men. It has long been known that the cigaret tends to efface the moral sense, and the sense of responsibility; that it soothes the police nerves, and leaves the anarchist nerves unfettered. With the restraints of conscience crippled, and with the stronger American power of initiative, the naturally expected result would be that from the present standards of purity our armies will descend to the depths of licentious corruption and abnormal atrocities, and that many who come back will be morally unfit to associate with their mothers and sisters and sweethearts.

After any great battle men will be found dead from heart-shock, or overexertion, and the stress of excitement. This is the normally expected fruit of cigaret smoking. Mental confusion when clearness is demanded will lose many a battle. The use of tobacco in any form unfits a man for modern warfare, and the cigaret vice is the consummate climax of the dissipation of war energies.

Any newspaper that accepts advertising matter from the tobacco interests, endeavoring to mislead kind-hearted people to send smokes to the boys, is potentially pro-German in that it menaces the power and effectiveness of our armies. It should be given to understand that it is disloyal, giving aid to the enemy by advocating what must destroy the physical and moral fitness of our men. An editor who publishes such matter should be restrained by the strong arm of the law. Not unlikely some unthinking person started the thing out of pure heart-kindness, but it is not kind nor loyal to give the men what will destroy them and defeat our armies; and the enemy knows that tobacco will weaken our fighting power.

Besides the degrading of the nerves, the heart, the digestive functions, besides the debasing of the faculties and the morals, and the crippling of the powers of endurance, the use of cigarets creates a weakness toward pneumonia with the probabilities against recovery. Considering the exposure of our armies, this is very serious.

It has become a matter of public knowledge that these smoke "editorials" are published at the instance of an American tobacco company. These wicked hyenas care nothing for the men or for the flag, but are willing to degrade our armies and blast the hope of the nations for their own pecuniary profit! Shame!—ten thousand times—shame!—and shame, too, upon the press, sharing the guilt of the betrayal! The great army is being created for the defense of the world's liberties, and not for the financial exploitation of speculators.

Where is loyalty to the flag and to our glorious boys?

The public should see to it not only that these tobacco venders be frustrated in their unpatriotic enterprise, but that they be branded as enemies to our country in its times of need.

Just now, when the spirit of the country is a spirit of sacrifice for the boys we love, it is a grievous wrong that our brave boys should be robbed of their health, their manhood, and their power for victory, and we be left to the tender mercies of the kaiser! We should show no mercy to these propagandists. Any newspaper that permits itself to be used for the deterioration of our armies should be superseded by a pro-American rival, and every red-blooded man who has regard for his own kin in the trenches should exert himself to see that it is so superseded.—B. F. M. Sours.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BIBLE CONFERENCE.

Because of business demands the secretary of the Southern California Bible Conference was unable to make an official report of the meeting for the Evangelist. However there was enough written by some who were privileged to attend to let the Brethren know that this first conference was highly successful in every way.

In this advance notice we are giving notice to all interested, that another conference is to be held this summer. Some of the best speakers and teachers are being lined up and it will be well worth any man's time to spend the full ten days at this meeting. The invitation of the Long Beach Church has been accepted so the conference will be held in the city by the sea. The date will be July 19-28.

In due time programs will be sent to the churches and also to those living at a distance from the churches if they registered last year or if they make request of one of the pastors or of the writer.

A. V. Kimmell.

322 N. Painter Ave., Whittier, Cal.

FLORA, INDIANA.

At our regular business meeting which was held the last Thursday P. M. in March, every department of the work was showing a nice increase in every way. The Sunday-school under the leadership of Brother Sylvester Whetstone; The Christian Endeavor lead by Brother E. A. Myer; The S. S. C. E. lead by Sister Lizzie Ferguson, and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, lead by Sister Opal Brown, all are striving to reach a higher plain.

The Church in all activities, has been able to be using her opportunities, as well as her better equipment.

The church through the committee with G. T. Leslie, Flora, Ind. is looking for a new pastor to take up the work in October.

The writer has been serving this church as pastor just seven years to-day [April 9] and when he closes his work it will be seven and one-half years.—The work speaks for itself, and from October on a pastor will serve full time, instead of half time. The church is now in a position to command a place with some of our very largest and strongest Churches.

The work stands as a testimony of a people who have a "mind to work," a good spirit prevails, and no matter who the man is that follows us upon this field there are opportunities for making this work more effective and larger in all departments.

The field at Flora is unlimited, the organization is made up of mostly producing people, and the resources of energy, and material can all be directed into a "channel of blessing" for the "cause of brethren."

The writer will be in a position to consider another field among our brethren, if they have a place for him. Remember no church can do much if there is not co-operation. So, if any church is willing to do her part, we would be glad to act as their pastor if in need, but if any churches want the preacher to do it it all do not waste paper and time to correspond, as the writer, will not go on any field where there are unnecessary factors as hinderances to the work, for life is too short, time too valuable, and responsibility to God too great. May the entire brotherhood during these days of "evil suggestion," and "perilous times," be found as workers, not being ashamed in the Master's name.

W. T. Lytle.

HAGERSTOWN, MD.

Since the close of our mid-winter revival, we have endeavored to be about the Master's business and are therefore unable to report steady progress. Only those who at once united with the church during our meeting were added to the membership; others who had made the good confession have gone no further at this writing and likely were "shallow-soil" hearers.

After a brief rest, we held a meeting with our Mapleville people. For almost three weeks we stormed the trenches of the enemy. We found him well entrenched and an experienced warrior with modern equipment. But with the Gospel, the sword of the Spirit, as our only weapon, we took the offensive. The result was the liberation of three precious souls, a spiritual awakening of the members. There, as well as gaining more knowledge of the strength of man's great enemy. Those who came are valuable additions to the Church. A mother and wife, and two young men all from new families that will add strength to our work. Others were almost persuaded but could not make up their minds to step out boldly for Jesus; For these we continue to pray that they too may find the freedom that is freedom indeed. The above direct results are not all to be said concerning the meeting: from the very first night, we had a fine attendance which continued throughout the meeting; We had the support of the entire community regardless of church affiliation and trust that by our united efforts we may have sown seed that will be harvested in due season.

We held our spring communion service on Easter Sunday. This proved to be the largest attended communion service in the history of the Church. One year ago, we had the largest attendance to that date but we rejoice that during the year we were able to gain in numbers and interest.

Last Sunday the Sunday school elected their officers for the following year. The Sunday school has steadly increased its attendance and now with an able corps of officers, we are facing the coming year with still greater expectation of growth.

At a quarterly business meeting of the Church last Wednesday evening, the officers of the various Boards were filled where vacancies existed. It was also decided to again publish the Year Book which has come to be a valuable aid in the hands of the membership and pastor as well. At this meeting, by a unainmous vote, the pastor was again recalled to serve the congregation for the coming year. After the vote was taken a committee conducted the pastor into the presence of the meeting, when the chairman made known the decision of the people and as an expression of their love, loyalty and appreciation they voted their pastor a very substantial increase in salary. For this, we expressed our apprreciation and at once accepted the call to continue to serve them as pastor. The best of harmony and unity prevails and by God's leadership, we aim for larger blessings in the year now before us.

A. B. Cover, Pastor.

TO THE MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA DISTRICT.

Several inquiries have come to the Secretary concerning the District conferences. This is to inform all, that the date for the Conference which meets at Mt. Olive, Va. will be May 28, 29, 30.

Credential blanks have been printed and will be mailed to every church within a few days, however should any pastor fail to receive credentials, a card to the undersigned will bring that which is desired.

The program is completed and will appear in this paper soon, also information relative to train service.

All plan to come, make it the best yet.

E. M. Riddle, Secretary.

Linwood, Md.

DOINGS AT DAYTON.

Since our last mention to the Evangelist readers of a Union Evangelistic Campaign to be launched in our city, we have had a great season of refreshing and rejuvenation in the more than sixty co-operating churches of Dayton, Ohio, and especially at the First Brethren Church under the efficient leadership of our pastor, W. S. Bell and his staff of workers. The Protestant churches of the city were divided into nine co-operating groups, and our group one of the smallest of only four actively classed was one of the live-wire contestants in their reports to the Central Committee.

To meet the anticipated conditions of the campaign a conference and get-together feature of the Sunday school workers was had on the evening of February 21st and about sixty participated. A Booster's Committee was named of which Orion E. Bowman was elected chairman. A contest was planned for the month of March and a goal set of an average attendance to be reached for the five Sundays of no less than 500, and this was more than realized, as the average reached 537 for the month, the last Sunday, Easter, had 614.

The simultaneous Revival Campaign began on Sunday evening March 10th, and we were very fortunate to have secured as our evangelist, Eld. Francis J. Reagan, Los Angeles, California, who proved himself equal to the occasion. The churches co-operating in our group had been with us several Sunday evenings before, being the United Brethren, Methodist Episcopal, and Church of the Brethren, and a large chorus choir was an attractive feature, of which Mr. Ross McDonald was chosen director. The church was packed every Sunday night and people turned away, while over 800 were accomodated, and during the week fine congregations assembled every night. A fine spirit of fraternal fellowship characterized the entire campaign and we all worshipped together as members of the Body of Christ. This special campaign closed on the 24th. and we continued the effort independently for another week closing on the evening of Easter Sunday. The immediate result of the campaign was some 65 confessions, of which 50 were designated for First Brethren church. Easter Sunday was a great day of rejoicing when at the morning service some thirty united with the church, and since then nearly all have been baptized. Brother Reagan gave us good gospel evangelical sermons and "Proved himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed in rightly dividing the Word of Truth." The church has been greatly revived and we are anticipating much good to result from the campaign. We are now planning a special drive for the "Anniversary Day" in May when we expect to "Go Over the Top" on a contribution toward liquidating our church debt. We are expecting Elder W. H. Beachler to help us attain that worthy goal!

May the Lord continue to bless all the Brethren and Saints of God every where is our prayer. April 8th, 1918.

Wm. C. Teeter, Publicity Agent.

WHITE GIFTS CONTINUE COMING.

The following contributions received since last report:

Udell, Iowa	$ 3.50
Third Brethren, Johnstown, Pa.	13.53
First Brethren, Phila. Pa.	65.00
McKee, Pa.	5.00
Berlin, Pa.	34.88
Mt. Pleasant, Pa.	2.31

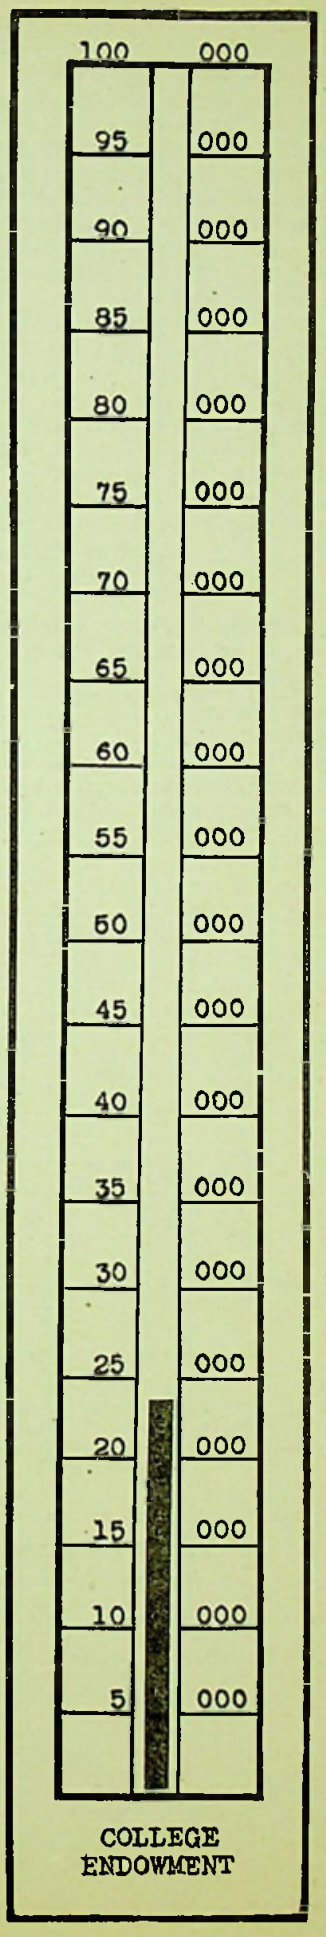
Calvary, N. J.	1.00
Carleton, Neb.	33.20
Total	$159.42
Previously reported	2373.43
Grand Total	$2532.85

This we consider a creditable showing; but there are yet a number of schools in each District that have not responded to this good work. We are waiting for them. We really expect every Brethren school to contribute something to show its loyalty to the Kentucky-Ashland interests. Be a sharer in the work and then you will share in the blessings.



Forward your "bit" now and save the postage we will otherwise have to spend in writing to you.

CAMPAIGN NOTES.

The report this time is from Clay City. It is a long, long way from Ashland to Clay City. But when one gets there he finds it on the map just the same. Clay City is one of the mission points of Indiana and is in a very thriving, promising condition. Brother Geo. E. Kinzie is the pastor, and his heart is in his work, and his people are lined up in splendid shape. To me it would seem that the Clay City work is destined to become one of the strong, substantial congregations in Indiana. The people in our church are among the very best in the community; and they represent the kind of material so essential in laying the foundation for a strong congregation.

Knowing the situation as we did before we landed at Clay City, we did not expect the result of our canvas to be as large as at some other places. But I am glad to say that what was given was given most cheerfully and loyally. We came away with $300 and I think by the time Brother Kinzie gathers in the final results it will go beyond that mark considerably. And in addition to this

I feel sure that in the years to come Clay City will send some of her splendid young people to Ashland to school.

Brother Kinzie took me out among the people. My home was divided between the Longs and the Megenhardts. And not only in these homes but everywhere I was shown most cordial treatment. It was my misfortune to be sick during part of my stay at Clay City; but I can testify that the Megenhardts know how to take care of sick folks. Thanks to them and to all the good folks I met at Clay City for their kindness to me.

On April 24th the Pennsylvania campaign begins in the Meyersdale circuit. We know from past experience that these churches are loyal to every interest of our denomination and we believe a fine pace will be set among these churches for Pennsylvania.

Wm. H. Beachler,
Campaign Secy.

Marriages

BRADFIELD-NEWLIN:—At the home of the undersigned, Lost Creek, Ky., at high noon, Sunday, March 24th., were united in the sacred bonds of matrimony, Landis Rollings Bradfield of Needmore, W. Va., and Mary Ella Newlin, of Earlham, Iowa. Brother Bradfield, a teacher in Riverside Institute has been called to the Eldership by his home church and is a very estimable young man. Sister Newlin was the Riverside nurse and a very, estimable Christian young woman. They have been called to take charge of the Riverside farm. Ceremony by the undersigned.

G. F. DRUSHAL.

SCHMIEDT-RONK:—At the home of their pastor in Manteca, Calif., in the presence of relatives, on Feb. 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock, noon, Mr. Guss Gilbert Schmiedt, of Manteca, and Miss MaryMay Ronk of Ripon, were by me united in marriage. The bride is a sister of our well known Brethren pastors, George, Albert and Willis Ronk. The groom is a prosperous young farmer of our neighborhood, also the superintendent of the West Colony Brethren Sunday School. The bride was for several years superintendent of the Ripon Brethren Sunday School. We are glad to have them remain with us on the charge. We wish them abundant happiness and joy through life. May God bless them both.

J. WESLEY PLATT, Pastor.

SINNAMOND-FOWLER.—On Saturday, March 23, Miss Jessie E. Fowler and Mr. Frank D. Sinnamond both members of the Uniontown church, were united in the bonds of matrimony, the beautiful ring ceremony being used, and the home of the bride being the scene of the happy event. After the ceremony the guests were served a sumptuous wedding dinner. The wishes of the church and friends of the young couple are all for a happy and useful wedded life. The groom is in the employ of the Bell Telephone Co. and they will go to housekeeping immediately in close proximity to the church of which they are loyal attendants. Ceremony by

E. L. MILLER.

WHISLER-TAYLOR.—On March 31 at five-thirty o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Taylor of Udell, Iowa, occurred the marriage of their daughter Belle and Edward Whisler, also of Udell. These young people, as well as the parents of each, are members of the Brethren church at this place. These estimable young people have a host of friends and relatives who join us in wishing them a delightful journey through life. Ceremony by the writer

GEO. E. CONE.

BROWN-KIDWELL.—At the residence of the bride's mother, sister John Kidwell in Hamlin, Kansas, on February 6, 1918, in the presence of near relatives occured the marriage of Mr. Harry Brown and Miss Jessie Kidwell. Both young people are well known and highly respected in the community. Their many friends wish them a long and happy life. Marriage service by the writer

CLOUD-BERKLEY.—At the home of brother and sister J. H. Berkley, Hamlin, Kansas, on March 6, 1918, occured the marriage of their daughter, Miss Ione to Mr. Frank Cloud. Only the near relatives of the contracting parties were present. Mr. and Mrs. Cloud are among our best known and highly respected young people. The bride is an active worker in the Hamlin Brethren church. May the Lord grant them his highest blessings. Marriage service performed by the undersigned

S. C. HENDERSON.

PATTERSON-SHEFFLER.—On February 22, 1918, in Hagerstown, Maryland, Mr. Harry E. Patterson and Miss Joyce Sheffler were quietly married by the writer. Their many friends wish them a long life of happiness together.

Our Dead

GRIFFITH.—Mrs. Sadie Griffith, wife of Wm. Griffith of near Uniontown, passed from this field of action into the presence of her maker on March 10th. Funeral services were conducted in the Uniontown church on March 13th. Sister Griffith had quite completed her seventy-fifth year of her earthly sojourn, fifty-five years of which were hallowed by active, loyal, consistent union with the Brethren church. She was a loyal supporter of the church and all its interests; the college and Evangelist being among those uppermost in her thoughts. The large concourse of relatives and friends doing her homage the day of her burial spoke eloquently of her life and the esteem in which she was held. She lived to a "full age" and lived a full life. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Services by E. L. Miller.

LEWIS.—Jessie Maus Lewis, wife of Byron Lewis of Tiosa, Ind., departed this life March 2, 1918, at 27 years of age. She was the mother of seven children, two having gone on before. She leaves a father and mother, a husband and five children, the oldest being 7 years and the youngest an infant babe. She was a very devoted member of the Brethren church having been received during the ministry of Elder Hopkins. Funeral services were held from the Tiosa Brethren church on Monday, March 4th., in the presence of a very large audience of relatives and friends. Interment at Mexico, Ind., where Elder Hopkins assisted in the last sad rites. Services in charge of the writer who has been long, a very close friend of the entire family. May the Lord comfort the husband with his motherless children.

C. C. GRISSO.

GOOD.—Sister Vinnie Good, daughter of Christian W. Good and Sarah Stouffer Good, was born December 15, 1874, and passed to her reward on March 27, 1918. She was the first of the family to answer Death's call leaving besides her parents six sisters. She received the ordinance of baptism and united with the First Brethren Church of Waynesboro June 2, 1916, and lived an earnest and consistent Christian life. During the long period of illness she exercised unusual patience and fortitude, was always more concerned about the welfare of others than about her own comfort. Her unwavering faith in Christ and her confident looking forward to a meeting with Him was an inspiration to all who knew her best and who heard her tell of the Presence that watched over her guiding her through the dark days of her affliction. The words of the funeral text, "Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better," Phil 1:23; expresses the earnest desire of this faithful and devoted sister. May the God of all comfort heal the hearts of the dear ones of her home. Services by the writer.

A Grown Up Christian

If there is any one thing above another a child desires to be it is to be "grown up." The little girl dressed up in some of her mother's old clothes and the little boy with a candy cigar between his lips both give expression to the same desire, the desire to appear like "grown ups." This desire is so common and seemingly so perfectly natural that it calls forth very little criticism. In fact, if rightly directed, it is a desire to be commended. If the "grown ups" of a child's acquaintance are men and women of the right type, men and women possessing admirable qualities and Christian character, their influence upon the children that wish to appear like them will be a wholesome one, but if the environment of a child is that of the opposite character it is not to be wondered at that it absorbs the less noble ideals, for it wants to become like the grown up world it knows.

While these are such common characteristics of childhood in the natural world it seems that the same characteristics are only occasionally carried over into the spiritual realm. Altogether too many people, grown up physically, are perfectly willing to remain "babes in Christ Jesus," and many of the characteristics of childhood are given expression freely in their religious lives. It is true that the Master said, "except ye become as a little child ye cannot see the kingdom of God," but he did not say that one must always remain as a little child, except in the matter of child-like trust in the heavenly Father's care.

The Apostle Paul found that as he grew away from childish things in the natural life, so in his religious experience he found it necessary to abandon the childish way of speaking, of understanding and of thinking. As he put away all childish things when he became a physical man, so he put away the childish characteristics as he reached spiritual manhood. There is a time in the religious characteristics of every Christian when his experiences are those of a little child, but as we would not want to remain children always in a physical sense neither should we be content to always remain children in a spiritual sense. There should be a strong desire to "grow up." But in this desire to grow up the beginning of error is sometimes lurking. A little child may have the desire to be like the grown up ones around him and may want to partake of the same food his elders partake of, but all enlightened parents know they must supply their small children with a diet different from their own. A stunted or deranged physical manhood or womanhood is likely to result if this fact is ignored. So in the spiritual world the same characteristics may be found. Men who are only "babes" in Christ Jesus sometimes demand "strong meat" when the "sincere milk" of the word is all their spiritual childlikeness will bear. But the desire for strong meat before one is prepared to digest or assimilate it is better than the willingness to remain forever on a "milk diet." As some preachcers make the mistake of feeding spiritual babes on strong meat on the other hand some preachers make the mistake of "bottle-feeding" their congregations all the time. They do not take into consideration the fact that their spiritual children are growing up and must be supplied with food necessary for this growth. No doubt many an individual and many a congregation are robbed of a full grown Christian development and experience because they have been denied the food that develops the full grown life.

In all ages of the Christian church the times demanded men and women to be grown up, to be strong in Christ Jesus, but undoubtedly there was never a period in the history of Christianity when a more vigorous manhood and womanhood were demanded of the followers of Christ than at the present time. This is no time for Christian people to be content to remain "babes in Christ." The spiritual food is abundant, and if placed within their reach will result in a vigorous "grown up" life, and the people should be content with nothing else. The grave responsibility for portioning out such food to the people rests upon the pastors of the country, and they indeed should "study to show themselves approved unto God, rightly apportioning out the word of truth."

There are numerous ways by which childish thought is indicated in the lives of grown up men and women who should seriously take to heart the admonition of Paul and make a strenuous endeavor to overcome such habits or such an attitude that they may appear more like those who have passed through the stage of the child into that of vigorous maturity.

It is considered quite natural for a child to love self display even thoungh it may be considered an acquired liking learned from its elders, but a full-grown Christian should have a clear understanding that in the kingdom of heaven nothing is done for display, and that only those things count that are in harmony with the spirit of the Master who set the example for all disciples of all ages.

There is ever a tendency among some Christian workers to perform gladly those tasks which bring them into prominence, tasks which are more or less spectacular in themselves and that attract attention to the one who does the task, but all such motives are childish in the extreme and are entirely foreign to the motives of a real "grown-up" in Christ Jesus. One who is really mature in his Christian life will perform a task that he believes should be done even though no one except God and himself can possibly know that he has done it. With a really grown-up it is a case of "let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." The task is done for the task's sake and not for any honor or credit the world may bestow because of it.

It has been observed that in the present war work as carried on among the citizen, both male and female, of America, there are some who will participate in local activities if by so doing they may be brought into prominence, but if others should be appointed to the posts of honor they would be too busy with other things to have time to engage in such patriotic endeavors. In almost any large planning for evangelistic endeavors there are to be found those who, if they can be appointed to head committees, will work with the other workers, but if they can not be at the head they will not work at all. In many a childhood game a child is to be found that will refuse to play the game unless he can be "it." We need not stretch our imagination far to picture such a character among the would-be "grown-ups of many Christian organizations. There are still too many who refuse to be anything if they can not be "it."

This tendency is found not alone in local congregations of a church or of a denomination, but frequently it may be discovered in the lack of co-operation in the plans of the church as a whole. If one would break away from the world and really "seek first the kingdom of God," it will be found to be absolutely necessary to put off childish things and to become a really full grown Christian for it is no child's play to meet the requirements of a Christianity that will fill the place any religion must fill to win and hold a place in the modern world. Much is being said about religion after the war, but we want to say only one thing here and that is it will demand "grown-up" promoters.

From the Editor's View-Point

The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire

While the entire world is interested in, if not connected with, the great struggle between political freedom or democracy and military autocracy, and the really civilized world is hoping for victory for the representatives of the more democratic forms of government as represented by the armies of the Allies engaged in the struggle, yet it is coming to be more and more recognized that the world needs an industrial evolution, if not revolution, as much as it needs political revolution.

All the ills of the world can not be laid at the door of the military autocracy that rules in so large a portion of it. Many of them can be traced to the door of an industrial system that permits of the systematic bleeding of both the producers of the vast portion of the world's products, the laborer, and the large portions of the consumers of the world products, the common people. The great danger in considering and in trying to alter this situation is in the tendency to become as extreme in the opposite direction as the present condition has become in its development. Labor is not always just in its demands. Goaded on by the selfish methods employed by the great employers of labor, labor itself has turned bitter and frequently seeks unjust advantage more than simple justice. Especially is this true of organized labor. While it is true that between the helplessness of labor in certain lines and the equally helplessness of the public some industries, as the steel industry, have fattened enormously, yet it is also true that in other lines of industry there is no hope of increasing the compensation of the laborers engaged in them unless the public is willing to pay more for the service it receives as the result of their labors. The question of wages and compensation is not a one-sided question. Both the employer and the employe have problems to solve and they will be better solved when reason and not greed or envy sit upon the throne of man's judgment. The American Government has taken some radical steps to secure justice to workers as a war measure, but in the opinion of The New Republic it has not gone far enough, and this journal declares: "The Government needs to go much further than it has yet done in insisting on a radical program of social and industrial democracy as a war measure. By doing so it would doubtless scare and alienate the more prosperous classes, but these classes are too much bound up with the existing order to go beyond a verbal protest. They cannot strike. The wage-earners not only can but will, unless their interests which have been so misunderstood and neglected in the traditional economic organization, are recognized and safeguarded. By so doing, and only by so doing, can the allied governments be assured of the popular support which may be necessary to obtain a clean peace. More and more the price of destroying the impossible military autocracy of Germany is coming to the destruction of the similarly impossible industrial autocracy in the United States and throughout the British commonwealth."

This is one of the great problems that must be given adequate consideration after victory has been won, if it will not demand consideration before as a means of winning the victory.

Following, or Being Driven

Perhaps in few ways are people more frequently deceived than in that which pertains to their own relation to the things of life. It is not according to nature that all men should be leaders, else where were the ones to be led. Many even may have no ambition to be leaders; they may not want to assume the responsibility that belongs to a leader. They seem willing to do their share of the work providing some one else will bear the responsibility. How often have we heard some one say: "You take the lead and I will follow." It is good to be a leader, but since all cannot be leaders it is good to be an intelligent follower. Blind followers are not to be desired, but followers who have some reason for following and who understand the reason may be of great help to the one who leads. But some one has pointed out the fact that sometimes people who think they are following some cause or custom are sadly mistaken, since instead of being voluntary followers they are helplessly being driven. He who "follows" a custom because he is afraid to go against current opinion is not voluntarily following but instead is being "driven" by fear to do that which he does reluctantly.

Custom may be a good leader but it is more inclined to be a severe slave driver, and often when one thinks he is enjoying the greatest freedom he is in the greatest bondage to the hard task-master many people can know, the task-master custom.

Some people think they are following STYLE when the truth of the matter is they are being DRIVEN by it. Their common sense may teach them that it is an unwholesome or an undesirable style and they would like to be free from its restrictions but they are afraid not to do so. They do not wish to be regarded as "queer" or "odd," so to avoid any such classification they unwillingly adopt the style because they are slaves to custom.

A strong character may, as Dr. Mary Walker did, refuse to follow the style decreed for her sex, but not many people have the character of the great dress reformer of a generation or so ago. So taking all things into consideration we must admit that the evidence indicates that more people are being driven by custom than voluntarily follow it, but after all fear of public opinion or of public condemnation has its good ponits for it acts as policeman or as a safeguard to many a one's character.

When Suicide is Advisable

We know that in the eyes of the law suicide is considered in about the same class as homicide and against such classification we have no objections to offer, though sometimes the extent to which the legal authorities will go to preserve the life of a criminal who has attempted to end his own existence after committing a crime that they may mete out to him the legal punishment his crime merits seems strange indeed. We will also admit that the law of God as revealed in his word is against the taking of one's own life by any individual and yet the heading of this item would indicate that, in our mind at least, there are times when suicide is admissible, or even advisable, and we will plead guilty to the belief; but with a qualification.

The suicide which we have in mind is that which Richmond Pearson Hobson referred to when he said: "I am a political suicide." During his political career Mr. Hobson knew there were certain things one could not stand for and hope to remain long in congess, but he stood for those things regardless of the effect upon his future career. So long as he needed only the support of the people of his own home congressional district to keep him in office he had no trouble in holding his place, but when he sought a place of wider usefulness in the United States Senate he found that the vested interests of the state desired to be represented by a man more in harmony with their way of thinking and Mr. Hobson was laid away in the political mausoleum, as he says "a political suicide." But we do not believe Mr. Hobson regrets his stand for we are inclined to believe he would "rather be right than be senator," and we believe the American common people would have a higher regard for the lawmaking branch of the American Government if there were more congressmen and senators willing to commit political suicide than to become traitors to the great common cause of the American people. It may work a temporary harm to congress to be deprived of the influence of men of such convictions, but a reaction is sure to occur and then it will be determined that in the long run it was the best thing after all.

While it seems a sad ending that one should commit "political suicide," yet sometimes we feel that there should be more frequent acts of "political homicide." There are numbers of men at this moment occupying seats in both houses of Congress that are a hindrance to the great advance movements of government and especially the kind of government the real people of America want. There are plenty of unoccupied crypts in the great political Mausoleum of America and we would suggest as a remedy for some of the political and social evils of the day the ending of the political careers of such men in the most humane way possible and the consigning of their political remains to one of the many crypts awaiting them.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

How Much Interest Do You Get on It?

How we should like to tell you what the Easter Offering will amount to, but how can we? We have not the gift of prophecy in this matter. We will tell you when you send it in. At this writing (midnight, April 16th) not one-fifth of the Churches have reported. It will be like it was last year—along about Christmas (this is not a joke) some of you good pastors will be writing, "Dear Brother Bauman: Enclosed please find check for our Easter Offering at ————. Pardon our delay!" Well, "better late than never;" but, tell us, what rate of interest do you get on it?

"Do You Think We Will Go Over the Top?"

Well, now, let me tell you, if all you folks that have not yet reported at this writing will do as well as those who have reported, we will "go over the top" with a rush! Won't that be fine? Then we will roll up our sleeves, all of us, and pitch in and send some of the other fellows "over the top" who have a harder job than we have. There are only two chcurches who have reported at this writing whose offerings have not equalled their offerings of last year, and not a half dozen reporting have failed to "go over the top." Many have gone far "over the top." One church whose offering for the last several years was enough each year to carry the church"over the top," has a pastor who says "30c is our Goal this year." By a desperate effort he has attempted to reach his goal backwards, but I fear will not be able to hold his good people down to it. We are going to reach these Goals,—every one of them by September 1st, 1920, (and sooner, if we can), and if any of you pastors want to play the "slacker" and kick, we wish you a merry time "kicking against the pricks." It is the greatest program the Brethren church ever put forth for accomplishment, and we are going to win!

The Program is Doing Its Work

Goal 11 is proving the value of our entire Program. If you could only sit with me when I open my mail from time to time these days! As I pick up a letter, I say, "Well, that church gave us just $7.80 last year. Wonder what the Program has done for it?" Then I open the letter, and read: "Dear Brother Bauman: Please find enclosed check for $81.75. As we have 165 members, this lets us nicely over the top." Then I cry, "Hooray for the Program!" "Another that sent $13.65 last year. Wonder what we will find inside this?" "Dear Brother Bauman: "I am sending you our Easter Offering. Enclosed you will find money order for $70.00. This reaches the Goal and 'over the top' at 63c per member." So it goes. Now you can figure out for yourself what it means. And I am sure that every department of our church work must be feeling the inspiration of the Four-Year Program.

We Should Be Mightly Interested in Goal 8. How I wish we might carry that "over the top" this year! I do not suppose it is possible, but more and more I am convinced that we cannot furnish Ashland College with the sinews of strength too soon. The School Board of this city where I live has just passed an order for compulsory military training in our city High School! I will be wanting a place to send my boy to school one of these days. I'll take him to Greenland before they shall ever be permitted to take MY boy and teach him the art of war. No matter whether he heads toward the ministry or some other station in life, I want MY boy under training that shall Brethrenize him, and give him a love for the old Book such as only Ashland shall be able to give. Say, Beachler, when are you going to strike Long Beach? The latch-string is out any old time. Goal 8 is our next pull, and we'll win it if we have to put a second mortgage on the dear old church. What's got to be done, has got to be done,—that's all. Get out your "Liberty Bonds" and turn them over to Ashland College.

The One Big Job Ahead

however, to my way of thinking, is the winning of Goal 4. That man Ronk has a man's job, if ever a man had. If we are to reach that 30% increase in membership over 1916, every man of us, and every woman among us, will have to get to work NOW. That Goal calls for far-reaching plans wisely laid and wisely worked. It calls for hours upon our knees before God. Souls are not to be won by mere human machcinery. And these days! There never was a time when men are questioning each other about the meaning of things that touch ceternity,—as now. It is a time of opportunity; but it is also a time when men are going to spurn everything but the real thing,—the thing that they can really rest their weary souls upon. If we Brethren will only awake to the fact that of all people, we have the real thing for soul-rest,—the fulness of the Word of God,—if we will throw our very souls into the work of placing the fulness of the Word before a famishing world, we ought to see hundreds and thousands of souls swept into the kingdom of God in the next several years. It is no child's play. It is a task that is going to call for the complete surrender to God's service of all the best that is in us. NOW is the time to plan under the direction of His Spirit a soul-winning campaign in every Church in the Brotherhood. May God help us with Pentecostal power as in days of old.

The Spirit of Democracy

BY B. T. BURNWORTH

Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty. II Corinthians 3:17

The Greek word Eleutheria means freedom and as this is the basic principle of democracy I want to render the above text, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is democracy." It seems a far cry back to Moses yet this great law-giver gave us the basis of our present jurisprudence and we have done nothing more than add a few statutes since. The closer we have clung to this law which was the law of God, the greater we have become as a nation, a free, peaceable, liberty-loving people.. This is not only the basis of democracy but of the Christian religion as well, and that they might possess just that, drove our fathers from Germany, Holland and England in the Half-Moon and the Mayflower to this country where they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience and hand down to us, their children, a legacy of faith and a heritage that the world is now struggling for, viz, democracy.

I. How Old is Democracy?

Is it original with us? Have we been the seed of the world? If so then that might be a mighty argument why we are in this war, "to make the world safe for democracy." No we have only been a mighty factor in promoting and perpetuating it for it is older than we are. We find that the world is banded together to maintain that which is very old. Democracy is as old and as eternal as truth, and crushed to earth will rise again. It is the right of man to be free and the European world is a giant that has awakened to throw off the ancient shackles, three ply, forged out of ignorance, tradition and tyranny. Democracy is the oldest human conviction it even seems inherent to the animal gnawing loose from a steel trap, birds beating against their cages, are they not driven by the same ineradicable principle as man to be free? Witness Russia, while we are a bit impatient and vexed with her, give her time, she is in the birth struggle and her offspring shall be free born. Theirs is a great heart beating against age long restraint, the flame of freedom is not yet dead on her altar and the unspeakable history of Siberia will repeat itself for those who once were in autocratic power, as was witnessed in the Frencch Revolution.

It was true with our own black race.. They were not their own and were even denied a soul, but when freedom came they shouted for joy. How did they know what freedom was? Answer, how does a bird know it has wings? or the deer know that it is as fleet as the wind? Now look again with Moses and his millions escaped from bondage. What can they do? Be not deceived, they proceed at once to form the purest democracy the world has ever known. The Hebrew name was Theocracy, our people call it democracy, for theocracy is the very soul of demcracy. The inalienable claim of every human being on earth. No wonder Moses' law passed into our civil code and the world's best system of government and where it has gained the fullest expression there is the greatest freedom.

II. Autocracy Against Democracy is an Old Battle Line.

The history of Palestine and the Jew reveals the fact that they are subject to periodic drouths which drove the nomad southward, and we know that Abraham was once in the fertile valley of the Nile and Jacob sought food which Egypt had wisely conserved under the administration of Joseph who was probably as great as our own Hoover. The Hebrew people fared well until a king who was the "Pharaoh that knew not Joseph." He liked our modern German Pharaoh, made his people vassals and as Wilhelm would make himself immortal by being as "terrible as the Hun" Rameses, 2nd sought to immortalize himself in monument building of which the Land of Egypt testifies by her crumbling stone. To do this a dual system was established, that of tithing and slavery, and the Jew in the land of Goshen was no exception to this law. The sons of Jacob were lovers of freedom and the battle of autocracy against democracy raged. Autocracy won this fight, but as the Hebrew labored his heart was still set on freedom and the collapse of that awful system of slavery came with the pestilences and plagues and Moses led his people out to liberty and peace.

As we refresh our minds of this history this titanic world struggle is what must have logically have come as sure as law is law and God is God. The present crisis is shifted from a country not much bigger than Belgium to a world full of social and religious unrest, and little Belgium is just where the sword pierced a bit deeper than elsewhere. As we go from Goshen to Belgium or Egypt to Europe we find our present foe not only equal to Rameses but plus all the senturies of science and philosophy wrongly used can conjure up for this nefarious business of war making. It reminds us that the more education one has the more desperately wicked one can be.

III. How Shall the Crisis Be Met?

All great crises come about by the same laws, the circumstances only differ, from the ambition of a monument builder to the shooting of an Arch Duke. Moses met it by emigration. It is characteristic of the Hebrew to migrate and while others do the same, yet he maintains his identity while others lose theirs by amalgamation. Much credit is due for Moses' superior leadership. He knew and we know that force met by force can settle nothing permanently, yet it is worth remembering that before Moses ran away he struck a telling blow in defense of his fellow country-man as Belgium did before her retreat to the present line. No doubt Moses struck that blow from a humanitarian standpoint, but pondering over that blow I believe he and we know that violence met with carnage is disastrous. War is destructive, even if we gain the desired end. We are trusting that out of this great conflict of economic, social and religious disorder war shall be no more, not that "war has settled war," but we will all be sufficiently sobered to see the folly of it and the next nation that tears up a treaty as a mere scrap of paper may be arrested by an international policeman and sentenced to the world Siberian exile of disfranchisement, being like Cain a recognized vagabond by every nation on earth.

Moses believed the best way to meet the crisis was through education. You can account for the wide awake Japan, the awakened but drowsy China, and the awakening Russia through this very fact; and more yet the world is against autocracy because of its peace propaganda of the last years. Every peace conference and court taught arbitration and it is worth noting that the utterances of President Wilson or Lloyd George have said while your heart and mine beat in sympathetic accord that war must cease and the big word of the future must be co-operation instead of competition.

War will not cease because it is an economic impossibility, but it must cease, because every where it shall be taught as an evil as we teach alcohol to be. There can be but one conclusion although this may be a long one as conclusions usually are. First the text, "where the spirit of the Lord is there is democracy." The conception of Jehovah as Liberator has always stirred the religious heart to a mighty effort. It has its evolution again with the Hebrew. First there were historically many Gods. This is Polytheism. Each nation claimed the greatest and war resulted to try the superiority of the Gods. The vanquished adopting the conqueror's God. This was a process of elimination until eacch nation claimed just one mighty God. That was Henotheism. Next step, necessarily was one God mightier than all others. This is Monotheism. "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me," said the great Law and the Jew was taught that Jehovah was one God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and it bound them together into a nation. It was a high appeal and the only one left that could arouse these disheartened and exhausted people. Nothing but the same high ideal will strike fire after this present conflict. They at once become essentially free and their hatred for autocracy grew out of their love for Jehovah their Liberator. This hatred seems world wide because it has its root in the religion of the very Jehovah God that has lasted throughout the centuries and will outlast time itself.

A Democratic faith makes us cry out with Wesley "The whole world is my parish." We are children of one father hence we are brethren, equality is assured in this concept and only free people can appreciate equality and practice fraternity. The Hebrews gave us the first democracy because it was their religion and because they were willing to live by their own labors and did not campaign against other nations which inevitably results in aristocracy, which is a high sounding name for parasiteism and at heart must be autocratic for the man that does no work, the man that does must work. David the warrior could not build the temple which was a symbol of the peaceful presence of God .

It seems we had to strike this blow like Moses in Egypt against our great taskmaster, but the future will reveal our chief if not sole resource in meeting the crisis, is an educational propaganda and the whole world is in that school now and if this were true, and fight we must, it were at least worthy of our best.

Impromptu Flashes

BY W. J. H. BAUMAN

Respectability does not of necessity mean salvation from sin. But salvation from sin means the purest kind of respectability.

Intellectual scholarship left to itself, cannot save from sin; But that does not justify a premium on ignorance.

Thoughtfulness is the forerunner of confidence and success.

The wonderful and literal fulfillment in our day, of ancient and Biblical prophecy, should prove of tremendous and very deep interest to God's people of the day.

How glad, my brother and sister, you and I ought to be, that God has not left us in utter darkness, concerning his eternal purposes.

Heaven, earth and hell are open for the exercise of human thought. Are you utilizing this great opportunity?

Surely, the world's system is tottering.

Turn away my brother and sister, from pessimism. Earth's present condition is but a cloud overshadowing the sunshine momentarily of unspeakable glory for God's people.

"Jesus is coming, Is coming again," and then, there will be no more sorrow for those who trust him now.

"He who hateth his brother is a murderer." Keep that in memory.

"My brethren love not in word only; but in deed and in truth that carries the aroma of Christlike love, and sounds exceedingly practical, doesn't it?

"We are living. We are dwelling. In a grand and awful time. To be living is sublime."

I doubt very much, whether a more fitting poetic sentence in its relation to our day could be found. Surely, "the figtree is putting forth its buds."

The road to heaven may be narrow, but, it is gloriously and brilliantly lighted.

The Devil is not always fierce and ugly in his methods ot nabbing us. He may come after us in the brilliancy of an "Angel of light."

Have the courage my brother and sister, to say no to Satan's solicitations, at all times. No matter what the consequences may be. They will prove for your good, even if they should cost your life.

Three V's and Their Relation to Church Success

BY A BRETHREN PASTOR

Discussipns of church efficiency, proficiency, deficiency and many other FICIENCIES are rife today. One can hear it on all sides. To even think of writing on such a subject is almost unpardonable let alone daring to write along such lines. One's mind is weary reading methods, methods, methods. In this age of the world's history we are wont to call many things "Scraps of Paper." This is not only true internationally, but you will find it to be painfully local. Big Business today is not looking for the fellow that can suggest new things so much as they are loking for the man that has the ability to carry into the workings of industry those ideas. It ought to be so in the church, but we are content to listen to method built upon method without the sure foundation-action. Such building is in vain for to its own dishonor it will collapse. In other words, when it comes time to move our products in a day of stress our rolling stock will be temporarily out of commission on some SIDE track. We will find that we were guilty of listening to too much of how to do and did too little of the doing. The place of the sign post is easily filled, all you have to do is dig a hole and put it in and pack the dirt and you have it. Its work is to POINT the way. But remember, my friend, you, who are aspiring to the glory of the sign post that it takes gas to go where that sign post points. We need in the church today more GAS ENGINES, makes little difference what kind of a hood they are under just so long as they go. Too many of us have been filling fence post holes instead of racing down the road of ACTION. You might think that sign boards are necessary to your sure arrival at the point of success in your church. Well, a good suggestion would be to apply the life of the seaman. He lives most of his time on the water. No sign posts there to keep him aright.. The only thing he has is a piece of paper and it is not a scrap either. He calls it his chart. Fellow Christian, if there are some people around you that insist on being sign posts, let them, to their own loss. To follow them means failure and defeat. Their work and word is faulty and unsafe where success is desired. Use as your only means of getting the right way at the right time, to the right people the infallible and unfailing guide. The guide that has lead millions aright in the past and yet has the correctness to lead millions more in the paths of rightfulness. You know its name and where to find it. The Bible is that guide book that every Christian ought to follow. If he does he is assured of sure going, but woe betide the stupid one that follows after some would-be sign post that has picked the stand-still job and does not get busy himself, going where he points others to go.

You wonder about the Three V's. Well, there is some more of HOW-TO-GET-THERE in them. But in each how-to-get-there you will find the where with to go. A method with a main spring will go. A main spring alone will go if you wind it up and let go of it, but that is more than methods will do. It would be better if we could get rid of some of them like that. Some methods are like smallpox when we do manage to get rid of them they still remain by leaving their marks. And that where everybody will see them. The first V is Variety. The Moving Picture has come to the relief of the theater today. It enables the manager to place before the public a change of play and player each day. Under the old system a company in order to make it a paying proposition had to stay a week or more. During that time it became old and worn out to the people who had seen it once. The time for STOCK COMPANY Christianity has passed. God is calling for the MOVING picture kind. The world calls for that, too. What is meant by that, you ask. Just this, too long we have been at the expense of others staging the same worn out method until folks do not come to see our show any more. The Devil adopted the variety method a long while ago and has succeeded to put across a many a one on the church. Change your line up if you want success. Maybe its new paint or paper. A new church might be needed just now. Don't let Liberty Bonds or Thrift Stamps be your excuse. The United States of America knows that after this war is over that the thing it will need along with and above a great many other things will be a well organized church movement. A church building that is not meeting the needs of the community is as bad to that neighborhood as a gun would be in the hand of a soldier in the front line trench without a barrel. Adopt the program of change and get that new church building as soon as you can. It takes money you say, sure it does. The moving picture men spend millions today where they used to spend hundreds to get to the people the thing that meets the demand.. The demand of your community is far more pressing than any other. Will you tarry in supplying it? They tell us that if we don't subscribe for Liberty Bonds the Kaiser has a chance of winning the war. If he does then we will have to pay more to be his subjects than it will now cost to subject him. True every word of it. The same thing is true in your church and neighborhood. It will be cheaper to erect a church building that will subject the surrounding country in a spiritual way than to have that community subject you to criticism of a shameful sort. It will cost you more to be subjected than to subject. It might be that a new preacher is needed and to get one is not always to get rid of the one you have. But it might be if you raised his salary he would be able to buy new clothes, read new books, see new faces and your aim might be accomplished, he might then be a new preacher. Many other new things you might need to create a variety in your church life. God loves variety. That is true because every blade of grass is different. Every leaf has something all its own. Every face has its own characteristics. Find God's handiwork and you find variety. Men love it for it is the spice of life. Monotony kills, if you don't believe it look at that church by the roadside that failed to adopt the system that saved the theatre, i. e., variety. Get it and with the getting you receive a guarantee for life that success will be yours and that of your church.

The second V is Virility. Too long have the Christian people come to the world with the idea that religion had to be presented in a way that carried with it apology. We have been too apt to think that our position in the world was that of the man who had to excuse himself for living. Excuse yourself for no such thing. If you are living for Jesus Christ you are living the only life that is worth living at all. Now if that life is the only one worth living it ought to be lived with all the power we could get together. Not one thing ought to be left undone in the getting of everything in line for the greatest drive against the Devil and any lie that he tells about us, that it is our rightful act to apologize for being here. Tell the Devil in very few words that Jesus Christ is the King of Kings; the earth and the fulness thereof is his; that the kingdoms of this earth will sooner or later be his; that every knee will bend to acknowledge him Lord of Lords. Even the Devil will some day against his will acclaim him King over all. What religion needs today is not the Pink Tea preacher that asks permission to preach the truth of some godless crowd that because they have been able to keep from public gaze their sin, slip by as Christians. No, a thousand times, NO. We need more preachers who have the invincible three P's Pep, Punch and Push. Keep the pulpit refined and polished with good grammar and excuses, we hear? the other sounds too rude and undignified for ministers of the gospel. Let us be willing to be as common as John the Baptist with his camel's hair and leather clothing among the robes and gowns of the ritualistic Jews. His wilderness diet would make good war ration for the church. To get off the dainties and partake of the substantials of good, wholesome red-blooded Christian living. We need force today as we never needed it before to fill every pulpit. The gospel ship is to go safely across this troublous sea of present, difficulty, but to do so she must be manned with men with vigor, strength, sturdiness and fearlessness. The unstable apologetic poor excuse of a man that dares to face this world in the future without red blood in every word of his message will be disrobed and his poor bony composition will be exposed to the world that it may know the source of such material. The Devil cannot be loved out of hell. But we can with a short of love, love some people into hell. Think and act. Act quickly for the time is short. Get the snap into every step. Shoulders back, head up, eyes straight ahead, marching in the army of God. An army that cannot be defeated by the Devil, hell or anybody or anything else. Enlist your best today for God and his great cause in the world and put it across, over the top with a shout of victory. The battle is yours if you give virility its proper place in your Christian life.

The third V is virtue. We can find examples for the above points by the score all around us. Inspiration flows at our feet from the lives of the men about us. Variety and virility are to be found in the hearts of many men today fighting life's battles. But we are discussing an altogether subject now. Virtue is the source of noble living. The essence of highest manhood. From it flows the beauty of God. Without it our lives would not be worth the effort above asked. What is the use of having variety if it is not conducive of good. How can it be unless we place virtue in our variety. Virtue and variety will make a team hard to compete with. But most anybody could run out a single like variety alone. Be sure then that all you do let it be done with virtue first in your life. Virility, what have you to do with virtue? If words could speak this would be the answer, "Manhood without virtue is like a body without blood, dead." Clean living is far better than living clean only. You cannot conceive of life clean and wholesome and not be virile. Virility and cleanliness go hand in hand. Virtue though mentioned lastly in this discussion will always lead and follow every true life. To get virtue one does not go to his friend, nor to his pastor, nor to any one here on earth. One must needs go to the heavenly father through Jesus to get that priceless treasure. Taking Jesus as our Savior will get us all the virtue we need to balance variety and virility. With these three immeasurable, incalculable, and unsurmountable forces in your church life you can go on each day fighting its battles and at the evening time rejoice that victory has been yours.

A Statement by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends

This decisive hour of history summons our Society to make its utmost contribution to humanity's deepest needs. Believing that this requires us to meet the moral and spiritual issues of the times simply and fearlessly, we feel called to make clear our Christian faith as applied to war.

Our Society's opposition to all war as un-Christian has been maintained throughout its history. In 1660 our forefathers declared:

> "We utterly deny all outward wars and strife and fightings with outward weapons, for any end, or under and pretence whatever; this is our testimony to the whole world. The Spirit of Christ by which we are guided is not changeable, so as once to command us from a thing as evil and again to move unto it; and we certainly know, and testify to the world, that the Spirit of Christ, which leads us into all truth, will never move us to fight and war against any man with outward weapons, neither for the Kingdom of Christ, nor for the kingdoms of this world."

These convictions have been re-affirmed by Friends in all generations and during the present war our Yearly Meetings throughout the world have given clear evidence that they are steadfast to the same principles.

The basis of our opposition to war is much more than any single command of the Old or the New Testament. It is our faith that the way of love by which our Master, Jesus Christ, met and conquered evil, remains for his followers today the true method of combating wrong. For us, as for him, this involves refusal to use means which, like war, violate love and defeat its ends; but it does not mean a weak neutrality toward evil. For us, as for him, it means a life of action devoted to the heroic purpose of overcoming evil with good. The unspeakable sufferings of humanity are now calling us and all men to larger sacrifices and more earnest endeavors to put this faith into practice. To such endeavors we dedicate ourselves.

In accordance with this faith, we desire to maintain all our relationships today.

To our beloved country, we affirm the deep loyalty of grateful hearts. We long to help her realize her noble capacities as a great Republic dedicated to liberty and democracy. But we believe that we best serve our country and all humanity when we maintain that religion and conscience are superior even to the State.

To President Wilson, we declare our appreciation of his steadfast and courageous efforts to keep the aims of the United States in this great conflict liberal, disinterested and righteous.

To our fellow-countrymen, who are following the leadings of conscience into ways where we cannot be their comrades, we give assurance of respect and sympathy in all that they endure. Finally,

For all men, whether they be called our enemies or not, we pray that the sacrificial love of Christ, stirring us to repentance, may reconcile and unite all mankind in the brotherhood of his spirit.

Twelve Missionary Needs

BY BISHOP JOSEPH F. BERRY

More missionary facts.

Around the Fireside

SHACKLED. BY MRS. LILY WANDEL

"I can't take this opportunity, this chcance of a life time because—I'm shackled!" The ring of desperation in his voice was convincing.

"That's not a very nice way to speak of your wife and children." Amanda, his elder sister, fixed her lips in a prim, shocked line.

"Facts are there, you can't get away from them." He tried hard to curb his excitement, but his voice got the better of him and rose louder and louder. "I'm tied down to my thirty-five-dollar--a-week job by my wife and children. Here is a chance to better myself, right at my door. I have only to grasp it and the road opens to success. But I can't."

"I don't understand," faltered Amanda, rather frightened at his vehemence. "Please speak lower, Bob, you'll waken mother."

The effort he made to modulate his voice was successful only for a short time. "It's this, Amanda ,listen. Jim Bolton has come to me with a proposition, an A No. 1 opportunity. He has the patents on this movable electric sign. The whole thing is a cinch, once we get started the thing will sell like hot cakes! Everything is in tip-top order. We can't lose, it's impossible. And I tell you it's only because Bolton thinks so much of me that he'll let me in on this—fifty-fifty what he said. When I think of it—and I have to pass it up!" He began to stride up and down the room, running his hands wildly through his hair and bumping into furniture at every turn.

Amanda shook her head. "I'm slow to grasp anything, but, really, Bob, where is the point, the hitch, I might say?"

He threw himself into a chair, a hopeless heap, then roused himself sufficiently to explain. "The hitch is money. Fifty-fifty I said, each five thousand to start. I could swing it all right. We own our house. The bank would loan that amount in a pinch. Besides, I could borrow something on my life-insurance."

"Well, if it's so sure that you'll make so much money why don't you go into it?"

He gave her a deprecating glance. "My dear child, with every new business there is always that possibility that it might not succeed. You've got to take a chcance. How in the world do you think men get started in making a fortune? Nothing is cock-sure, nothing. This proposition of Bolton's is about as safe as a thing can be, but, naturally, it's a speculation. If you never risk anything, Amanda, you never can gain anything, isn't that clear? And we're bound to clear up $10,000 the first year!"

Amanda was convinced. "Go home, Bob, and talk it over with Luella. I'm sure—"

He jumped up with a yell that sent his sister back in the depths of her chair. "Talk it over with Luella! Don't you know what she would say? Not that she'd condemn the idea. Oh, no. But I know the line of talk. Would it be right to risk all the little money we have, and shouldn't we think of the children, etc. I'd be helpless against her argument. Aw—can't you see I'm tied hand and foot?" He made a gesture of utter despair. Then, with a sudden vigorous inspiration. "I know what I should do. Go to Bolton and sign up and then tell Luella. Then the thing would be done and I'd have to see it through. I've no backbone. Other men take chances!" He began staring fixedly at his puzzled sister. She was aware that his eyes had only by chance settled on her, that a crisis was taking place. A moment later, he seized his hat and dashed out out of the house.

Outside the cold air made him more determined. His mind was made up firmly. It was settled. He would not go home till he had signed up with Bolton. Now that he had decided, he felt easier. After all, he was doing it for Luella and the children.

"Am I dreaming? Hello, Bob Weston!" some one gave him a resounding slap on the shoulder.

"Why—Dick Foster! I'm glad to see you! Haven't laid eyes on you for—let's see—it must be twelve years."

"Come on, Bobbie, we got to talk over old times. Let's have a bite to eat somewhere."

Bob shook his head. Sorry, but he had an important engagement. But Dick was persistent, and ten minutes later they were seated in a near-by restaurant.

It was very inopportune, just on his way to Bolton, and he wanted the thing settled over Sunday. And Luella probably was waiting now at home. But Dick Foster was so genuinely glad to see him that Bob simply could not run away, no matter how much he wanted to.

"Now, Bob, how's the world been treating you? You look fine!"

He smiled faintly, almost sourly, in answer. Then, suddenly, like a flash, came the thought—Dick Foster has made good, he will loan you the money for this deal. He would go easy. You can't break a thing like that all of a sudden. And he looked at his friend with new interest, his eyes beaming with enthusiasm.

"Dick, tell me about your luck first. I bet you've made your little pile, eh?" He laughed jovially. This was a real piece of good fortune, meeting Foster.

Dick shook his head slowly. "Bob," very gravely, "I made a mess of my life." With it he dashed Bob's hopes to the ground. Now he was not interested to hear any more; all he wanted was to get away to Bolton before it would be too late. But Foster was started, and there was no stopping him.

"I always was after big game. Always the same cry: This time I have it. But nix. Let me tell you, Bob, how it commenced. I had a nice little sum saved when I worked at Muir's store. Then a fellow came along with a scheme—a sure thing—and—well, I fell for it. But it did not teach me a lesson. I wouldn't be taught. As soon as I had a little money together, I was ready for the next proposition. I wanted to get rich quick. I was ready to risk my last dollar on anything that looked good. I told myself that was the way fortunes were made. So I signed notes, borrowed, mortgaged, I did everything that leads to worry and trouble, but certainly not to riches. Always for some sure thing, absolutely sure!" He laughed bitterly. "If I had stuck to Muir's store, I guess I'd be manager there now, and be proud of myself." He did not even look at his wide-eyed friend, but continued in sort of a far-away voice. "I guess if I had married, it would have been different. I would not have taken those risks, you know I'd have been nailed to that Muir job. It's all right for you married fellows to preach—you're absolutely out of temptation, shackled to responsibility, if you want to call it that, but I guess those shackles are really chains of love and the responsibilities safeguards against wildcat propositions!"

Both were silent, thinking. Then Bob pulled out his watch.

"Sorry, but I've got to hurry. An important business engagement. You must come out to the house and see Luella. So long!"

And he was off, hurrying to Bolton's office.

"I knew you would come, Weston! Been waiting for you! Take off your coat, have a cigar! You're too wise a fellow to let this slip by!"

Bob smiled. "I wanted to get it off my mind for Sunday—"

"You're right. Everything's ready for you. Here are the papers, all fixed. Everything's arranged. All you got to do is sign, right here."

"That's fine," interrupted Bob, "for some other fellow, not me, Bolton. I just called in to tell you to count me out on this. I can't go into it, you see I'm shackled!" His voice rang so clear and decided it was useless to argue with him. "Besides, I have a very fine chance for advancement where I am. It's sticking to your job that leads to success in the end! Good night!"—Religious Telescope.

EVANGELIST HONOR ROLL

REVIEW OF

The Thought and Work of the Church

To our way of thinking, so long as the Four-Year Program of the church is the one thing that stands out above everything else in the work of the church, and so long as the goal set for the Brethren Evangelist remains unaccomplished, this first item on this page can very properly be devoted to announcing the progress made in the campaign for Evangelist subscriptions. Here we have announced from week to week the churches and the pastors that have won places on the Evangelist Honor Roll, and we believe by this method we have succeeded in stirring up preachers and congregations that otherwise would have remained unmoved. We want to use it to "provoke one another unto love and good works."

We are glad to announce this week that another church ahs won a place on the Honor Roll. Linwood, Maryland is the church and E. M. Riddle is the pastor. We congratulate them both and wish them the best results from this really progressive move. Others are seriously considering the matter. One of the large churches of the brotherhood has this matter scheduled for its next quarterly business meeting, and we have been assured that the plan will be adopted. Our goal is not yet reached, but to be frank about it we have made more progress than we really expected we would make in the short time we have been at it.

Over the top and beyond, might well have been the heading of Brother Beachcler's Campaign Notes this week. With returns still coming in from churches that were canvassed early in the campaign, it is found that Indiana has now reached $25,000.00 in the College Endowment Campaign, and four churches are yet to be canvassed at a later date. The last church canvassed by Brother Beachler was Burlington and it picked up a one thousand dollar load quickly and will carry it cheerfully. Brother Beachler's suggestion that a goodly number of Brethren turn over their Liberty Bonds to the endowment fund is a splendid one. It is not often that one can devote money to help two good causes at one and the same time.

The Ohio Brethren conference which met at Fremont last week was very well attended when the location is taken into consideration. It is largely well to one side of the district, but a most hearty welcome was accorded the visitors and we believe the local church was greatly helped. Eight representatives from Ashland were in attendance at the conference, but the rains of the week kept others at home who had intended driving through. Ohio has decided to hold future conferences in the fall of the year and will begin by holding an inspirational conference at Ashland next October or November.

H. M. Harley has caught the right idea, and instead of writing on "Smoke from Busy Pittsburgh" has headed his communication "Sparks from Busy Pittsburgh." The philosophy is good. Why not ignore as much as possible the smoke of life and think of the bright sparks that are behind the smoke, struggling to make the world brighter. It is a mighty good report that Brother Harley makes and we have no doubt he made a few sparks fly in his efforts to accomplish all that he has in Pittsburgh the last year. Read his report and see.

J. B. Lambert's report of the observing of Ashland College Night by the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Brethren church is a good one and shows that the young people of the church are taking the matter seriously and that they are planning to stand for the best things in life and which are to be found in the church and in the schools.

Undoubtedly Brother Lyon is correct in his belief that the people in Washington feel the stress and the strain of the times more than those of us who are located at a distance from the center of military activities of the country, but we are glad that his report shows that the Brethren cause in Washington is not allowed to slow down because of the high tension under which the other work of the city is being carried on. The problems Brother Lyon is now facing in the Capital city are the problems most city pastors are compelled to face. Brother Lyon is meeting them bravely and in the strength that comes from much prayer. His entire report, including the report of their Easter missionary offering reveals something of the prayer life of the congregation.

The words which Brother Henderson writes so feelingly of the passing of the Garrison, Iowa Brethren church are words that can be written of other churches that have served their day and generation. Not every local church can expect to survive the centuries; but it is no indication that a church has had no mission because it must give way in time to greatly altered conditions and circumstances. Out of the Garrison church Brother Henderson came in his ministry, and through him Garrison, though dead, still preaches the gospel of Jesus Christ. Other larger churches have prospered in numbers for many years and yet have not sent one messenger of the Cross out into the world.

The Travel Notes by Brother Jennings cover a great deal of territory this week as they take the writer from Kansas to Washington. Brother Jennings had a profitable time working with the people of God in the great state of Kansas and we hope he may have an equally profitable time with the Brethren on the Pacific coast. We have on hand the report of the Ft. Scott meeting from the pastor which will be published next week, and we trust to receive full reports from the meeting in the state of Washington after the work has been accomplished.

It seems that it is with some timidity that the new church correspondent from Long Beach, California begins his duties to which he has not yet become accustomed. His predecessor, W. J. H. Bauman, was a man of more than four score years and had a wide experience in church work, but Brother Kent may feel that he still has the most of his life to live and he should be glad to undertake what a veteran has done so well for so many years. Besides this there is always something to report from Long Beach. If you do not believe it just read the report this week and think of the Easter missionary offering.

The contribution on Three V's is published this week without the name of the writer because the name was not attached to the manuscript itself and some way got lost, evidenly in the waste basket. Frequently we receive contributions from brethren whose names appear in the accompanying letter or on the return corner of the envelope, but not attached to the contribution itself. This should not be. Every article should be signed on its own pages by the writer, otherwise the envelope may be thrown into the waste basket or the letter filed away in the letter file and the contribution in the editorial file and when the time comes to use the contribution it may be difficult if not impossible as in this case to connect it to the proper individual. If the writer of the Three V's will inform us as to his identity we will gladly make acknowledgement.

After a silence of a few weeks our Ashland College correspondent again comes to our readers with a report of some of the activities of the College. Each week reveals the coming nearness of the close of the school year and all are made to wonder what the future has in store for the colleges of America. It is an unsettled world that they have to reckon with and no one is able to foretell with any degree of certainty what the final influence of the times will be in the college life of the country.

Around the Editor's Table

The Age of the Unreal

The age in which we are now living has frequently been regarded as a commercial age, a scientific age, an age of enlightenment, an age in which the people have passed beyond the period when the unreal can be passed off among them as the genuine. Shams and humbugs have been preached against so earnestly by both press and pulpit and the general public has been so generally warned against all kinds of fraud that the people are supposed to be pretty well freed from the desire to invest in "gold bricks," "salted mines," etc., and we are supposed to be able to distinguish at a glance the difference between the diamond in the human character and that which is commonly known to the world of gems as "paste."

There would be little sale in these modern days for "wooden nutmegs" or similar imitations of articles of food, but though we pride ourselves on the realism of the demands of this age candor will compel us to admit that our realism itself is largely a sham and that we are living in an age of very marked unrealism, of imitation and fraud, and the science of the age of which we are so prone to boast has not always saved us from the frauds of the age. Witness the following statement from an editor of The Christian Endeavor World on the unique subject, "Painted Salmon:"

"The Boston Health Department recently discovered some rotten salmon. It had been freshened up with red paint! The paint was first brushed over it and then heat was applied to make the paint sink in. This delightfully doctored fish had been sold all over Boston.

"Painted salmon! The abominable practice extends over more than the fish trade. Orators use it when they furbish up a few facts with gaudy rhetoric and make the combination pass for statesmanship. Girls and women use it when they daub their faces with an imitation health which they are too lazy to make real by exercise. School pupils use it when they cram for examinations after weeks of careless idling. Housekeepers use it when they tidy up the parlor but leave the sitting-room chaotic. Church-members use it when they attend "services" but perform no service for the Master.

"Painted salmon! Painted salmon! The Board of Health of the Universe has only one place for it—the fire of the Pit."

And yet we claim to be living in an age in which only the real is appreciated and enjoyed.

When Protests are Unpopular

During the pre-reformation days it was exceedingly unpopular to protest against the existing order of things in either state or church, in government or religion, and not until Luther had the courage to throw down the gauntlet in the face of the whole religious and political world did a protest of any kind or sort seem worth while. There then came a time when it was a mark of distinction to be called a "protestant," and even to this day the two great elements in the Christian church are regarded as the Church of Rome and the Protestants. With the growth of protestantism in the church there has also grown a protestantism in politics and in social life and in the industrial world.

For many years it was a mark of distinction to be a protestant against any existing order of things, but in these modern days those of us who would lift our voices in protest against some present tendencies are looked upon with great disfavor and we are compelled to swallow our protests before they have reached our lips. The futility of protesting under present conditions has been clearly pointed out in an editorial in one of our exchanges which treats the subject: "The Worship of Lady Nicotine," upon which the writer has the following to say:

"A new cult seems to be establishing itself in these war days —the worship of Lady Nicotine.

"To be sure, many have always bowed at her shrine, but now the nation seems to be obsessed with the thought that tobacco is the one thing needful. We used to think that cigarettes were bad for boys; but now an Anti-Cigarette League would scarcely dare to show its diminished head, and unless we fill the comfort-bags with what used to be called "coffin-nails" we are pointed at with the "slow-moving finger of scorn."

We used to think it wise to discourage the use of tobacco, especially on the part of those who had never acquired the habit. Now it would seem that the proper thing to do is to promote the habit in every way possible. How the cigarette monopoly must chuckle over this growing cult!

The other day in a car not a smoking-car we saw four naval men and four civilians smoking cigarettes, one also a vile pipe, though the car was half full of ladies, a breach of the rules which the conductor took especial pains not to see. We are not fanatics on the subject; we do not regard smoking as a deadly sin; we want our brave boys in the trenches to have every comfort.

But nicotine is still a poison; cigarettes still stunt growing boys physically, mentally, and spiritually; the war has not changed the laws of nature.. People in delicate health and some robust folks are still made ill by the fumes of tobacco, and politeness and consideration for others are still virtues to be cultivated."

Preachers In Prison

There was a time when it seemed to be a mark of divine approbation of the services of a preachcer of the gospel when he was cast into prison because of his preachcing. John the Baptist was the first of the preachers of the Christian era to suffer imprisonment because of his boldness in preaching the truth of God, but though it cost him his life he could not be turned from his purpose. Peter and John and Paul and others of the greatest preachers counted it all honor to be cast into prison for their loyalty to Christ in the face of a hostile world and a hostile government.

Through many centuries of the growth and development of the Christian church her most zealous advocates were glad to spend their days in prison, if by that method they could advance the cause they so greatly loved. John Bunyon would gladly spend twelve years a prisoner rather than to cease to preach the Christ who had separated him from the sins that had held him in bondage to Satan for many of his earlier years, and we are not sure but what the Christian world was more blessed by his years of imprisonment than it would have been had he enjoyed "personal liberty" all those years. But with the passing of the centuries and the gradual changes that have come over the political authority represented by the states and nations of the earth, also has passed the "glory" of imprisonment for "conscience sake," and to-day it is not regarded as a mark of distinction for a preacher to be cast into prison because of his preaching. Just recently Rev. Clarence H. Waldron, of Windsor, Vermont was sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment for obstructing the draft. We take it that the world will not be benefitted because of his imprisonment as it was in some cases in olden times. We may not always feel that we can indorse the position of our government in all things, but the usual modern government is generally so fair in its attitude to the individual that one need not make himself liable to imprisonment because he does not agree with his government.

Christianity as a Side Line

Many traveling salesmen who find their field of regular business of such a nature that considerable time must be spent between calls upon their regular trade carry with them some small "side-line" of goods that helps them to keep busy through the day and that frequently adds no little sum to their total earnings of the year.

Of course every Christian should make his religion the first thing in his life and its influence should control all his actions in whatever he may be doing, but not every Christian is called upon to devote his entire time to definite and specific Christian work, as the church makes provision for such needs in its organization. But while a Christian may be carrying on his business or conducting his profession along lines that reveal to the world the great underlying Christian principles of it all, yet there is often something more he can do that might be termed a "side-line" to his regular business, and this may be entirely Christian.

An incident has been related of a traveling man who years ago as a side-line in his business spoke to men about their personal need of a Savior and as one of the results of such endeavor he won a gentleman by the name of Sayford to Christ. Sayford became a most successful evangelist and is now the head of the New England Evangelistic Association. Sayford won Mr. Ober who became one of the leading Y. M. C. A. workers of the country, and Ober won John R. Mott, who is perhaps the most commanding and influential Religious leader in the world today.

When that traveling salesman spoke to Mr. Sayford about Jesus Christ he had no idea of how far his "side-line" Christian activities would go toward influencing the great nations of the world during a great world war, but he had made it a part of his business to be "instant in season and out of season" in witnessing for Christ, but the fruit of his labors does not consist of Sayford, Ober and Mott alone, but also in the hundreds of thousands of young men whose lives have been touchecd by the great Mott as well.

Facts Worth Quoting

Forty per cent. of the people of India live in areas where the proportion of Christian workers to the population is only one in 115,000.

A converted thug in North India became such a man of prayer that he came to the missionary asking to be taught geography in order that he might learn the names of more places to pray for.

Christianizing America's laws and policies dealing with non-Christian lands is a vital and integral part of the full missionary program of the American church.

The Africans believe not only in the continued existence of the human soul after the death of the body, but they also believe in the existence of an essence of matter separate from the matter itself.

One far-reaching effect of the war is seen in the fact that Hindu soldiers in France deliberately broke caste by drinking out of the same cup with a Christian worker, stating that their act was the seal of friendship.

A Brahmo Samajar leader of Calcutta asked for a Bible class in the life of Christ for the women of that community, on the ground that social freedom was dangerous without the restraining influence of Christianity.

Two young Siamese women, one the daughter of the Attorney General, have gone to Manila to study medicine at their own expense, in order to become the first women physicians in Siam.

The South Manchuria Railway Company, a Japanese organization, is conducting extensive welfare work among its employees, under the direction of a Y. M. C. A. man with twelve other men, all earnest Christians.

Christian Koreans who have settled in California, have built a substantial church, are scrupulous in their observance of Sunday, and recently contributed generously to Armenian-Syrian Relief.

Candidates for church membership in the West Africa Mission are so carefully trained in giving that the "Every Member Plan" is taken for granted, contributions being regarded as an essential element in worship.

"The darkest spot in the United States," area and population considered, is said to be the Navajo country, where the illiteracy reaches ninety-three per cent.

The immigration of large numbers of Hindus and Mohammedans into the Fiji Islands, has introduced a serious element from the missionary point of view, since these non-Christians constitute seventy-five per cent. of the total population.

The War and Missionary Giving

In connection with the present financial strain and the appeals for money to continue home and foreign missions without retrenchment, it is interesting to study the effect of the Civil War on the giving of American chuches. The Presbyterian church North reported in the five years before the Civil War (1856-1860) 401,000 members, including Old School and New School churches. Their gifts for home missions during that time averaged $1.10 per member and for foreign missions .94 per member; the total average gift per year for home missions was $24,900 and for foreign missions $188,000.

Now notice: during the war years (1861-1865) the membership in these same churches slightly decreased, being 389,800, but at the same time the average gifts per member increased to $1.20 for home missions and $1.18 for foreign missions. The average total gifts were per year $209,000 for home missions and $219,000 for foreign missions.

In the five years following the war (1866-1870) the membership again increased to 420,000, and the average gifts per member also took a decided jump. For home missions they were $1.41 and for foreign missions $1.39 per member. The total gifts averaged $292,600 for home missions and $295,000 for foreign missions.

How is it today, after nearly fifty years of peace? Last year the membership of these Presbyterian churches was 1,604,045, but the average gift per member for home missions had decreased to $1.37 and for foreign missions $1.25 per member. The total gifts last year for home missions were $2,194,000 and for foreign missions $2,055,313. Evidently the members of the Presbyterian churches are not yet giving up to the limit of even their Civil War ability. Their average incomes have greatly increased in the last fifty years and the call from the mission fields is also louder.

In Canada the churches are showing their consecration and are seeking to entrench and advance rather than to retrench in the missionary campaign. The Missionary societies reported that in spite of the many calls for contributions to Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and various relief movements, heavy taxes and the departure of over 400,000 wage earners to the battle front the receipts have been very encouraging.

The Presbyterian church in Canada reports: "We closed our last year (1916-17) with a better showing than in any previous year. Our receipts, up to the present, are as good as last year."

The Church of England in Canada reports: "The claims of the war, far from causing people to neglect their church responsibilities, have had a reverse result. While enthusiastically self-sacrificingly supporting worthy special objects in connection with the war, they have maintained their spirit of devotion, service and generosity to all worthy objects connected with the churches."

The receipts for Canadian Methodist missions showed last year an encouraging increase of $32,000 from purely voluntary sources. Take one city as a sample of the spirit of giving. Toronto, a city of 500,000 people, raised over $900,000 in a four days' campaign for the British Red Cross. During the same week the Methodist Union launched its anual campaign for nearly $50,000 for city mission work and church extension. While money may have been diverted from missions to other philanthropic movements the Methodist churches of Toronto have contributed more to missionary work than last year. The direct gifts from Methodist churches in Canada for 1916-17 were over $35,000 more than for 1913-14. In the present war the Canadian Methodist Board has adopted the slogan "$1,000,000 for Missions." Last year the sum contributed was $690,514. This is an example for other Christians to follow.

Missionary Personals

William R. Moody, president of the Northfield schools, is serving as a Y. M. C. A. Secretary at Camp Devins, Mass. In doing this he is following in the footsteps of his celebrated father, Dwight L. Moody, who, during the Civil War, took an active part in the work of the Christian Commission.

Rev. Stephen Van Trowbridge, of Cairo, Egypt, has gone to Jerusalem to represent Bishop MacInnes' Syria and Palestine Relief Fund.

Dr. Harvey Reeves Calkins, a missionary of long experience in India, is now the official agent of the Methodist Episcopal church for the promotion of systematic giving in local congregations.

Henry Judson, the last surviving son of Adoniram Judson, died on January 21, 1918.

Mr. and Mrs. William Danner and their daughter Lois have returned to America, after making visits to the leper hospitals of the Orient. Mr. Danner went as the American Secretary of the "Mission to Lepers."

Rev. J. G. Dunlop, after thirty years of service in Japan under the Presbyterian Board, has gone to France to work among the Chinese labor battallions.

Rev. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, one of the Editorial Council of the Review, has been appointed Education Secretary of the Centenary Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Board of Home Missions and Church Extension.

New Lebanon again wins the pennant for the largest offering. Sunyside gave us a run for it. Fine work, Ashman. Stay with it.

Whittier, Caalif. wins the Life Work emblem with four recruits. Hurrah for Whittier!..

Another remarkable thing about A. C. night this year is the splendid showing made by our home mission fields. Lost Creek, we Welcome you. Muncie, Mansfield, Canton, Columbus, and others we take our hats off to you. You have set a worthy example for "established" churches.

If any mistake has been made in this report, please let me know. I am a very busy man and surely am not immune from mistakes.

Thank you folks for putting the thing "over the top." The victory is yours. Brethren C. E. is still on the job. Pray for next year.

Rah! Rah! Rah! for Ashland.

J. B. LAMBERT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The weeks come and go and although many are the times when I wish to write yet it seems impossible. But once in a while I simply stop to get my breath a little, during which time I utilize some of the space in the Evangelist. O, what busy days are these, days of awful stress and strain, all over the world! Perhaps we feel it more here in the Capital of the nation than can be realized elsewhere. At the present time, we learn from the Civil service Commission that one thousand persons are added to Uncle Sam's pay roll weekly, right here in Washington. They say that it will continue at that rate until the first of July. According to a late estimate of a Civil service official, the government will probably have one hundred thousand employes in Washington by the close of the present year.

But you are anxious to learn something more about the work of the Church are you not?

Perhaps you would like to hear about our Easter offering? How much did you say? Well, if there is another church in the brotherhood whose offering is larger according to the membership, we want to know. Our people here gave, too, because they wanted to give, we did n't "raise" [?] the money; they simply gave.. Fives, tens and twenty dollar bills, [and no names given] were found in the offering and mark you, our people are all poor in this world's goods. And now what did you say? Ah, I heard it. Yes, I heard more than one say, "Brother Lyon, I don't like it; quit your boasting." Pardon me, but I shall keep right on. This kind of boasting, ["in the Lord"] is entirely scriptural Go thou and do likewise if your people give the same occasion. But you want to know the amount of the offering. The Sunday school contributed over sixty-six dollars. The church offering was about one hundred and fifteen dollars. This does not include thirty dollars given in the regular church offering for the day. In other words, the free will offering for the day was more than two-hundred dollars. We give God all praise and glory. It is also worthy of special mention that for the last two years the little church in Washington has contributed to the cause of home missions more than three times its apportionment. We give God praise too, because of the increasing evidences of his presence with us in other ways. I can not mention these now.

Our work has been strengthened in a noticeable degree by members coming from the States. Ohio has give two members of the kind that really adds strength. Yes, indeed they deserve special mention. I refer to Sister Gertrude McBride and Brother Paul Brumbaugh. On the same list we may also place with the same consistency the name of Miss Voda Brower of Ashland, Oregon. Others have come, and still others coming, the Lord willing, whose names we hope to mention later.

Again I wish to repeat the request that any one who is really interested in our work in this city, and who may know of friends or members locating here,that they kindly write me. In fact if one is really interested, don't you think they would show that interest in some such way? Too often, it happens, that members come to the city and locate just as it may seem to happen, and then they "look up" the church later, [if at all]. Others come, bring their church letter with them, and come to me with the desire that I help to locate them. This always gives me great pleasure, and rest assured I get them near the Church, almost without exception, if they consult me in the start.

But some rather strange things happen along this line now and then. Listen: Some time since a good pastor, far, far from here, wrote me a beautiful letter, giving location of a certain young man who had recently come to this city, telling me that he was a "live wire." On receiving the letter I felt that it would be almost out of the question for me to visit him just then, so I sat down at once and wrote him, giving location of church, and expressing the great pleasure it gave me to know that he was coming this way, etc. A few days ago I received a very polite letter from the young man in which he stated that since he was some little distance away he felt that he would not be able to attend regularly, but of course he hoped to visit the church as opportunity presented, etc. Query: What is a live wire? Brother Pastor, I thank you just the same for your kindly interest, yes I appreciate it very much, indeed, and I shall soon call on the brother referred to, the Lord willing, if he doesn't soon "visit" the church [and two Sundays have gone by and no visit yet] but the circumstances suggests a "train of thought." But rest assured I shall follow up the case personally snd in the near future. I may also add that he lives within one-half hour's ride to the church by street car which passes the church and also quite near his own door.

In conclusion perhaps I should mention the fact that last week I attended a joint conference with representatives from the Mennonites, the Friends, and Church of the Brethren. This meeting was held in Philadelphia in one of the Friends' meeting houses. BrotherHarry Cassel of Philadelphia and myself represented our own fraternity. The principal question before the conference was the working out of the part relating to furloughs for those of our people who may desire or prefer to engage in Agricultural work, etc. For the present, perhaps it will not be necessary to say more than this: Those who may wish to engage in rendering service of this kind can obtain full instructions, I think, in the hands of their Local Board. However, in the first place, applications must come from the party or parties desiring the services of the person to whom the furlough is granted. The war department furnishes the Local Boards with needed blank forms. If any of our own people desire more definite information, I shall be glad to assist them to the extent of my ability, if they write me, enclosing postage.

Yours in His name,

W. M. Lyon.

636 South Carolina Ave., Washington,

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA.

It is with considerable reluctance that the writer takes up the duty of correspondent for our church. This work has been so ably done by our Brother W. H. J. Bauman. [Father Bauman as we call him] whom we all love. Most of you have seen him and know him for he has been long in the Master's service. He has done this work most faithfully and we regret to see him lay it down. He did so of his own volition and against our protest; but it seemed best in his own mind and judgment to do so in view of his future plans. We still hope to see his name at the close of many helpful articles in the Brethren Evangelist. He has lived to pass through many stormy scenes in the life of our beloved nation as well as our church whose foundation is built upon the infallible word of God. The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible. She has been threatened by foes not only without but within her ranks and he has stood firm and unfaltering for the Faith once for all delivered unto the saints. We have just closed a 4 weeks' series of meetings not strictly evangelistic, yet the invitation was always extended. The services were conducted by our beloved pastor Louis S. Bauman assisted by Brother Garth as chorus leader. He is well known among the endeavorers as he has been very active in their work and conventions. He is a wonder on the Piano. He has assisted Evangelist Brown, Billy Sunday and others in evangelistic meetings. We never had better singing.

Brother Bauman's themes were very largely on prophesy, there seemed to be a hungering and a crying and for light on the old time prophecies of the Old Testament as well as the new in the face of the present world strife and warfare. Many earnest Christians were eager to know what God's word revealed concerning the future, when men's hearts are failing them for fear and expectancy. There was great interest manifested in the services. The church was packed every night, even Monday nights, the night of all nights hard to get an audinence. One thing was especially significant and that was the many strange faces in the crowd each night, people from all the different churches in the city seeking the truth as revealed and so ably expounded as only Brother Bauman is capable of doing. Night after night the same faces were seen. It is very noticeable here in California, and no doubt the same is true the country over, the drifting from the fundamentals, the very life of our Christian faith. This must be so as the Word says. this will come in the last days, the end time. This condition was no doubt the reason for so many from other churches at these meetings. Sad, nevertheless true, many pastors are as blind as the Jews in Jesus' time if not more so. Many do not teach the second coming of our Lord and Saviour to Reign in person in Jerusalem and sit on the throne of his father David; these same preachers become blind leaders of the blind. However a few in their congregations can see more than their pastors and are seeking for more light on these things which are so precious to us who believe in the blessed Hope, our Lord's soon return which gives such an eager desire and hungering for the word.

There have been 14 additions to the church by confession of faith and letters since our last report.

All branches and auxilaries of the church are doing good work. One class of the Sunday school is taking up a Teachers Training course under the leadership of Johanna Nielsen. This is a much needed course in many schools.

Our Intermediate Endeavor Society is the pride of the church. Under the Superintendency of sister Clark, aided by its president, Herbert Tay and his co-workers. They are building up a large and strong society, doing valiant work for the Master. They are aiding in the support of several missionaries. Extensive improvements have been made in the basement of our church and now the primary Department has moved from their cramped quarters into this new part. The Gospel Team, of which your humble servant is President, has been holding services in adjoining towns, especially at the County Poor Farm. We are rejoiced to report. forty-two confessions since the first of the year in return for our labors. Our church went "over the top", as the every day expression goes, in its Easter offering which amounted to more than $1100—up-to-date with more coming in to swell that amount. We rejoice in this and may the Lord take it and multiply it to the salvation of many precious souls.

Our aim is to be a front rank Sunday school and church and to attain to all of the Four year goals. By the help of God we will reach our goal.

Yours in the Blessed Hope,

A. H. Kent.

"SPARKS FROM BUSY PITTSBURGH."

Taking it for granted that other folks are as anxious to hear what is going on among the churches as we are, an attempt shall be made to report the progress of the work here. And we feel that our work ,blest of God, is making commendable progress, especially in the light of present strenuous conditions. Many churches about us are complaining about a dearth of activity along all lines of their work, but we have no reason whatever to complain. A large percentage of our membership, we are glad to say, is right on the job, and willing and eager to "do their best" in every work that is proposed.

Let me mention just briefly then, a number of things worthy of note, that the Pittsgburh Brethren have "Put across" since our last report, just about one year ago.

During the hot months of last summer, we held our Sunday evening services on the Garfield Playground, what was at one time "Old Fort Pitt,"—and is the highest point in this part of the city and just four blocks removed from our church. We had the privilege of talking to from 250 to 500 people at these Twilight Services.

In the early fall, we had a very successful Rally of our Sunday school and church forces, and laid plans for definite and aggressive work for the fall and winter. And among the first results of this Rally was the organization of the young men into "A Brotherhood,"—which culminated in the opening of a Reading and Game Room for the men of the church and community,—the same to be open one night each week. And a little later on we had a Father and Son Banquet, with 90 men and boys present, a fine spread and a very pleasant and profitable evening spent together. The "spread," by the way, was made possible through the generosity of one of our good Brethren.

Our fall communion was certainly a spiritual feast. Brother Henry Wise was with us and added much to the impressiveness of the service. Come again Brother Henry. There were four Elders and four Deacons present and assisted in the service. In all, 111 were seated around the tables of the Lord,—this being just about 75 per cent of our active membership.

On December 2nd, Brother J. A. Garber was with us to address a class of seven graduates in Teacher Training. And a very fine address he gave us, too. We are now anxiously awaiting that new book that is being put out by our own people, before organizing another class,

And we hope we willl not have to wait long.

Our first White Gift Christmas Service was a decided success. The program and decorations were unique and appealing, and the offering was better than $50. We know that by another year we shall do far better than this.

And then came our Annual New Year's Rally, at which time we burned a $3000 mortgage held against the church, and we raised $1100 on the last "Plaster" on the Church. Since then this amount has been brought up to nearly $2000. And by another year, we hope to see the last of the "old debt" that has been hampering the Pittsburgh Brethren church for so long a time. And then you can look for some great forward moves along several lines. At the largest attended annual business meeting of our pastorate,—your humble servant received the unanimous call lf the church, for another year.

On January 17th, the Alexander Mack Men's Bible Class had their 23rd Anniversary,—to which all the members and friends of the Sunday school and church were invited. It was very largely attended, and a very fine time was enjoyed by all. Both the program rendered and the eats furnished were of the best. And the class showed their appreciation of the pastor's services as teacher, by presenting him with a purse of $28. This "Purse Presentation," by the way, has become an annual affair, as well as the Anniversary itself,—and it is much appreciated. Both the Pastor and his family also received several substantial gifts from personal friends during the Holiday season. And the wife was most kindly remembered by the Sisterhood girls,—of which she is the Patroness. We cannot express too highly, our appreciation of the hearty response and co-operation of our people here, and take this means of again saying,—"Thank You," for all.

And now comes the best of all. After much prayer and preparation, we opened our evangelistic campaign on February 3rd, with Brother G. T. Ronk as "Preacher and Campaign Director,"—and a peerless leader he does make, as all who are acquainted with his work, know. This is the third time that Bro. George has assisted me in revival campaigns, and he certainly "Goes over the top" in this work. We also had evangelistic singer K. L. Cramer of the City, as leader in song,— accompanied on the instrument by his son "Billy." And this team also rendered most excellent service. The campaign opened during the very coldest weather of the winter, but the good Lord was certainly with us, and gave us souls right from the start. The meetings were well attended, the spirit was fine, and the co-operation could not have been much better. And God gave us a great victory. The church was strengthened and built up in the most holy faith, under the able preaching of the Word in all of it's purity and power,—Brother Ronk sparing neither saint nor sinner,—and in all 27 made the great confession, 22 of which have already been baptized and received into the church. Another one will come soon. Then too, we got hold of several new families, some of which we will reach and win soon. Two others have come since the campaign closed, and this with at least five that were baptized and received since my last report,—but prior to the campaign,—makes 30 accessions to the church since you last heard from us. To God will we give all the glory, and take courage for the future.

We are laying large plans for our spring communion, which will probably be over with by the time this is read,—and have also already planned our summer campaign of open air evangelism,—up on old Fort Pitt Hill playground during July and August.

We are doing our utmost to reach the several goals of the Four-Year Program, and by the grace of God we will reach them,—and we hope long before the Conference of 1920. The fact of the matter is that we have already attained half of them, and will reach several more before National Conference time. We are also waiting to welcome our Brother "Billy Beachler," and will do not "Our Bit" but "Our Best" by him in his most worthy project. And so we shall go on, conquering and to conquer, until our blessed Lord himself shall come and say, "It is enough,"—and shall take up with him, where we shall be forever with the Lord. Even so, Lord, come quickly.

H. M. Harley.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NOTES.

Our college campus presents a pleasing aspect these days. The lawn has been raked and the grass cropped close. No more beautiful spot can be seen in the county than the Ashland College grounds in springtime.

The "baseball" fever has gripped the boys since moving the time up one hour we have more daylight and the fellows take advantage of it to play ball in the evening. Match games are played. Last evening's game was a pitcher's duel between Penhorwood and Lambert, the former winning out 4 to 3. The all stars hit Lambert hard and at the right time.

A number of the students and faculty recently attended the Conference at Fremont, Ohio. Elwood Rowsey, "Jo" Smith, Marie Lichty, and Professors Garber, Furry and Miller were the College representation. All report a splendid conference.

The Seniors are still rehearsing the class play to be given May 3. Elwood Rowsey has been added to the cast printed some weeks ago.

Mrs. F. O. Switzer of Wabash, Indiana was a visitor at the College during last week end. She came to spend a few days with her daughter Miss Mary Louise Switzer.

Mrs. Kanauer of Pioneer ,Ohio is also an Ashland visitor, spending this week with her daughter who is head of the expression department of the school.

The Y. W. C. A. has had a unique meeting recently. It was a service conducted by the Latin class and the subject was "Hymnology." Miss Switzger sang several familiar hymns in the Latin tongue.

The College song for the week follows. It is sung to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland."

There stands a College on the hill
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland
Her welcome light is shining still
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland.
In troublous times her work begun
O'er troublous seas her course has run
But Praise the Lord for vict'ry won.
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland.

Purple and Gold her colors true
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland
They speak of royal worth to you
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland.
Her sons and daughters all are true
Her praises now they bring to you
And ever will they be and do
That they may honor Ashland.

She serves the Christ who died for men
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland
She serves the church with tongue and pen
Rah, rah, rah for Ashland.
We love her loyalty to truth,
We love her charity forsooth,
We love her care for all her youth
We love our dear old Ashland.

It may be interesting to note that this song was composed some years ago by C. F. Yoder, our missionary to South America.

TRAVEL NOTES.

With much delight we -ought the prince and power of darkness with Brother Whitted and his untiring band of workers at Portis, Kansas. Portis is located in the north central part of the state and is a live, up-to-date little town, and I am glad to say that we have a church and people at Portis of high standing in the town and country—a people that commands the respect of the people. We found real Brethren at Portis not among those who have a name that they live and are dead, but those who show that they are alive by their faith and loyalty to the church and the King Book. We have a number of Brumbaughs at Portis and wherever I have found the Brumbaughs I have found whole hearted Brethren and believers in the Book from cover to cover.

I found Brother Whitted a very congenial and unselfish man to work with a man who has the work of the church at heart, and because of such a spirit he has found his way deep in the hearts of his people and the friends to the church, for about five years he has been breaking the bread of life to his people and they are still asking for more from his life and his ministry. Brother Whitted is blessed with a real preacher's wife, one who stands with him in his work at all times and she too is being blessed and used of God in his work.

We had our home with the preacher, and the hours spent together were most pleasant. The people seemed to fear that the preacher would run short of eatables so each day they would come, and not empty handed—the last night of the meeting they came with both hands full, and so we left meal in the barrel and oil in the cruse. To be sure we visited the homes and shared their hospitality in many homes.

The farmers in the district of Portis have reaped short crops, for 2 years but still they are cheerful, and this year they have every reason to believe that they will reap a great harvest. The free will offering surpassed for the length of time all others, but the R. R. Companies these days get the larger portion of an evangelists money—while I am writing this article we are riding on our way for Sunnyside, Wash. on the strength of two green pieces of paper which cost about one hundred and forty dollars, but we are willing if we know our own hearts to spend and to be spent to his glory and to the salvation of lost souls.

We are indebted to the principal of the High School at Portis for standing by us as he did in the campaign—it was, a pleasure to be with him in the school and speak to the pupils. May his blessings continue to fall upon the people at Portis as the years come and go.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.

Brother John Lichty who is a member of the mission board of the Kansas District wrote me while at Portis to know if we could go from Falls City to Fort Scott and assist Sister Webb in a campaign finding this impossible for the lack of time we wrote him to ask the Falls City church to let us off as we were with them last year in a meeting and let us go to Fort Scott, Kansas and help the little struggling mission out, to this they consented, and from Portis we went to Fort Scott, Was it a sacrifice? Yes and no. Our religion is not some nice band box affair on a vacation half the time and bluffing our way through the other half. Our Christianity means battle, suffering and service. Our religion means the forfeiting of self. Our religion is to soothe the brow of every aching head, and to give glad cheer to every cheerless heart, and to lift up every fallen life, but how true some make a point to plunge a dagger deeper in the poor cheerless hearted, to kick the fallen deeper in the pit and yet claim to be Christians and leaders—Christ had no such heart or Spirit. It is hard sometimes for wayward children to believe that their parents still love them in spite of their heart-breaking waywardness. It is hard to feel kindly to one we have wronged, or who has wronged us. But I like to think of the all-embracing, all healing, all helpful, and all forgiving love of God—how wonderful that is! St. Paul tells us that nothing shall be able to separate us from Love which is God. Oh, Brethren every pastor in the Brotherhood ought to agonize with God in prayer in the behalf of each other every day, surely this would bind us closer together, and the work of God would greatly advance in his beauty and power. If the Four-Year Program is a success this must be done.

We found the little mission at Fort Scott in a dreadful condition. Sister Webb the pastor was not on the field long before she was called upon to take her companion back to Indiana, her home where she laid his body to rest. After her return back to her work she had no time to get ready for the meeting, so the meeting was announced about a week before the fight began.

Out of one hundred and seventy-five members we were able to find lined up with us about forty who were willing to fight the devil and stand for the church—The writer never met so many people whose names were on the Brethren church book and yet not Brethren. [About three Brethren Evangelists in the entire church]Think of it; after all I did not marvel when so many of the members said they joined the church because they lived close to it. Brethren I am convinced that more and more we ought to show the people what we stand for and why we stand for certain things we practice. The writer did not fail to tell the people in Fort Scott why sixteen years ago he left the Presbyterian church and became a Brethren, standing for her holy doctrines. And like some of our Brethren in the ministry I have had some indeucements to step aside if the money part would do it, but this life is not all.

Sister Webb will report the meeting. We were tried almost beyond measure. Both of her children were taken down of the measels in the midst of the meeting, but as much as we could she, wife and I walked the streets calling on the people. God blessed each visit. Sister Webb is loved by her people and they pledged to stand by her and the work which I believe they will do. We have a field in Fort Scott and a large field. The people were good to us in every way. May God bless them with their pastor who is a woman consecrated to God and his work. We had our home with Sister Webb, and were blessed together. When we left for Sunnyside the Brethren showed us no little kindness. May God bless Sister Webb and her people is our prayer to him.

We want to thank the pastor of the Falls City church and his people for letting us go to Ft. Scott. I feel certain God had a hand in our going to help save the Fort Scott mission. Brethren please pray for us at Sunnyside in his work.

AN APPRECIATION.

There is a sacred sadness that always clusters about the walls of a deserted church. The other week, a letter came to me from sister Robert Overman saying that the old "Progressive church" at Garrison, Iowa had been sold. It came not as a surprise for we not only expected it but advised its sale. But yet its passing seemed to us as the death of a close friend. We could not help reverting back in our memory to this sacred Bethel Perhaps the little Brethren church at Garrison never occupied a very large place in the history of the Brethren church; but to a few of us it holds,—a sacred place in our hearts. It was here that we were received into the church. Here we first learned the lessons of Christian service. Here on a Sunday in August 1908, we attempted our first sermon. A year ago, last summer, when visiting in the town we went up on the hill and stood in the shadow of the little weather-beaten walls and peered into the windows, while there I could not help thinking that the place was really a part of my life.

Perhaps a short obituary of the old church would add to its appreciation. It may be that the reader does not care for a recital of a lost cause. Yet the efforts and struggles of some of the loyal and consecrated hearts whose lives were wrapped up in the work in worthy of a memorial.

Sometime back in the late sixties, our aged brother W. J. H. Bauman and Elder Peter Forney organized the Big Grove Dunkard church, which later become the Church of the Brethren in the town of Garrison. Soon after the division in the church, Brother and sister John T. Urice went to Waterloo and united with the Brethren. For several years they were the only Brethren in the community. At that time Brother Urice was one of the leading merchants in the town, but he was a man that carried his business and religion together. While he and sister Urice were active in the church and Sunday schools of the town, they had an ambition to plant a church of their choice in the community, and to this end they continually worked. Through various efforts a little class was organized and in 1896, an old Reformed Presbyterian church was moved in from the country. The church had a bright prospect at the beginning, but the field was sharply contested by the other churches that feared for its success. Brethren Hildebrand and Gillin served the church the best they could in connection with their churches at Waterloo and Hudson. In 1907, Brother Eli Hoover, then a busy farmer south of Waterloo, served the church with services every two weeks and later sister Flora acted as a supply pastor. During this time the church gathered about forty members. Then for several years they were without a pastor, during this time they kept up a Sunday school; S. S. C. E.; a Christian Endeavor Society and a Prayer meeting. In 1898, the Illiokota Conference convened at this church. In the spring of 1908, sister Urice's health failed and they moved to Vinton where a son and daughter resided. The work was carried on then by Brother and sister O. Wenner and sister Overman. One by one the members moved away and united with the other churches until only about a half dozen are left. They are expecting to remember Ashland College and other church interests with the fund from the sale of the building. The bell will call the people in our former charge at Garwin, Iowa to prayer.

I write this as an appreciation to those who labored so loyally and faithful in what to them may seem to be a lost cause. But let them remember that their work has not been in vain in the Lord. The little band of Brethren at Garrison, Iowa has had their place to fill in God's Kingdom. And now as a passing benediction upon the work that has been done. We pray God's care on all those who have worshipped at this sacred shrine and especially our aged brother and sister Urice whose lives have been so devoted to their Master's service.

S. C. Henderson.

CAMPAIGN NOTES.

The severe weather last winter cut our work short at Loree church. Consequently we had to go away from Loree with the canvass unfinished at that time. But after leaving Clay City we came back to Loree and completed our work. Loree has gone almost to $1000; and I have the assurance from some of the brethren there that the campaign will still be pushed until the full thousand dollar mark is reached. I believe this can be done and it will be done. My treatment in the various homes of Loree was as fine as could possibly be asked for. Loree has a splendid Sunday school; and Brother Shinn the superintendent is a live wire. The Loree church has a mission and a work in the community where it is located and I believe it will do that work.

We came to Burlington next. I had never been to Burlington before. I found a delightful little town and I also found our people a splendid substantial people who were ready to give a loyal response to the call for permanent endowment for the College. Brother Arthur Hoppes is the pastor of this congregation and he gave me thorough cooperation in my work among his people. And I am glad to say Burlington went "over the top." I came away with an even $1000; and Brother Willis Polk with whom I left the work of putting on the finishing touches will take the final result beyond $1000. Brother Polk and Brother Jerry Harrell took me over the field in their automobiles and notwithstanding neither one were Fords, still we were able to do a good business. The work at Burlington was a pleasure because the response was uniformly cheerful. And I can testify with others who have been to Burlington that the treatment one gets there is as good as is to be found anywhere. We were taken care of during our stay by the Polks, and the Bocks, and the Harrells, and the Rineharts, and the Mosses. More homes were open than I could take care of. But if I ever get back to Burlington I shall hold those other places in mind.

Burlington took hold of the Liberty Loan idea the best yet. I got four Loans for $100 each at this place. The only other Loan I have gotten before was at Oakville from Brother Bob Holsinger. I don't know why our people are so slow to take up with this idea. As a matter of fact the plan enables one to serve two causes. The same money helps our government first; and then it helps our school. The Burlington brethren were quick to see this and they took right up with the idea. I hope their action will start a lot of other folks to thinking.

From Burlington we came home and we can now report that the mercury has reached up to $25,000. And the best part of it is Indiana is not yet through. Flora, College Corner, New Highland, Corinth and Roanoke will be canvassed toward fall. And we have every reason to believe that when these churches have spoken the mercury will go beyond $27,000. In the light of a record like this I am sure all are agreed that Indiana has a perfect right to take her hat off to herself. Three cheers for Indiana! The churches of Indiana are alright! May God richly bless and use each and every one of them.

I should like to make a request at this time. I am aware that this campaign is not speeding up to meet the expectations of some of our people. But we must hold in mind that speed is not the primary object in this campaign. And those who have helped me thus far in the campaign are just as fully convinced as I am that this business cannot be speeded up if the best results are to be obtained. And the point I want to make is this: While some of our churches and some of our pastors are likely to get a little nervous waiting until I get around I want to request that you do not make the canvass in your church until I get on the ground. You might get as many dollars as I would [I say you might;] but there is far more to this campaign than getting merely cold dollars. And it is for the sake of gaining that other result for which we are aiming in this campaign that I ask you to just hold still until I get there.

From now on for the next several months the readers of these campaign notes will have the pleasure of watching Pennsylvania raise the mercury. I have had some very encouraging letters from pastors in Pennsylvania. I believe the Brethren of that great old state are ready to do their part in this very important work.

Wm. H. Beachler,
Campaign Secretary.

Mr. H. Z. Duke, a Southern Baptist layman of Texas, who died on February 16, has for the past thirty years devoted an average of one-fourth of his time and a large proportion of his wealth to religious work, emphasizing the importance of stewardship.

Mrs. Sarah D. Clarke, whose wealth and personal service began and sustained the Pacific Garden Mission of Chicago, where "Billy" Sunday was converted, died in February.

Doing the Will of God

Perhaps one of the most familiar passages of the gospel is the petition in the so-called Lord's Prayer: Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. To realize how familiar this passage is we need only remember how many millions daily repeat the prayer. Read and ponder with Matt. 6:10 Matt. 7:21. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father who is in heaven."

If I read the gospel right the biggest thing a man can undertake to do is just this: TO DO THE WILL OF GOD.

Jesus and the Will of God
